If the ancient history of our Order is illustrious for having participated in great events, it will be found that its career in modern times is not less so for having furnished a remedy for evils which could find no redress from any other of the institutions of man. A very brief retrospect of the history of our afflicted race will show a necessity for the establishment of a society, having a sublime and pure morality for its ethics, and a scheme of benevolence towards man enforced by penalties distinct from the common obligations of social or municipal law. The earliest records of man are replete with the history of his cruelties and crimes. He was indeed created upright, in the image of his God; but, alas! how brief was the season of his continuance in his primitive state. Scarcely had the first family taken its social form when the blood of Abel ascended to the skies, a melancholy witness to the apostacy of man, and a sure presage of his future career. Hence, the faithful historian, from Adam to the deluge, and from thence to our own times, speaks only of tribe warring with tribe, power conflicting with power, till some warlike butcher, more fortunate than his peers, brought contending communities and tribes within the grasp of his sole domination, and compressed them into one bloody mass, subdued and inert, upon which he exerted his uncontrollable dominion. Religion, it is true, held forth her persuasives to virtue, but, in the estimation of thoughtless men, her rewards were valueless, because they were postponed beyond the term of his mortal career. Her dreadful penalties appalled him not, because they were to fall on him hereafter, and he hoped by amendment to avoid their infliction. The destinies of the world seemed to be committed to man, and he used his power only for the purposes of destruction. War, cruel and relentless war, in every age, has deluged the peaceful earth with the blood of its inhabitants, and embittered it with their tears. Government and jurisprudence, it is true, in modern times, have done much for suffering humanity; but so various are the characters of men, so complex the structure of society, and so diversified the crimes with which it is afflicted, that the wisest statesmen have given up the task as hopeless, and submit patiently to endure evils which their utmost sagacity cannot prevent. Treachery in friendship, hypocrisy, and deceit, and ingratitude—that sin denounced by savage and civilized man—must still go unpunished. In despite of all political regulation, power will sometimes accumulate in the hands of the few, and the weak are subjected to its licentious sway. We still see oppression in some shape pursuing its victim with the eye of the eagle and the vulture's appetite. The philanthropist, with all his ardent desires for the happiness of his species, looks on in hopeless impotence. Here, Masonry interposes. Power, wealth, and all the adventitious aids of fortune, create no preference in her choice; she receives the sufferer within her walls, and throws the ægis of her protection around him. If the purple of majesty, as has been the case, finds its way into the lodge, the monarch sees and confesses that his regal diadem is of no more value than the sordid rags of the beggar. There all meet on the level of perfect equality. The brow of power unbends its haughty curve at the well known sign, and the frown of anger gives place to the smile of conciliation at the "mystic word." There all are taught that stern perseverance in a virtuous life can only give pre-eminence to one man over another. Thus instructed and qualified, the Mason goes forth from the Lodge with new motives and added obligations to rectitude of life. However humble or unambitious his fortune or name, he goes forth with confidence; if he be "just and true," that confidence is never deceived. The fidelity of Masonry is universal, he shall not be forsaken. To whatever clime he wanders, it is still the same; the language of Masonry is universal, he shall be recognized as a brother: no matter how adverse his fate, the charity of Masonry is universal, if worthy he shall be relieved. Shall I be told that these are the fanciful theories of a creed that wastes itself in idle boast and empty show? Was the immortal Warren, the fated martyr of Bunker Hill, the patron of hypocritical profession! Could the mighty soul of Washington stoop to hypocrisy, or be delighted with idle pageantry? Could the philosophic Franklin, who encountered the tempest and disarmed it of its bolt, be pleased or satisfied with boastful pretensions or ceremonious frivolity?—Simon Wolf, Washington, D. C.

Explorations at Jerusalem.

A meeting of the parties interested in the great work of exploring the sacred places of Palestine, was recently held at London, at which Lieut. Warren, under whose immediate directions the explorations at Jerusalem are being carried on, read a highly interesting paper, in which he said:

"There are at present engaged on the works two corporals of engineers and about seventy Mussulmen of different races, and, though the latter required great supervision, yet, what with the jealousies of race and religion, the dragoman being Greek and the overseers Jews, anything going wrong soon "cropped out." Very few articles found in the works had come to hand, and what had been found consisted mostly of pottery, bronze nails, and glass (the former of many different dates, and the glass of the third and fourth centuries of the Christian era); but a few Hebrew coins had been turned up. Among the findings was a seal with characters showing it to be that of "Haggai, the son of Shebaniah," and it was supposed in Jerusalem to be of the time of Ezra. However, the main object of the work was with regard to nether Jerusalem in its topography, and it was desired particularly to find out where the Temple stood. (Cheers.) In studying the Holy Land it was most disappointing to find a dearth of evidence as to sites of places, and the more the matter was looked into the more difficult it became. There were points which were known beyond contradiction, such as Joppa, Jerusalem, and others; but when details were sought there was the most conflicting evidence.

"All parties agree that the Temple stood somewhere in a rectangular spot, called by the names of Haram and Moriah, and that the Mount of Olives was on the whole or part of a hill indicated on the map. It was probable, too, that the valley of the Kedron could be traced; and if he made use of Biblical names in speaking of places, he did so because they were generally received names, and not because they were established as such. The explorers must be content, he feared, to be baffled and perplexed for a long time to come before they could bring out Jerusalem as it was; for, startling as it might appear, they had not a single fixed point from which to commence. For instance, though the Temple was known to be on a particular space (the Moriah area), yet there was space there for three such sites; and Mount Sion was put to the north of Moriah by some, and to the west by others of authority. It was only by patient investigation that hopes could be entertained of a satisfactory conclusion. He then proceeded to describe the Haram area, in which he said there was no doubt a mine of information. The Moriah area was scooped into large tanks, and one would hold one million gallons of water; another was found capable of holding seven hundred thousand; and altogether about five million gallons could be stowed away. Near here was a place called the Well of the Leaf, of which the legend was told that a man wandered down it, and coming to a door, opened it. He found himself in a beautiful garden, and, plucking a leaf, he returned. On telling his tale, he was greeted as of little sense for leaving a garden which his listeners believed to be a Paradise, which he would never have another chance of seeing again." The gallant officer continued at some length, and explained that the stables of Solomon had been discovered as well as streams of water, which led to the opinion that the course of King Hezekiah's hidden spring of water would be discovered. He concluded, amid warm cheers, by expressing the interest taken in the works by those who are called the Anglo-Saxon race, from both Britain and America."—Freemason's Magazine.

Eulogy on the Life and Character of Charles A. Fuller, P. G. M.

These emblems of mortality bring most vividly to mind the sad and solemn fact that a burning taper of life has been extinguished—a bright star has fallen from our mystic constellation.

In the town of Springfield, Otsego county, New York, on the 25th day of August, 1816, Past Grand Master and R. W. Grand Secretary Charles A. Fuller, entered upon life's journey to the tomb. In the town of Edgefield, Tenn., on the 5th day of June, 1868, in the fifty-second year of his age, our distinguished brother and we are here to pay the last tribute to departed Masonic greatness.

Quit his friends on earth
To join with those above;

As a citizen of the State, his life was a most striking exemplification of Masonic teaching, for he was indeed a "peaceful and quiet subject."

With malice toward none, and charity for all, he pursued his avocations with that dignity which marked the entire pathway of his life.

Though he aspired not to the statesman's honors, nor descended into the sloughs of political chicanery, yet his counsel was deemed of interest, and his words were accounted wisdom. He led no hosts to battle, nor marshaled those in military array, but he did what was better, wiser, and still more honorable—he led out the instincts of a pure and correct disposition to the subduing of his passions, and the conforming of his actions to the purer dictates of reason and of right.

His presence was not seen in the councils of the nation, nor his voice heard in party strife. He engaged not in these, yet he commanded the most profound respect, and enjoyed the most implicit confidence of all who knew him.

A philanthropist by nature, and a benefactor by practice, his heart was ever engaged to commiserate distress, and his hand ever open to relieve it. Deprecating the conduct of the low and vicious, his appreciation was unsurpassed for the virtuous and honorable.

His social qualifications were truly enviable. Extraordinarily fluent, and abundantly gifted in this respect, our brother stood almost peerless. Who that ever spent "the passing hour" in his society, was not impressed with the dignity of his style, and the genial manner of his deportment? No silly affectation accompanied his manner. His words revealed the spontaneous outgushings from wisdom's store. And while it is true that "man is the chief architect of his own character," it is nevertheless a fact that he who appears natural is at the same time graceful and companionable.

Endowed by his Creator with a strong and vigorous intellect, by his own indomitable industry he had so embellished his thoughts, and adapted his disposition to the various capacities with which he came in contact, as to gain the admiration and win the esteem of all, from the tender mind of the youth to the inflexible faculties of the aged sire. Yet, with all this, he was without dissimulation. Honest, frank, and unobtrusive, he manifested most clearly that he was willing to stand upon merit or fall for want of it. Illustrious friend and valued companion, thou hast done well!

As a Mason, his worth was known, and the power of his influence realized, almost co-extensive with our world-wide Fraternity.

Initiated into the mysteries of our Order in Columbia Lodge No. 31, in 1842, step by step he ascended the mystic ladder until its topmost round had been gained. It was his to enjoy the entire confidence of his brethren and companions.

Zealous and industrious as a Mason, he justly merited the confidence of an appreciative Brotherhood, whose pleasure it was to bestow upon him repeatedly the highest honors known to our Institution. Just here I will call your attention to a noteworthy fact: Not a single blot darkens the escutcheon of his Masonic trestle-board.

He was at every meeting of the Grand Lodge of Tennessee during a period of twenty-six long years, and I presume that no member in this grand jurisdiction was more favorably known or justly appreciated. No one has done more, if indeed as much, to place this Grand Lodge before the world in its present enviable position. This was comparatively a small body when he became identified with it, but he was spared to see it grow to magnificent proportions. Almost a generation of noble worthies passed him in the great thoroughfare of life; and few, if any, are here this evening who grasped Bro. Fuller's hand on his first visit to this body. The partiality of the Craft was frequently manifested toward him, from which came the most gratifying results. His shadow is still here, but the substance is gone! His portrait occupies its place on our wall—his intelligent eye still looking down to see if we are faithful to our trust! The gavel has passed forever from his hand, and his ready pen is wielded by another! Well done, victorious conqueror of evil passions, well done! Thou hast taken up thy work for inspection! It has doubtless passed the Grand Overseer's square! Thou art entitled to wages! Thou hast received them; and with them thou art abundantly satisfied!

And now, notwithstanding the many notices and able biographical sketches that have already been given, all have failed—and I must equally fail—to portray the excellences of his character. Yet I can not close without calling attention to that trait which shone the brightest, and well-nigh dimmed the luster of the rest. I refer to his faithful and constant reliance on the merits of the "Lion of the tribe of Judah." Unostentatiously he moved forward, right forward, to the altar of consecration. If his Masonic life rendered him great, his Christian life illustrated that he was good. In every department of life, in all its varying, trying scenes, in no phase does the "good man" shine out with such transcendent brilliancy as in the sphere of an humble and devoted Christian. Faithfully he worked—ardently he strove—and heroically he battled in the mighty host of Israel's God.

The banner of the cross, which he triumphantly unfurled to the breeze in the face of many a bitter antagonist, he only lowered to pass under the unyielding arch of death. The star of his hope shone as a beacon light to attract the wayward of our apostate race to the sunlight of eternal day.

It was my privilege to visit him, for the last time, but a few weeks before his demise. And with what composure and confidence he anticipated the hour of his dissolution, I never shall forget while memory holds her reign. Looking forward to the labyrinth of the future, he rejoiced that the time of his departure was near. In reply to my inquiry, he said: "There is but one reason why I would like to live longer, and that is, to work for the 'Masonic Orphans' Home.' If I had fifteen years yet to live, I would spend the whole time in that business. I commend that work," he said, "to the Masons of Tennessee, and I know that it is in safe hands." Thus, when the death-messenger was at the very door, his Christian heart, in imitation of the world's Redeemer while on the reeking cross, was moved with compassion for the widow and the orphan.

My brethren, let the name of Charles A. Fuller—the synonym of Masonic perfection—be inscribed upon our every banner! Let his virtues be portrayed on the walls of the inner temple of our hearts! Let his Christian life ever point us to the straight and narrow path, which leads to the sanctum sanctorum above! And may we so imitate his wise and good example, that, when called from labor below, we may join in refreshment with him around the table of our Immaculate Grand Master in heaven!—By Wm. A. Nelson. Tennessee Proceedings.

◆

PRESENTATION.—At a regular communication of Lodge Emulation, No. 1,100, held on the 17th September, 1868, a magnificent and most accurate chart of the Middle Chamber, a Masonic plate showing the emblems of each degree from the E. A. to the R. A., with explanations by Bro. Harris, and another plate entitled "Sapientia Generalis," from America, a gift to the lodge by Wor. Bro. Avron, were exhibited to the brethren present. The W. M., in few but appropriate remarks, thanked Wor. Bro. Avron for his beautiful present.

Wor. Bro. Avron handed copies of THE MASONIC TROWEL, received from Bro. H. G. Reynolds, of Springfield, Illinois, U. S., to different brethren present.—Mas. Record, Bombay.

Meeting at Leland Hotel.

The following article, published in the Daily Journal, October 6th, was laid aside for publication, but has been missed until now:

At a meeting of the Masters, Past Masters, and representatives to the Grand Lodge from the city of Chicago, held in room No. 14, Leland Hotel, on the evening of October 5th, 1868, on motion of Worshipful Brother Simon Quinlan, Worshipful Brother Wiley M. Egan was called to the chair, and Right Worshipful Brother John W. Clyde was appointed Secretary.

On motion of Worshipful Brother Samuel C. Smith, Right Worshipful DeWitt C. Cregier, David A. Cashman, and John W. Clyde were appointed a committee to draft resolutions expressive of the sense of the Masonic Fraternity from Chicago, in regard to their entertainment at Springfield this day.

Said committee, after a brief absence, reported the following resolutions, which, on motion of Worshipful Brother Wm. G. Swan, were adopted, and ordered to be published in the Springfield Journal and State Register:

Resolved, That our present annual visit to the city of Springfield has been rendered indelible in our memory, not only by the great event of laying the "corner stone" of the magnificent State House, but, also, by the magnificent preparation for our entertainment on the part of the authorities of the city of Springfield and county of Sangamon, as well as by the whole-souled and fraternal hospitality of the citizens and Craftsmen of Springfield generally.

Resolved, That the magnitude and elegance of the banquet at the Rink was fully commensurate with the occasion, as it was characteristic of our great State.

Resolved, That the said banquet was rendered doubly pleasureable by the great number of beautiful ladies of Springfield who honored us with their presence, and whose fair hands dispensed the bounteous repast prepared for the occasion, in a manner which afforded us unalloyed pleasure.

DEWITT C. CREGIER, S. G. W.
DAVID A. CASHMAN, J. G. D.
JOHN W. CLYDE, D. D. G. M.
Committee.
WILEY M. EGAN, Ch'mn.
JOHN W. CLYDE, Sec.

◆

A Touching Incident.

A young man and his wife were preparing to attend a party at the house of a friend some miles distant. "My dear husband, don't drink too much at the party, to-day; you will promise me, won't you?" said she, putting her hand upon his brow, and raising her eyes to his face with a pleading smile. "No, Millie, I will not, you may trust me," and she wrapped her infant in a soft blanket, and they descended. The horses were soon prancing over the turf, and a pleasant conversation beguiled the way. "Now don't forget your promise," whispered the young wife, as they passed up the steps. Poor thing, she was the wife of a man who loved to look upon the wine when red. The party passed pleasantly; the time for departure drew near; the wife descended from the upper chamber to join her husband. A pang shot through her beating heart as she met him, for he was intoxicated; he had broken his promise. Silently they rode homeward, save when the drunken man broke into snatches of a song, or unmeaning laughter. But the wife rode on, her babe pressed closely to her grieved heart. "Give me the baby, Millie; I can't trust you with him," he said, as they approached a dark and swollen stream. After some hesitation she resigned her first-born—her darling babe, closely wrapped in a great blanket—to his arms. Over the dark waters the noble steed safely bore them; and when they reached the bank, the mother asked for her child. With much care and tenderness he placed the bundle in her arms; but when she clasped it to her heart no babe was there; it had slipped from the blanket, and the drunken father knew it not. A wild shriek from the mother aroused him, and he turned round just in time to see the little rosy face rise one moment on the waters, then sink forever, and that by his own intemperance! The anguish of the mother and remorse of the father are better imagined than described.—Glasgow News.

◆

Voters in Italy have to pay a tax and be able to read and write.

Grand Banquet of Lafayette Chapter in Washington.

Our companions of the District are flourishing finely. Lafayette Chapter was instituted June 1, 1867. At a recent celebration, nearly the entire membership, numbering 68, with a large number of visitors and honored guests, were present. The High Priest, M. E Comp. Noble D. Larner, made the speech of welcome, as follows:

Companions—In the name of Lafayette Chapter No. 5, I extend you a fraternal greeting, and bid you welcome here to-night.

To each and every companion we extend the right hand of fellowship, and hail his prssence here with joy and satisfaction. As High Priest of this young and growing chapter, it becomes my pleasant duty to present to you all around the festive board, the compliments of Lafayette Chapter. And with our compliments I beg you to accept the warm and hearty salutations we offer as a slight token of the esteem and friendship we bear to you all. Let us join hands together at this banquet, resolving that Masonic friendship, here pledged, shall never be broken.

It was the custom in Europe and America, fifty years ago, to call the Craft from "work to refreshment," at the declaration of the High Priest. Refreshment then did not mean simple conversation between companions, but food and drink for our fraters, such as workmen crave after severe labor. They met together around the festive board, and renewed their pledges of good will, esteem, and friendship to each other. The cares and troubles of the world were here forgotten, and happiness ruled the hour. The chain of friendship that bound the companions together in those days was never broken by petty dissensions of party or secular discussion; and so the whole world pointed to the Fraternity and said: "Behold how Masons love one another."

These festive occasions among Masons tended to cement them in the holy bonds of Masonry, which remained sealed to the hour of death. It was during this period that Freemasonry secured a reputation all over the world, which we now enjoy. While these occasions are still adhered to all over Europe and about half of the United States, they have been sadly neglected in our jurisdiction; and this, in my judgment, accounts, in a great measure, for a want of unity of action, harmony, and love among us that that has sometimes been manifested by a few, and, for the credit of the Craft, by a very few in our jurisdiction. Let us overcome this unmasonic tendency by meeting around the festive board and exchanging Masonic courtesies, congratulations, and good cheer, until brotherly love possesses every Mason's heart.

In honor of the ancient custom just alluded to, the officers of Lafayette Chapter propose in all future times, as on the present occasion (at least such is the determination), to observe these ancient landmarks and send out their cards, and once a year they propose to be "at home," and, as on this occasion, invite every member of our chapter, the officers of the Grand Chapter, and the elective officers of the subordinate chapters to meet with them and receive their salutations.

Companions, as we look into each other's faces here to-night, let us rejoice in the prosperity of Capitular Masonry in this jurisdiction. Such very remarkable prosperity was never vouchsafed to any other jurisdiction in so short a time. Two years have not yet elapsed since we determined to cast off the yoke that held us in unnatural ties, and established ourselves as independent R. A. Masons. The sequel proves that we were right in the course we pursued, and we now stand an equal member of the great family of R. A. Masons throughout the country. And now, my companions, in this the hour of our prosperity, let us not forget that it is the time, above all others, when we should be generous and forgiving. Let us try to heal all differences that may exist growing out of the establishment of our Grand Chapter, and extending the right hand of fellowship to our misguided companions, invite them to again enter our circle and become true and faithful companions among us. In so doing we will not only exhibit the true principles of our Order, but will receive the plaudits of our companions throughout the land for being true to our obligations and ever ready to forget and forgive the errors of our companions.

We extend our hands to-night to greet the officers of old Columbia and Washington Chapters, the ever-faithful Mt. Vernon, and our twin sister Eureka; and our only regret is, that circumstances are such that we can not have the pleasure of also greeting our sister, Potomac Chapter, of Georgetown. But, companions, let us hope that long before another occasion of this kind shall come, Potomac Chapter may be enrolled under the banner of our Grand Chapter, where she properly belongs, and where her presence would be hailed with delight by us all. To all of you we bid a hearty welcome, and hope you will all enjoy yourselves in our company. The prosperity of your own chapters we shall always rejoice in equally with that of our own. Let neither envy or jealousy be harbored or tolerated. Let us be happy and united forever.

In behalf of the officers of Lafayette Chapter, I tender to every companion of the chapter their sincere thanks for the unanimity shown in their election. May our election always be as unanimous. The officers now present their compliments, and ask the fraternal salutations of one and all of you around this festive board.

Companion J. Edwin Mason, Secretary, read the toasts in a loud, clear voice, as follows:

The Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia—Like Phœnix arising from its ashes, so our Grand Chapter exalts itself as in former days, after encountering persecution unknown in the history of capitular Masonry. In all future time, "let us have peace."

Response by Hon. B. B. French, Grand High Priest of the District of Columbia, who said there was nothing remaining for him to say, since the Eminent High Priest had said all that could do honor to the occasion.

He hoped to see Potomac Chapter back with the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia, and Maryland recognizing the Grand Chapter here, as do all the other State Grand Chapters. He was glad to see the officers of this Chapter bring back the good old custom of the olden days—that of calling the "workmen from labor to refreshment." That was the way they did in his own early Masonic days. They met and feasted, and then they would "part upon the square."

◆

Voice of Fraternity.

At the recent session of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, the Grand Master was, for the first time since the organization—now 68 years—elected the second time, or two years consecutively. The circumstance was so unusual, that it demanded a special notice; and, after the Grand Lodge had adopted a resolution of thanks to the Grand Master "for the very able, efficient, and impartial manner" in which he had discharged his duties, that officer made the following response. It is no less touching in sentiment than beautiful in language, and does equal honor to the head and heart of that distinguished Mason. We give it entire.—Review.

Brethren of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky:

I cannot permit this—the last of an accumulated series of kindnesses—to pass to record without tendering to you my sincere and most profound acknowledgements..

Fifteen years ago I was welcomed into your midst a young and obscure Mason, representing a feeble and obscure lodge, located in one of the frontier districts of the State. On that occasion, quite unexpectedly to myself and friends, I was honored at your hands with the office of Grand Orator. At the ensuing session your flattering appreciation of my services in that capacity was manifested in the most signal manner, by conferring my humble name on one of the lodges in this jurisdiction—an honor which that lodge has since perpetuated by retaining the designation you then gave.

After an interval of many years' unavoidable absence from the communications of this grand body, I again met with you for the first time in this city. Without any general acquaintance with the new membership, or any special claims whatever to your partial consideration, I was again honored with a very complimentary election to the office of Grand Junior Warden. At your next communication you made a departure from your usual custom of rotation and passed me directly to the exalted station of Deputy Grand Master, and at the last grand reunion you elected me to the highest official position within your gift. This, I had supposed, was the culmination of your fraternal sympathy and support, as it certainly was the summit of my Masonic ambition and achievement, and I returned to the present grand body only, as I supposed, to render an account of my stewardship, and to surrender the gavel into abler hands, and with it, the delicate, honorable, and highly responsible trust which you had committed to my charge.

My re-election now to the same office—so very unexpected, so extraordinary and so unprecedented in the history of this Grand Lodge—has, I assure you, touched and thrilled my emotional nature to its profoundest depths—and it will ever be regarded as the most memorable event of my life, and whatever may be the future of that life, whether prosperous or adverse, overshadowed with clouds or radiant with sunshine, its bitterest sorrow will find a solace, and its present joy a richer zest, in the recollection of this distinguished appreciation and approval of my brethren of the mystic tie.

That the Grand Lodge of Kentucky should have thus diverged in my behalf from its unbroken line of precedents, running through sixty-eight consecutive years, is surely a pre-eminent token of partiality and confidence, which, while it overwhelms me with surprise and amazement, is also well calculated to humble me in the dust, in view of the increased obligations and responsibilities which gather around my renewed engagements—sanctified, as they are, by the endearing sympathies and hopes of the best of friends and the most devoted of brethren.

Under a deep sense of grateful obligation and unaffected self-distrust, I submit to your decision, and would to God I could only render vocal the wild throbbings of a grateful heart, that you might know and feel, to some extent at least, the intensity of that love and devotion toward the brethren in Kentucky which has been thus re-enkindled with undying flame upon the altar of my inmost soul.

An unfortunate mute was once asked to give the definition of gratitude. He immediately took his pencil in hand and traced out this beautiful sentiment: "Gratitude is the memory of the heart." Brethren, in this sacred sense believe me grateful. And however much our paths may diverge in future life, and to whatever distance the current of destiny or the rulings of Providence may remove me from your midst, rest assured that my Masonic heart, until forever stilled in death, will make its annual pilgrimage to this grand altar with a zeal no less ardent than that which leads the devoted Moslem to worship at the shrine of his fiery prophet! Around the altar we will soon assemble for the last time during the present session. The farewell word will soon be spoken, the farewell grip soon exchanged, and each will seek again the "loved ones at home." Before we go, let us dedicate ourselves anew to the cause of Universal Benevolence, and when you shall have reached your respective homes, and shall gather around your respective Masonic altars, I beg you will remember the Grand Master whom you have thus signally honored, and by your kind and fraternal advice and hearty co-operation, enable him, in some good degree, to meet the high expectations which you have excited among the Fraternity throughout the State; while it shall be his constant aim to devote whatever ability he may possess to shield from humiliation and disappointment this faithful and devoted band of craftsmen, who, of all others upon earth, have the holiest claims upon him to be saved and sheltered from such sorrow.

"It is not in mortals to command success;" but with your assistance I may at least hope to "deserve it."

◆

Bad Breath.—If when the face is brought near another's the lips are kept firmly closed there is no bad breath, that which comes from the nose being not perceptibly disagreeable.

Much of the disagreeable odor of a late meal may be avoided if the teeth and mouth are well rinsed with warm water, and the tooth-brush is passed across the back part of the tongue.

In some persons, a fetor of breath and of the feet alternate. In others, both are present at the same time.

A fetid effluvia arises usually, if not always, from three causes: first, it is hereditary, being connected with a scrofulous taint; second, it arises from a want of personal cleanliness; third, it attends a disordered stomach. The second and third suggest their own remedies. The first is a grievous and mortifying misfortune to all sensitive minds, but it may be remedied to a very considerable extent, by persistent habits of strict personal cleanliness, by large out-door activities, personal regularities, and the temperate use of plain, substantial food, carefully avoiding all gross and rancid articles of diet, suet, cheese, pies, puddings, smoked and fried meats, fish and the like, using often and efficiently the vapor or warm bath, with soap and plentiful friction.—Hall's Journal of Health.

◆

A Noble Wife.—A bankrupt merchant, returning home one night, said to his noble wife; "My dear, I am ruined; everything we have is in the hands of the sheriff." After a few moments of silence, the wife looked calmly into his face and said: "Will the sheriff sell you?" "Oh, no!" "Will the sheriff sell me?" "Oh, no!" "Will the sheriff sell the children?" "Oh, no!" "Then do not say we have lost everything. All that is most valuable remains to us—manhood, womanhood, childhood. We have lost but the results of our skill and industry. We can make another fortune, if our hearts and hands are left us."

Can we wonder that, encouraged by such a noble wife, he is now on the road to fortune again?

◆

Keep a smile on your countenance. Smiles breed dimples, which are more ornamental than seventy-five cent vest chains. It is dangerous to sleep in the same town with the proprietor of a perpetual frown. Don't walk around looking as dismal as a sick undertaker, or as if you were going to your wedding or your funeral. If you feel down-hearted avoid laudanum. Take to clean linen and victuals, curl your hair, stand chuck up, and you'll come out all right.

◆

Want of a Pursuit.—A man who without a predominant inclination is not likely to be either useful or happy. He who is everything is nothing.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY

H. G. REYNOLDS & SON.

One copy, one year..$1 25

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for The Trowel.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

Notice.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS, Editor.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., JAN. 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

Intolerance and Inconsistency.

Among our Masonic people there is some diversity in regard to forms of prayer. Why there should be, is incomprehensible to us. There is in Masonry, as in churches, some who profess an intense liberalism, which, in downright earnestness, is nothing less than French atheism, or more attractive infidelity under some religious name.

These exceptionists are the most intolerant of men. With one, prayer should be modeled after a Hebrew form—that is one kind of liberality; with another, there is to be no Christ, because it is illiberal for a conscientious Christian to use that name before one who does not believe in Him; and, if our memory is not at fault, one journal thought all prayers had better be omitted. This latter idea is simply horrible to a Mason who believes "that no one should enter on any important matter without first craving the blessing of Deity."

So far as the Fraternity is concerned, a few words must suffice. The religion of Masonry is that in which all good men agree, but admits of no sectarian disputes. There the Christian, the Mahometan, the Hebrew, and others, who acknowledge that against temperance, patience, charity, godliness, and brotherly kindness, there is no law, may meet in common, and, so far as forms are observed at all, they are made to meet and harmonize with the views of all. From the points where all good men agree, they go out and practice their religious tenets in conformity with their peculiar individual views.

These exceptionists are loud in denouncing any who pray according to their faith. If a Jewish Rabbi were to come into our lodge, we should request him to pray, and expect him to do so agreeably to the teachings of his persuasion. So of a Mahometan, or of any other sect. And we should expect the same courtesy from our Hebrew or Mahometan brethren. By the course these objectors pursue, they disclose the patent fact that they have no respect for the conscientious convictions of brethren whose lives are to them a reproach, and whose presence only reminds them of their ill-breeding and selfishness, to say nothing of the fact that they have no consciences or convictions themselves. Neither we, nor any one else, give assent to the utterances of those who speak in prayer. God alone knows the heart, and He knows in what we concur and wherein we dissent. Let none go out of his way to give offense, and let every man of prayer deal honestly with his own conscience. This alone is true toleration.

The Anti-Masons, however, in their malevolent and ill-grounded suspicions, are ready to seize upon any difference in order to make any point, and, with criminal unfairness, charge any fault, any opinion, or any point presented for common use, as binding upon and practiced by the entire Masonic Fraternity. There are objectors everywhere. There are malice, meanness, suspicion, and undermining dispositions in all classes, societies, and conditions of men. Such men flock into the church, and, in the general desire of their like outside to deride the church, these insiders are constantly pointed at, and the church is condemned because of them. Few men reflect that the soundest argument in favor of the church grows out of this very state of things. While it reveals the miserable rottenness and baseness of the men who seek it as a cover to their nefarious and mercenary intentions, it also demonstrates their shrewdness in their calculations, and in their association with pure and upright men.

Anti-Masons are no more united in religious belief than Masons—far less so. They are a common herd, and generally a very mean one, embracing every variety of color, stripe, and form in opinions, character, and morals. Let a Congregational minister be rejected by a lodge in Ohio, and he will come to Illinois, and, sheltered behind the veil of supposed oblivion, issue blast after blast, croak after croak, and bellow after bellow, until in his insanity he sees a murdered Morgan behind every bush, an assassin in every carriage, and a red-handed murderer upon every bench.

Such men are ready to prevaricate, to conceal, to change, suppress, and add to, or do anything to create false impressions, with vows of ordination upon them, in order to bring into disrepute an Institution which rejected them.

We have long since ceased to expect either generosity or magnanimity from such zealots, to say nothing of common fairness, justice, or truth.

The objection is raised in some quarters that Masons reject Christ, and that in their devotions they reject Him. Such Masons as do not believe in Christ are fairly subject to the charge, as are all such persons everywhere. But the charge is untrue in regard to Christian men, and in regard to their teachings either in or out of the lodge. We think that some men have been wrought up to believe this charge in all honesty. But there is not one educated and intelligent man, who mingles with Christian Masons as he does with other men, who believes it for one moment; and when he utters such gross untruths, he does it maliciously, knowing and believing that his statements are false, and that he is falsely accusing his fellow men.

To carry this point further: We have our mind now on one man alone. When he wanted to go to Congress he shirked his anti-Masonry considerably. But when he found that hope gone, he fell back into his old slough. This man is a noted temperance advocate. He does not hesitate to join with men of every sect, and to unite with Universalist and Unitarian ministers on such occasions in prayer. He is also an anti-slavery man, and a member of their societies. From the scoffing atheist up to the Episcopalian and Roman Catholic, all are anxiously urged to join the movement, and no questions are asked about Christ. In their constitution and laws, Christ is entirely ignored. Then this man can join with anybody in prayer, "for the sake of the cause." In Christian churches it is expected that Christ will be preached. It is not expected of anti-Christians. Temperance, anti-slavery, horticultural, educational, agricultural, charitable, benevolent, Masonic, Odd Fellows, literary, scientific, or other societies, will carry out and develop the principles of their organization, and those only. To undertake to pervert them from the legitimate end and aim of their formation to build up some other thing, is only to destroy it, and is not only gross intolerance, but vile and inexcusable ill-breeding and bad manners.

The House of Representatives.

The House is said to contain seventy out of eighty-five who have never sat in the General Assembly before. It is a fine body of really representative men, and we feel sure that they mean business. Of those we know to be Masons, are Hons. J. M. Baily, of Freeport, an old and experienced member; L. L. Bond, Chicago; A. J. Bradshaw, La Harpe; Beatty F. Burke, Carlinville; Charles Burnett, Shawneetown; James E. Callaway, Tuscola; Henry C. Childs, Wheaton, who has seen good service; Ansel B. Cook, Libertyville; John Cook, Springfield; Joseph Cooper, Willow Hill; Silas H. Elliott, Paris; Calvin H. Frew, Paxton; E. M. Gilmore, Litchfield; Thos. Jasper, Quincy; Daniel Kerr, Edwardsville; Alonzo Kinyon, Amboy; D. H. Morgan, Russellville; Timothy M. Morse, Fairview; the two last, members four years ago; Smith M. Palmer, Jacksonville; James G. Phillips, Mound Station; John Porter, Monmouth; N. N. Ravlin, Kaneville; Alexander Ross, Mascoutah; John W. Ross, Lewistown; Hiram F. Sickles, Moline; William F. Smith, Lexington, a former member; E. S. Taylor, Chicago; Bradford F. Thompson, Bradford; Jonathan C. Willis, Metropolis; David M. Woodson, Carrollton, a member in 1840–41, and for a long time since Circuit Judge. There are probably several others whom we do not know. Of these thirty, three, Hons. D. H. Morgan, T. M. Morse, and John W. Ross, are Masters. In this article we will notice two; others hereafter.

Gen. John Cook, Representative from this District, is the grand son of Gov. Ninian Edwards, who was Governor of Illinois Territory; afterwards Senator and Governor of the State. His father, Daniel P. Cook, represented this State in Congress. Passing over all his previous history, we find him on board the Lady Gay in September last, at St. Louis, in the noted excursion up and down the river, in which the steamers Mississippi, Lady Gay, and Belle of Alton were engaged. The Commander of Elwood Commandery had been compelled to go home. Gen. Cook intended to go up the river, land on return, and take the afternoon train. Gathering a few Templars around us, we said, "General, you must stay." He candidly said, "You know how my house is injured by fire, how my family and property are exposed, and I must go." The reply was quick and earnest: "Your affairs will not suffer; we are liable to accidents and troubles, and we must have a Commander in such an event whose voice will be heard, and whose commands all will obey. You cannot leave us."

Accepting the situation, no accident occurred until returning; the Mississippi was ahead of the Lady Gay, and was snagged. Backing, she commenced to sink, and started for the Illinois shore, where she sank up to the guards. As soon as the Captain learned the extent of the injury, he signalled the Lady Gay. Instantly, Gen. Cook took command of all but the crew, stated the case, sent the men from all parts of the boat to the boiler deck, gathered suitable aids, and stationed guards. Upon coming alongside, the men were quietly transferred to the boiler deck, and the ladies to the cabin. Upon starting, the same condition and discipline was observed, and upon landing, as the ladies came down, their attendants were called and passed out, until all were ashore, when the Templars formed and returned to their quarters in good order. We have ever since believed that his coolness and presence prevented serious disasters, and from that time his election was a certainty.

Hon. John W. Ross is the grandson of an old settler long known at Havana and Lewistown, Ossian M. Ross. We think that he laid out Lewistown, and named it for his son, Lewis, now a member of Congress. Just twenty-eight years since we met Lewis in the same House as a Representative where his son now sits.

John W. is twenty-seven years of age, Master of Lewistown Lodge No. 104, and D. D. G. Master. In 1850 we were prosecuting in Lewistown. Meeting a lad one day, and struck with his likeness to Lewis W. Ross, we asked him if he were not Lewis Ross' boy. He replied in the affirmative. Last October, while at Grand Lodge, he reminded us of the conversation. When nominated, he was not looking for it, and hesitated about accepting, but upon the advice of his father accepted, canvassed his county thoroughly, and was elected by over five hundred majority.

Trip to Kansas.

A long-deferred trip to Kansas could be deferred no longer. So on Thursday, December 24, we started with our better-half, and after a pleasant ride in the comfortable cars of the Toledo, Wabash & Western Road, under the care of the gentlemanly conductor, Bro. Eugene Burrill, we passed in due time to Quincy; there taking the spacious sleeping-cars of the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad, we glided swiftly and smoothly, embraced in the arms of balmy sleep, until we neared St. Jo., on the banks of the mighty Missouri, now bridged over by the fiat of the Ice King. A warm breakfast at the depot, and an hour's ride by rail down the river, and by express over the surging waters on the ice, brought us, December 25, to the Massasoit House, Atchison, just one hour too late for the cars west. Saturday, the cars took us over an extended upland, rolling prairie, with numerous streams, a few new towns, thriving and growing, sparse settlements with very little forest or timber, and these all skirting the streams. Passing through Irving just at sunset, the conductor politely landed us at the Deep Cut, five miles out, and soon we were snugly ensconsed in the hospitable home of our wife's uncle, Judge William Thompson, on the banks of the beautiful Blue. Soon sons, daughters, and sons and daughters-in-law, with sister and their children, numbering about thirty, came in, and a grand old frontier re-union ensued. Farther west, about four miles, is Waterville, the present terminus of the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railway from Atchison to Fort Kearney. At the point of our stopping is the junction of the Little Blue from the west, and of the Big Blue from the north, streams about equal in size, and forming the most natural union we ever saw; the waters of each are sky-blue, and as clear as the most transparent glass.

Our visit ended, we returned by the same route, arriving safely home on the last day of the year. We hope to see the old patriarch and his tribe more frequently hereafter.

The Inauguration.

The second Monday in this month was a pleasant day, and the Springfield Zouaves,—now the Governor's Guard,—the Emmett Guards, and the Capitol Artillery, made a fine display. The Governor and Lieutenant Governor elect were escorted from the Governor's Mansion to the Representatives Hall, where, before entering upon their great and important undertakings, the blessing of Deity was reverently invoked by Rev. A. Hale. Chief Justice Breese administered the oath of office, and the new Governor delivered his inaugural address.

The State Cabinet stands as follows: Governor, John M. Palmer, a R. A. M. and member of Mt. Nebo Lodge and Burke Chapter, at Carlinville; Lieutenant Governor, John Dougherty, a member of Jonesboro Lodge, at Jonesboro; Secretary of State, Edward Rummell; Auditor, General C. E. Lippincott, a member of Central Lodge No. 71; State Treasurer, General E. N. Bates; Attorney General, Washington Bushnell, a member of Occidental Lodge, Shabona Chapter, and Ottawa Commandery, at Ottawa; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Newton Bateman, W. M. Central Lodge No. 71, and a member of Springfield Chapter and Council, and Past Commander of Elwood Commandery No. 6.

New Grand Commandery.

The Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of the State of Kansas was organized at Leavenworth, on the 29th of December, by virtue of a warrant from the Grand Master of the United States, M. E. W. S. Gardner. There are four chartered commanderies in the State, to-wit: Leavenworth No. 1, at Leavenworth; Washington No. 2, at Atchison; Hugh De Payens No. 3, at Fort Scott; De Molay No. 4, at Lawrence, all of which were represented in the organization. The following are the grand officers:

R. E. W. O. Gould, Grand Commander.
V. E. J. L. Philbrick, Deputy Grand Commander.
E. E. A. Smith, Grand Generalissimo.
E. O. A. Bassett, Grand Captain General.
E. M. S. Adams, Grand Prelate.
E. John M. Price, Senior Grand Warden.
E. A. T. Dorwin, Junior Grand Warden.
E. C. Beck, Grand Treasurer.
E. E. T. Carr, Grand Recorder.
E. R. R. Rees, Grand Standard Bearer.
E. C. S. Wheaton, Grand Sword Bearer.
E. John A. Chase, Grand Warder.
E. F. Magers, Grand Sentinel.

The first annual conclave will be held at Leavenworth on the third Monday in October, 1869.

Dedication.

Prophetstown Lodge No. 293, Whiteside county, Ill., having just completed a neat, commodious, and tasty hall—which, by the way, they have fully paid for—dedicated the same on Thursday, December 10, 1868. R. W. Bro. Jas. C. Luckey, D. D. G. M., presided, assisted by W. Bro. John Ruggles, Jr., as Grand Marshal. Ceremonies of dedication and consecration, with appropriate addresses and oration by D. Dep. Gr. Master—music by the "Shaw family"—a happy and joyous time, not to be forgotten in this vicinity. A large number of brethren and their wives, with several invited guests, were present. In the evening a joyous festival and collation, seldom equaled outside of our large cities. Such gatherings can not fail to be of great utility in disseminating the principles of our ancient Craft, and convincing the "outer world" that Masonry is not a "dark-lantern affair," but an Institution whose aim and purpose is to elevate the human race and prepare the way for "brotherly love."

Elections.

GRAND MASTER'S OFFICE,
NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 20, 1868.

H. G. Reynolds, Esq.:

DEAR SIR AND BRO.—An article in THE TROWEL, just received, entitled "The Elections in Lodges," calls to mind a recent incident here, such as never before occurred in my Masonic experience, and which I jot down that, if you see fit, you may put into shape and add reflections which must be naturally suggested by its perusal. It is another very possible illustration, to me, of my theory that, in Masonry, or rather in the teachings, &c., of Masonry, we can find a solution of any question in politics, morals, and religion, at all disputable or otherwise doubtful. I believe its form of organization—I mean by it the forms such as the landmarks teach, and not as may be found in some of our recently made constitutions. As, for instance, the question of suffrage in all political bodies is answered by the answer of a candidate at the door, declaring his qualifications for becoming a Mason.

Let me, at this late day, though none the less thought of, welcome you among us Grand Masters.

As ever, fraternally yours,

J. Q. A. F.

Not this Time.

By our rule, all whose time expired in December, and who have not renewed, would be stricken from our books. But a large number of prospectuses are out, and we hope they will all be returned immediately. For this reason we shall strike off no names this month, and hope that every one whose time has expired will either renew by letter or by our agents, without delay.

The Western Monthly

Is the title of a new candidate for public favor, published monthly by Reed & Tuttle, 115 Madison street, Chicago, at $2 per year. It is the usual size of magazines, and has 64 pages. We have received No. 1, Vol. 1, for January. Facing first page is an engraving of Wm. B. Ogden, one of the early settlers in Chicago, an eminent business man, and a large-hearted, public-spirited citizen. The first article is a biography of Mr. Ogden. Robert Collyer and Schuyler Colfax are contributors, and all its articles are excellent. We hope it will at once bound into general circulation throughout the West.

CHICAGO COMMANDERY No. 19.—Ammi M. Bennett, Com.; Geo. F. Letz, Gen.; Charles McFarland, C. G.; George H. Gibson, Treas.; John Whitley, Recorder; E. Clarence Hubbard, S. W.; Albert G. Tull, J. W.; Truman W. Steele, St. B.; James Irons, Sw. B.; Wm. Henry Woodbury, Warder; Moses Gray and Herman A. Pundt, Stewards.

Tidings.

Items.

Hardin Lodge No. 44, at Mt. Sterling, has a splendid new hall, which will be ready for occupancy soon.

Massachusetts.—Hon. Wm. Sewell Gardner, Grand Master of Templars U. S. A., is elected Grand Master Grand Lodge of Massachusetts; Charles Levi Woodbury, Deputy; Ithamar F. Conkey, S. G. Warden; Ivory H. Pope, J. G. Warden; John McClellan, Grand Treasurer; Solon Thornton, Recording Grand Secretary; Chas. W. Moore, Corresponding Grand Secretary.

WELL DONE.—Upon retiring from the chair of Waukegan Lodge No. 78, at the late installation, the lodge, by the hands of R. W. Bro. E. M. Haines, Past J. G. Warden, presented R. W. Bro. John C. Baker, Past Deputy Grand Master, with an elegant Past Master's jewel elegantly and appropriately inscribed. We hope that our good brother may be duly honored among our Craftsmen in his present professional tour.

The gap in the Pacific Railroad is but 420 miles.

The 1,500,000 inhabitants of Cuba are taxed $35,000,000 annually.

The word of an honest man is surer than the gold of a villain.

The January Voice of Masonry comes to us with a fine portrait of the publisher, Bro. John C. W. Bailey, Chaplain of Oriental Lodge No. 33.

There are three hundred denominational newspapers and publications in the United States.

We tender our acknowledgements to Grand Secretaries Gouley, of Missouri, Frizzell, of Tennessee, Thornton, of Massachusetts, Langridge, of Iowa, McCorcle, of Kentucky, Bramwell, of Indiana, and Caldwell, of Ohio, for proceedings of various Masonic bodies.

The cost of fitting up the splendid Oriental Hall in Chicago was about $27,000. About two months before the election, it was found that about $5,200 was unliquidated. Oriental Lodge went to work with a will to clear it off before election, and on the night of election $791 only remained. Bro. Swan sent a committee round the lodge and raised the sum in ten minutes.

Twelve thousand five hundred human lives have been lost in the British coal mines within the last twelve years.

Our W. Senior Grand Deacon, Bro. Wm. G. Swan, after a faithful service as Senior Deacon, Junior and Senior Warden, and W. Master of Oriental Lodge, retires with honor, and was presented, on the night of election, by President Blaney, on behalf of the lodge, with a costly Past Master's jewel. Right royally has Bro. Swan earned this elegant testimonial.

ONE-IDEAISM.—Our cotemporary of the St. Louis Freemason first proposed the question, "What is a Lodge?" and ran it into the ground. Then the Scotchers got it, and he was run into the ground. Now it is "nigger, NIGGER, NIGGER."

PENNSYLVANIA—Grand Lodge.—Rich'd Vaux, Grand Master; Robert A. Lamberton, Deputy; Samuel C. Perkins, S. G. W.; A. R. Potter, J. G. W.; John Thomson, Grand Secretary. Grand Chapter.—George Griscom, G. H. P.; Michael Nisbet, G. K.; C. E. Meyer, G. S.; John Thomson, Grand Secretary.

Grand Commandery of Virginia.—Edward H. Gill, G. Com.; John Robin McDaniel, Dep.; Wm. B. Isaacs, G. Gen.; John W. Potts, G. Capt. Gen.; Geo. W. Dame, G. Prel.; John Dove, Richmond, Grand Recorder.

Belvidere Commandery No. 2, Alton.—Sirs R. B. Smith, E. Com.; Geo. D. Hayden, Gen.; Wm. Jarrett, Capt. Gen.; M. H. Dutro, Prel.; Robson Graham, S. W.; John Koehne, J. W.; W. C. Quigley, Treas.; H. N. Pierson, Rec.; Henry Watson, St. B.; T. H. Kingsley, Sw. B.; S. V. Crossman, Warder; Isaac E. Hardy, Capt. Guards.

Chicago Commandery No. 19.—We are in receipt of a beautiful card and letter of invitation, with complimentary ticket, to attend the first annual banquet given at the Sherman House, January 12. Committee: A. M. Bennett, Geo. F. Letz, E. C. Hubbard. Receptionists: W. M. Egan, Geo. Gardner, C. McFarland, Jos. Harris, S. P. Crumb, A. R. Atkins, Wm, Pingree, P. I. Husander, I. Gilman, Jr. We presume—we know—the occasion was a joyous one.

North Carolina Grand Lodge.—Robert B. Vance, G. M.; Ellis Malone, Dep.; Joseph B. Batchelor, G. S. W.; Samuel H. Rountree, J. G. W.; D. W. Bain, Raleigh, G. Sec.

R. W. Bro. Gamaliel Washburn, Past Dep. Grand Master of Vermont, died at Montpelier, December 30, and was buried January 2, under the direction of the Grand Lodge. He was one of the number who patiently bore poverty, persecution, and contumely in the anti-Masonic war of 1827, never yielding one iota, and preserving throughout a calm, courteous, and Christian demeanor and character.

Wellsburg Lodge No. 2, Wellsburg, W. Va.—Wm. H. Harvey, W. M.; John Briggs, S. W.; R. T. Roberts, J. W.; J. D. Lloyd, Treas.; T. M. Lloyd, Sec.

Garden City Lodge 141.—The officers were publicly installed by R. W. Bro. D. C. Cregier, Deputy Grand Master, on Tuesday evening, December 28. Rev. J. A. Gray made an address upon Brotherly Love, which was exemplified when the Lodge presented the retiring Master, R. W. Bro. G. W. Barnard, with a tea set of eight pieces, and a smoking set of four pieces, valued at $500. Verily, Chicago does nothing by halves.

We alluded in our last to the crystal wedding of R. W. Deputy Grand Master Cregier. We are told that he literally lives in a glass house; that it is glass to the right of him, glass to the left of him, glass to the front of him, glass to the rear of him, glass everywhere.

The majority of General Grant in Illinois for President is 51,152; of Gen. Logan for Congress-at-large, 49,633; of Gen. Lippencott, for Auditor, 49,910; of Edward Rummell, for Secretary of State, 50,113; of Washington Bushnell, for Attorney General, 49,192; for State Convention, 848.

GREEN BAY.—G. A. Lamb is W. M., Oliver Libby S. W., W. J. Fisk J. W., and W. H. Norris, Jr., Secretary, of Washington Lodge No. 21. Bro. T. R. Hudd delivered an able address at the installation.

DEPERE, WIS.—E. T. Sprague W. M., H. F. Tinker Secretary, of the lodge at Depere.

Our brethren at Chesterfield had a good time at their installation. Bro. Loomis installed the officers, and Bro. Wood, of Lincoln Lodge, delivered a good oration. Then all went to the seminary, and had a good supper; wives, daughters, sisters, mothers, and sweethearts.

Johnson Harries died in Perry county, in this State, on the 3d of December, aged ninety-nine years. He came to Illinois in 1829. He had 12 children, 106 grand-children, 237 great-grand-children, and 12 great-great-grand-children, being 367 in all.

The Marengo Republican, edited by D. D. G. Master J. B. Babcock, refuses all doubtful advertisements. We are glad to see this. A good conscience is better than gold. We have been offered prices that we do not like to name, for even one insertion. They shall never see the light of day in our columns. We wish all editors would imitate Bro. Babcock in this matter.

The New Age, the organ of the I. O. O. F. of California, comes to us draped in mourning for the death of Mrs. Mary A. B., wife of Frank B. Austin, the accomplished editor.

The House of Representatives in the small State of Vermont has 299 members; of these, 151 are farmers, 20 attorneys, 18 merchants, and 17 are manufacturers; 210 are natives of Vermont, 18 of New Hampshire, and 11 of Massachusetts; 54 are Congregationalists, 42 Methodists, 35 Baptists, 27 Universalists,; 224 Republicans, 14 Democrats.

Hon. Thompson Campbell, Secretary of State under Governor Ford, and afterwards Member of Congress from the Galena district, died in San Francisco, December 6. He was one of the most brilliant men in the country.

The debt of Tennessee is $38,000,000.

New York raised 35,000,000 bushels of potatoes this year.

France has 1,300,000 men ready for service, and Prussia 1,130,000.

The salary of the Governor General of India is $125,000, and he receives in addition $130,000 for expenses, all in gold.

The French fleet numbers 4 frigates, 4 guard-accostas, 1 float-battery, 16 iron-clads, and 316 steam vessels.

Gorin Commandery, Olney.—H. Hayward, Commander; H. M. Eidson, Generallissimo; Mortimer O'Kean, Capt. Gen.; H. E. Thomas, Prelate; J. P. Cullen, S. W.; J. H. Cartwright, J. W.; H. Studor, Treas.; G. D. Slanker, Recorder.

Hon. Josiah H. Drummond, 33°, of Portland, Me., M. P. Supreme Commander of the Supreme Council of Sov. Ins. Gen. Northern Jurisdiction, is a member of the Lower House in Maine, and was elected Speaker with great unanimity. He has served in that station before.

Our brethren of the Masonic Publishing and Manufacturing Company, at 432 New York, have suffered severely by a recent fire. The office of the Secretary Gen. A. & A. Rite lost all its correspondence, but the records were saved.

Expulsions.

By Olney Lodge No. 140. CHARLES BOYD, for gross unmasonic conduct.

Published by order of the lodge.

By Vienna Lodge No. 150. WM. H. GROVES, for gross unmasonic conduct.

Published by order of the lodge.

A Mute Impostor.

URBANA, Ill., Dec. 28, 1868.

Bro. Reynolds:

Some weeks since a man, hailing under the name of H. B. CAMPBELL, and claiming to be a deaf mute and a Mason, passed through this place. While here he called upon me and asked that I should purchase a book he had for sale, or give him an order upon the Treasurer for some money to help him in his necessities, neither of which propositions I complied with. Not crediting his story of having lost both speech and hearing, as avowed by him, he became much incensed at me and informed me he should take much pleasure in "reporting me to the Grand Master." I learn recently that he passed through the towns north of here, and was in some places more successful than here. In one place, however, he, in an unguarded moment, let fall a few hasty and inconsiderate words which plainly revealed his true character of an arrant impostor.

Let the brethren be on their guard.

J. O. CUNNINGHAM.

Masters and Wardens as Returned up to January 7.

No. Masters. S. Wardens. J. Wardens.
1...Thos. J. Heirs, Jeptha Dudley, Albert Demaree.
2...S. K. Gibson, Alfred Smith, Chris. Helm.
3...Stephen Ellis, Alfred Bounguard, David Wilson.
4...William Lavely, H. J. Pike, R. J. Coats.
7...Wm. A. Levanway, J. D. Crabtree, Jas. Stewart.
8...Jerome R. Gorin, Paul F. Jones, Jno. L. Adams.
9...John C. Bagby, Louis D. Erwin, R. P. Suthey.
13...J. R. Fairfield, Peter Sonne, Jos. Rosenhaupt.
15...W. Y. Francis, J. S. Hazzard, Jacob B. Woolley.
16...B. B. Vance, John N. McCord, John Gericke.
17...C. N. Harding, C. S. Churchill, H. R. Bartleson.
19...John Bennett, Hobart Hamilton, John Carver.
20...J. D. Hamilton, W. C. Hooker, G. W. Batchelder.
23...L. L. B. Miller, Jos. Bolijack, H. B. Wilson.
24...F. H. Cobb, John Heinzelman, Geo. C. Miley.
25...F. A. Maxey, T. P. Yerkes, B. F. Culp.
26...T. J. Davis, A. Steigall, F. F. Frans.
27...B. H. Croft, F. H. Ferguson, J. E. Davis.
29...W. F. Henry, J. W. Webb, E. F. Stickley.
30...J. C. Brinkerhoff, John Chaffee, W. P. Tanquary.
31...N. C. Pace, C. H. Patton, R. D. Guthrie.
33...Edwin Powell, F. P. Cram, E. B. Bennett.
34...David J. Wike, David Rippey, John L. Sweet.
36...John Weber, Geo. Marshall, John Hefty.
37...James Wilson, M. Halliday, M. L. Stansbury.
39...Isidor Benjamin, Isaac Abrahams, F. Drude.
42...Thos. J. Stevens, Wm. E. Spears, S. Williams.
43...B. R. Baughen, Wm. Spurgin, J. S. Spaulding.
44...A. A. Glenn, F. Keyser, A. K. Lowrey.
45...W. W. Bonnell, J. A. Rider, E. W. Baxter.
46...Barnhart Meals, H. Geo. Belcke, John Sewall.
47...J. M. Davidge, Jas. Bartleson, E. B. Watkins.
49...A. Gould, B. F. Barge, J. L. Jennings.
50...Geo. W. Davis, Wm. L. Greene, J. B. Nulton.
51...I. H. Shimer, Wooten Harris, Wm. P. Johnson.
52...S. S. Winegar, James Watson, Chas. Heinz.
54...M. M. Morrill, G. F. Thomas, John Bauer.
56...G. W. Jones, E. W. Patterson, R. M. Atkinson.
57...James M. Gow, J. A. Gray, B. Newburgher.
59...W. C. Benedict, T. H. Bras, John Seastone.
60...C. P. Loop, L. H. March, C. H. Peck.
63...B. F. Church, E. E. Richards, J. S. Wheat.
64...F. M. Youngblood, W. E. Smith, R. H. Green.
65...Mark A. Naper, Chas. Schulz, Wm. H. Jeffers.
66...D. M. Eiker, Geo. F. Smith.
69...R. Hayford, Wm Francis, Alex. Owens.
70...Joseph Holland, C. D. Bartlett, E. M McElwain.
71...N. Bateman, R. L McGuire, C. C. Cromwell.
74...W. R. Weld, Samuel Widdowson, E. A. Seeley.
75...Giles P. Ransom, Henry C. Craig, D. P. Nichols.
77...D. G. Burr, Levi Sisk, Stephen Collier.
78...Daniel Brewster, A. Z. Blodgett, W. A. Johnson.
79...A. H. White, J. W. Peterson, H. Dougherty.
82...Theron D. Walden, Edward Kipp, J. W. Page.
86...G. W. Staley, Francis Menteer, G. B. Morrison.
87...John Wickel, A. L. Gideon, A. C. Wilson.
88...J. B. Wright, H. W. Lindley, H. Middlekamp.
89...C. M. Edwards, M. W. Robertson, M. W. Barham.
90...Jas Walker, Theodore Porter, Elijah Perrigo.
91...Thos. Moore, Wm. H. Scott, Hiram Quante.
93...Geo. Bradley, M. Shallenbarger, G A. Lowman.
95...L. P. Vail, A. B. Carey, Monroe Yates.
96...H. J. Little, J. McC. Miller, David Rine.
97...L. F. Young, John Arthur, S. H. Polly.
98...J. G. Gorin, L. S. North, J. B. Miles.
100 . S. W. Green, Joseph Moore, Andrew Hoffman.
103...J. M. Cowen, O. Dent, E. Gaylord.
104...John W. Ross, Wm. H. Chain, Geo. McElwee.
105...James Ellis, Jas. M. Riggs, Wm. C. Gibbs.
108...Jas. H. Burgesser, A. J. Glaze, S. Mann.
109...Alex. H. Johnson, Chas. W. Beatty, L. Remann.
110...H. J. Blank, Geo. E. Monk, John L. Peterson.
111...H. C. Hacker, Wm. McElhany, L. Goodell.
113...H. G. Calhoun, S. H. Redmon, Wm. Willett.
114...J. W. Richards, J. C. Patterson, Wm. E. Miller.
115...Ransom R. Storm, C. G. Peck, Wm. King.
116...H. S. Jacob, John Langston, T. J. Means.
118...Jonathan Meacham, E. D. Ward, E. J. Short.
122...Oliver P. Squier, Wm. H. Green, J. S. Torrey.
123...Jas. Peterson, Jas. F. Francis, Jas. R. White.
124...Lewis P. Lott, Alex. Patterson, H. D. Hitchcock.
125...Edward Talbott, T. C. Tootwiler, W. R. Stith.
126...Wm. P. Chain, Jos. Baker, Wm. H. Seibert.
127...F. M. Simmons, S. D. Warner, A. J. Hastings.
128...G. E. Burnett, Wm. B. Jones, L. H. Adams.
129...Edwin Woolley, Thos. J. Short, Jas. Waller.
130...DeWitt C. Jones, C. D. Gresham, Wm. Moore.
131.. Samuel Roper, John B. Young, J. C. Johnson.
132...Daniel Beckley, E. D. Sargent, J. C. Hayburger.
133...Burns Archer, J. W. Walkin, Jas. R. Patten.
134...Daniel Dustin, Geo. H. Smith, Robt. L. Miller.
137...John S. Kinnear, T. L. Lockport, J. R. Riddall.
138...J. B. Babcock, P. T. Parkhurst, B. S. Parker.
139...A. McWayne, Smith Hoag, A. J. Muzzy.
140...G. D. Slanker, J. L. McCullough, Enos Gunn.
141...H. F. Holcomb, J. Butler, Geo. B. McClellan.
142...J. L. Morgan, Wm. Wilson, J. A. Sever.
143...Alonzo Ransom, A. B. Clapsaddle, E. G. Clark.
145...Orin C. Town, Julius T. Weld, E. B. Guilford.
146...Lot Chadwick, Darius Sawyer, L. C. Sawyer.
147...L. Slocum, Jacob Hazlett, A. M. Ewing.
148...Thos. Wynn, C. T. Caraway, Michael Kizer.
150...David Ragins, Gilson Slack, J. B. Kuykendall.
151...Rich'd R. Bird, F. W. Cross, J. T. Pennington.
153...Jas. W. Hudson, E. W. Tate, Geo. E. Augland.
154...E. R. Ankrum, W. E. Moore, D. E. Parks.
155...Alex. Thompson, W. R. Hoyle, J. C. Nash.
157...J. O. Cunningham, M. S. Brown, L. A. McLean.
159...Chas. Trowbridge, O. D. Bassett, W. T. Heaps.
161...A. T. Bartlett, A. C. Gish, Jacob Rauch.
162...G. K. Carson, P. Parker, A. Wilson.
163...Chas. Downey, T. Z. Thornton, H. P. Brookhart.
164...J. S. Johnson, Wm. C. Clark, Wm. W Shepherd.
165...Wm. T. Kirk, Ira A. Church, J. G. Bourne.
166...E. Charles Bean, H. W. Rowell, A. M. Davis.
170...Geo. W. Renn, Jacob Hartman, W. D. Rowell.
171...W. E. Eastham, A. A. Cooper, C. C. Armstrong.
172...G. W. Grover, John Booth, C. E. Sampson.
173...A. P. Leggett, B. B. Spencer, W. F. Ackerly.
175...Sam'l C. Stearns, H. T. Woodruff, H. T. Bush.
178...Francis Hudson, O. F. Warriner, J. P. Daniels.
179...Rich'd B. Tate, Enoch B. Hart, Jos. H. Goar.
180...Bartley Scarlett, G. P. Hardy, Jas. H. Kirkman.
181...W. B. Kilner, J. H. Waggoner, Peter Cofer.
185...David Andrews, Jno. Woodmansee, Jas. McCoy.
187...Jas. C. Luckey, Wm. Frazer, Jas. C. Burbank.
188...Chas. B. Smith, Chas. C. Farmer, Samuel Moore.
192...J. Coykendall, Nelsen Oldfield, Jas. Genvle.
195...James Mayor, Robert Sutton, R. K. Shinn.
196...John A. Apperson, Jas. Wilder, S. R. Apperson.
197...Seymour S. Wertz, W. L. Spear, A. C. Cummins.
200...D. B. Bruett, F. M. Coulter, T. P. Butler.
201...W. J. A. Delancy, E. S. Condit, Chas. F. Lape.
202...E. K. Durnbaugh, J. A. Pearce, Robert Mitts.
204...J. F. Shadwell, J. M. Williams, J. F. Wilcox.
207...C. E. R. Winthrop, E. P. Simmons, L. G. Porter.
208...O. T. Randall, L. A. Baker, Wm. Hart.
209...S. C. Smith, Albert Jack, David H. Kilmore.
211...Arthur R. Atkins, John McLaren, C. S. Crane.
212...R. Carson, F. P. Taylor, J. W. Christopher.
214...R. Brown, Jacob Querback, W. M. McDaniel.
216...Simpson Johnson, Geo. H. Shupe, W. H. Harris.
217...Jas. Claypoole, J. L. Leith, S. Hardin.
218...John Andrew Edwin E. Gray, Wm. McAllister.
219...Thos. Naphew, E. Moody, J. H. A. Mitchell.
220...J. A. Brown, E. G. Knapp, J. L. Stearns.
221...M. E. Ferguson, J. A. Kaufman, J. H. Arnold.
224...A. S. Bissell, P. Campbell, John Doyle.
226...Thos. H. McCoy, L. Johnson, E. Giddings.
230...Wm. Weaver, Samuel C. Hall, E. W. Gaston.
233...J. F. Durant, Q. C. Ward, W. W. Gilihan.
234...H. Johnson, A. Hanson, B. Sprague.
236...Jas Rogers, Geo. W. Amsden, R. Renshed.
237...Alex. S. Irwin, David S. Parker, David J. Baker.
238...Thos. Ruggles, E. P. Denton, J. E. Morrison.
240...L. W. Faulkner, J. H. Hess, E. H. McAllister.
241...T. J. Prickett, J. H. Barton, W. H. Couchenour.
244...J. S. Patchin, John Rae, H. Martin.
248...H. C. Sanford, T. L. Mayer, A. B. Cole.
249...C. C. Percival, H. G. Stahl, Geo. W. Hilliard.
253...Oliver Crissy, F. M. Nance, Geo. Rose.
254...A. W. Stolp, T. J. Bebee, Wm. Barnes.
257...Geo. O. Griswold, Wm. Raleigh, John Harris.
258...W. G. Billings, J. G. Callender, A. J. Allderman.
259...B. A. Jones, W. B. Price, H. B. Williams.
260...W. H. House, Chas. ——, E. P. Ashbrook.
261...John H. Tyler, Wm. H. Cardiff, A. Timmons.
262...Geo. B. Cook, Jas. H. Smith, Norton Buell.
263...Wm. J. Crown, J. E. Pillsbury, F. M. Barrett,
265...Jas. Sconce, Wm. Lawler, John R. Newkirk.
267...Samuel C. Moss, Daniel R. Hoyt, S. Bucklew.
268...David M. Weider, Jacob M. Bell, J. E. Dyas.
269...Melvin Smith, Levi Bisbee, James L. Wheat.
271...Edward Cook, Jos. B. Lewis, Arthur R. Briggs.
272...C. S. Conger, Jas. J. McClintock, J. M. Damron.
273 ..A. Campbell, J. C. Spare, S. K. Minier.
274...John S. Kosier, John W. Mack, E. H. Evans.
276...John Vinyard, J. H. B. Renfro, J. C. Woolrat.
277...H. Vogler, W. Floto, F. Zeigfeld.
278...John D. Platt, W. P. Hill, C. W. Elston.
279...Philip Wellsheimer, A Y. Hart, E. Miller.
280...W. H. Brown, W. F. Boyer, N. S. Haynes.
282...S. H. Carnahan, S. C. Fairchilds, J. Edmunds.
286...D. W. Huddleston, J. G. Tollin, J. A. Ross.
288...A. C. Easenka, Geo. E. Wood, John Patterson.
291...Jas. M. Holyoke, Wm. M. Driggs, Wm. Robson.
293...Silas Sears, C. H. Paddock, S. G. Baldwin.
296...Joseph Robbins, E. C. Gelleck, S B. Kingsbury.
297...John A. Roth, Geo. W. Cyrus, Thos. A. Lyon.
299...Samuel Noyer, J. S. Cooper, R. J. McNeill.
300...J. W. White, F. E. Moore, Thos. Wright.
301...S. Crossett, A. J. Driver, O. B. Ingalls.
302...E. J. Williams, Wilder Tyler, L. J. Waler.
393...A. B. Smith, Wm. S. Bunn, M. J. Richards.
304...James Clark, T. E. Culver, Geo. A. True.
305...Geo. B Fickell, Henry M. Lovell, A. K. Doe.
306...J. A. Davis, Wm. Mill, J. W. Finley.
308...Wm. B. Young, Wm. Bormer, J. C. Hilton.
309...J. Nicols, B. Groosback, M. Rogers.
310...W. H. Reid, John Sutton, L. D. Berry.
311...A. M. Thomson, J. J. Lawless, Alex. Eleler.
314...R. S. Williamson, H. D. Caldwell, G. C. Whipple.
315...Philip Herman, Lorenz Stoeher, E. Pfiefer.
316...T. M. Boor, W. A. Watkins, Wilber Waite.
318...J. F. Steinbarger, H. A. Young, W. J. Pitney.
321...Wm. Lane, John Grierson, M. Y. Lewis.
322...J. H. Gilpin, J. W. Tull, H. H. York.
323...Jas. F. Moore, Jas. B. Welch, John T. Maycroft.
325...H. J. Potts, Cornelius Baker, D. P. Grace.
327...E. E. Wright, G. H. Reynolds, Hugh Wilson.
328...F. J. Rodman, F. J. Glazier, M. J. Kelley.
330...Wm. Whiting, J. A. Florentine, J. McGregor.
333...John C. Reynolds, J. F. Burrill, S. H. Claspill.
334...N. B. Huff, C. B. James, W. D. Gilpin.
335...David Fey, Peter J. Singer, Wm. Oberhauser.
336—S. A. Cummins, L. H. Simpson, J. W. Franklin.
337...A. B. Anderson, B. F. Brown, John Wallace.
338...Alfred Morey, John Cool, John B. Wiley.
341...C. P. Stafford, Jacob Godfrey, L. B. Clark.
346...W. M. Hatfield, R. C. Morrison, Samuel Newton.
348...D. H. Morgan, J. P. Weger, Andrew Pinkstiff.
349...W. D. Tourtilott, Oliver A. Wood, Levi Mead.
351...A. Weider, N. T. P. Robertson, W. K. Stafford.
353...W. G. Smith, R. M. Murray, William Wilson.
356...Geo. Smith, J. M. Campbell, Harry Dalby.
357...Thos. S. Burns, Albert G. Maple, G. Hindshaw.
358...Wm. Jackson, D. C. Thomas, H. W. Belden.
361...Chris. Lischer, J. F. Brinkerhoff, Fred. Dilg.
363...J. K. Secord, James Lee, H. J. Cosgrove.
364...Philander Talbott, Revilo Newton, E. H. Miller.
367...M. Conley, J. B. McLaughlin, J. M. Timberlake.
368...Jared Foster, Jacob Stonemets, H. Cornelius.
369...O. H. Harris, F. W. Spealman, D. O. Root.
371...S. O. McGooden, C. J. Judd, G. W. Gilchrist.
373...James L. Metz, James H. Dennis, Jas. H. Swan.
374...M. V. Allen, H. E. Allen, P. V. Quillhot.
375...Joseph Cline, J. B. Macneal, L. P. Hereford.
377...F. J. Staufenbeihl, L. Westerman, G. C. Bunsen.
380...B. F. Glover, S. F. McBride, W. T. Wheeler.
383...T. M. Angells, Richard Boston, Wm. Glossop.
384...Wm. H. Meserve, John Wilson, Wm. Scott.
385...J. McCracken, H. Elgelking, W. H. Westbrook.
386...M. D. Frazer, Daniel Leach, Robert Smith.
387...John Bowman, James Pittman, J. D. Schamp.
388...Wm. Evans, Henry Hall, E. J. Mansfield.
389...Wm. A. Sibley, Milton D. Butts, W. Bonfield.
391...A. T. Darrah, P. Richards, T. B. Blackshaw.
393...Simon Quinlin, S. F. White, John O'Neil.
394...John L. White, Chas. Miner, Jas. D. Russell.
395...Robert Hunter, R. M. Terrell, W. D. Louden.
398...M. Wilson, U. M. Humble, W. Deuel.
400...Adam Brewer, John Gelwicks, Thomas Collins.
402...J. B. Gilbreath, Wm. H. Cooper, H. Nichols.
403.. J. S. Bauer, S. M. M. Badger, T. J. Watkins.
404...A. N. Merrill, Frank Cranden, John H. Briggs.
405...J. C. Jones, S. C. Morrison, M. Harris.
406...Wm. L. Piggott, R. J. Stirratt, Jacob Hupert.
408...D. A. Morrison, N. Sandford, D. B. Blackman.
409...David A. Cashman, G. C. Smith, W. M. Stan.
410...C. Brinkmeir, John C. Meyer, James Strasser.
411...J. Hennesheet, E. C. Hubbard, D. L. Seymour.
413...B. K. Shryock, S. W. Potter, J. T. Campbell.
414...J. R. Hamil, Geo. Osterhout, G. W. Becker.
416...Wilson Hoag, J. W. Scott, E. T. Glacener.
418...Fred. Koberlin, Matthew Carr, L. D. Turner.
420...Wm. J. Mix, Louis Harmell, Jos. E. Hitt.
424...Luke Bonsteel, John Pope, Stephen Redshaw.
425...C. H. White, Geo. M. Crego, T. W. Murrill.
436...Wilson Fleming, E. H. Johnson, F. S. Cone.
438...Wm. Lapham, Geo. Tapper, Dwight S. Weaver.
439...W. M. Avise, Wm. Harvey, Alfred Chenowith.
441...C. F. Hitchcock, T. E. Gapen, Andrew Wise.
449...Chas. C. Brown, S. H. Bradley, David Furry.
452...R. B. Keyes, J. H. Askins, H. Whittenburg.
453...Jas. Brown, P. W. Sullivan, D. D. String.
454...R. C. Crocker, O. J. Harlin, Jas. Jones.
457...J. P. Lowery, W. D. Deanes, E. S. Brown.
459...James Judd, Thos. Elliman, R. M. Van Doren.
461...John Tunnell, Wm. J. Easley, L. R. Darby.
465...B. J. Vertner, W. H. Crane, W. G. Denny.
468...P. H. Hiett, L. B. Grant, R. J. Cheney.
469...Sam'l I. Leach, J. L. Moore, Samuel Walker.
470...Jno. Donovan, Jno. North, St. John Van Arman.
472...F. F. Loveland, J. B. Trull, John McWilliams.
474...Fred. Daub, James McKee, M. G. Nixon.
476...H. A. Sweet, Smith Mosher, J. B. Meigs.
478 ..John Evans, R. J. Colburn, John Moore.
481...W. D. Lane, J. B. Chipman, S. Metcalf.
482...A. B. Davidson, T. Roberts, Geo. W. Knotts.
486...A. E. McNeall, J. J. Evans, D. F. McNeall.
488...Cyrenus Cole, John T. Evans, Robt. E. Duff.
490...F. R. Sponsler, Geo. M. Lashell, Geo. W. Lasher.
491...J. M. Daggett, Sam'l Cook, C. P. Fox.
492...L. H. Howell, I. G. Gleason, J. Heath.
493...Geo. T. Wolfley,, Morton Hanson, Nelson Neil.
494...Warren Heberling, H. H. Moore, T. P. Renshaw.
496...J. W. Akin, A. G. Owen, O. A. Young.
500...Nicholas Strott, Geo. A. Amos, A. L. Knapp.
502...J. H. Peyton, D. Harshman, G. A. Richards.
505...A. B. Sechler, Wm. Rice, W. K. Brown.
508...W. E. Wheeler, Thos. Nicols, T. H. Patterson.
510...John Harlin, J. D. Moody, Woodson Cheeley.
513...A. J. Corley, L. H. Williams, W. C. McClanahan.
514...B. F. Thompson, C. R. Thompson, H. Phenix.
515...Chas. E. Adams, J. V. Dimon, W. A. Washburn.
516...B. F. Eby, James Cozad, Wm. W. Hartman.
517...G. W. Raymond, Wm. E. Bacon, G. A. Stoddard.
519—Wm. Clayton, D. M. Bradley, F. M. Talliaffero.
520...C. Kirkpatrick, W. H. Willard, J. A. McKinney.
521...M. H. Wilmot, Isaac Mitchell, J. L. Lindsey.
522...S. A. French, N. J. Bloomfield, Geo. Hunter.
526...Chas. E. Hyde, Wm. Pingree, Andrew Wilson.
527...S. D. Lewis, A. M. Davis.
529...F. Harris, Oscar Wagy, Allen Lewton.
531...H. H. Glenn, Richard Tilton, Geo. R. Barse.
533...J. C. Russell, P. P. Carpenter, S. Cochran.
537...O. C. McConney, W. H. Brown, A. J. Tenbrock.
539...D. A. Shaw, L. Lehman, A. F. Anway.
540...E. H. Humphrey, B. H. Alden, Wm. Amerson.
542...Cyrus Jones, Samuel Marsh, Jesse Ogden.
543...D. H. Mattice, J. K. Glasscock, O. N. Whitford.
549...C. H. French, Chas. O'Brien, W. H. French.
550...John H. Welch, J. H. Moore, H. C. Greeley.
552...Abel Bradley, A. J. Bosserman, J. C. Mills.
554...Hiram Tyrrell, Geo. A. Bixley, Francis Tyrrell.
556...O. P. Hall, R. K. Hawley, J. P. Smith.
557...Julius Ulrich, John Feldkamp, Chas. Salzman.
559...R. D. Smith, Peter Holman, John Green.
562...H. W. Dyer, W. R. Crain, J. S. Fombelle.
563...Milton J. Hull, John Linkogle, T. W. Anderson.
564...Henry Pym, Nathan C. Tyler, J. W. Saucerman.
565...S. R. Canon, J. Mills, J. P. Mason.

566...J. M. Eaton, H. M. Booth, Wm. T. Cretzer.
570...S. M. Martin, M. Milbarn, Jr., H. A. Gilman.
572...Charles Wells, Wm. S. Hagar, Jas. A. Roberts.
574...Jos. A. Harnit, W. E. Smith, Fletcher E. Neff.
596...L. A. Hamblen, Henry P. Baldwin, W. T. Jones.
597...N. Dugan, A. F. Talbott, E. F. Dugan.
605...James A. Chase, Geo. M. Wright, R. C. Outlaw.
606...E. F. Swift, W. D. Catterlin, S. J. Perce.
607...John C. Fulton, Cyrus W. Mason, R. P. Smith.
608...Wilson Ong, J. S. McElhiney, M. M. Pulver.

LODGES U. D. AND MASTERS.

Continued over.—Melrose, Joel L. Cox; Basco, D. McGinnis; Berwick, A. J. A. Smith; Dubois, R. L. Caldwell; Milan, David Adams; Hopedale, J. W. Morey; Venice, Preston Bishop; New Hope, J. A. Patton; Locust, Philip Baker.

New Dispensations.—Union, Lick Creek, Union county, John Gardner; Fortitude, Sagetown, Henderson county, A. S. Swartz; Caberry, Norton, Kankakee county, Walter A. Colton; Rock River, Sterling, M. S. Bowman; Colcta, Genesee Grove, Whiteside county, R. B. Colcord; Forrest, Forrest Station, Livingston county, J. B. Dillie; E. F. W. Ellis, Rockford, S. G. Bronson; Union Park, Chicago, G. P. Randall; Wadley, Franklin, Morgan county, Francis M. Wadley.

◆

High Priests, Kings, and Scribes, as Returned to January 8th.

No. High Priests. Kings. Scribes..

1...Frank W. Tracy, Richard Young, T. G. Gorman.
3...W. H. Broadwell, Elias Keemer, H. A. Gilman.
4...A. J. McMurtry, W. E. Roberts, L. W. Fairbanks.
7...Samuel Tart, I. G. Reynolds, Chas. Spalding.
11...R. B. Conn, J. B. Thompson, O. D. Critzer.
17...Seth H. Redmon, J. P. Wycoff, E. Hammack.
34...J. P. Going, O. W. Owen, George Gage.
38...Horace Hayward, M. O'Kean, H. M. Eidsen.
43...Peter Button, A. R. Atkins, W. W. Kennedy.
46...Wm. Livingston, T. L. Clark, R. C. Hawes.
47...Chas. Trobridge, C. S. Wilson, E. V. Bronson.
52...S. O. Vaughan, W. H. Allen, N. N. Burpee.
56...Jas. A. Hawley, Jason C. Ayres, Rufus B. Viele.
61...Jas. C. Luckey, John Ruggles, jr., Wm. Frazer.
63...I. H. Shimer, L. F. Stoddard, —— Logan.
72...Andrew F. Asley, John A. Ross, P. P. Newcomb.
75...Samuel T. Brush, Isaac Rapp, S. E. North.
76...Jas. Claypoole, J. L. Leith, Jesse Newman.
85...W. H. House, Thos. Carter, F. K. Lefever.
93...W. S. Pease, R. D. Hays, C. B. Ullyette.
06...T. E. Lawrence, A. L. Clark, Elisha Lee.
97...Jos. B. Miles, John H. Anthony, B. Tobias.
101...Thos. Moore, S. Tanhauser, J. E. Roberts.
106...Chas. A. Monk, F. H. Cobb, Fred. Reiss.
109...Simpson Johnson, Winstow Mayo, John Frank.
126...John C. Reynolds, O. P. Hall, R. K. Hawley.

◆

Festival of the Chicago Commandery No. 19, K. T.

CHICAGO, January 13, 1869.

It is with great pleasure that the Deputy acknowledges the receipt of a "complimentary" ticket of admission to the first annual festival of the above named commandery. Cross-wise on the end of the aforesaid, in red ink, in the "hand o' write," I should judge, of the "Grand Panjandrum," appears the word "complimentary," and on the lower side thereof is the characteristic signature of Sir Kt. E. C. Hubbard. The ticket was duly presented, but not (through an oversight) taken up—and it was on the morning after surrendered to Sir Kt. Egan.

While there we "run agin" Sir Knights Huntley, Clark, Whitley, Hurlbut, Sr. and Jr., Pitkin C. Wright (Grand High Priest Iowa), Myers, Avery (Apollo's big man), and several others, whom we can not now remember—not forgetting, above all others, "Gurney," who has been re-elected E. C. of No. 1.

A right royal time they had, judging from appearances when we left—not having a wedding garment on, we felt somewhat at a loss, and at a quarter past twelve were reposing in the arms of "Morpheus."

R. E. Sir Munger, Deputy Grand Commander, Em. Sirs Dunning, Grand Gen'o, and Pearson, Gr. Capt. Gen., were present, and were received with due honors.

On Monday we visited M. E. Comp. Miles, G. H. P., paid our respects, and then called at the office of Comp. Egan, and found him at home, as usual. At night we visited, in company with Breth. Pearson and "Hub," Chicago Commandery, and witnessed the conferring of the templar degree, "Am. I. Bennett" presiding. There we met Breth. Cleveland and Atkins, the "small" W. M. of No. 211. We also met there Bro. Smith, who was Deputy Grand Secretary in 1859. We fraternally received that introduction, as we have a "feller" feeling for "Deputies." Cregier, "him of Blaney," we have not yet seen, but will before we leave. This morning we ran across Bro. Hoag, of 416, Hawley, 7, and Luckey, 187.

More anon, DEPUTY.

◆

The Masonic Token.

The Masonic Publishing and Manufacturing Company, 432 Broome street, New York, have laid upon our table a beautiful gift book of the above name, elegantly bound, ornamented, and illustrated. It has eight beautiful, full page plates, named "The Sanctuary of the Temple," "The Indian Mason," "Chamber of Death," "Oriental Architecture," "The Judgment Hall," "The Masonic Ladder," "Secret Vault," "The Captivity," with many others of less size, but appropriate and elegant.

This book, presented by husband to wife, son to mother, brother to sister, father to daughter, or gentleman to lady, would be highly appreciated, and would de much to cause the gentler sex to regard Masonry as its surest earthly friend.

PAST Grand Master Thomas J. Pickett is W. Master of Plain City Lodge, at Paducah, Kentucky. We notice that at the installation of the officers of Golconda Lodge, R. W. Bro. Thos. Moore, of Metropolis, officiated as installing officer, and Bro. Picket as orator.

◆

Grecian Bend.

Ridiculo, satire, nor vehemence ever overcame a disagreeable, reprehensible, or expensive fashion. We have felt our cheeks tingle with indignation as we have seen some of our gentlemen bloods adopting and adhering to a fashion that is disgusting and simply shocking to all rational sense of modesty. And we hope this fashion will be confined to such bloods as are anxious to make a show of themselves.

We think our lady readers are sensible women. Those who judge Masonry from its effect upon their fathers, husbands, brothers, and sons are, more than any other like number, sensible, teachable, reliable women. To them we appeal. And in doing so, we give them the following remarks from Mrs. Walker, of the Sorosis, as pertinent and well-timed:

We behold with shame the gradual approach and popularity of the hideous protuberances and various ungraceful attachments to women's garments. We had trusted to the idea that these things being absolute deformities, they could not be adopted by women of taste or common sense. But it is useless to deny the fact that the bustle which causes a tinge of shame to rise to the cheek, the panier which is an added extravagance, the idiotic Grecian Bend, and the horrible wriggling walk, are becoming so common that they will soon cease to shock our sensibilities, and become universal, if we make no effort to stay their encroachments.

These wretched monstrosities are already on the streets in considerable numbers, and the fact that they are first adopted by women of doubtful reputation, does not deter others from greedily adopting them. No wonder that woman is a standing subject for ridicule, if she has no higher object in life than the questionable one of making herself conspicuous without regard to propriety or decency. We may surely know without question, that if the first view of a new fashion in dress or manner shocks our tastes or sensitiveness, that it is wrong, that it is an outrage upon delicacy, and should not be tolerated.

No wonder that woman holds an inferior position. Women are judged by their actions and appearance, and the result is, that destruction is certainly ours if we can make no change in this bondage to fashion.

Women are the centers of homes and love, and respect. They are modest, they are graceful from nature's hands, they use little ornament, they have refinement that shrinks from publicity, they have courteous demeanor, they have the halo of motherhood, the saintship of life's duties nobly filled, they have a deep religious faith that guides them, they have an unselfish regard for the rights of others, they have a conscience that shrinks from the faintest breath that would sully the true glory and power of womanhood.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—ISA. 8, 20.

DECISIONS BY THE GRAND MASTER.

22. If the Master elect declines installation, the old Master holds over, unless a dispensation is obtained, by desire of the lodge, for another election.

23. The dedication of halls, constitution of lodges, laying of corner-stones, and installation of lodge officers, may be in public, and, when public, the lodge is not required to be opened.

24. A dispensation is unnecessary to elect any officer under the rank of Treasurer.

25. In trials of persons who can not be served with notice, the record should set forth that the residence of the accused is unknown.

Miscellaneous Reading.

Clerical Table Talk--The Right Kind of Preaching.

Dr. Gilly related the following anecdote, which was told by a well known Irish character, Thaddeus Conolly, who used to spend much of his time wandering through Ireland, and instructing the lower classes in their native language. "I went," said he, "one Sunday into a church to which a new incumbent had been lately appointed. The congregation did not exceed half a dozen, but the preacher delivered himself with as much energy and affection as if he was addressing a crowded audience. After the service I expressed to the clergyman my wonder that he should preach so fervently to such a small number of people. 'Were there but one,' said the rector, 'my anxiety for his improvement would make me equally energetic.'"

The following year Conolly went into the same church; the congregation was multiplied seventy fold. The third year he found the church full.

The following has been going the rounds of the newspapers. Men seemed to forget that the distinction of clean and unclean beasts were expressly abolished in the vision of St. Peter on the housetop of Simon, the tanner, just before he was called to visit Cornelius, the centurion:

Dr. Adam Clark, who had a strong aversion to pork, was called upon to say grace at a dinner where the principal dish was a roast pig. He is reported to have said: "O Lord, if Thou canst bless under the Gospel what thou didst curse under the law, bless this pig!"

When Rowland Hill, some years ago, was in Scotland, he was introduced to an aged minister, somewhat resembling himself in eccentricity and piety. The old man looked at him for some time very earnestly, and at length said: "Weel, I ha' been looking for some teem at the leenes of your face." "And what do you think of it?" said Mr. Hill. "Why, I am thinking that if the grace o' God hed na changed your heart, you would ha' been a most tremendous rogue." Mr. Hill laughed heartily, and then said: "Well, you have just hit the nail on the head."

Let clergymen beware how they attempt to speak in a stilted style to children, or ask them questions. Somewhere we saw the following story:

A clergyman, on a Sunday school occasion, was speaking to a large audience of children, when he saw that he must do something to rouse their attention. Just then he had spoken of Peter, so he paused and asked if any of the children could tell him anything about Peter, but their mouths were all closed. He appealed to the older scholars—younger scholars, and then at last he came to the youngest, and then he said: "Come now, little ones, shame your elders, and tell me something about Peter."

"I can," exclaimed a little four-year old.

"Can you? that is a good girl. Well, come right up here, and tell us all that you know about Peter."

The little girl was then passed forward to the stage.

"Now," said the speaker, "let us hear what you know about Peter. Speak right out."

The little girl spoke:

Peter, Peter,
Pumpkin eater, etc.

Oh, dreadful fall. Had the speaker spoken of St. Peter, perhaps the little girl might have done better. But let those who address children beware how they trust those little minds, for no one knows what associations he may wake up.

An American, once attempting to address a Parisian audience extemporaneously, earnestly exhorted them to take of the water of life freely, in a literal translation from the English, "eau de vie," the French for brandy (he should have used the phrase eau vivant). The audience lost the force of the exhortation entirely.

A Frenchman once returned the compliment in English by endeavoring to give the benediction in the following form: "May the good Lord pickle you." He meant preserve.

A clergyman going to a miserly old lady to beg for a worthy object, found himself refused on the ground of poverty. Feigning himself much interested in her story, he expressed great surprise thereat, and said, "I had not thought you in such want;" and then taking out some money, he said, "here is something that will do for the present purpose; when I call again I will bring you more." The old lady was so enraged that she gave him a good round sum to show him that she did not mean she was a pauper.—Church Monthly.

◆

The Star-Chamber.

The origin of the name "Star-Chamber" has been much disputed; but the most satisfactory explanation appears to be that given by Mr. Caley, namely, from the ceiling of the chamber being anciently ornamented with gilded stars. The occupation of the "Chambre des Estoyers" or "Estoilles," by the king's council, in the palace at Westminster, can be traced to the reign of Edward III.; but no specific mention of the Star-Chamber as a court of justice can be found, Mr. Bruce believes, earlier than the reign of Henry VII., about which time the old title of "the Lords sitting in the Star-Chamber," seems to have merged in this one distinguishing appellation. After the sittings, the lords dined in the inner Star-Chamber at the public expense. The mode of the proceedings before the council was twofold; one, ore tenus or by the mouth; the other, by bill and answer. The proceeding ore tenus, usally adopted in political cases, originated in "soden reporte," which Mr. Bruce thinks means private and probably secret information given to the council. The person accused or suspected was immediately apprehended, and privately examined. If he confessed any offense, or if the cunning of his examiners drew from him, or his own simplicity let fall, any expressions which suited their purpose, he was at once brought to the bar, his confession or examination was read, he was convicted ex ore sue (out of his own mouth), and judgment was immediately pronounced against him. Imagination can scarcely picture a more terrible adjudicature. The tribunal was bound by no law, but created and defined the offenses it punished; the judges were, in point of fact, the persecutors; and every mixture of those two characters is inconsistent with impartial justice. Crimes of the greatest magnitude were treated of in this court, but solely punished as trespasses, the council not having dared to usurp the power of inflicting death. Among the many abuses of the process was, that in the time of Queen Elizabeth, "many solicitors who lived in Wales, Cornwall, or the farthest parts of the north, did make a trade to sue forth a multitude of subpœnas to vex their neighbors, who, rather than they would travel to London, would give them any composition, though there were no color of complaint against them." The process might anciently be served in any place; in Roman Catholic times it was usually served in the market or church. The highest number of the council who attended the court in the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII was nearly forty, of whom seven or eight were prelates; in the reign of Elizabeth the number was nearly thirty, but it subsequently declined. The Chancellor was the supreme judge, and alone sat with his head uncovered. Upon important occasions, persons who wished "to get convenient places and standing" went there by three o'clock in the morning. The counsel were confined to a "laconic brevity;" the examinations of the witnesses were read, and the members of the court delivered their opinions in order from the inferior upwards, the Archbishop preceding the Chancellor. Every punishment, except death, was assumed to be within the power of the Star-Chamber Court. Pillory, fine and imprisonment, and whipping, wearing of papers through Westminster Hall, and letters "seared in the face with hot irons," were ordinary punishments.

Henry VII. had a fondness for sitting in the Star Chamber; the court was the great instrument for his "extort doynge;" and "the king took the matter into his own hands," was a Star-Chamber phrase; and "my attorney must speak to you," was a sure prelude to a heavy fine. Wolsey made a great show of his magnificence in the Star-Chamber; he proceeded to the sittings of the court in great state, his mace and seal being carried before him; "he spared neither high nor low, but judged every estate according to their merits and deserts." After his fall, with the exception of occasional interference in religious matters and matters of policy, we seldom hear of the Star-Chamber.

The Star-Chamber held its sittings, from the end of Queen Elizabeth's reign until the final abolition of the court by Parliament in 1641, in apartments on the eastern side of New Palace Yard; these buildings bore the date 1602, and E. R. and an open rose on a star; they corresponded with the "Starre Chamber" in Aggas' plan of London in 1570. The last of the buildings were taken down in 1836; drawings were then made of the court, which had an enriched ceiling, but no remains of the star ornamentations, notwithstanding, behind the Elizabethan panelling, the style of the chamber was Tudor Gothic. The remains are preserved at Leasowe Castle, the seat of the Hon. Sir Edward Cust, in Shropshire.

◆

Beware of injury to your neighbor. If you have wronged another, you may grieve, repent, and resolutely determine against any such weakness in future; you may, so far as it is possible, make reparation. This is well. The injured party may forgive you, according to the meaning of human language, but the deed is done, and all the powers of Nature, were they to conspire in your behalf, could not make it undone; the consequences to the body, the consequences to the soul, though no man may perceive them, are there—are written in the annals of the past, and must reverberate throughout all time.

Repentance for a wrong done, bears, like every other act, its own fruit—the fruit of purifying the heart and amending the future; but not of effacing the past.—Scottish Rite.

◆

Worthy of Imitation.

The following resolution was adopted by the Grand Council of Arkansas, 1867:

"Resolved, That the Grand Council will adopt the son of a Royal and Select Master, for the purpose of his education, so far as to provide for his board and tuition at St. John's College; provided, that sufficient pledges be given that such adopted son shall, on being so educated, devote at least two years to teaching within our jurisdiction—such selection to be made by the M. P. Grand Master."

Mrs. Staunton says of Mrs. Winslow's soothing syrup, that she don't believe there is a Mrs. Winslow, and says that it is compounded by some ignorant man in whiskers, broadcloth and boots, who lives and fattens on his ill-gotten gains; while babies are sent by the hundreds to untimely graves, or made idiots or lunatics for life.

◆

About Cats.

The cat was originally brought from Persia, and was unknown to Pliny and the Roman writers; and the term puss is thought to be a corruption of pers. She is the emblem of the moon, from the great changeableness of the pupil of the eye, which in the daytime is a mere narrow line, dilatcable in the dark to a luminous globe; and she can, for this reason, like most animals of prey, see best by night.

It was formerly the trick of the English countrymen to substitute a cat for a sucking pig, and bring it to market in a bag; so that he who, without careful examination, made a hasty bargain, was said to buy a pig in a poke, and might get a cat in a bag; and a discovery of the cheat gave rise to the expression of letting the cat out of the bag, as a premature and unlucky disclosure.

The fur of the cat was of old used in trimming cloaks and coats; and in allusion to the unfitness of her flesh for food, it is said of anything confined to one purpose only, "what can you have of a cat but her skin?" The catgut used for rackets, and for the finer strings of violin, is made from the dry intestines of the cat; the larger strings being from the intestines of sheep and lambs. A smaller kind of fiddle is called a kit. The scratch of the cat is supposed to be venomous, because a lacerated wound is more apt to fester than a definite cut with a sharp instrument. The tenacity of her hold has given her origin to many metaphorical expressions and appellations, as the cat, or tackle, on board ship; and a cat-o'-nine-tails, or scourge, so called from the scratches it leaves on the skin, like the clawings of a cat. There is a belief that, however a cat may be thrown, she always fall on her legs. This cats usually do, because of the facility with which they balance themselves when springing from a hight; which power of balancing is in some degree produced by the flexibility of the heel, the bones of which have no fewer than four joints. Again, cats usually alight softly on their feet, because in the middle of the foot is a large ball or pad, in five parts, formed of an elastic substance; and at the base of each toe is a similar pad. It is impossible to imagine any mechanism more calculated to break the force of a fall.

From her great powers of resistance, the cat is said to have nine lives. "'Tis a pity you had not ten lives—a cat's and your own," says Ben. Johnson, in "Every Man in his Humor."

The well known tale of the monkey seizing hold of the paw of the cat, to get the roasted chestnuts from the hot embers, gave rise to the proverb, "to make a cat's paw of one," or to make another subservient to one's own services.

This phrase is of greater antiquity than many suppose; for we find a story of a cat and a monkey, in "A Voyage around the World," by Dr. John Francis Gemelli Careri, in 1695. The Doctor was told by D. Anthony Machado de Brito, admiral of the Portuguese fleet in India, that in order to punish a mischievous monkey he placed upon the fire a cocoanut (of which monkeys are particularly fond), and then hid himself to see how the monkey would take it from the fire without burning his paws. The cunning creature looked about, and seeing a cat by the fireside, held her head in his mouth, and with her paws took off the nut, which he then threw into water to cool, and ate it.

She is thought to be particularly fond of eating fish:

"What female heart can gold despise?
What cat's averse to fish?"

But this is not probable; for if a plate of fish and a plate of meat, either raw or dressed, be placed before the cat, she will generally prefer the meat.

The cat, especially the black kind, is highly charged with electricity, which is visible in the dark when the cat is irritated, and may be produced as follows:

Place your left hand upon the throat of the cat, and with the middle finger and the thumb press slightly the bones of the animal's shoulders; then, if the right hand be gently passed along the back, perceptible shocks of electricity will be felt in the left hand. Shocks may also be obtained by touching the tips of the ears after rubbing the back. The same may also be obtained from rubbing the foot. Placing the cat on your knees, apply your right hand to the back; the left fore paw resting on the left palm of your hand, apply the thumb to the upper side of the paw, so as to extend the claws, and by this means bring your forefinger into contact with one of the bones of the leg, where it joins the paw; when, from the knob or end of this bone, the finger pressing on it, you may feel distinctly successive shocks, similar to those obtained from the ears.

The attitudes and motions of the cat are of great elegance, in consequence of her being furnished with collar bones; she can therefore convey food to the mouth by the paw, like the monkey; can climb and clasp, strike sideways, toss her prey upwards, and seat herself on an eminence of very narrow and confined surface.

Carerra, the Pirate.

BY LIEUT. J. M. PLATT.

I once had the misfortune, while yet a "middy," to fall into the clutches of Carerra, the Pirate Chief, who at that time was known from the Canary Isles to the Capes of Florida, as being one of the most daring as well as the most successful freebooters that ever floated over the broad Atlantic. I had been appointed to a berth on the old Constitution, then cruising around the West India Islands, and was forced to take passage in a small merchantman trading between Charleston and Porto Rico, in order the more speedily to join my ship.

Our captain was a hale, bluff old sea dog, who had weathered more gales than I had counted years, and who was fond of spinning long yarns. I was much entertained by this quality in him, as we walked the deck together, while nearing the lower latitudes, where we found light breezes and pleasant weather. He was apt to speak of his personal exploits with a braggadocio air—that to one unaccustomed as I then was to the skipper's fancies, seemed to me not only marvelous, but true. It is difficult for me now to recall the number of battles he had been engaged in, the names of the pirates he had slain, or the names of the vessels in which he had distinguished himself. After one of these confidential conversations, I said to him,—

"But those times have passed, Captain Willis. There are no pirates now."

He looked at me some time in silence, with a view to detect in my countenance some expression that would belie my words. But as I really thought as I had said, his glance went for nothing.

"Why, bless your landlubber's heart," he replied, when satisfied, "in course there are pirates now, and powerful nasty ones, too! may I lose the number of my mess, if I don't expect to fall in with some of the sharks this cruise."

"Fall in with pirates," I exclaimed in surprise. "And this trip, too!"

"Aye, my lad—but I hope you aren't afraid, be you?"

"Afraid! oh, no! I am anxious to see a real pirate."

"Oh, you be, eh! Well, youngster, you'll haul in your stun' sails if you ever do come athwart the bows of one of them free traders. You'd like to see one, eh? There's one cruising all the way from the Canaries to the Gulf—up and down the coast, that it would shiver your toplights to see."

"Who is he? what do you call him?"

"He's known to us as Carerra, the Antigua buccaneer. He's a dare-devil, and wouldn't show his heels—no, not to one of Uncle Sam's frigates. He commands a taut little craft, and handles her as I would a marlin-spike."

"And have you ever chanced to meet him?" I inquired.

"Meet him, youngster? in course I have. I recollect some three years ago, when I had the 'Bouncing Fanny,' and on a voyage to the Azores and a market, while lazily creeping along the edge of the trade winds, falling in with this same pest of the sea. May I never splice the main brace again, if I wasn't all aglow to meet him face to face."

"And what did you do? Made all sail. Hauled out your bowlines and run, eh?"

"No, sir! I hauled aback, and waited for him to run down, just as I should do now if he should appear. Run? You don't know Captain Willis. He runs from no man!"

"Would you then face him if he should appear now!"

"Of course I would. Haven't we got a 'long tom' in the bows, and a 'stern chaser' to boot? Then look at our armament—cutlasses, pistols, and boarding pikes enough for any emergency."

"Sail ho!" crid the man aloft.

The fussy, bragging captain turned pale with fright, as he inquired:

"Where away?"

"Three points off the weather bow."

"What does she look like?"

"A low, long, black schooner, a slaver, I reckon, bound to Cuba."

"It's Carerra, I know it," cried the excited captain. "Square the yards. Keep her away, you man at the wheel. Quick, put her before the wind."

"Why, Captain," I remonstrated, "where is your bravery?" You were anxious to meet him."

"Ay, boy; but not on this tack. We will come about soon."

I saw at once that he was a coward. His orders were obeyed, and soon we were sailing with a free sheet, directly before the wind. I took a seat upon the main topsail yard, and with the ship's glass, watched the motions of the stranger, who had by this time come fully in sight.

"Captain Willis," I said, "now is the time for you to haul aft your sheets and lay to the wind. This vessel is coming down upon us."

He did not answer me, but shouted at the top of his voice:

"Lay aloft there and rig out them stu'nsail booms. Quick, men, or we are lost!"

Then turning to me he said, apologetically:

"I have too valuable a cargo to risk the chances with him. Besides, I must not, as a faithful commander, run my crew, small as it is, into any danger. But we shall meet him on our return; then, if he is cruising here, let him beware of me!"

I was disgusted with his evasion, almost boy as I was, determined to take command by appealing to the men, and fight Carerra myself, should it indeed be he.

Meanwhile it became evident that the schooner was nearing us, and it was a mere matter of time and the relative qualities of the two vessels, whether or not we should be overhauled. Again I urged the captain to reconsider his act, but with dignity ill becoming his trembling accents, he then replied:

"My reasons have been given! How dare I basely betray my trust? The owners of this vessel have a right to demand that I should use every effort to save her. And I shall do so."

"Then, sir, you will not only have the credit of having attempted an escape, you will also have to give up the ship; for see, this craft is close aboard of us, even now. Come, Sir Valiant, haul down your flag and surrender at discretion."

I was not prepared for the readiness displayed by the poltroon in acting upon my remark. What I had uttered in badinage, he seized upon as advice.

"Well, sir, if you think we had better yield without imperilling the lives of the crew, I am forced to follow your advice. Haul down the mainyard!"

"You mistake me!" I said. "Do not, I beg of you, give up so meanly."

But it was useless. The sails flapped against the mainmast and the vessel came to the wind. I hereupon determined to appeal to the men, who were grouped to the windward looking anxiously at the fast approaching schooner.

"There goes the black flag," cried the man on the lookout.

I immediately sprang upon the main hatch, and with a loud voice appealed to the men—

"Will you then allow yourselves to be made prisoners, and not strike one blow in defence of the flag under which you sail? Are you willing to have your names desecrated and hooted by the noble tars that float over the ocean? Come, lads, you do not mean to skulk now. Go to the steward and he will give you arms for defence. If your captain will not, I will be your leader, and we will not yield an inch, even though death stares us in the face. It is better to die fighting than to live to be a pirate's slave."

"Ay! ay! we'll fight the pirate!" cried the crew to a man.

Willis, seeing perfectly how matters stood, now stepped forward, and with an eye on the advancing foe, and another on the men, said:

"Certainly! we'll stand by you. You as a naval officer, sir, must have commaad, and act as you please. Meanwhile, I will go below and provide arms for you all."

He went down, and we did not see him again until he was a prisoner.

The pirate neared us fast, and, deeming that there would be no resistance offered, a boat was lowered, which soon came under our larboard quarter. The reception they met with on our deck was somewhat warmer than they anticipated. Being unprepared for a defence, every one, the mate at their head, were secured and bound. The captain of the schooner, which was now lying to, near us, saw the proceeding and giving appropriate orders, hauled alongside.

Then came the hand to hand struggle. Our men fought with desperation, but at great odds in favor of the attacking party. By some fatality, Carerra and myself were combattants. His superior prowess and skill soon disarmed me, and I stood at his mercy. But he did not strike. He sheathed his cutlass calmly, and, calling to our sailors, said:

"Whoever of you strikes another blow shall die. Lay down your arms, and Carerra promises, upon his honor, that your lives shall be spared."

"Captain," said the pirate chief, now striding towards me.

"I am not the captain, sir," I replied.

"You are not! Where is he?"

"He went below to arm himself some time since, and has not yet appeared."

"Here, Belpont, go below and hoist out the grampus from his cabin. What, did he leave you to fight his battles for him?"

"He did!"

The chief eyed me narrowly for some few moments—I returned his gaze unwaveringly.

"What is yeur name, youngster?" he finally inquired.

I told him. Again he regarded me fixedly.

"Are you the son of a former captain of the old Constitution?"

"I am, sir, his only son."

"I was once a boatswain under his command. He was a generous, brave, and just man. I should have been still in the service were I not—Carerra, the pirate!"

"I am surprised to hear—"

"What?" he interrupted sharply; "that I was once an honest man?"

"That you knew my father," I replied.

Captain Willis was now brought on deck. He was trembling with fear, and livid from the same cause. He almost sank with apprehension as he confronted his captor.

"So, sir, you take good care to keep out of the way when danger comes! What a brave man you must be to resign your vessel to the care of a stripling!"

"Why, sir, I have an affection of the—"

"Heart! Coward!" thundered the pirate, "an affection of the heart! an absence of courage that prompted you to take care of yourself, let what may come to your crew and ship. Pitch him overboard, boys!"

The captain fell upon his knees and begged him for mercy.

"I have a wife and six chiidren," he urged.

"What a pity! six more poltroons to grow up and disgrace their humanity. Why, you're the meanest man I ever saw. Not fight! Bah!"

He then turned to his own men, and motioned them to go on board of their own vessel. Then again coming to me, he offered his hand, saying:

"You will not refuse to give me your hand in parting. Your presence on board of this vessel has saved her to her owners, and saved the lives of all with you. The name you bear is one which I must ever respect. Farewell, sir. Bear to your father my kindest regards."

He touched his cap in salute, jumped on the rail, and in a little while his schooner was close hauled on the wind far ahead of us.

As soon as the captain's fright was over, he resumed all the pompousness of his usual manner. He ordered all the men to duty, then turning to me exclaimed:

"I think we fought those rascals finely."

I arrived at the island in due time, and joined my ship. This was the last I saw of Carerra, the pirate.

◆

Madagascar and the United States have concluded a treaty by which religious liberty and free commerce are guaranteed to Americans.

◆

HOPE.—This passion "predominates in every mind till it has been suppreseed by frequent disappointment."

◆

A Yankee drives an omnibus over the new macadamized road from Jaffa to Jerusalem.

A Lot of Puzzles.

"Two brothers," began the professor impressively, addressing the hostess, "were walking together down the street, and one of them, stopping at a certain house, knocked at the door, observing, 'I have a neice here, who is ill.' 'Thank Heaven,' observed the other, 'I have got no niece;' and he walked away. Now, how could that be?"

"Why, it's a riddle," exclaimed Mr. Funnidog, delightedly.

"And one that you will not guess in a hurry, simple, as it is," observed the professor, confidently. "Come, ladies and gentlemen, solve the problem."

"I see ———," ejaculated Mrs. Housewife.

"Hush! whisper in my ear," cried Puzzleton, with all the excitement of a child with a toy. "Don't let 'em hear it. 'Niece by marriage?' Stuff and nonsense. The thing is not any foolish catch at all," and once more he glanced with hostility at Funnidog, as much as to say, "such as he would ask you." "Nothing can be simpler than my question. 'I've got a niece here that's ill," says one brother. 'Thank heaven I have not got a niece,' says the other. How can that be? You all give it up? Well, the invalid was his daughter!"

"Oh, I see," said Mrs. Housewife despondingly. "How very stupid in us not to find it out."

"Yes, indeed, ma'am assented the remorseless savant. "The failure only shows how difficult it is for ordinary minds to grasp more than one idea at the same time. The attention is solely fixed on the different varieties of nieces."

"And also," observed Mr. Aloes (who was much displeased at being classed among "ordinary minds") "and also, the attention is naturally distracted from the point at issue by the brutality of the father's remark. Now, that is in itself a 'catch" in my opinion."

"Well, sir, I will give you another simple exercise for the understanding, that has no such distracting element," observed the professor coolly. "A blind beggar had a brother. The brother died. What relation were they to one another? Come, tell me that."

"Why, they were brothers," exclaimed the colonel, with the rapidity of a small boy at the bottom of his class, who hopes to gain promotion

"No, sir," answered the professor, regarding Thunderbomb with interest, as a significant type of some low order of intelligence; "they were not brothers, or I should scarcely have asked the question."

"They might be brothers-in-law," suggested Funnidog.

"Undoubtedly they might be," replied Puzzleton, with a pitying smile; "but they were not."

"Stop a bit," observed Mr. Macpherson hurriedly, like one who has not got his answer quite ready, but yet does not wish to be anticipated. "The blind beggar, you say had a brother, and the brother died. Well, of course, if one was dead, you know they could not be brothers any longer."

"The idea is novel," observed the professor gravely, "but you have not hit upon the exact solution. The fact is, gentlemen and ladies, a blind beggar may be either male or female. In this instance, she was a female. They were brother and sister."

"I call that a catch," said Aloes, gloomily.

"Well, at all events it was an easy one, and you all missed it," returned the professor, with quiet triumph. "Now, I will give one more example of social arithmetic, which shall be in all respects bona fide. It is a simple question in subtraction, and all I ask of you is—since two or three guesses would arrive at the truth by mere elimination—to write down the reply on paper. A man went to a cobbler's and bought a pair of boots for sixteen shillings. He put down a sovereign, and the cobbler having no change, sent it to a neighboring public house, and gave it him. Later in the day, the landlord of the inn sent in to say that the sovereign was a bad one, and insisted upon the cobbler making it right; which he accordingly did. Now, how much did the cobbler lose by the whole transaction? There is no sort of play upon words, or anything but a common sum in arithmetic."

"Why, its the easiest thing in the world," ejaculated Housewife. "Of course the cobbler los' just—"

"Be quiet, sir!" cried Puzzleton, very angrily. "Write it down, will you—if you can write."

"Scratch a Professor, and you find a Tartar," whispered Aloes. "You had better do as he wishes."

So we all wrote down what we imaginad to be the loss which the cobbler had sustained; and it was wonderful how opinions differed within such narrow limits.

The colonel made him lose two pound.

Mr. Aloes made him lose just a pound and the boots.

Mr. Funnidog made him lose just six-and-thirty shillings.

Mr. Macpherson made him lose sixteen shillings and the boots, minus the profit which he made upon the boots (which, said the professor, it was not necessary to take into consideration.)

Mr. Scale Hill, who used to investigate the bills of extortionate Swiss landlords, set down the loss with confidence at twelve shillings and the boots.

Mr. Smooth Smyler wrote: "I am not sure, but it seems to me he only lost eight shillings, besides the boots and his temper."

Housewife wrote: "Why, of course, he lost the boots and twenty-four shillings."

Mrs. Housewife and the ladies bit their pens, but declined to commit themselves. "They had never been taught, they said, the Rule of Three."

"You are all wrong," said the professor, quietly, "as I expected you would be. The way to get at the matter is to consider what is gained. The landlord, and the whole story of his changing the sovereign, may be taken out of the question, since he is neither better nor worse for the transaction. The buyer of the boots gets in exchange for his bad sovereign four shillings and a pair of boots, and that is just what the cobler loses."

"If one had only a room to one's self, and the whole day before one to do it in," sighed Mrs. Housewife, "I think I could answer any of these things."

"Very good, ma'am," said the professor, "then answer me this, when I come to see you next. A man bought twelve herrings for a shilling; some were twopence apiece, some a halfpenny, and some a farthing—how many did he buy at each price?"

◆

LOVING OUR ENEMIES.—A clergyman in the north of Scotland was reproving a parishioner for his habits of intemperance. He told him whisky was his greatest enemy. "Are we not told in Scripture to love our enemies," said the irreverent bacchanalian. "Yes, John," replied the minister, "but it is not said we are to swallow them."

◆

INVENTORS NOT USUALLY TRAINED.—It is remarkable that inventors have seldom come from those trained in any particular department. The stocking frame was invented by an Oxford scholar, the spinning jenny by a barber, the power-loom by a clergyman, and the electric telegraph by an artist.

◆

PUNNING NOT THE LOWEST SORT OF WIT.—A friend ventured to remonstrate with Mr. Erskine on his habit of punning, observing that it was the lowest species of wit. "Precisely so," rejoined the humorist, "and hence it is the foundation of the whole."

Married.

In Kansas, Edgar county, on Christmas Eve., (December 24th) by Prof. N. S. Haynes, W. Bro. W. H. BROWN, Master re-elect of Kansas Lodge No. 280, to Miss LUCY J. WILLEY.

We wish the happy couple many happy years, many merry Christmases, and joyful silver, golden, and diamond weddings.

In Little Rock, Ark., R. W. Bro. WILLIAM D. BLOCHER, Grand Secretary Grand Lodge of Arkansas, to Miss ELBERTA ENGLISH, daughter of Grand Master English, late Chief Justice of the State.

At the residence of the bride's father, December 26th, by Rev. Mr. Otho, Bro. FREDERICK DAUB, W. M. Columbia Lodge No. 474, at Columbia, Monroe county, to Miss SOPHIA BECK.

We wish them much joy.

In Leslie, by Eld. E. K. Groute, J. A. ASHBY, of Henrietta, Mich., to JULIETTE BLOSS, of Bunker Hill.

Also, in Aurelius, December 31st, by the same, Mr. C. C. CARR to Miss C. MARSHALL, of Aurelius, Mich.

Died.

At Hillsboro, Montgomery county, Ill., September 23, 1868, Bro. WM. M. HAYES, a worthy member of Mt. Moriah Lodge No. 51, A. F. & A. M.

At Hillsboro, Montgomery county, Ill., Bro. PHILIP W. MILLARD, a worthy member of Mt. Moriah Lodge No. 51, A. F. & A. M., for the past twenty-seven years.

At Parkersburg, Richland county, December 2d, the wife of W. Bro. GEO. MASON, aged 57 years.

The deceased was from the well-known Parker family of Edwards county, and for nearly forty years has filled the station of wife and mother with honor, dignity, and womanly grace. And in her family, church, and neighborhood, she has been a mother in Israel, a Christian in deeds, a comforter to the poor, and a crown to her husband. Her children can truly rise up and call her blessed.

In Upper Alton, Bro. JOHN WILLIS, a respected member of Franklin Lodge No. 25. The Lodge passed a beautiful set of obituary resolutions, Dec. 26th.

In Upper Alton, Bro. ALEXANDER HODGE, a devoted husband and father, and a valuable member of Franklin Lodge. Resolutions of condolence were adopted.

At Anna, Union county, W. Bro. NATHAN DRESSER, formerly W. M. Naples Lodge No. 68 and of Centralia Lodge No. 201, aged 63 years.

Moneys Received for Masonic Trowel,

FROM DEC. 11, 1868, TO JAN. 9, 1869.

$1.25 each.—Byron Ayres, S. M. Bailey, T. J. Baskete, Wm. Brinsmaid, I. S. Blackwelder, John C. Baker, R. H. Cotney, E. B. Cox, J. R. Clapp, C. Capps, S. H. Charles, F. Clark, H. B. Davidson, Z. A. Enos, F. J. Engelhard, J. F. Earl, R. F. Farimer, W. A. Holloway, —— Hamilton (Chicago), J. E. Jewett, Lewis Keyon, Geo. Little, H. H. McConnell, D. McMurphy, G. W. McPherson, J. T. Moulton, J. A. Mason, J. N. McKee, John Minto, Wm. A. McHaney, James R. Patton, J. M. Robertson, C. H. Russell, Hicksen Rote, R. H. Reugh, L. W. Shepherd, Geo. A. True, James Wicks, F. M. Webster, M. York, Olsen James, Wm. L. Orr.

$2.50 each.—Casper Cohn, S. S. Casad, H. H. Glenn, T. C. Hatch, J. Haas, E. S. Nichols, Geo. R. Rice, D. Straw, John S. True, J. H. Toole, C. VanWey.

$5.00 each.—E. Blankenship, J. M. Bartholomew, W. H. Deal, A. Edwards, J. A. Farnham, H. Gibson, S. W. Hayes, P. H. Hiett, John McWilliam, Robert Maxwell, O. P. Phillips.

$6.25.—H. S. Jacob.

$7.50 each.—Edwin James, John McLean.

$10.00 each.—J. L. Dewey, J. G. Tollin, George W. Fisher, S. D. Jaynes, Cyrus Jones, C. J. McIntire, L. R. Penick (twice), J. R. Thompson, L. L. Wakefield.

$1.00 each.—A. H. N. Boyd, C. G. Cotting, T. W. Cochran, J. J. Clark, L. Clark, G. B. Davis, Wilson Hoag, Geo. Kellar, Geo. H. Nixon, Jacob Querback, S. S. Roby.

$2 each.—H. Blumenthal, T. L. Cleveland, T. W. Cochran, Geo. L. Cross, John J. Cook, J. T. Evans, John Ford, J. A. Farnham, G. Gore, F. R. Millard, J. H. Onetta, Geo. Osborne, John A. Reid, John W. Sanders, Wm. Sampson.

$3 each.—Thos. Bollen, Mrs. H. A. Birdsong, G. Gore, Alex. Grierson, B. W. Knott, J. Richards.

$4 each.—Alex. Grierson, W. R. Gearhart, F. Moreland, J. K. Pollock, J. Sackett, jr.

$6 each.—Thos. Carter, W. W. Perry, G. E. Terry.

$7 each.—A. H. Boyd, J. W. Green, D. H. Mattice, Geo. D. Reynolds, P. C. Reed, Julius Tower, Gibson Wright.

$8 each.—O. P. Burgett, F. R. Drake, J. E. Y. Hanna, James Judd, Wm. Lockstein, J. T. Nichols, John Sutherland.

$9 each.—Wm. H. Meserve.

$11 each.—Bartley Scarlette, John Whitley.

$12 each.—H. L. Currier, E. A. Simmons, Noyes Spicer, H. R. Torrey, Geo. Wainwright.

$13 each.—J. O. H. Batterton, F. J. Filbert, S. C. Hall, D. W. McGinnis, J. M. Wilcox.

$14 each.—James Eads, John Ford, L. L. B. Miller, H. M. Orahood, D. C. H. Rothchild, H. R. Torrey.

$15 each.—D. Gill, W. E. Hill, J. A. Hunter, W. T. McClure.

$16 each.—A. E. Moreton, W. S. Pease.

Other Sums.—Wm. Amerson, $24.00; J. W. Agard, $18.85; John W. Banker, $22.00; Anson Ballard, $13.75; C. W. Boutin, $2.25; J. F. Boulware, $11.25; M. A. Cline, $1.88; D. G. Clark, $23.00; Joseph Cook, $2.90; R. Cone, $5.50; J. W. Carr, $4.75; E. E. Drumb, $1.90; H. G. Dearborn, $10.75; A. Dennis, $6.90; J R. Davis, $2.40; Geo. W. Davis, $1.45; W. G. Eaton, $12.65; H. J. Flint, $1.05; R. A. Gaunt, $5.25; L. A. Hamblen, $18.75; J. P. Jewell, $1.40; W. H. Johnson, $1.15; John Keyes, $24.85; L. Keyon, $6.15; Wm. Melvin, $7.75; J. J. McCoy, $8.50; J. T. Nichol, $3.85; W. L. Orr, $16.25; Wm. Powell, $27.00; S. H. Pearse, $10.90; B. F. Rogers, $3.90; James Stephenson, $1.05; Cyrus Strickler, $5.40; M. H. Smith, $1.50; H. A. Turton, $1.15; H. L. Upton, $5.90.

I WILL conclude with a few suggestions regarding the proper qualifications of a candidate for the mysteries of Capitular Masonry, which I hope will not be lost on my companions. I take it that ZEAL is the general password to the Royal Arch degrees, and therefore should be regarded as a test of qualification. If a brother seldom or never attends his lodge, unless summoned to appear, no matter how good or clever a man he may be personally, his lukewarmness should be taken as evidence that he has had enough of Masonry. Has not Masonry, also, had enough of him? In a practical point of view, to what use can he be converted in rebuilding the Temple? He is neither "oblong nor square," and he certainly does not bear any of the regular marks of the Craft. We are taught to reject such material as unfit for the building, by a lesson which holds perfectly true, although in our exemplification of the truth it happened that something above our comprehension became the "head stone of the corner." As a general rule, there are no marks of a Mason whatever on a brother who neglects his Masonic duties in the lodge, and here the law of rejections is imperative.—Martin Collins.

◆

Lieutenant Grinnell, of New York, is Inspector General of the Japanese navy for $15,000 per annum.

◆

THE MASONIC TROWEL.—The election of the editor of THE TROWEL to preside over the Grand Lodge of Illinois, gives THE TROWEL additional interest to the Fraternity. It is edited with much ability, and its pages are freer from "dead wood" than any similar publication we know of. Joe Cook is agent, who will receive subscriptions at the rate of one dollar and a quarter per annum.—Lacon Journal.

MASONIC HISTORY AND DIGEST,
BY
J. W. S. MITCHELL, M. D., P. G. M., P. G. H. P., AND P. G. C., OF MISSOURI.

Two Volumes, Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

There is nothing in Masonry, from its earliest inception to the last decade, that is not treated of in these volumes, which embrace an account of the Order—in all degrees—from the building of Solomon's Temple, hence throughout the civilized world, and the first written history of Masonry in the United States, to which are added the Old Charges and Ancient Regulations, as collated by order of the Grand Lodge of England in 1722.

Also, a code of Masonic Jurisprudence, illustrated by the author's answers of Law and Usage; a Dictionary of Masonic terms, description of Masonic Jewels, Regalia, etc., etc., etc.

To all Masons of whatever degree or standing, this work is especially valuable, while to the outside world—those who have never crossed the threshold of the "preparation room"—it is replete with interesting information.

The two volumes contain 1,450 pages, beautifully bound in Morocco, full gilt. Price, $10.00.

Sold only by subscription. Address W. B. KERNEY, General Agent, Chicago, Ill., care Western News Co.

Grand Lecturers or others desiring to act as Agents for this work—and willing to make thorough canvass, can have assigned to them specified territory over which they will have exclusive control. 1v8

VIRGIL PRICE

MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Manufacturers of all kinds of
Masonic Materials, Swords,
BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.,
No. 144 GREENE STREET,
NEW YORK.

Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO
KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.
Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords. 1v8-1y

MUTUAL PROTECTION
LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, OF NEW YORK.

This Company, at the end of the first four months, issued nearly five hundred policies, and insured to the amount of nearly $1,500,000. The assets and securities are ample, and are the property of the assured, and are secured fully under the laws of New York.

NEWLY ARRANGED TABLES AND REDUCED RATES OF PREMIUMS.

THE BUSINESS OF THE COMPANY IS STRICTLY MUTUAL.

No part of its funds are diverted from its members to pay STOCKHOLDERS.

The Policy-Holders Receive the Profits.

ANDREW W. MORGAN, President. F. A. FREEMAN, Secretary.

H. G. REYNOLDS,
General Agent for Illinois, except Cook County.

The Non-forfeiture plan of insurance, with dividends available after two years, endowment, ten-year non-forfeiting, youth's endowment, youth's ten-year non-forfeiting, and income-producing policy, are among the admirable features of this Company.

District Agents.—Dr. R. D. Hammond, Macomb; O. J. Bailey, Sycamore.

Traveling Agents.—Thomas P. Butler, Grayville; H. W. Hubbard, Centralia: James McCabe, Marshall.

Local Agents.—T. B. Hay, Carmi; P. C. Rooney, Franklin Grove; John Noyes, Pontoosuc; C. N. Chapman, Bloomington; J. E. Y. Hanna, Golconda; Samuel Levinson, Charleston; B. Mendenhall, Dallas City; C. L. Sheldon, Sterling; H. Howard, Greenville; M. W. Purcell, Santa Anna; Emil Baxter, Nauvoo; D. S. Parker, Cairo; L. B. Paine, Earlville; J. H. Rockerly, Hutsonville; John M. Young, Marion; J. Hendricks, Warsaw; James H. Temple, Chillicothe; C. A. Bradshaw, Sparta; Stewart & Babcock, Carlinville.

Agents will be added as appointed. For applications, apply to the undersigned, or any of his agents.

12-v7 H. G. REYNOLDS, General Agent.

GREAT PLATTE VALLEY ROUTE.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD!

Overland Mail, Express, and Telegraph Line,
OPEN FROM OMAHA TO BENTON, 595 MILES from the
Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains.

On and after Sunday, July 26, 1868, the Union Pacific Railroad will run

Two Daily Passenger Trains

between Omaha and Benton, connecting at Omaha direct with the CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN R. W.
for
ALL PRINCIPAL EASTERN CITIES,
and with the
COUNCIL BLUFFS & ST. JOSEPH R. R.
FOR ALL POINTS SOUTH.

At Cheyenne, direct connnections are made with Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Overland Mail Coaches, for Denver and Santa Fe!
and all points in
COLORADO AND NEW MEXICO;
And at Benton for Salt Lake and all points in
UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA,
AND CALIFORNIA.

PULLMAN'S PALACE SLEEPING COACHES
On Night Trains.
Good Eating-Houses along the Line.

PASSENGERS CROSSING THE PLAINS
by taking this road,
WILL SAVE 200 MILES STAGING
And 48 Hours Time.

C. D. WHITCOMB, Gen. Ticket Agt.
W. SNYDER, Gen. Supt.
t12-v7 S. H. H. CLARK, Gen. Freight Agt.

WESTERN UNION RAILROAD. Short and direct route to all points in Central Iowa, Central and Northern Wisconsin, and all parts of Minnesota. Trains on this road make close connection with trains on the Illinois Central Railroad at Freeport, and also with trains on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad at Clinton Junction and Racine Junction.

2v7 R. C. TATE, Superintendent.

THE ILLINOIS STATE REGISTER.—Published at Springfield, Ill., by E. L. Merritt & Bro., is the Central Democratic paper of Illinois. Daily, per annum, $10.00; Daily, six months, $5.00; Weekly, yearly, $2.00. Money sent by Express or in Registered Letters at our risk. Address

6-6 E. L. MERRITT & BRO.

MASONIC FURNISHING STORE.

POLLARD & LEIGHTON,
104 Tremont St., Boston,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
Society and Military Goods,
Sashes, Aprons, Collars, Jewels,

Swords, Belts, Gloves, Gauntlets, Caps, Chapeaux, Charts, Diplomas. Sole agents for Baker's Low-Twelve Bell. All the variety of Clothing for Lodges, Chapters, Councils, and Encampments.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR EQUIPMENTS
Furnished at short notice.

Colored lithographic view of the New Masonic Temple, Boston. Price, $3.00.

Publishers of
WEBB'S MASONIC MONITOR—Pocket edition;
FREEMASON'S POCKET LIBRARY;
WORKING MONITOR;
DICTIONARY AND MANUAL OF MASONIC LAW;
DIGEST OF MASONIC LAW;
TACTICS FOR KNIGHTS TEMPLAR;
and have for sale all other Masonic Books published

BANNERS AND FLAGS.

☞ Manufacturers supplied with all kinds of Materials, Trimmings, etc., for making Regalia, at the lowest prices. 4v7-1y*

MASONIC TROWEL
BOOK BINDERY AND
Blank Book Manufactory.

BANKERS,
Railroad Companies, City and County Authorities, Merchants, &c.,
SUPPLIED WITH FULL SETS OF BOOKS
At Short Notice, Ruled to any Pattern.

MAGAZINES, PAMPHLETS, MUSIC, bound in any style desired, from plain muslin to the finest Turkey Morocco and Gilt Edging. Old books rebound.

THE ILLINOIS JOURNAL.—PUBLISHED Daily and Weekly at Springfield, is the only Republican newspaper printed in the State Capital. It is the Official State Paper, and the Weekly edition penetrates every county. Subscription prices: Daily, $10.00 per year; Weekly, $2.00. Address,

THE JOURNAL COMPANY,
Springfield, Ill.
6-6

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, FEB. 15, 1869. NO. 2.

Poetry.

The Cane-Bottomed Chair.

BY WM. MAKEPEACE THACKERY.

In tattered old slippers that toast at the bars
And a ragged old jacket perfumed with cigars,
Away from the world, and its toils and its cares,
I've a snug little kingdom up four pair of stairs.

To mount to this realm is a toil, to be sure,
But the fire there is bright, and the air rather pure;
And the view I behold on a sunshiny day
Is grand, through the chimney-pots over the way.

This snug little chamber is crammed in all nooks
With worthless old knicknacks and silly old books,
And foolish old odds and foolish old ends,
Cracked bargains from brokers, cheap keepsakes from friends.

Old armor, prints, pictures, pipes, china (all cracked),
Old rickety tables, and chairs broken-backed:
A two-penny treasury, wondrous to see,
What matter? 'tis pleasant to you, friend, and me.

No better divan need the sultan require
Than the creaking old sofa that basks by the fire;
And 'tis wonderful, surely, what music you get
From the rickety, ramshackle, wheezy spinet.

That praying rug came from a Turcoman's camp;
By Tiber once twinkled that brazen old lamp;
A Mameluke fierce yonder dagger has drawn;
'Tis a murderous knife to toast muffins upon.

Long, long through the hours, and the night, and the chimes,
Here we talk of old books, and old friends, and old times;
As we sit in a fog made of rich Latakie,
This chamber is pleasant to you, friend, and me.

But of all the cheap pleasures that garnish my nest,
There's one that I love and cherish the best;
For the finest of couches that's padded with hair,
I never would change thee, my cane-bottomed chair.

'Tis a bandy-legged, high-shouldered, worm-eaten seat,
With a creaking old back and twisted old feet;
But since the fair morning when Fanny sat there
I bless thee and love thee, old cane-bottomed chair

It was but a moment she sat in this place!
She'd a scarf on her neck, and a smile on her face!
A smile on her face and a rose on her hair,
And she sat there and bloomed in my cane-bottomed chair.

And so I have valued my chair ever since,
Like the shrine of a saint, or the throne of a prince;
Saint Fanny, my patroness sweet, I declare
The queen of my heart and my cane-bottomed chair.

When the candles burn low, and the company's gone,
In the silence of night as I sit here alone—
I sit here alone, but we yet are a pair—
My Fanny I see in my cane-bottomed chair.

She comes from the past and revisits the room;
She looks, as she then did, all beauty and bloom;
So smiling and tender, so fresh and so fair:
And yonder she sits in my cane-bottomed chair.

GRAND ENCAMPMENT U. S.

Proceedings of the Triennial Conclave at Saint Louis.

ADDRESS OF THE GRAND MASTER IN FULL.

The seventeenth triennial convocation met at St. Louis, Sept. 15, A. D. 1868, A. O. 750.

GRAND OFFICERS.

Henry L. Palmer, Grand Master.
Benj. B. French, Past Grand Master.
Wm. S. Gardner, Deputy Grand Master.
John Q. A. Fellows, G. Generalissimo.
Kent Jarvis, G. Capt. General.
A. T. C. Pierson, P. G. Capt. General.
J. V. Z. Blaney, P. G. Capt. General.
Rev. Jos. S. Evans, Grand Prelate.
Geo. W. Belt, G. Sen. Warden.
Vincent L. Hurlbut, G. Junior Warden.
John W. Simons, Grand Treasurer.
John D. Caldwell, Grand Recorder.
Wm. C. Munger, G. St. Bearer,
Ezra L. Stevens, G. Sw. Bearer.
James M. Cole, Grand Warder.
R. C. Elmes, Grand Guard.

The Grand Commanderies of Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and Wisconsin, were fully represented.

The Grand Commanderies of Alabama, New Jersey, Ohio, and Virginia, had three delegates each; California, Georgia, and Mississippi, two each, and Texas one.

Hugh De Payens Commandery, at Little Rock, Ark., Washington and Columbia, at Washington City, Maryland and Baltimore, at Baltimore, and Mount Calvary, at Nebraska City, were also represented.

CHAIRMEN OF COMMITTEES.

On Doings of Grand Officers.—Orrin Welch, of New York.

On Finance.—Heman Ely, of Ohio.

On Dispensations and New Commanderies.—John Frizzel, Tennessee.

On Unfinished Business.—William Hacker, Indiana.

On Grievances.—James R. Hartsock, Iowa.

On Masonic Jurisprudence.—John Q. A. Fellows, Louisiana.

On Next Meeting.—B. B. French, Washington City.

On Credentials.—John D. Caldwell, Ohio.

On the Address.—Thomas Newby, Indiana.

On Obituaries.—Alfred Creigh, Pennsylvania.

We give the elegant address of the M. E. Grand Master in full:

SIR KNIGHTS:—When the Grand Encampment assembled at Boston, one of the easternmost cities of the Republic, eighteen years since, our late Most Eminent Grand Master, Sir William B. Hubbard, addressed those there assembled in the following language: "The subordinates, both State and individual, are steadily increasing throughout the entire extent of our common country, and in a short time from this we will witness a succession of encampments (commanderies) from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and from the Rio Del Norte to Lake Superior." To-day, assembled upon the banks of the Mississippi River, at a point not long since regarded as the western boundary of American civilization, we realize the fulfillment of the prophecy. From ocean to ocean, from the great lakes on the north to the Gulf and the Mexican boundary on the south, our Order has spread itself over the land. Would to God that he who uttered the prophetic words I have quoted could now be with us to witness this gathering of the representatives of grand and subordinate commanderies, which are, to a great extent, the work of his hands, the fruit of the seed sown by him, and to mingle his counsels with ours for the best interests of the orders committed to our charge.

I congratulate you, Sir Knights, that we are assembled under such favorable auspices; that for the first time in several years the grand standard of the Order floats over a united and faithful constituency throughout the length and breadth of the American Republic. I congratulate you, that under the wise and prudent government of the Grand Encampment, the department of Masonry committed to its care is making as rapid progress as its most ardent votaries can desire. For these, and the numerous other blessings we have been permitted to enjoy, let us, before entering upon the general business for the transaction of which we have assembled, reverently render our acknowledgements to the Grand Master of Heaven and Earth; and with grateful hearts humbly invoke His divine favor upon the labors which lie before us.

On this occasion it becomes my duty, in accordance with custom and the requirements of the Constitution of the Grand Encampment, to lay before you a detailed report of such official acts as I have had occasion to perform since your last meeting. This I shall proceed to do as briefly as possible.

Since the last triennial session of the Grand Encampment I have, upon proper petitions duly signed by the requisite number of Sir Knights, issued dispensations for the formation of the following new commanderies, viz.:

January 13th, 1866.—Colorado Commandery No. 1, at the city of Denver, in the Territory of Colorado. Sir Joshua H. Gest, Em. Com.; Sir Samuel H. Jones, Gen.; Sir Richard Sopries, Capt. Gen.

May 3d, 1866.—Monumental Commandery No. 3, at Baltimore, Maryland. Sir Alexander S. Walton, Em. Com.; Sir James W. Booze, Gen.; Sir Joseph P. W. Richardson, Capt. Gen.

August 27th, 1866.—Virginia City Commandery No. 1, at Virginia City, in the county of Madison, and Territory of Montana. Sir Hezekiah L. Hosmer, Em. Com.; Sir James R. Royce, Gen.; Sir Fernando C. Cornell, Capt. Gen.

November 8th, 1866.—Central City Commandery No. 2, at Central City, Gilpin county, Colorado Territory. Sir Henry M. Teller, Em. Com.; Sir Andrew Mason, Gen.; Sir A. J. Van Deren, Capt. Gen.

January 25th, 1867.—Mount Olivet Commandery No. 2, at Nebraska City, in the county of Otoe, in the then Territory now State of Nebraska. Sir Orsamus H. Irish, Em. Com.; Sir H. T. Davis, Gen.; Sir Wm. E. Hill, Capt. Gen.

February 4th, 1867.—De Witt Clinton Commandery No. 1, at the city of Virginia, Storey county, State of Nevada. Sir Jacob L. Van Bokkelen, Em. Com.; Sir John P. Smith, Gen.; Sir John S. Kaneen, Capt. Gen.

April 13th, 1867.—Hugh De Payens Commandery No. 3, at Fort Scott, in the county of Bourbon, and State of Kansas. Sir E. A. Smith, Em. Com.; Sir George Dimon, Gen.; Sir Charles Van Fossen, Capt. Gen.

April 13th, 1867. Bertrand De Gueslin Commandery No. —, at Camden, Ouachita county, State of Arkansas. Sir E. H. Whitfield, Em. Com.; Sir Ezra M. Hill, Gen.; Sir John Chidester, Capt. Gen.

November 23d, 1867.—Jaques De Molay Commandery, at the city of Frederick, in the county of Frederick, in the State of Maryland. Sir George A. Hanson, Em. Com.; Sir Peter S. Bantz, Gen.; Sir D. A. Piper, Capt. Gen.

March 10th, 1868.—De Molay Commandery No. 4, at Lawrence, in the county of Douglas, and State of Kansas. Sir Owen M. Bassett, Em. Com.; Sir Thos. J. Anderson, Gen.; Sir Alvin T. Dorwin, Capt. Gen.

March 10th, 1868.—St. John's Commandery No. 1, at the city of Wilmington, in the county of New Castle, and State of Delaware. Sir Stillman A. Hodgman, Em. Com.; Sir Jacob F. Myrick, Gen.; Sir Samuel E. Kirkpatrick, Capt. Gen.

June 20th, 1868.—Cœur De Lion Commandery No. —, at the town of Warrington, in the county of Escambia, and State of Florida. Sir William Morrill, Em. Com.; Sir A. F. Clapp, Gen.; Sir Joseph B. Vaughn, Capt. Gen.

In the case of Virginia City Commandery, Montana Territory, being satisfied that the circumstances justified such a course, I first issued, upon proper petition, a special dispensation to open and hold a commandery with the indispensable number, until a sufficient number of Sir Knights should be created to form a regular commandery. This was done, and in due time the preliminary commandery was closed, and proper report of its transactions made to me, accompanied with a petition, duly signed, for a dispensation for a regular commandery. The fees for the several dispensations above enumerated, $90 each, were received by me and immediately transmitted to the V. E. Grand Treasurer, with the exception of the fee for Cœur De Lion Commandery, at Warrington, Florida, which was received and will be accounted for by the Grand Recorder, with whom the petitions for these several dispensations have been deposited.

It is presumed that the several dispensations so issued have already been or will be returned with a proper report of the work performed under each. It will be for you to determine whether these dispensations were properly granted, whether the incohate commanderies thus created have manifested the requisite skill, and whether charters should be granted to all or any of them.

At the last triennial session of the Grand Encampment, the following resolution was unanimously adopted, viz.:

WHEREAS, In consequence of the unhappy troubles which have afflicted our country during the last four years, and the position of military lines, some of the Grand Commanderies, under the jurisdiction of this Grand Encampment have failed to hold their annual meetings as prescribed by their constitutions: therefore,

"Resolved, That it is the policy of this Grand Encampment, and its officers present and elect are hereby directed accordingly, to lend all the influence and power which belongs to it to aid in the establishment of all State Grand Commanderies which have lapsed, or become extinct or defunct, by failure to hold meetings during the past four years."

Being aware of the fact that during the civil war, which had then recently closed, some of the Grand Commanderies. severed from their sisters by the cordon which had been established by military authority, separating one portion of the Union from the other, had deemed it their duty to assume to withdraw themselves from the jurisdiction of the Grand Encampment, I construed this resolution as in spirit, if not by its letter, applying to them; as extending to all such an invitation to return to their allegiance, and as enjoining upon your grand officers to lend all the influence and power of this body with which they were entrusted to secure a restoration of the relations formerly existing between such Grand Commanderies and the Grand Encampment. In November, 1866, I received from R. E. Sir E. H. Hill, Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Virginia, a letter explaining the position of that commandery, and asking in the name of the Grand Commandery to return to allegiance to the Grand Encampment.

To which I replied officially in what I deemed to be the spirit of the resolution above quoted. My response to R. E. Sir Knight Gill will be found on pages 2, 3, and 4, of the Grand Master's Letter Book.

I am gratified to state that the Grand Commandery of Virginia promptly complied with all the conditions imposed, and has since been treated by me as a regular Grand Commandery under this jurisdiction.

In April, 1866, the Grand Commander of Mississippi opened a correspondence with me by his letter of January 31st, of that year (which, however, owing to my absence from home did not come to my notice until the above date), inclosing a copy of the proceedings of the Grand Commandery of that State, including a series of resolutions, as follows:

"Whereas, This G. Commandery for the last five years has been, by force of circumstances, entirely severed from the G. Encampment of the United States; therefore,

"Resolved, That this G. Commandery deem it inexpedient, at this time, to renew their former connection with that G. body, having never derived any benefit therefrom, and, therefore, respectfully withdraw from the same.

"Resolved, further, That the foregoing resolutions be submitted to the subordinate commanderies of this jurisdiction, with instructions to authorize their delegates at the next convocation of this G. Commandery to vote thereon."

My reply will be found in the Letter Book, on pages 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24.

I am gratified to be able to inform you that the subsequent action of this Grand Commandery was all that could be desired, and that she still retains her position on the roll of Grand Commanderies under your jurisdiction, the peer of her sisters.

In 1863 the Grand Commandery of Georgia also adopted resolutions asserting her independence of the Grand Encampment for the reasons, and actuated by the motives, set forth in the communication of R. E. Sir Wm. Tracy Gould, Grand Commander, and appended to this report and marked "A."

My reply to R. E. Sir Knight Gould will be found on pages 41, 42, and 43 of the Letter Book. I have been furnished with and have had the pleasure of examining a copy of all the proceedings of the Grand Commandery of Georgia from 1860 to 1868. From the proceedings of that body at the conclave of 1866, I extract the following:

"The committee specially appointed on the Grand Commander's address made the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

"That they had the same under consideration and recommend the following in relation to the withdrawal of this Grand Commandery from the Grand Encampment of the United States in (1863) eighteen hundred and sixty-three:

"We believe that the political condition of the country, at the time, rendered our action then just and proper. But in view of our present political relations, we recommend the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the resolutions passed by this Grand Commandery, at the regular grand conclave held in 1863, dissolving its connection with the General Grand Encampment of the United States, be, and the same are hereby repealed, and that this Grand Commandery again acknowledge the authority and jurisdiction of the Grand Encampment of the United States.

"Resolved, That the E. G. Recorder notify the Grand Recorder of the United States of the action of this Grand Commandery."

The course pursued by our esteemed Fraters of Georgia, in 1863, in view of the circumstances with which they were then surrounded, was not altogether inexcusable. And their prompt action in 1866, when those circumstances had become changed, must meet the cordial approval of all true Templars. "Let the past be buried with the eternal past," and let us heartily welcome the Grand Commandery of Georgia back to her old position among the Grand Commanderies under our jurisdiction.

Since your last triennial session, the Grand Commandery of Ohio has also amended her constitution, so as to conform in all respects to the Constitution of this Grand Encampment. There is now no grand or subordinate commandery within the jurisdiction of this body that does not acknowledge its allegiance to the Grand Encampment, and but one Grand Commandery whose constitution does not, in all respects, conform to the Grand Constitution; and that one, I confidently believe, will not long remain an exception to the general rule; but that, as soon as surrounding circumstances will enable them to do so, the members of that one will place it fairly upon an equality with the other Grand Commanderies under jurisdiction, and that, long ere we shall assemble again in triennial convocation, we shall be able to say in truth of all under your jurisdiction, "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Numerous questions, relating to the jurisprudence of the order, and the practice of grand and subordinate commanderies, have been from time to time submitted to me. The disposition of all such questions made by me may be learned by reference to the Letter Book. It is scarcely necessary that I should specially notice more than the following:

1. Any member of a commandery, in good standing, is eligible to the office of Eminent Commander, notwithstanding he may never have held either the office of Captain General or Generalissimo.

2. The officers of a commandery should be elected on the day prescribed in the by-laws of the commandery for that purpose. It is not necessary that they should be elected on Good Friday.

3. The questions having been submitted to me by letter, I determined, for the purposes of uniformity, that whenever two or more commanderies appear in public together, the command of the whole devolves upon the Commander of the senior commandery; and,

4. That in such case the senior commandery is entitled to the right of the line; adding, however, that a proper exercise of knightly courtesy would under the circumstances stated, always yield the command to the most experienced and most efficient Commander present, and the right of the line to the best drilled and best equipped commandery

5. No one can properly be a member of our Order, which "is founded on the Christian religion and the practice of the Christian virtues," who is not a firm believer in the religion of Jesus Christ; no one who does not acknowledge Him as the Saviour of mankind, and believe in the atonement offered up by Him on Cavalry, can be a worthy Knight Templar. The rules of the order, however, do not require any further or more definite profession of faith than is comprehended in the ritual. One who ridicules or makes light of the Holy Bible, or scoffs at religion, is an unworthy member of the order.

6. A Knight Templar, in good standing, has the right to object to conferring the orders of Knighthood upon a companion Royal Arch Mason in his commandery, after such companion has been balloted for and declared elected; and this, whether the objecting Sir Knight was present at the time of balloting or not; and when such objection is made in open commandery, verbally or by a formal communication thereto in writing, the Eminent Commander is not authorized to proceed and confer the orders upon the candidate. The Sir Knight making the objection can not be required to disclose his reasons therefor.

7. Every member of a commandery, in good standing, has a right to know what transpires in his commandery, but no member of a commandery should disclose to any one not a member, any matters arising during the hours of a regular assembly; nor should any Sir Knight disclose anything transpiring in a commandery to an absent member, which might be productive of discord and unkind feeling. It should be the constant care of all Knights Templar to promote harmony and concord, not only in their own commanderies, but among all the members of the order within the circle of their acquaintance.

8. An Eminent Commander can not resign his office during the term for which he is elected, after being duly installed.

9. To the question, "Can a Sir Knight be an active member and enjoy all the privileges and rights of two commanderies at the same time, one of them being under dispensation?" I answered: He can not. When a Templar signs a petition for a dispensation to form a new commandery, if the dispensation be granted, his membership in the old commandery remains in abeyance, and he is an active member of the new commandery while under dispensation; and if the dispensation be followed by a charter to the new commandery, he continues a member of that and ceases to be a member of the old one.

10. That whenever a Grand Commander removes from the jurisdiction of his Grand Commandery he thereby vacates his office, the powers of which devolve upon the Deputy and remaining officers, according to seniority. That as a permanent removal from the jurisdiction vacates the office of the Grand Commander, it follows, as a necessary consequence, that after such removal he can not exercise the powers of the office.

11. That a commandery under dispensation has the same exclusive jurisdiction within the territory which, in case a charter should be obtained, would belong to it, that would appertain to a chartered commandery.

12. That in the absence of any provision in the bylaws of a commandery to the contrary, the petition of a companion who is rejected may be presented at any regular meeting, subsequent to that at which the rejection occurs.

13. The ritual of the Orders of Knighthood should not be written.

14. Uupon application for the Orders of Knighthood, the vote must be by ballot. The ballot is secret and has the shme effect as a bellot in a lodge of Master Masons.

15. Petitions for the Orders of Knighthood can only be received and acted upon at regular conclaves of the commmandery.

16. To the question, "Can a Past Commander who is an honorary member of a commandery open the same, in the absence of the three principal officers i. e. Em. Commander, Generalissimo, and Capt. General), he being, at the time, an active member and also an officer of another commandery?" I answered as follows: He can not. The last clause of section 4 of article 3 of the Grand Constitution relates to Past Em. Commanders who are members of the commandery. Honorary membership does not confer the right to vote in any commandery, nor any rank or standing therein, but is merely complimentary.

A serious difficulty having arisen in the commanderies at Washington, growing out of the organization of the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia, and the subsequent action of the General Grand High Priest in relation thereto, it became my duty to examine the questions involved, and to make a determination of them, so far as they affected the commanderies. This I did on the first of January, 1868, and directed the commanderies in the District of Columbia to recognize the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the District of Columbia as a regularly constituted Grand Chapter, having, under the General Grand Chapter, exclusive jurisdiction over Royal Arch Masons, and chapters thereof, within the District of Columbia, and to give full faith and credit to all its acts, legally performed within the scope of its authority. In the Letter Book, pages 126 to 129 inclusive, will be found at length the communication which I felt bound to make on this subject. In the hope that all questions, touching an apparent conflict of authority in the government of Royal Arch Masonry in the District of Columbia, will be honorably and satisfactorily adjusted, ere the the close of the present session, and an examination of the whole subject thereby rendered unnecessary, I forbear to weary you at this time with a rehearsal of the facts in this case, or a discussion of the principles which led me to the conclusion above mentioned. If, however, this hope shall prove futile, I may herefter ask leave to make a further communication to you upon this subject.

Complaint having been made that in January last Columbia Commandery No. 2, at Washington, D. C., had improperly, as was alleged, stricken from the rolls the names of Sir Knights H. Alvord and W. H. Faulkner, I directed the commandery to forward to me a copy of all its proceedings in the premises, and after an examination of the papers and documents presented to me by the respective parties, I arrived at the conclusion that the proper remedy of the complaining Sir Knights, to secure review of the proceedings of the commandery of which they complain, was to take an appeal to the Grand Encampment, and, doubting the power of the Grand Master to review the proceedings of a subordinate commandery in a case of discipline, I declined to make an order or adjudication in the premises. I return to the Grand Encampment all the papers relating to the cases in question.

Since the last triennial convocation of the Grand Encampment, death has been busy amongst us, and from our ranks has stricken down some of the most eminent Templars whose names have ever graced our roll of members.

Sir William Blackstone Hubbard, Knight, Most Eminent Past Grand Master of Knights Templar of the United States of America, closed his earthly pilgrimage and was called to "that rest prepared from the foundation of the world," on the 5th day of January, A. O. 784.

Past Grand Master Hubbard was born at Lowville, Lewis county, New York, on the 25th day of August, 1795. He emigrated to Ohio about the year 1816, since which time he has been a resident of that State. He presided in its Senate, and became, in all the relations of life, one of its most honored and highly esteemed citizens.

In the various departments of Masonry, he was always a most earnest and zealous member, and as a "wise and accomplished Mason," he was also well known, not only throughout our own country, but also in foreign lands. The fact that he was called by his brethren to honor the stations of Grand Master of Masonry of Ohio, Grand High Priest of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Ohio, Captain General and Grand Generalissimo of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States, and finally, as a fitting conclusion to long and faithful official service, he was honored with the position of Most Eminent Grand Master of Knights Templar of the United States of America, which exalted station he most worthily filled for twelve years, affords ample evidence of the high esteem and affectionate regard in which he was held by those "who remember him in scenes in which the world was not witness," and where the better feelings of humanity were exhibited without disguise.

His superior talent, purity of life, honesty of purpose, and profound knowledge, have all been devoted, with unsurpassed energy, to the cause of truth and justice; and the impress of his character has been left, not only upon the history of Masonry, but upon the spirit of his day and generation. "The memory of his virtues lingers in our remembrance, and reflects its shining luster beyond the portals of the tomb." "To his name and memory be justice done, as we hope to receive the like meed ourselves."

It is gratifying to know that our deceased frater was known and appreciated beyond the limits of our own jurisdiction, and that others sympathize with us in the loss we have sustained by his decease. I submit to you the courteous and fraternal letter of condolence of Sir William Stewart, Grand Master of the Royal Exalted Religious and Military Order of Knights Templar of England and Wales, received in reply to the official circular announcing the decease of Past Grand Master Hubbard.

Most Eminent Archibald Bull, Knight and Past Grand Master of Knights Templar of the United States of America, died at the city of New York, on the 22d of December, 1865, A. O. 747. He was born at Hoosic Falls, Rensselaer county, New York, on the 16th of July, 1789. I regret that I am not in possession of such facts as will enable me to detail his personal or Masonic history to any extent. Having enjoyed a personal acquaintance with him from 1840 to 1849, during which time we were residents of adjoining counties, I speak of him as I knew him. During the period of time I have mentioned, he was regarded among those who knew him best, as a warm-hearted, generous, and exemplary Mason. In 1844, Judge Bull was elected Grand Master of the Grand Encampment, which position he filled creditably for the succeeding three years.

As a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Rensselaer county, for many years, he won for himself the reputation of an honest, upright, and able jurist, and in the less public relations of life, he was a kind father, an affectionate husband, and a highly esteemed citizen. It is meet that we who were his brothers while he lived, should pay due respect to his memory.

On the 11th of August, 1866, A. O. 748, Sir Anthony O'Sullivan completed his earthly pilgrimage, and was summoned to that asylum where we shall be at rest forever. Who here does not remember him as an intelligent and genial gentleman, an estimable Mason, a most worthy companion, and a true and courteous Sir Knight? And who here but feels a deep disappointment, that on assembling at the home of our deceased frater, his seat is vacant? It is no disrespect to our friends of Missouri to say that the absence from the asylum of that "noblest Roman of them all," Sir Anthony O'Sullivan, deprives us of much of the pleasure we had anticipated in meeting them here. I transfer, from the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, the following brief biography of our esteemed frater:

"Bro. Anthony O'Sullivan was born in the county of Kerry, Ireland, on the 29th of November, 1808. He emigrated to America about the year 1838, and lived in New York City until the next year, when he removed to New Orleans, where he was married to Miss Mary Drake, January 30, 1841. In that year he removed to Missouri, and settled in Arrow Rock, Saline county, March 17, 1841. In that place he was initiated, in Arrow Rock Lodge No. 55, on the 9th of May, 1846. Passed June 6, and raised June 20, same year. He was exalted a Royal Arch Mason, in Boonville Chapter No. 5, Boonville, Cooper county, in the year 1849, and received the degrees of Royal and Select Master in same chapter. He was created a Knight Templar on the 1st of August, 1852, in St. Louis Commandery No. 1. He received the degrees of the Scottish Rite, in the southern jurisdiction, in 1859, at a meeting called in Chicago, in that year. He was then made a 33d, and Sov. Grand Inspector General of Missouri and bordering States.

"In 1852 he removed to St. Louis, where he resided until 1860, when he removed to Springfield, Mo., and remained until 1863, when he returned to St. Louis, and remained until the close of his life. On Wednesday, May 5, 1852, he was elected Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge. On Friday, April 7, 1854, he was elected Grand Secretary of the Grand Chapter. On Tuesday, May 19, 1863, he was elected Grand Recorder of the Grand Commandery, and on May 19th, 1864, he was elected Puissant of the Grand Council, and from the organization of the order of High Priesthood, he was its Secretary. All of the above offices he filled until death came to summon him from his labors. Of the subordinate bodies of which he was an active member, in the latter years of his life, we find the following: In 1851 he became a member of Missouri Lodge No. 1, and in 1852 he affiliated with Meridian Lodge No. 2. May 21, 1858, he was elected a member of St. Louis Chapter No. 8, and by his indefatigable labors he raised it from a precarious existence to be one of the first chapters in the West. He was its High Priest in 1853-4-5-6-7-8 and 9. He was first Thr. Ill. G. Master of St. Louis Council No. 7, during its charter from Illinois, and remained such after the formation of the Grand Council of Missouri, and was considered one of the best authorities in Cryptic Masonry in the United States. He remained a member of St. Louis Commandery, in which he filled the office of Em. Commander during the years 1855 and 1857. For fourteen years, as Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, he ever displayed those rare qualities which belong to that office, and without any disparagement to his illustrious predecessors, we doubt whether there ever was a more faithful and laborious officer. He served under fourteen Grand Masters, and received the cordial approval of all, and was fourteen times re-elected without scarcley any opposition, and in the last two elections he was chosen by acclamation."

And yet another has been stricken from the bright galaxy of names, loved, honored, and revered by American Freemasons. On the 5th day of June, 1868, A. O. 750, Brother, Companion, and Knight, Sir Charles Arnold Fuller, of Tennessee, in obedience to the mandate of Him who rules the universe, laid aside the cross and assumed the crown. Sir Knight Fuller was born in Otsego county, New York, on the 25th of August, 1816. He became a resident of Tennessee in 1832, and remained a citizen of that State until his decease. He became a Mason in 1843, from which time until his decease he was an active and zealous member of the Fraternity, and almost constantly filled prominent official positions, in one or more of all the departments of Masonry, in all of which he discharged the duties incumbent upon him with such integrity and fidelity as won for him the respect and admiration of all his brethren. In the beautiful and expressive language of the Grand Lodge of Tennessee: "After having, in a life of usefulness as a citizen, a Mason, and a Christian, given practical evidences of his faith in God, hope in immortality, and charity to all mankind, thus illustrating how a good man should live, the scene of his death-bed most impressively demonstrated how a good man ought to die."

Thus, as time rolls on, we are passing away. These events speak a language more emphatic than mere words, and inculcate a lesson of deep significance. That lesson is to

"So live, that when thy summous comes to join
The innumerable caravan, which moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go, not like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave,
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

From the report of the Grand Treasurer, which will be submitted to you, it will be seen that the expenditures of the Grand Encampment, from year to year, are so much in excess of its receipts, that a few years only will be required to exhaust its treasury, unless its expenditures shall be reduced or its revenues increased. The revenue of the Grand Encampment, under its present constitution, is limited to the amount received for charters and dispensations for new commanderies, in territory not governed by Grand Commanderies, and the dues required to be paid by such commanderies as are under its immediate jurisdiction. The territory within which the Grand Encampment may lawfully establish subordinate commanderies is constantly becoming more and more circumscribed, and the revenue derived from these sources must be from time to time diminished, until ere long it will cease altogether. It is doubtful if any considerable diminution in the expenses can be made. Resort must, therefore, soon be had to other means to obtain the requisite amount needful to defray the necessary expenses of this body.

I deem it proper to call your attention to this subject, not doubting that you will be able to devise a proper remedy for the apparent difficulty.

After the close of the last session of the Grand Encampment, I issued a special dispensation to M. E. Sir B. B. French, to constitute and install the officers of Columbia Commandery No. 2, at Washington, D. C.; to Very Em. Sir Geo. W. Belt, to perform the same service for Leavenworth Commandery, Kansas, Washington Commandery, at Atchison, Kansas, and Mount Calvary Commandery, at Omaha, Nebraska; to Sir A. T. C. Pierson, to perform a like duty for Cœur De Lion Commandery, Winona, Mankato Commandery, at Mankato, and Zion Commandery at Minneapolis, in Minnesota, each of whom performed the duty assigned him and made due report.

In compliance with the request of the Grand Commandery of Pennsylvania, I lay before you an official copy of the proceedings of that body, had in December last, on the subject of the ritual, for such consideration and action as you may deem proper.

Sir Knights, to our care are committed the interests of one of the noblest institutions of human origin. An institution well calculated, if properly cared for, to accomplish great good to the human family. It should be our steady purpose to extend its usefulness, and to preserve its reputation unsullied. Not only by such wise and prudent legislation as may be needful, but also by such a course of conduct on our part as will bring no discredit upon our profession. The intelligence and experience of the members of the Grand Encampment here assembled justifies me in the confidence I feel that all your legislation will be well considered, and such as will promote the general interests of the order; and your own high character and attachment to the Orders of Knigthood, are sure guarantees that the character of Chivalric Masonry will not suffer in your hands.

Sir Knights, I commend you to the labors for which you have assembled.

We reserve portions of Grand Master Gardner's report for a future number.

The report of the Treasurer showed $2,565.09 balance in hand.

William Sewell Gardner, of Boston, was elected Grand Master; John Q. A. Fellows, of New Orleans, Deputy; Kent Jarvis, of Massilon, Ohio, Grand Generalissimo; George W. Belt, of Weston, Mo., Grand Captain General; John Frizzell, Nashville, Grand Senior Warden; Wm. C. Munger, Louisville, Grand Junior Warden; John W. Simons, New York, Grand Treasurer; John D. Caldwell, Cincinnati, Grand Recorder; Alfred Creigh, Washington, Pa., Grand St. Bearer; William Barrett, Nashua, N. H., Grand Sword Bearer; Thomas Chandler, Atlanta, Georgia, Grand Warder; Alfred Creigh, Historiographer.

The next triennial meeting is to be held at Baltimore.

The Committee on Obituaries submitted the following report:

In calling the attention of the officers and Sir Knights of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar to the very eloquent remarks of the M. E. Grand Master, Sir Henry L. Palmer, on the subject of perpetuating the memory of the illustrious Sir Knights who have died since the last triennial conclave, your committee feel as Moses felt, when before the burning bush, and in the very presence of Deity, he took the shoes from off his feet, because the ground upon which he stood was holy ground. Your committee also feel that they, too, stand upon consecrated ground—consecrated by the virtues of the deceased—the tears of widows—the aching hearts of orphan children—the heart-felt sorrow of whole communities—the new made graves—and the unknown future—a future, however, the darkness of which is relieved by the declaration of our glorified and ascended Redeemer, who himself declared: "What I do, thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

What thoughts crowd upon the human mind at the recital of this glorious doctrine, breathed from the lips of Deity itself. It speaks in unmistakable language to our hearts, that although death has taken from the Masonic family P. M. E. Sir William Blackstone Hubbard, Grand Master, P. M. E. Archibald Bull, of New York, P. V. E. Sir Anthony O'Sullivan, Grand Recorder of Missouri, P. V. E. Sir Charles Arnold Fuller, Grand Recorder of Tennessee—that although their eyes are sealed to earthly things, and their hearts have ceased to throb, yet they shall awake in the image of the Redeemer, become ransomed spirits in the Grand Conclave of Heaven, and shine as stars of the first magnitude in the eternal ages of the spirit world.

"We yield them up, not dead, not dead,
To dwell with Christ forever."

As Christian Knights, they were taught in our commanderies that our Redeemer was born to redeem mankind; that by his purity of life they were to follow Him as the way, the truth, and the life; that by His death He paid the debt of nature, and satisfied the rigor of the law fully, in order to make their bed of dust perfumed with his own glorious body; that by his resurrection they were taught in full faith to commend their departing souls to their Heavenly Father until the happy resurrection morn, when their sleeping ashes shall be reanimated and fashioned like unto his glorious body; and that by his glorious ascension He had ascended into heaven to prepare a place for those who love Him. With these Christian principles governing their hearts, based upon the birth, life, death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ, as taught in our commanderies, who can doubt the result of such teachings, or refuse to believe that eternal happiness is the result of a well spent, virtuous life, and that the dead have all the glory of the world. But, notwithstanding this temporary separation, we shall again behold our beloved Sir Knights, when we shall pass the river of death, bridged by the cross of Christ, we shall again recognize them in the spirit land,

"When safely landed on that heavenly shore,
Where sighings cease and sorrows come no more;
With hearts no more by cruel anguish riven—
As we have loved on earth—we'll love in heaven."

In view, therefore, of the Christian character, unsullied honor, unwearied devotedness of our deceased Sir Knights, William Blackstone Hubbard, of Ohio, Archibald Bull, of New York, Anthony O'Sullivan, of Missouri, Charles A. Fuller, of Tennessee, members of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States; of their fidelity to their obligations, their unswerving attachment to the principles of our Order, their zeal, faith, and love in propagating Christian Knighthood, and their conscientious determination throughout their eventful lives to continue Christian soldiers in the great battle of life; be it

Resolved, That the representatives from all the States of this American Union, meeting around the common altar of Knighthood and Masonry, and in behalf of themselves and their respective commanderies, fraternally, sorrowfully, tender to the families of our deceased Sir Knights, in the afflictive dispensation through which they have passed, our heartfelt sympathies, and our desire to mingle our tears and our sorrows with those whom death has bereaved of their earthly comfort.

Resolved, That appropriate Templar tablets, with suitable inscriptions, be printed with the proceedings, and that the families of our deceased Sir Knights be furnished with copies of said proceedings.

New commanderies were chartered, as follows:

Hugh De Payens, Fort Scott, Kansas.
De Molay, Lawrence, Kansas.
Bertrand De Guesclin, Camden, Arkansas.
Colorado, Denver, Colorado.
Jaques De Molay, Frederick, Maryland.
Mount Olivet, Nebraska City.
Monumental, Baltimore, Md.
St. Johns, Wilmington, Delaware.
De Witt Clinton, Virginia, Nevada
Virginia City, at Virginia City, Montana.

The dispensations of Cœur de Lion and Central City were ordered to be renewed.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Grand Encampment are heartily tendered to M. Em. Sir Henry L. Palmer, for the zeal, fidelity, and ability with which he has administered his high office, and that a committee be appointed to procure and present to him, in behalf of this Grand Encampment, an appropriate testimonial of the high esteem in which he is held by all Knights Templar.

The Committee on Jurisprudence submitted the following report, which was adopted:

The several decisions of the M. E. Gr. Master meet our cordial approval, with exceptions as follows:

1st. While we assent to the general propositions contained in the seventh decision, we can not assent to that portion of it which denies the right of a knight who may have been absent from a meeting of his commandery, to know all the transactions at such meeting, whether affecting himself or not.

Your committee have had their attention called to a question upon which different opinions are entertained by different Grand Commanderies, to-wit: How does the expulsion or suspension of a knight from his lodge or chapter affect his standing in the commandery to which he belongs?

In order that Templar law may be uniform throughout the jurisdiction of this Grand Encampment, we think that question should be definitely determined by this body. Inasmuch as no one can become a Knight Templar who is not in good standing in lodge and chapter, we hold that a forfeiture of that good standing deprives him of all the rights and privileges gained thereby, and necessarily degrades him from the Orders of Knighthood.

We are also asked to decide what is the status of a knight who held membership in a commandery whose charter has been surrendered or revoked? We think the knight, in such case, ceuld join another commandery, upon petition and certificate from the G. Recorder of the State holding the charter and papers of the commandery to which he last belonged that his standing therein was good when said commandery ceased to exist.

Who should be eligible to office in the Grand Encampment? is also asked.

We hold that no one not an actual member of this grand body shouid be permitted to hold office therein.

The Grand Recorder appends the following note:

If one hundred pages were devoted to a description of the processions, banquets, excursions, and other hospitable entertainments furnished officers, members, and visitors of the Grand Encampment of the United States, there could not even then be justice done to the heartiness, geniality, and fullness of the welcome afforded us by the Fraternity and citizens of St. Louis.

STATISTICS OF STATE GRAND COMMANDERIES.

ALABAMA.—Organized December 1, 1860; 7 commanderies, 7 reported, 258 members, 31 created, $289 dues, 4 deaths, 15 demitted, 13 suspended.

CALIFORNIA.—Organized August 10, 1858; 7 commanderies, 350 members.

CONNECTICUT.—Organized September 13, 1827; 8 commanderies, 8 reported, 973 members, 114 created, $342 dues, 7 deaths.

GEORGIA.—Organized 1860; 7 commanderies, 360 members, $360 dues.

ILLINOIS.—Organized October 27, 1857; 27 commanderies, 1,339 members, 387 created, $2,226 dues, 8 deaths, 70 demitted, 10 suspended.

INDIANA.—Organized May 16, 1854; 12 commanderies, 3 extinct, 547 members, 126 created, $540 dues, 4 deaths, 27 demitted, 2 suspended.

IOWA.—Organized June 6, 1864; 11 commanderies, 11 reported, 428 members, 145 created, $513 dues, 4 deaths, 15 demitted, 6 deaths.

KENTUCKY.—Organized October 5, 1847; 12 commanderies, 9 reported, 417 members, 49 created, $307 dues, 8 deaths, 29 demitted, 2 suspended.

LOUISIANA.—Organized February 12, 1864; 3 commanderies, 3 reported, 225 members, 83 created, $415 dues, 25 deaths, 6 demitted.

MAINE.—Organized May 5, 1852; 11 commanderies, 11 reported, 762 members, 172 created, $516 dues, 8 deaths, 12 demitted.

MASSACHUSETTS AND RHODE ISLAND.—Organized 1805; 26 commanderies, 2,700 members.

MICHIGAN.—Organized January 15, 1857; 22 commanderies, 1 extinct, 21 reported, 770 members, 241 created, $865 dues, 2 deaths, 21 demitted, 7 suspended.

MINNESOTA.—Organized October 23, 1865; 4 commanderies, 4 reported, 250 members, 29 created, $90 dues, 3 deaths, 6 demitted.

MISSOURI.—Organized May 22, 1860; 10 commanderies, 10 reported, 350 members, 63 created, $628 dues, 11 deaths, 31 demitted.

MISSISSIPPI.—Organized January 1, 1857.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.—Organized August 22, 1860; 7 commanderies, 6 reported, 585 members, 48 created, $192 dues.

NEW JERSEY.—Organized February 14, 1860; 6 commanderies, 1 extinct, 5 reported, 266 members, 59 created, $192 dues.

NEW YORK.—Organized June 18, 1814; 42 commanderies, 6 extinct, 36 reported, 3,558 members, 726 created, $3,077 dues, 34 deaths, 144 demitted, 34 suspended.

OHIO.—Organized October, 1843; 19 commanderies, 15 reported, 1,240 members, 250 created, $1,621 dues.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Organized April 14, 1854; 33 commanderies, 1 extinct, 32 reported, 2,290 members, 612 created, $4,045 dues, 21 deaths, 97 demitted, 11 suspended.

TEXAS.—Organized 1854; 7 commanderies, 3 extinct, 5 reported, 230 members.

TENNESSEE.—Organized October 12, 1859; 9 commanderies, 9 reported, 620 members, 104 created, 9 deaths, 8 demitted, 1 suspended.

VERMONT.—Organized August 14, 1851; 5 commanderies, 400 members, 80 created, $400 dues.

VIRGINIA.—Organized November 27, 1823; 10 commanderies, 5 reported, 600 members, $300 dues.

WISCONSIN.—Organized October 20, 1859; 7 commanderies, 7 reported, 600 members, 122 created, $524 dues, 4 deaths, 21 demitted.

TOTAL.—313 commanderies, 15 extinct, 20,118 members, 3,341 created, $17,482 dues, 152 deaths, 502 demitted, 86 suspended.

It will be seen that Illinois is fourth in commanderies and members, and third in number of creations.

Communications.

From New York.

NEW YORK, January 24, 1869.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER:—I read in THE TROWEL of January 15 an item about the Vermont Legislature, which puzzles me not a little. I find, first, that it consists of 299 members. When I add them by their occupations, there seems to be 206; when by nativity, 239; when by religious persuasion, 158; and when by politics, 238. But remembering, from having been two years an assistant clerk of the aforesaid House, that there are 242 towns in the State, each entitled to one representative, but some few usually failing to send one, I have concluded that they have managed to get things decidedly "mixed" in our native State. It is a noble old State, though, and my love for it is greater, I believe, since I left it, than it was when I lived in it.

Am glad to see your notice of Bro. Gamaliel Washburn. He was a good man and Mason, and never forgot the charge he received in the Northeast corner. He initiated, passed, and raised me, and instructed me in all the lodge lectures. I regretted deeply to hear that he was gone.

I need hardly add my congratulations to those you have already so numerously had upon your accession to the office of Grand Master. I know your views of the office, and agree with them all.

The Fraternity flourishes here in all its numerous divisions. Much work is done, and, so far as I observe, well done—a little more "style," perhaps, than in the country, and yet, I think, with more real dignity and decorum in the ceremonies. C.

[We expected somebody to take up our item—we gave it exactly as we got it.—EDITOR.]

The Deputy in Chicago.

In my note which appeared in the last TROWEL, I intimated "more anon."

I have, however, a "personal explanation" to make, and accordingly rise to a point of order. I alluded to the "small W. M. of No. 211." I did not mean (and hereby deny the same) that he was small in brain, or capabilities. I simply alluded to his stature, breadth of beam and bottom.

The "water-works man" I have seen and talked to on various, divers, and sundry subjects, much to our mutual satisfaction, as he agreed with himself and I agreed with myself, and consequently we were both satisfied. Saw the "big engine," and received an invitation to go down a deep hole and see the tunnel. Didn't do it, 'cause it looked dark, and as C—— had on his "Sunday go to meetin's," I knew he didn't care very much to make the descent.

Monday evening (18th), visited No. 160, and was kindly received by W. Bro. McElwaine, Master, and Bro. Church, Secretary, not to forget the committee who so kindly took me in charge and tried to find out what I knew.

Query: Is "St. John" one of the "original patrons?"

Tuesday (19th), visited Apollo Commandery No. 1, and witnessed the conferring of the Red Cross. While there, met several that I didn't know and several that I did. Among the latter, Gurney (E. C.) and Brower (C. G.), Myers, Reed, Horton, Leonard, Hitchcock, Osborn, Hurlbut (V. L.), and Miles. As a Prelate, J. H. M. is the best we ever saw. There were two others at that "conferring," one of whom we knew, and one we didn't. The first is that individual who held possession of that inverted mud scow, and who is denominated "WHAT," the first letters of whose name correspond to BIGELOW. He's had a lodge named after him—438. His offer to divide 12½ on 200 was not, I regret to say, received in that spirit of kindness with which it was offered. The other is named "Htims." Him I don't know. He's Warder—and when I've said that I've said pretty near enough; nevertheless, I can not refrain from expressing the opinion that if he don't quit pulling his voice up from the "vasty deep," he won't have any soles on his brogans afore long.

We also visited Gourgas Chapter, Rose-Croix, and the same evening No. 409, where we found "Cash" conferring the F. C. degree. Friday and Saturday, we were at Washington Chapter No. 43, and sojourned there. Monday, Feb. 1, visited No. 438, and was welcomed by W. Bro. Lapham and W. Bro. Ferns, our Grand Tyler. No Springfield Mason who wishes to see the Masonic sights in Chicago, should fail to call on Bro. John. DEPUTY.

Woman's Influence.

Earnest and powerful are the words of a true hearted woman. When aroused by the call of duty or sympathy, she can do great deeds and speak deep-meaning words. Then her noble thoughts come forth, clad in the simple language of nature.

Her tearful eye and sweet-toned voice, employed in behalf of those she loves, have melted the stout hearts of war-worn veterans, and moved kings to deeds of mercy. When the fire of religious love burns upon woman's heart, it does not expire with a transient blaze, but flashes up in perpetual brightness towards heaven. The words of prayer and praise which she then utters are the warm emanations from her heart of love.

Miriam, the prophetess, stood upon the shores of the Red Sea and sang the praises of the delivering God. Never before had words so eloquent echoed among the wild mountains. Good news, when borne upon a glad and sweet-toned voice, is the truest eloquence.

Never was mortal permitted to bear tidings more glorious than the news which Mary bore to the desponding disciples: "Jesus is risen from the dead!" the eloquence of these simple words moved men and angels.

The strongest eloquence which the world has ever heard, has fallen from woman's tongue. Historians have recorded some of her burning words, which will make their volumes brilliant forever. D. A. Mc.

JACKSONVILLE, ILL.

For the Trowel.

Tribute to Bro. Wm. Frazer, deceased, Polo, Ill.

Thus, before the silent scythe of time, in the prime of manhood, has gone to "that bourne whence no traveler returns," one on whom bright hopes of future usefulness well depended, leaving a loving wife and two tender babes to deplore the loss of their life's protector; a numerous circle of the Brotherhood, to sigh as they view the "vacant chair" and miss the familiar face and the warm clasp of the hand, ever extended to those whom he loved. He has gone before.

Sorrowing that here we shall "see his face no more," we bow submissive to the decree of "Him who doeth all things well," assured that our loss is his greatest gain.

ADDRESS.

BY BENJAMIN B. FRENCH.

My Brethren:—One of the best writers of our country has said: "Man is essentially a social being; communion with his kind is a condition indispensable to his moral and intellectual development; to his very existence, in short, as man." "Man in solitude ceases to be human."

These are great truths, which the history of mankind, from the time when the Lord God said, "It is not good that man should be alone," to this day, has illustrated. So we find in the sacred record, that when "the whole earth was of one language and one speech," "they said one to another, go to, let us build us a city and a tower whose top may reach into heaven, and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth."

In this we find, if I may so express it, the natural fear of mankind that they should be separated and scattered, and the first record of a human effort to escape that destiny.

But He, in whose hands are all the issues of life, had ordained a different destiny for man. Not one that should conflict with the fiat "that it is not good that man should be alone," but one that should scatter mankind "upon the face of all the earth." Not, however, in individual loneliness, but in families, and tribes, and nations.

Thus commenced man's social condition, and his individual indebtedness for happiness and prosperity to his fellow-man. The ties of family were doubtless the first which bound communities together; but, as man extended his dominion, and the race enlarged, families became tribes, and tribes nations, so that human institutions became necessary to perfect man's social relations, and we believe that amongst the earliest of those institutions Freemasonry must be ranked.

We do not, however, seek to draw sufficiently aside the veil of the past to fix our vision upon the exact age when this venerable society was established; we are content to say it is of very ancient origin, and has had a vast effect upon man through centuries of by-gone years.

Up to the time of the erection of King Solomon's Temple, Freemasonry, if it existed, was practical. Mackey says, after speaking of the dstruction of mankind by the flood,—"that on the plains of Shinar man again rebelled, and as a punishment for his rebellion, at the lofty tower of Babel, language was confounded, and Masonry lost; for Masonry, then as now, consisted in the knowledge of these great truths, that there is one God and that the soul is immortal."

Taking the definition of Masonry as here given, I have no objection to Brother Mackey's assertion that Masonry was again lost at the building of the tower of Babel. He doubtless founded it on some ancient legend known to him, although he refers to no authority in his Lexicon.

But, reviewing Freemasonry as a brotherhood of men, from its beginning to this day, first formed, without doubt, for practical purposes, cemented by a firm belief in God, the immortality of the soul, and the necessity of a moral and upright life, I much doubt whether we can, with propriety, go farther back than the building of the temple. I have stated, in public discourses and private conversation, that I never should seek to establish an antiquity for it anterior to that time.

Some writers have attempted to make, in some way, a connection between our Order and the Eleusinia, the Dionysia, and Druidæ. These ancient "mysteries" and "orders" are so mingled with each other in history that it is almost impossible to come to any definite conclusion respecting their initiation.

After no trifling research, I confess my mind has been left in considerable doubt, whether any historian who has written on the subject has left it with a clear perception of the beginning, the middle, or the end, of any of these curious societies, orders, or associations of ancient days.

It is impossible to come to any conclusions, from anything I have been able to find, whether the Druids existed before Freemasonry was established, or afterwards. And as evidence of the uncertainty of history on this subject, I quote from Dr. Oliver's history of "the Celtic mysteries," wherein he quotes from "Mr. Faber" as follows: "Dr. Borlase has traced a surprising uniformity in the temples, priests, doctrines, and worship of the Persian Magi and the British Druids. This conformity, indeed, is so striking and extraordinary, that Pelloutier, in his history of the Celts, will have it that the Persians and the Celts were originally one and the same people. Major Vallencey is of the same opinion; adding that the Druids first flourished in the East; in Hindoostan, as Brahmins; in Babylon and Syria, as Chaldeans; and in Persia as Magi; and from thence came hither (to Britain) and with that great body of Persian Scythians, whom the Greeks call Phœnicians." "These opinions," says Dr. Oliver, "collected by Mr. Hutchinson, can only prove that the nations agreed as to the practice of similar rites and ceremonies in the administration of religious worship; for the Druids flourished in Gaul and Britain, at least coeval with the planting of many other nations from which theorists have conjectured they might derive their original."

My own conclusion is, that the Druids had no existence by that name till long after Freemasonry, and that, if there was any similarity in their ceremonies to those of Freemasonry, they took them from Freemasonry, not Freemasonry from them; and the rites and mysteries, so far as I have examined of both the Dionysiæ and Druidæ, are such generally as Freemasonry would repudiate.

The Dionysiæ were ancient Egyptian and Grecian festivals in honor of Bacchus; for, admitting that Bacchus and Osiris are one and the same,—and the article on Bacchus, in Lempriere, remarks, "Bacchus and Osiris of the Egyptians"—the Dionysiæ of the Greeks, and festivals celebrated by the Egyptians in honor of Isis, are the same, Isis having been the wife of Osiris.

These festivals were "observed at Athens with more splendor and ceremonious superstition than in any other part of Greece." They were public, consisted of processions formed of people of both sexes, clothed in all sorts of fantastic garments, whose dresses and actions were like those of drunken men. There were a number of different festivals of this name, and, in the words of the historian, they "were celebrated by the Greeks with great licentiousness, and they contributed much to the corruption of morals among all classes of people."

The Druidæ, or Druids, were the ministers of religion among the ancient Gauls and Britons. The woods and solitary retreats were the places of their residence. They professed great power, were believed to be acquainted with the art of magic, and made sacrifices, in which they often immolated human victims to their gods. They believed in the doctrine of metempsychosis, and in the immortality of the soul.

The Eleusinia was a festival observed every fourth year by the Oceleans, and other cities of Greece, and every fifth year by the people of Athens, at Eleusis, in Attica, where it was introduced by Eumolpus in the year 1356 before Christ, about 340 years before the building of the temple. It was the most celebrated of all the religious ceremonies of Greece, whence it is often called, by way of eminence "The mysteries."

There is in one of the Eleusinian mysteries, as described in the classical history of them, a resemblance to some of our Masonic rites, and it is by no means improbable that some of the forms used in the performance of those rites may have been adopted by our ancient brethren, and have come down, in a model shape, to us. The historian, in speaking of the ceremony of celebrating those mysteries, says: "It was so superstitiously observed that, if any one ever revealed it, it was supposed that he had called down divine vengeance upon his head, and it was unsafe to live in the same house with him. Such a wretch was publicly put to an ignominious death."

"Persons of all ages, and of both sexes, were initiated at this solemnity, and it was looked upon as so heinous a crime to neglect this sacred part of religion, that it was one of the heaviest accusations which contributed to the condemnation of Socrates."

"The initiation was performed in the following manner: The candidates, crowned with myrtle, were admitted by night into a place called the mystical temple, a vast and stupendous building. As they entered the temple they purified themselves, by washing their hands in holy water, and received for admonition that they were to come with a mind pure and undefiled, without which the cleanliness of the body would be unacceptable. After this the holy mysteries were read to them from a large book. After this, the priest proposed to them certain questions, which they readily answered. After this, strange and amazing objects presented themselves to their sight, etc., etc. The chief person that attended at the initiation was called the revealer of sacred things." He was attended by a proper number of attendants and officers to perform all the ceremonies.

The festival of the Eleusinia was held in September, and continued nine days. "If any woman rode from Athens to Eleusis in a chariot, she was obliged, by an edict of Lycurgus, to pay 6,000 drachmas. The design of this law was to destroy all distinction between the richer and poorer sort of citizen."

The several days of the festival were each marked by some particular ceremony.

I cannot recount them all, but the ceremony of the last day was so peculiarly symbolical that I will quote it.

"On the ninth and last day of the festival it was usual to fill two earthen vessels with wine, one of which being placed towards the east and the other towards the west, which, after the repetition of some mystical words, were both thrown down; and the wine being spilled on the ground, was offered as a libation."

Although there may be some things in these Eleusinian ceremonies to remind us of some of our own, it is very evident to my mind that we can lay no reasonable claim to them, or to either of the others, as prototypes of our sublimely moral Institution. They used symbols and emblems; so do we.

Brother Mackey says in his Lexicon: "The fraternity of Dionysian Architects were linked together by the secret ties of Dionysian Mysteries, into which they had been initiated. Thus constituted, the fraternity was distinguished by many peculiarities that strikingly assimilate to our Order. In the exercise of charity, the 'more opulent were sacredly bound to provide for the exigencies of the poorer brethren.' For the facilities of labor and government, they were divided into lodges, each of which was governed by a Master and Wardens. They employed in their ceremonial observances many of the implements which are still to be found among Freemasons, and used, like them, a universal language, by which one brother could distinguish another in the dark as well as in the light, and which served to unite the members scattered over India, Persia, and Syria into one common brotherhood. The existence of this order in Tyre, at the time of the building of the temple, is universally admitted; and Hiram, the widow's son, to whom Solomon intrusted the superintendence of the workmen, as an inhabitant of Tyre, and as a skillful architect and cunning and curious workman, was doubtless one of its members. Hence, we are scarcely claiming too much for our Order, when we suppose that the Dionysians were sent by Hiram, King of Tyre, to assist King Solomon in the construction of the house he was about to dedicate to Jehovah, and that they communicated to their Jewish fellow-laborers a knowledge of the advantages of their fraternity, and invited them to a participation in its mysteries and privileges."

And I have seen in a newspaper the following paragraph:

"Doctor A. G. Mackey, in his discourse on Freemasonry, at New Orleans, clearly shows that the symbolism of the Egyptian priests, the Brahmins, the Druids, and the Freemasons, are almost identical and from a common origin."

Now, there is no living man for whom I have more respect and regard than for Brother Mackey, and I am always ready to award to him the highest praise for his learned, laborious, and persevering efforts to place Freemasonry in the exalted position which it should of right occupy, and to acknowledge the vast obligations which the Craft owe to him for his industrious researches into the ancient arcana of our Order.

But it is my belief that even Dr. Macky can err, and that he has erred in some of his deductions from the premises from whence those deductions were drawn.

An old writer on Freemasonry (from whom I shall quote more fully directly) well remarks, that "a certain class of men, a little over anxious for the dignity of their Order, have represented it as coeval with the world; while others, influenced by an opposite motive, have maintained it to be the invention of English Jesuits, to promote the views of that intriguing and dangerous association. Some philosophers, among whom we may reckon the Chevelier Ramsay, have labored to prove that Freemasonry arose during the Crusades; that it was a secondary order of chivalry; that its forms originated from that warlike institution, and were adapted to the peaceful habits of scientific men. Mr. Clinch has attempted, with considerable ingenuity and learning, to deduce its origin from the institution of Pythagoras. M. Barruel supposes it to be a continuation of the society of Knights Templars; while others, with a degree of audacity and malice rarely to be found in the character of ingenious men, have imputed the origin of Freemasonry to secret associations averse to the interests of true government, and pursuing the villainous and chimerical project of leveling the distinctions of society, and freeing the human mind from the sacred obligations of religion and morality.

"Without adopting any of these untenable opinions, or attempting to discover the precise period when Freemasonry arose, it may be sufficient to establish its claim to an early origin, and to show that it has existed in different ages of the world under different forms and applications."

I have made this extract from a learned writer of years gone by, as a contrast to the arguments of Bro. Mackey, and to show you what uncertainty exists relative to the true period from which we should date the term of the beginning of Freemasonry. Why not say we can go back with no certainty anterior to the building of the temple, as we really can not, and from that event establish our point of departure. What advantage is there in claiming greater antiquity? That certainly is far enough back for any modern purpose.

(To be continued.)

Josiah Hayden Drummond,

Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge; Past Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter; M. Puissant Grand Master of the Grand Council R. and S. Masters; Past Senior Grand Warden of the Grand Commandery; Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence of all the above grand bodies in Maine, and Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council; Sovereign Grand Inspector General 33°, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite for the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States of America, was born August 20, 1827, at Winslow, Kennebec county, Maine, and was the son of Clark and Cynthia (Blackwell) Drummond. He commenced his education in the common schools, prepared for college at Vassalboro Academy (where at an early age he was assistant teacher in mathematics, his favorite study), entered Waterville College (now Colby University), in August, 1842, graduated in August, 1846, at the head of his class, and devoted some time to teaching.

He commenced the study of the law in 1848, and was admitted to the bar, October, 1850. On the 10th of December, of the same year, he married, and visited California, for a temporary purpose, in the first part of 1851.

In August, 1851, he commenced the practice of the law, at Waterville, Maine, and in 1860, removed to Portland, where he still resides, closely devoted to the pursuit of his profession.

In 1856 he was elected to the House of Representatives of his State; re-elected in 1857, and chosen the Speaker of the same. In 1859 he was elected to the Senate of Maine; during the session in 1860, the Attorney General died, and he was elected, almost spontaneously by the Legislature, to fill the vacancy; but he served through the session as Senator, and resigned at its close to accept the new office to which he had been elected. He was three times re-elected, once unanimously. At the close of his fourth term, finding political life incompatible with the practice of his profession, he withdrew from active participation in it.

Save attending two Masonic funerals, he knew nothing of Masonry until near the close of the year 1848, when a friend placed in his hand a Monitor, which he eagerly and carefully read, and was so much impressed with the principles of the society, that he at once made application for initiation. He was initiated January 1, 1849, passed January 8th, and raised on the 22d of the same month, in Waterville Lodge No. 33, Maine, of which he has ever since continued a member.

In the Grand Lodge, he was elected Deputy Grand Master in May, 1858, re-elected in 1859, elected Grand Master in 1860, and re-elected in 1861 and 1862.

In the Grand Chapter, he was elected R. A. Captain in 1860 and 1861, Grand C. of Host in 1864, Grand King in 1865, and Grand High Priest in 1866 and 1867.

In 1864 he was appointed Committee on Foreign Correspondence in the Grand Council, and chairman of a similar committee in the Grand Commandery. Before the session of the grand bodies in 1865, the lamented Cyril Pearl, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence in the Grand Chapter and Grand Lodge, died, and the subject of our sketch was appointed in his place, and prepared the reports of that year; since which time he has prepared all those reports, in all the grand bodies of Maine.

In May, 1862, he was invested with the degree of S. G. I. G., 33°, by the Supreme Council, having its Grand East at Boston, Mass. He was at the same session designated as Grand Commander, but declined to accept the position, and was thereupon elected Lieut. Grand Commander, which office he continued to hold by re-elections, until the union in May, 1867, of the Supreme Councils having their Grand Easts at Boston and New York respectively, when he was elected Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, Northern Jurisdiction of the United States of America, which exalted station he now fills.

As a Masonic writer and jurist, our illustrious brother has made his mark high up in the niche, as will be freely admitted by all those who have read his classical addresses as Grand Master, etc., as well as his elaborate and exhaustive reports on foreign correspondence.

Maine has good reason to be proud of him, and in his more extended sphere of usefulness as Grand Commander of the Supreme Council for the fifteen Northern States—the largest in the world—he will undoubtedly win additional laurels, if that be possible.—Keystone.

Blue Lodge Masonry.

Blue-lodge Masonry is an improper term for Symbolic Freemasonry, which consists of the three degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason, and is the pure Freemasonry that was developed from the system of Ancient Craft Masonry which existed prior to 1717—during that year the transition of the Fraternity took place from an operative and speculative character to a speculative alone, and then it was first termed Modern Freemasonry. The degrees of this body are the foundation and root of all the rites that exist in this country and Europe. Chapters, councils, commanderies, consistories, &c., are but branches of this noble tree; hence the tie of a Mason to his blue lodge should be more closely guarded than any link with which he may afterwards connect himself. Generally speaking, the members of the Fraternity understand this, but a few imagine that the higher degrees have the prior claim. This a mistake. True, many of the other degrees are very solemn and impressive—we readily admit their beauty, but we assert that our first allegiance is due to our mother lodge, or rather to the blue lodge to which we at the time belong.

The E. A. degree is the degree of Freemasonry; two hundred years ago the mass of the Fraternity were satisfied with the simple framework or skeleton of the present ritual of this degree; a few were passed to that of F. C., and the presiding officers alone knew the tradition as exemplified in the ceremonial of the M. M.'s degree. At the present time few neophites stop till they have been raised, and it is well that it is so, as a thorough acquaintance with these degrees unveils mysteries of the most interesting character, and teaches lessons of the greatest importance. These three degrees, we repeat, are inexpressibly beautiful and sublime; gradually leading the mind of the candidate from the dark, rough ways of the outer world, to the joys and happiness of the Masonic home. The profane gropes in darkness for that light which Freemasonry sheds upon her children; it is a divine light that illumines his path when abroad, and cheers his family at the evening fireside. Let us then cherish this pure and simple rite, taught two thousand years before the Christian era, and handed down to us through a chain of godly, moral, honorable men.

Blue-lodge Masonry inculcates first, faith—not only in the Supreme Being, but faith in the honor and unselfishness of man; faith in the victory of truth over falsehood, a faith in the justness of her cause; a faith in the probity of her principles; a faith in the final triumph of liberality and fraternity over her enemies, bigotry and ignorance.

Symbolic Masonry teaches secondly, the propriety of a well founded hope in the goodness of the Supreme Grand Master; she impresses upon the neophyte that by leading an upright, honorable life, by obeying the laws of God, and observing his duties towards his fellow-man, he may hope at the last day to be rewarded by a seat in the Grand Lodge above. This lesson is one of vast and deep interest to every brother, as all should strive to so live here, that when called away to that "undiscovered country from whence no traveler returns," they may hope to enjoy the reward of a well-spent life on earth.

Modern Freemasonry, in the third place, inculcates constantly upon the minds of her members the importance of charity—not only the cold formal charity of dollars and cents, but the fraternal charity of brotherly love, relief, and truth. Masonic charity throws her mantle over the backslidings of a brother, the errors of a friend, the vindictiveness of an enemy.

These are some of the few lessons taught in the first three degrees. Now, let us ask ourselves, are we as true to those three great principles as we should be? We think not. The mission of Masonry has not yet been half fulfilled. In this country our numbers are counted by hnndreds of thousands, but we fear our deeds of charity and brotherly love are hardly in proportion. Let us then put our shoulders to the wheel and yet more earnestly perform our duties to God and our fellow-man. There is much that we can daily and hourly accomplish, if we only are true to our obligations. Then, in the name of Freemasonry, we should urge our brethren to more practical labors; the day for theoretical charity has passed, and if we listen not to the cry of the widow and the orphan, the distress of an unfortunate brother, then we are false to our Fraternity.

In conclusion, we would remind our readers that the very badge of a Master Mason signifies purity. The lambskin is emblematic of the gentle, loving innocence of childhood, and is a type of the simplicity of truth; when edged with blue, it reminds us of that friendship that should ever unite brother to brother. This badge has been worn by many of the greatest men in America, and by the kings and princes of the old world. We are assured that it is an honorable badge; its unassuming plainness may be viewed as a characteristic feature of Modern Freemasonry. Our cause is a noble one, far more than the world gives us credit for; and we must not allow ourselves to forget the first great, strong tie that unites us to modern, or symbolic, or blue-lodge Masonry.—Keystone.

◆

Extract from an Address

Delivered before Dorchester Lodge No. 598, A. F., & A. M., by Rev. J. W. Lane.

The order of Free and Accepted Masons is an institution or society of men firmly bound together by their mystic ties in the relations of true brotherhood. The order is antiquated in age. Many of its lessons are taught and much of its instruction given to its members and initiates by the aid of symbolic characters, the true meaning of which are only known and appreciated by the members of the Craft themselves and the persons to whom they reveal them. Secrecy is enjoined upon all the members. This is our safeguard, or at least one of the protectives of our time honored Institution. May I not say that here our enemies have hurled their sharpest javelins, and urged their most serious objections to our Order?

Said one to me in Bunker Hill: "If your Masonic principles are good and true, and men are benefited by initiation into your lodges, then why not remove your barriers, hold open doors, and let all receive your benefits. If your principles are Christlike, then, like the blessed Master, say to all 'come,' and by partaking of your Masonic benefits and communion, be made better, and our communities be raised to a higher plane." But these very anti-masonic enthusiasts seem to forget that our great and good Master had protectives to his church, and every avenue leading to it guarded with the greatest vigilance, and even then the anthemas of the Master of ceremonies fall upon one of the guests because he had not on the wedding garment, he having gained a seat at the table in an improper manner; and for this desire to partake of the feast without due preparation was seized, bound hand and foot, and cast into outer darkness. Did not our great and grand Architect place the angelic Tyler with drawn sword at the gate of Eden to prevent the passage of spies and the unworthy? Did not our blessed Savior caution his primitive disciples to use great care in the distribution of costly pearls? By having our temples closed to all but Masons, and the gateway closely and secretly guarded, we protect ourselves from our enemies (who seek our overthrow), and also perpetuate our principles and practices from one generation to another without change, perversion, or corruption. It is also demonstrated to observing minds, that the pleasure and possessions obtained at slight expense or labor are soon parted with. So we, as Master workmen, are unwilling to bestow pains and labor upon any one unless such an one, by due diligence and study, show to the Craft their determination to advance in and become proficient in the work of Masonry; and that we be not deceived and bestow labor in vain, we must have our trial tests, and hence our secrecy. Would you find fault with your merchants for having their secret mark for their self protection? and yet these men rank among our noble benefactors.

* * * * * *

While a prisoner of war in the city of Atlanta, Georgia, your speaker had shown him many little kindnesses, for the officer in charge of the prison guard was a Mason, and in his bosom rested true Masonic benevolence. Often when jaded and hungry, and with health and appetite that refused our soldier fare, have I been the guest of southern hospitality, and the invitation was given and accepted because of Masonic influence.

I could record many instances, but these serve my present purpose. But I insist that the greater benefits of Masonry are found amid those deeply laid principles of virtue in the hearts, and exhibited in the lives of all true Masons. These benefits are numberless, while they are silently yet surely enjoyed by the Fraternity.

The history of Free and Accepted Masonry shows that great improvements have been made in Masonic society. Yet we are conscious that many defects may be pointed out in the lives and characters of Masons. The labor that will lessen and perfect in the lives of our brethren what may now be defective, is the labor to which the brethren of this new Lodge are now called.

I trust that the brethren of Dorchester Lodge No. 598 will not only prove to be worthy Free and Accepted Masons, but be also qualified by the Spirit of our God for a seat in that Temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

I will close my remarks by reciting an epilogue I have read with much interest:

◆

Shocking.

Not content with defiling the feelings of the late Grand High Priest of Iowa, the incorrigible and exacting Past Grand Master of that State—and a more disobedient, destructive fellow never lived—who does up the editorials of The Evergreen, thus assails the quiet and defenceless Grand High Priest, who is now wrightfully governing all the Royal Arch Masons in Iowa—said editor excepted:

Getting Acquainted with his Wife.—We have now in our mind's eye—and he fillls it well, for he "lives, moves, and has his being" in two hundred pounds, averdupois, of "too, too solid flesh"—we have in our mind's eye a companionable and much esteemed, a very capable and thoroughly in earnest Grand Chapter official, whose name it would not be Wright to mention in connection with the circumstance we are about to relate. We had in the discharge of our solemn duty as a chronicler of events, to tell the Craft awhile ago, how one Grand Chapter official was so far obfusticated by the blandishments of the Royal Craft in Du buque, as to confound the picture of Shiloh with that of Columbus, evincing at the same time a more intimate acquaintance with the history of the latter than with that of the former!

It is incumbent on us now to inform the same audience how his immediate successor proposed, under propitious surroundings, to become acquainted with his WIFE!

The subject; the male one we mean; the subject of our sketch, be it known, is a man of extensive correspondence, who has many business "irons" in the "fire" of affairs, none of which, under his almost ubiquitous supervision, are suffered to "burn." He is a banker, an express agent, dabbles in loans and collections, and withal, finds his account in suffering the "wear and tear" of conscience incident to the performance of the duties of a railway attorney on a railroad where smash-ups are not semi-occasional, and where actions for exemplary damages are generally nipped in the bud, by our friend, who must have kissed the "Blarney stone of New England," ere he came from the land of bass-wood hams, so shrewd is the tongue which he uses on such occasions. By the masses he is supposed to be committed, body, soul, and breeches, to the love of riches, the which do not elude his grasp as they do that of most of us. Those who know him intimately, are aware that he has, however, a large and susceptible heart, one which dictates and enforces the doing of noble actions, without regard to the cost thereof. So much by way of preface. Now for the "ower true tale." Some three years ago, when for our sins we were serving as Grand Master of Masons in Iowa, we had occasion, in the line of our official duties, to visit the place where our friend resides. Aware of our coming, he met us at the station, and, tucking us under his brawny arm, he escorted us to his business den, where the parties whom we came to see were in waiting. We had but three hours to stay, and as his residence was a mile away, he, knowing how to do a neat thing, tendered us a sumptuous repast at the leading hotel. After dinner, our business having been happily concluded, we remarked as we were discussing the dessert, that we desired to pay our respects to the long-suffering party whose millinery bills he was permitted to pay. Whereupon he said, "Come along," and we went, through the mud, to a cozy homestead, in what John Phœnix calls the "outsquirts" of the embryo city. Arrived, we were made welcome by the charming woman, who, by a singular concatenation of events, is yoked to this "off ox." While enjoying our visit, we observed that our friend grew more and more restless as the moments fleetly passed, and that he seemed to be as uneasy "as a fish out of water," for he was jumping up ever and anon, now running to the window, and now sitting down again with a long drawn sigh of unrest. Finally, in answer to his remark—that it was almost car time, we said, "Pitt, what's the matter with you? You don't seem at home here?" "That is so," spoke the grieved daughter of Eve, "I do not see half as much of him as do you Masons, for it is seldom indeed that daylight and he are here together. He leaves home very early, takes his dinners down town, and does not return until long after dark, as a rule." To which the atrocious business man responded: "I confess. But then, I am hurrying to get rich, and when I do, am going to take my wife on a trip East, and then I shall have a chance to get acquainted with her!"

Shocked, in view of the climax he had thus reached, we replaced our battered tile, and sadly went our way.

◆

Definitions.

The following definitions, taken from the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, are good law in this jurisdiction:

1.—Ample Form. The Grand Lodge is declared to be opened in ample form when the Grand Master presides.

2.—In Due Form, when the Deputy Grand Master presides. And—

3.—In Form, when it is opened in the absence of both the Grand Master and his Deputy.

5.—Suspension. The suspension of a brother excludes him from all his Masonic privileges, and prohibits all Masonic intercourse between him and his brethren during the time of his suspension.

6.—Expulsion. This is the highest penalty that can be incurred, and the severest punishment that can be inflicted, for any violation of Masonic engagements. It excludes a Mason from all his Masonic rights and privileges forever, unless he be restored by the grand lodge. It ought never to be exercised but with extreme caution, and in cases where a lighter punishment would be of no avail.

7.—Summons and Notification. These terms are used in the old regulations, and by many of the grand lodges in this country, synonymously. The Grand Lodge of Massachusetts makes the following distinctions:

A Notification is the notice by which the time, place, and hour (and frequently the business) of the lodge are communicated to the members. This notice every brother receiving it is expected to obey, unless his doing so would materially interfere with his business engagements.

A Summons is a call of authority; a citation to appear and answer to the charges therein set forth. Or, it is an imperative injunction to appear at a special meeting of the lodge with which the brother receiving it is affiliated; or to attend on the Grand Master, the District Deputy Grand Master, or any committee, or other body authorized by the grand lodge to issue it. The obligation to obey it is special and obligatory on every brother receiving it. The penalty for its non-observance is expulsion; unless the party offending be able to urge a pressing and positive necessity for his excuse.

8.—The Lodge. The term Lodge is generally understood to refer to the members of a particular Masonic association, or the place in which they meet. In a few of the States, it technically signifies the Ark of the Covenant, which is kept in the hall, and frequently carried in public processions. The Ark is not used in our lodges. The flooring, or Master's carpet, is frequently called the lodge.

9.—The Flooring, or Carpet, is a regularly arranged painting of the masonic emblems on canvas. No lodge should be without one.

10.—The Trestle-Board or Tracing-Board "is for the Master to draw his designs upon"; or it is the board on which the designs of the Master are already drawn. The term is frequently used synonymously with flooring and carpet.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY

H. G. REYNOLDS & SON.

One copy, one year..$1 25

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for The Trowel.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

Notice.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS, Editor.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., FEB. 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

Powers of Lodges U. D.

We do not intend to write an exhaustive article on this subject, but to consider two or three points.

The Grand Master, in vacation, and he only, can create a lodge U. D.; he designates the members as well as the principal officers, and does so on the recommendation of two or more chartered lodges. A lodge thus created does not have the power of reproduction; it can not create other lodges U. D. or add to itself by admitting members in any method. It may initiate, pass, and raise—for those are powers conferred on it at its formation—but its initiates are not of right members, and are such only by sufferance and policy, but for the good of the Craft they may well vote, because they are a part of the Masonic family, and in that every Mason has a direct and personal interest.

Lodges U. D. can not admit Master Masons by petition. This, to many who have been accustomed to different usages in other jurisdictions, may seem harsh. It is the misfortune of the Grand Lodge of Illinois that she is so much the junior of the Grand Lodges of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, and Missouri, when she ought to have been, practically, cotemporary with all of them. For long years, their jurisprudence, through the lodges they gave us, and the representative men they have sent us, controlled our decisions, and swayed us to and fro between dissimilar opinions. That time is past. Our jurisprudence, long sifted in the crucible of exposition and reason, has been made mainly to harmonize with our own laws, the ancient charges, landmarks, and constitutions, our rituals and lectures, and is as clearly and sharply defined as the radiant rainbow upon the cloud.

But for all things there ought to be a reason—that is, for all human opinions and decisions which affect any or all classes of men. Under our laws, and the laws of a majority of Grand Lodges, a lodge U. D. is composed of a certain number of brethren who petition the Grand Master for leave to meet at a certain place and at a certain time, where they may promote the genuine interest of Freemasonry. Before the Grand Master can grant them their desire, they must present their petition to two lodges—in some cases to three—and after one month's consideration, if deemed advisable, the petition is recommended. One of the important things considered by the recommending lodges, is the character of the petitioners. They, and they only, are vouched for to the Grand Master. Another thing into which the recommending lodges inquire is the character of the materials which are to build up the new lodge. The quality of the material, and the capacity of the petitioners to judge of its fitness, are inseparable considerations. To allow lodges U. D. to admit Master Masons to membership by petition, would be to admit persons not recommended by any lodge. This would be a different lodge from the one originally contemplated. Every lodge U. D. works in the name of the Grand Master. They are directly responsible to him, and under his absolute control. It therefore becomes his duty to see to it that the petitioners render to him, and in due time to the Grand Lodge, a good account of their stewardship, and as a reward for diligence, faithfulness, and capacity, a charter—the most majestic act of a Grand Lodge, and the most far-reaching in results—may be vouchsafed to the petitioners. If the petitioners prove to be indolent, unfaithful, or, what is worse, incapable, the recommending lodges should be held responsible, to the very letter, for all consequences.

A lodge U. D. can not try its own members. It does not follow, because certain brethren consent to assist in the formation of a new lodge, that they are to remain as members when a charter is obtained. The Grand Lodge of Illinois discourages non-affiliation, and does not permit the members of its subordinate lodges to become non-affiliated where it can be prevented. Hence, brethren of one or more lodges may unite to form a lodge at a favorable locality, a portion of whom join in a petition for a charter, with such as may have been advanced to the third degree, while the others may prefer to remain in the lodge to which they belong. For these reasons, demits are unnecessary. When the petition is preferred to the Grand Lodge for a charter, every lodge interested may appear and make objections to the applicants or any of them, to the work of the lodge, or to aught else that may seem to be advisable. The charter being granted in the presence of the represented lodges, is itself a demit to every member of a lodge in Illinois named therein. Therefore, setting aside all other reasons, no lodge so situated could try its members. Nor is it in the nature of a body, created for temporary purposes, and instituted for the purpose of testing the capacity, fidelity, and discretion of its members, to be entrusted with trials involving reputation, and requiring experience and legal ability. None but bodies invested with a charter and permanent existence, should undertake business requiring experience and conscious power.

A lodge U. D. has no jurisdiction as against a chartered lodge. While a lodge U. D. will be restricted to such jurisdiction as it would have, if chartered, its uncertain tenure creates no bar to the jurisdiction of a chartered lodge, which is not bound to take legal notice of the existence of a lodge U. D. until acted upon by the Grand Lodge.

The points set forth in italics in this article have all of them been settled law in this jurisdiction for fifteen years or more.

Reuben Cleveland.

Cleveland Lodge No. 211, in Chicago, was named for Bro. Reuben Cleveland, its first Master. Rising to colossal proportions, it found itself in the finest lodge-room in the State, but in Sept. 1859, the fire king reduced it to common dust. Humiliated and saddened, but trustful and reliant, the brethren sought a temporary home, and for many years, have shown the highest number of resident members of any lodge in the State. Egan, Huntley, Gibson, Cutler, and Gurney have graced the East, but last year the brethren called the veteran to preside once more. And when the noble sailor Atkins was recently called to the East, Bro. Cleveland was made the recipient of presents valued at $500. Brother John Whitley devised, and Bro. Gurney, in his happiest vein, made the presentation. All honor to the lodge and to the recipient.

Presenting and Referring Petitions.

The 37th section Grand Lodge by-laws provides that no petition for membership or initiation shall be returned until balloted for. The return at all is in cases of rejection. If the ballot is clear, the petition remains on file. Reference follows presentation; without presentation there is no reference; in case of the latter, both are indispensable. But, to our mind, reference is not bound to follow presentation; for good reasons, a petition may lie over, before being referred, or, after having laid over for a time, may not be referred at all.

But, it is an unpleasant duty to suggest such a course, although much trouble and exposure might be avoided by doing so.

We presume that some by-laws require the reference of a petition when received; if so, all intermediate opportunity to avoid unpleasant results is cut off, and reference, report, and ballot follow, and if a candidate must be rejected, then comes exposure, publication, heart-burnings, and discontent.

What ought to be done? Masonry owes nothing to the world. Her principles are immutable and eternal. She is uninfluenced by few or many. But her influence upon the world—upon human destiny and character, are greatly retarded, warped, and injured by the transactions of her initiates.

The first thing to learn in regard to candidates is, that none are to be solicited, or even directly encouraged, to apply; second, that all the members of a lodge stand on equal terms, and that none are to be admitted to the grief of any brother; next, that no brother is bound to give reasons why he is unwilling to admit a candidate, nor is any one at liberty to ask or seek for them.

On the other hand, a good man should not be rejected, for if Masonry numbered every good man in her fold, there could be no possible objection; but while hundreds of good men may be admitted, and Masonry move along undisturbed, a bad man is sure in some way to mar her harmony. A good man loses nothing by proper and conservative delays, but a bad man may gain, and Masonry lose, by haste. If American Masons would put each of the three symbolic degrees at $25 or more each, and place twelve months between degrees, good men would not complain, and Masonry would be immensely stronger, and immeasurably safer.

For the present, we seriously advise the lodges to amend their by-laws so that applications for admission or for any of the degrees, shall lie on the table four weeks before being referred, and then, if referred, shall not be reported in less than the same length of time.

Very many applicants are elected who would be rejected were it not for charitable feelings toward friends, an unwillingness to mark an applicant or create unpleasant feeling. If such by-laws were adopted, any brother could say to the W. M., under the seal of sacred confidence, that he would rather that petition should be withdrawn. Not having been referred, the petition could be quietly withheld, and the candidate and his friends could be spared the pain and odium of a rejection, and its subsequent publicity, and the applicant would go as good as he came.

The Grand Secretary.

As our Illinois readers are all aware, the distinguished Craftsman who now fills the position of Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge, Hon. O. H. Miner, was lately the Auditor of Public Accounts, and one of the constitutional advisers in the State administration of Governor Oglesby. How well he discharged his duty, his associates, the assessors, collectors, treasurers, and county clerks, with the Board of Equalization and public men generally, can testify.

At the time of his election as Grand Secretary, the Board of Equalization, of which he was President, was in session, and his vast and complicated duties of Auditor were rapidly approaching their termination, and required his constant and anxious attention. Up to the time he practically left the Auditor's office, we had charge of the office of Grand Secretary mainly, and, saving the matter of correspondence, discharged the duties in our usual way.

At the time stated (January 15), he entered upon the full discharge of the duties of the office, and has already acquired the necessary knowledge to manage, with accuracy and celerity, all the general business details.

Some matters can be fully learned only by practical experience, but no one can master them more successfully than he.

The gain that the Grand Lodge has made in Bro. Miner over ourself, is in the matter of finances. His knowledge of accounts, and thorough acquaintance with monetary affairs, make him a valuable accession. We think we can say that, as Grand Secretary, we are very seldom at fault in anything; we are nearly always confident. In money matters—especially for the last five years—we have been afraid and uncertain. This we know now, that the balance is largely in our favor—probably from one to two thousand dollars.

In these matters Bro. Miner will never be in fault. His accounts will stand the test either way, or in any department, to a cent.

He will be found to be a clever journalist, a genial correspondent, and accurate and sound in Masonic matters. We bespeak for him, as our successor, unlimited confidence, and perfect freedom in consultation and correspondence.

He was born in Wells, Vermont, came with his people when a small child to Ohio, where he was educated and bred to the trade of a watch-repairer. He received the symbolic degrees at the hands of Past Grand Master Thrall, in Columbus Lodge No. 20, in February and March, 1849, the chapter degrees in Lancaster Chapter No. 11, at the hands of P. G. H. Priest Gates, the council degrees at the hands of Past Grand Master Kreider, at Lancaster, Ohio, in the fall of the same year, orders of knighthood in this city, and the degrees of the Scottish Rite in Chicago.

It has been his fortune to be always in harness. As S. D. and S. W. in Central Lodge, eight years Master in Tyrian, Principal Sojourner, Captain of the Host, King, and High Priest of Springfield Chapter, Captain General of Elwood Commandery, and Master of Van Rensselaer Council Scottish Rite, he has seen constant and laborious service. The same is true of him in Ohio, Indiana, and Central America.

Commencing with Principal Sojourner, he passed through every station to Grand High Priest, and was elevated to the position of Grand Puissant by succession gradations.

He is now Sovereign Commander of the Scottish Rite, Generalissimo of Elwood Commandery, Treasurer of Tyrian Lodge and Springfield Council, and General Grand Royal Arch Captain of the G. G. Chapter U. S. A.

Twelve Calendar Months.

The thirty-eighth section of the Grand Lodge by-laws positively instructs subordinate lodges not to initiate any candidate who has not resided in the State of Illinois twelve calendar months before such application is made.

The applicant for initiation must have resided in this State twelve months, or one full year, continuously, before making his application, meaning the time that the petition is presented to the lodge. In ordinary acceptation, all this is very plain.

Some matters of usage arise, however, which it may be well to consider and settle.

A single man, reared and educated, say in Sangamon county, goes to Iowa and keeps school a few months, thence to the mines for a time; travels for business houses, or as a correspondent, or in any other way, but gains no residence; his residence all the while is constructively in Illinois; but if he gains citizenship elsewhere he loses his residence in Illinois.

A man of family leaves his wife, if he has no children; or, if his wife be dead, divorced or separated from him, then his children, if dependent on him, in Illinois, while he may be absent years for any cause or several; the domicile of the wife or family determines his residence, and he will be considered in law a resident of Illinois.

The twelve-months law does not apply to applicants for affiliation or for the second or third degree.

What shall be Done?

A candidate is elected for initiation; a brother not present at his election, objects. Should the objection be made in open lodge or in private; and what is to be done with the money?

Resolution No. 16 is as follows:

Resolved, That the lodge has no right to interfere with the right of private ballot; and that, if a member of a lodge objects to conferring a degree upon a petitioner, even after the ballot is passed and found fair, and does not disclose the reasons therefor, he stands in the same position as if he had cast a black-ball, and his reasons can not be demanded by his lodge, nor should the degree be conferred until the objection be removed.

In answer to the question, the objector may make the objection to the Master, or to the lodge. The former is the preferable way, for the Master is bound to keep his secret and stay the candidate. If the objection is made in open lodge, curiosity, or perhaps something worse, is aroused, and such as do not know the law of this jurisdiction may desire to know or demand to know the reasons. A timid or hesitating master inevitably wavers in the face of a clamor, and in cases where objection is made in open lodge, and unless the objector be a cool and self-possessed brother, or the Master firm and able to enforce the law, confusion is apt to follow an objection in open lodge. There is much to be said upon this topic which is not germain to the question. As we have said in some other place, the money is to be retained only so long as may be necessary to determine whether the objection is likely to remain, when it should be returned, and the candidate be declared rejected, and the usual notices follow.

When may a Demit be Granted.

The Ancient Constitutions say that no Mason should live in the vicinity of a lodge without becoming a member thereof, and that every Mason should be a member of a lodge.

No application should be entertained for a demit while the applicant is in bad or doubtful standing, or not clear on the books. If in good standing and clear on the books, he may be lawfully demitted if he is a resident of another grand jurisdiction, or if he wishes to join a lodge nearer or more convenient to his place of residence. The Grand Lodge has also provided that where a brother's peace in his family or his church can be preserved in no other way, that he, too, may demit. We hope there are few such. We do not believe in sacrificing any good principle to gratify any clamor, whim, or caprice.

Craftsmen's Life Assurance Co., N. Y.

Bro. A. W. Mitchell, of Naples, sends us the circular of E. L. Chapman and Short, managers of the above company for Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa, with the remark that he had written the agents that he would give the concern his hearty opposition now and forever. We have had some bitter and costly experience in insurance matters, and that too, in the house of our friends. In regard to the company mentioned in this article, it is composed of good men, and no company can start or progress in New York and be extensively unsafe.

And we hope that the Illinois Legislature will act wisely, provide for ample security, and avoid class legislation. Let every company stand upon its own capital and character. The idea of running any company as a Masonic, Odd Fellows, or church organization, is wrong in principle, and should be discountenanced.

Grand Lodge Proceedings.

One short copy has been sent to each lodge, and full copies, embracing report on correspondence, and other important matters, will soon be forwarded to each lodge which has returned its list of officers elect as required by law, in such proportions as they may be entitled to receive. Upwards of eighty lodges are in arrears, a large proportion of which are new lodges.

Chapter Notices of Rejections.

The Grand Chapter of Illinois, at its last session, decided that when the petition of a candidate for the chapter degrees was rejected, all chapters within twenty-five miles, and the Grand Secretary of the Grand Chapter, must be notified of said rejection. We have for sale blanks for notices of rejections for chapter use. Price, $1.50 per 100, sent by mail, postage prepaid.

Delay in Issuing The Trowel.

This number of The Trowel would have been issued to our subscribers in due time, but by circumstances beyond our control we were prevented from receiving the necessary paper in time, and we did not receive notice of the delay until it was too late to purchase elsewhere.

Destructive Fire.

Our brethren of the Masonic Publishing and Manufacturing Company (late Macoy & Sickels, lost about $3.000, which we presume is covered by insurance, barring the losses by delay, etc.

The great loss is in the destruction of correspondence, archives, and matters of business with important clothing, and many valuable relics, articles of vertu, and priceless private gems, which can not be replaced. The records were saved, but they could have been supplied again, and are all that could be.

This reminds us that the Scotch Rite should have a local habitation and a safe repository. There is wealth enough to this end. If the two bodies North and South could be united, as they should be, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Springfield, or Indianapolis, would be convenient centres. If we are to remain separate, then we name Cleveland, Ohio.

Ancient and Accepted Rite.

A convention of the Ancient and Accepted Rite, under the direction of Occidental Sovereign Consistory, and the appendant orders, for the purpose of conferring degrees, will be held at Masonic Temple, in the city of Chicago, commencing on Wednesday, the 17th day of February.

The order of conferring degrees will be as follows, viz:

VanRensselaer Grand Lodge of Perfection, G. R. Smith, T. P. G. M.—Wednesday, 4 to 14 degrees; 9 A. M., 2 P. M., and 7.30 P. M. Illinois Council, Pr. J., W. H. Gale, S. P. G. M.—Thursday, 15 and 16 degrees; 2 P. M. Gourgas Chapter, Rose Croix, E. B. Stevens, M. W. & P. M.—Thursday, 17 and 18 degrees; 7.30 P. M. Occidental Sovereign Consistory, V. L. Hurlburt, Commander in Chief—Friday, 19 to 32 degrees; 2 P. M.

Ill. K. H. Van Rensselaer has signified his intention to be present and assist in the work.

Applicants for the degrees will consult either of the above, or the Grand Secretary, James H. Miles, P. O. Drawer, 5862.

The Architectural Review,

AND AMERICAN BUILDERS' JOURNAL, edited by Samuel Sloan, Architect, is published at 819 and 821 Market street, Philadelphia, at $6 per annum. The trade in the West can be supplied by A. J. Bicknell & Co, Springfield, Ill., by whose politeness we are favored with the February number. The art of building is a leading idea in operative Masonry, and all that teaches and explains, that gives new improvements and important facilities, should be supported and studied. Among our thousands of intelligent readers, self-interest will dictate the necessity of being squarely up to the movements of the hour, but those who stand on the journeyman list may not feel able to take a costly work. They are the men who should take this journal, and two, three, or more should club to that end.

The National Free Mason.

In the December TROWEL we alluded to the present status of The National Free Mason, and supposed it to be under the control of the Masonic Publishing and Manufacturing Company, whereof our respected brethren, Simons, Macoy, and Sickels are members. We were the more easily led into this error, because we knew that he editorial rooms were formerly in their building. It seems, however, that the paper is published at 658 Broadway, corner of Bond, by the National Publishing Company, of which we have no knowledge whatever.

Beauseant Commandery.

The Quincy Herald comes to us with an imposing account of the ceremonies of installation of the new officers of Beauseant Commandery, at Quincy, by Sir John Marshall, Commander at Galesburg, assisted by Sir Charles W. Mead, Superintendent of the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad.

A large array of beautiful and elegantly dressed ladies was present, and the services were all in order and perfect. Sir A. W. Blakesly still commands. Sir George A. Dills heads the forces. Who the other officers are, we have not learned. Supper followed, with toasts, short speeches, and much wit.

We give the following toast:

"Symbolic Masonry.—The parent trunk, whereof all other orders are but branches. If the trunk be neglected, the branches must wither and decay."

Cambridge Lodge No. 49.

Whatever concerns this Lodge at Cambridge, Henry county, concerns us. We were its first Junior Deacon and its second Master. At a recent installation, Bro. W. H. Shepard delivered an elegant, scholarly, and courteous address to a numerous audience of ladies and gentlemen, which was well received.

Some friend sends us a speech made by a Mr. J. D. Baker, in which falsehood, perversion, malevolence, and mis-statements are the essential elements, and that, too, under the cloak of Christian truth and honor. What a contrast it presents to the manly and charitable utterances of Bro. Shepard. Let the two go side by side, and Masonry will be the winner.

Dedication.

We have been waiting for a communication in relation to the dedication of the new hall at Elgin. We have received none. So, out of such materials as we have, we will say our say.

The Fraternity at Elgin have Elgin Lodge No. 117, Monitor Lodge No. 522, and Loyal L. Munn Chapter. We are not informed whether the new hall (pronounced by Past Grand Master Gorin to equal any hall outside of Chicago) is occupied by the three bodies jointly or by Monitor Lodge alone, but we do know that the latter lodge has expended over $3,000 in fitting it up.

Our M. W. Bro. Gorin dedicated the hall Jan. 1, assisted by Bro. Paul F. Jones, of Decatur, for which he has our thanks. Monitor Lodge already has 53 members, and the other bodies are in a prosperous condition.

The American Builder,

AND JOURNAL OF ART, published by Lakey & Adams, Chicago, monthly, is supplied to the trade at $3.00 per annum, by A. J. Bicknell & Co., Springfield, Ill., who have politely placed the February number on our table. Important matters are advertised in it, and interesting themes carefully discussed. Every architect, superintendent, employer, master, and journeyman will be greatly improved by it, and every journeyman, striving for a mastership, should not only read, but study it thoroughly. The Chicago Tunnel; Falling Buildings—the remedy; Ventilation of Sewers; Tumble-down Buildings; and the Ethics of Architecture; are among the leading articles. Our brother, G. P. Randall, is a contributor.

Grand Chapter Proceedings,

Embracing transactions, Constitution of the General Grand Chapter, Constitution, By-Laws, and Standing Resolutions of Grand Chapter, returns of Chapters, forms, and transactions of the Grand Council of High Priests, will be ready for mail as soon as the covers can be prepared, and will be sent to each chapter which has returned its list of officers; nearly fifty chapters are delinquent, mostly new ones.

Mail Depredations.

A letter from Hancock county, and another from Richland county, say that there are complaints of intermeddling with the mails. Let those sending money from those sections of the State send by P. O. orders, registry, or express. P. O. orders are troublesome and safe; registry is troublesome to the sender, and not safe; express is costly, but almost absolutely certain.

Gen. John Cook.

The editor of the St. Louis Freemason criticises what we said about the part taken by Gen. Cook, in relation to the accident in the memorable excursion, and states what was done on the Mississippi. We have no doubt that all the editor says was true; what we said of Gen. Cook applies to the Lady Gay only, of which we were an eye-witness.

Assassination.

Gen. Murray McConnell, an old citizen of Jacksonville, and a resident of this State from its organization, who has held many responsible positions, and was a noted and able lawyer, at the age of seventy years, was brutally murdered in his office attached to his mansion on Monday morning, February 8, at about 9 o'clock. He was in good health, and was seen handling his papers as usual, not ten minutes before the murder was discovered.

Sovereignty.

The rights, powers, privileges, restrictions, and liabilities of grand and subordinate lodges, and of individual Masons, about which so much controversy now exists, can, we think, be clearly settled by a careful consideration of grand lodge sovereignty.

We intend to prepare an article, which may appear in two or more numbers of THE TROWEL, commencing with the next number.

Nor this Time, Neither.

So many old subscribers whose time expired in December have renewed their subscriptions, that we are encouraged to send the February number to such as are in the same condition, hoping that every one will renew by the time of our March issue, when such as shall not have renewed will be stricken from our list.

One-Idealsm—No-Idealsm.

The editor of the St. Louis Freemason is evidently hit by our item in regard to his "one idealsm." He thinks he has trapped us. He had better look and see if we are there. He had better not get on the wrong scent.

◆

WE are requested by "Tyrian" to say that, owing to important duties in another part of the State, it will be impossible for him to present his article on the Mark degree this month.

Tidings.

Items.

R. W. Bro. Rodney Ashley has visited Fairbury and has lectured at Dwight. Grand Inspector Burr is lecturing at Mattoon.

The Ohio State Fair will be held at Toledo, Sept. 13th to 17th.

Grand Inspector Prickett has put the brethren at Patoka in condition to apply for a dispensation; from thence he went to Vandalia, and will go from there to Hillsboro.

Our brethren at New Boston had a gala time at their installation. Bro. Warner presented the faithful Secretary with an elegant Elgin silver watch, and then, under the glad inspiration of the hour, ample justice was done by the brethren and their female friends to a full-grown supper.

R. W. Bro. John Bennett has been called again to the Oriental chair of his lodge, Clinton No. 19, at Petersburg. "On time" is a portion of his system, and the first meeting after his installation was on the evening of January 23, when the lodge was congregated precisely at the minute, with the compliment of a "full room."

In our notice of Palatine Chapter, on page 2, January TROWEL, the number was wrongfully printed 177. It should have been 117.

Comp. Gouley, Grand Secretary of Missouri, has our thanks for copies of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge, Chapter, Council, and Commandery, of Missouri.

Cuba has 30,000 foreign whites, 730,000 natives of foreign extraction, and 1,000,000 negroes and Chinese.

There are 1,000,000 paupers in England and Wales.

About 12,000 persons in Russia are exiled every year to Siberia. The latter country ought to be populous soon.

The annual trade in rabbits in the north of France is estimated at $240,000.

The stipulated boundaries of the new Territory of Wyoming embrace area of about 107,000 square miles, or 67,480,000 acres. The Pacific railroad will pass over 480 miles of its territory.

Michigan has a cash balance of over $1,000,000 in her treasury.

A Swedish nobleman has a copper mine for which he has refused $70,000,000.

The rod of the Prophet brought forth sweet water from the rock at Horeb; afflictions, sanctified by Deity, soften the heart to the flow of the gentler affections.

Pomeroy's railroad bill in Congress grants a subsidy of $2,400,000, and a grant of 1,924,000 acres, to extend the Central Branch of the Union Pacific R. R. from Waterville, Kansas, to its junction with the main line, with the privilege of issuing first-mortgage bonds. We hope it will pass.

John Bright entered Parliament twenty-five years ago.

The January interest of the national government amounts to more than $3,000,000, to be paid in gold.

It is announced that His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, recently received the degrees of Freemasonry at Stockholm, Sweden.

Queen Victoria is the only British sovereign who ever saw Switzerland.

The colored population exceeds the white in South Carolina and Mississippi.

Freemasonry has gained a foothold in Austria. Don't tell it to the "dog's tail."

If you dislike a person, never speak of him.

A bride's best dowry is mildness in her countenance, wisdom in speech, modesty in behavior, and virtues in her life.

If you would not be forgotten, show kindness, love, and mercy.

A shabby coat is no excuse for shabby morals.

Salt Lake City has a population of 25,000.

The City Council of Louisville gave the poor of the city 16,000 bushels of coal on Christmas day.

The Masonic Record for January is at hand, and full of interesting matter. We sincerely hope that Bro. Frizzell will make it a success.

May 12, 1860, Western Star Lodge, at Nebraska City, Nebraska, lost its building and property, excepting its altar and jewels; with energy and patience, it now has a building worth $7,000, a lodge-room well furnished, and an annual rental income of $1,300.

Joseph Metcalfe, aged ninety-four years, said to be the oldest Mason in the United States, died in Erie, Penn., a few weeks since.

W. Bro. Simon Quinlan, W. M. of Blair Lodge 393, Chicago, is the recipient of a Past Master's gold jewel. Worthily bestowed, too.

R. W. Bro. Wade has lectured the brethren at Mound Station, Brown county, and has had several other calls.

R. W. Bro. Stevens has installed the officers of Knoxville Lodge No. 66, Pacific 400, Yates City 440, Altona 330, and Sherman 535. He lectured the latter lodge, in which a bright, progressive Master was elected, by dispensation, from the floor.

GOOD.—R. W. Bro. Adam Brewer, of Knoxville, Past J. G. Warden, and now considerably over seventy years old, was presented with a gold headed cane by Pacific Lodge, at his recent installation as Master.

E. Comp. S. Stevens has installed the officers of the Chapters at Canton, Yates City, and Knoxville. The latter Chapter presented him a purse of $20 on New Year's Day.

In St. Johnsbury, Vermont, 475 hands are employed in making Fairbanks' scales, the sales of which last year amounted to $1,500,000.

The wheat crop of Oregon last year will yield 1,000,000 barrels of flour.

The rate for registered letters is 15 cents.

Omnipotence regards the smallest things.

If you want law suits, leave to memory what should be written.

Do not be in such hurry in the morning, that night finds you uncertain what to do.

The great see the world through the glass of flattery; others through that of neglect; meanness is the essential element in both.

"Catskill mountains!" said Sambo; "sho', they only kill mice."

R. W. Bro. John D. Caldwell, Grand Secretary and Recorder of the national and Ohio Masonic bodies, has laid us under obligations for copies of the proceedings of the Grand Encampment and General Grand Chapter U. S., and of the Grand Lodge, Chapter, Council, and Commandery of Ohio.

New Jersey.—The Grand Lodge met at Trenton, January 20. Eighty lodges were represented. Henry R. Cannon was elected Grand Master; Robert Husling, Deputy; William E. Pine, Senior Grand Warden; Aaron R. Throckmorton, Junior Grand Warden; Wm. R. Clapp, Grand Treasurer; Joseph H. Hough, Grand Secretary.

St. John's Commandery No. 4, K. T., Philadelphia, will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary June 1st, 1869.

The California proceedings are at hand. Charles Marsh, of Nevada, is Grand Master, and A. G. Abell, of San Francisco, Grand Secretary. Twelve lodges in San Francisco return 1,811 members; whole number reported in the State, 8,106; number initiated, 817.

Eight thousand sheep, valued at $25,000, perished in one snow storm recently, in France.

There are upwards of 700,000 cats in Paris.

In New Haven, Conn., 500 buildings were erected last year, at a cost of $3,000,000.

Massachusetts has one mile of railway to every six square miles; Connecticut, one to seven; Rhode Island, one to eleven; New Hampshire, one to fourteen; Vermont, one to seventeen; and Maine, one to sixty-two.

R. W. Bro. Rodney Ashley, Grand Lecturer, recently spent several days at Dwight, and has placed the lodge there in good working order. An application will soon be made for a dispensation for a new chapter at that thriving point.

The American people earn $7,500,000,000 annually.

Forty thousand Gipsies, in Germany, refuse to live in houses.

The London postoffice delivers, on an average, 730,000 letters per week.

In London, 527 trains pass each other daily at the Canon street station.

Grand Lodge of Maryland.—This Grand Lodge has an annual and semi-annual communication, besides several Stewards' Grand Lodges. The Stewards' Grand Lodge receives complaints against Masters and lodges, acts upon them, and expels or closes until the meeting of the Grand Lodge. The annual communication was held at Baltimore, Nov. 16. John Coates was elected Grand Master, and Jacob H. Medairy, No. 6 North Howard street, Baltimore, Grand Secretary.

We are indebted to some one—whom, we do not know—for several copies of a pamphlet entitled "Minnesota: its advantages to settlers." Published by act of the Legislature. In 1865, the population was 250,000; it is now 460,000. The laws exempt from execution a farm of eighty acres and a house and lot, without regard to value, and a large amount of personal property.

Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.—This ancient Grand Lodge has quarterly communications in March, June, and September; an annual one in the first part of December, at which time the elections are held, and a stated one after St. John's Day, when the officers are installed. The distinguished and talented Grand Master of Templars, Hon. William S. Gardner, presides over the Grand Lodge, and Solon Thornton is Grand Secretary. We give a table of definitions in another place.

Grand Lodge West Virginia.—The fourth annual communication was held at Wheeling, Nov. 10. Twenty-four lodges were represented. Charters granted by the Grand Lodge of Virginia are to be returned, and commissioners were appointed to adjust all differences between the two grand lodges. Wm. J. Bates, G. M.; T. H. Logan, Grand Secretary; both of Wheeling.

◆

THE AMERICAN ENTOMOLOGIST should be in the hands of fruit growers, gardeners, or horticulturists. Published at St. Louis, by R. P. Studley & Co., 104 Olive St., at $1 per annum.

Impostors.

GRAND LODGE OF MASSACHUSETTS,
G. SECRETARY'S OFFICE, BOSTON, Dec. 17, 1868.

A person calling himself JOHN ELY, alias Dr. HUNTER, alias Dr. GEORGE LEVI, but whose real name is GEORGE LEVISON, has been imposing upon the charities of the Masonic Fraternity for some months past. He represents himself as being Past Master of a lodge in Charleston, S. C., which city he left on the day the bombardment of "Sumter" was commenced, enlisting as a private in the Seventh U. S. Infantry; as having been taken prisoner, and afterwards released by Gen. Lee. Sometimes he claims to be a physician, at others a Methodist minister. By his ready answers to all questions, he has succeeded in victimizing the Fraternity in this city and vicinity to a considerable extent.

All his statements are false, as we have evidence that at the time he says he was a soldier in the U. S. Army, he was serving out a three years' sentence in the Trenton, N. J., State Prison, for bigamy.

This LEVISON is a man of genteel appearance, about 55 years of age, five feet nine or ten inches in height, mixed grey hair, and a capital talker, calculated to excite the sympathies of all with whom he may come in contact.

SOLON THORNTON,
Grand Secretary.

—

GRAND LODGE OF MASSACHUSETTS,
OFFICE OF G. SECRETARY, BOSTON, Jan. 30, 1869.

H. G. Reynolds, Springfield:

DEAR SIR AND BRO.: — Information has been received at this office, that a person calling himself HENRY L. ABBOTT has been soliciting pecuniary aid from a lodge in Waukegan; claims to be a Mason, and that he received the degrees in Mt. Tabor Lodge, East Boston.

No such person has ever received the degrees in that lodge. Mr. ABBOTT is an impostor.

Fraternally,
SOLON THORNTON,
G. Sec.

—

CONNECTICUT ROCK LODGE No. 92,
NEW HAVEN, Nov. 23, 1868.

Doubts have arisen in the minds of some members of this lodge, whether a certain ROBERT STROINSKY, hailing from the lodge of the Three Crowns, in Breslau, Prussia, is a Mason in good standing. The undersigned was ordered by the lodge to make due inquiry about the same. Having corresponded with lodges in Breslau, we found that no lodge exists there with that name, nor has a ROBERT STROINSKY been made a Mason in any of the three other lodges in Breslau.

He is a man about thirty years old, of small size, black hair, black eyes, dark but fair complexion. and speaks English fluently; pretends, also, to be a physician and wonder-doctor; shows certificates that he has brought even the dead to life again. He also pretends to have served in the war, in Gen. Hurlbut's brigade, as Surgeon, and lived some time in Providence, R. I., where he says he married. Sometimes he is a fresco-painter, but generally gets his living by sponging on lodges and unsuspecting generous brother Masons. He has been arrested here for obtaining goods from apothecaries, to a large amount, under false pretenses.

All lodges and brethren are notified to look out for this accomplished impostor and swindler.

CHARLES RUICKOLDT,
Secretary.

—

A very plausible mendicant, calling himself BOULTON PARSONS, made his appearance in Belleville, on the 8th January last, and remained three days, seeking aid from Masons. Said he was a member of Owen Lodge No. 128, Owentown, Ky.; that he had been in Missouri, and was on his way to his daughter, living near Greencastle, Ind. Was an elderly man, walking feebly with two canes; was rather dirty, but did not seem to be dissipated. Well calculated to deceive, and did deceive several brethren here and in East St. Louis, who contributed liberally to his aid. Suspecting him to be an impostor, inquiries were set on foot, and it is now learned that Temple Lodge No 47, at Greencastle, Ind., know no such man in that neighborhood; further, I have now before me a letter from Bro. A. H. Nunemacher, Secretary of the General Relief Committee, at New Albany, Ind., dated May 11, 1868, stating that a few weeks previous they had relieved this same BOULTON PARSONS, who told the same story, word for word, that he afterwards repeated in Belleville. Bro. N. also states that Owen Lodge No. 128 disclaims all knowledge of any such member; so that he is undoubtedly an impostor of the deepest dye.

A. B. RUSSELL,
St. Clair Lodge No. 24, Belleville, Ill.

—

HALL OF BATAVIA LODGE No. 404,
BATAVIA, January 16, 1869.

Brethren of Subordinate Lodges:

There has been stopping in this place some time, a man by the name of P. F. HALL, representing himself as hailing from King Solomon Lodge, Troy, New York. He is imposing on the Fraternity by misrepresentation, getting in debt, borrowing money, and living on the Fraternity from place to place, and will not try to help himself. He is a good mechanic, and has good health. He should not be allowed to visit lodges to get acquainted with members of the Fraternity to help him in his impositions.

Take due notice thereof, and govern yourselves accordingly.

Fraternally yours,
CHAS. C. STEPHENS,
Secretary.

Expulsion.

By Warren Lodge No. 14, at Shawneetown, JOHN D. NEEL was unanimously expelled, February 2d, for abandoning his family, swindling, and other unmasonic conduct. He is about 39 years of age, 5 feet 8 inches high, slim built, light hair, and weighs about 120 lbs. A druggist by profession.

JAMES H. HART,
Secretary.

Masters and Wardens as Returned to Feb. 6, and not yet Reported.

Nos. W. Masters. S. Wardens. J Wardens.
35...Wm. E. Ginther, H. S. Parcels, Jos. E. Curd.
38...W. I. Reynolds, R. McCormack, J. B. Mann.
40...Geo. J. Burgess, Robert Henning, Gilbert Goff.
53...H. L. Martin, Jas. T. Weakley, A. R. Lanney.
55...G. S. Anderson, F. W. Maxwell, Martin L. Palmer.
61...Michael Rogers, Joseph Cooke, Theron H. Rose.
67...Chas. J. Miller, F. G. Crane, Darius B. Gates.
68...James F. Crawford, A. A. Mitchell, A. W. Gould.
76...Thaddeus Philips, F. A. Stewart, Royal Hayes.
80...F. H. Clark, S. D. Ohapin, W. P. Worcester.
84...L. H. Cope, Jos. Treadenstein, R. M. Ewing.
85...E. B. Rushing, T. S. Rushing, Herman Stanton.
92...P. A. Sweeney, Thos. H. Small, Wm. Leach.
99...John Hobson, C. E. Clark, Alonzo Kellar.
102...E. H. Baker, R. F. Crawford, John S. Johnston.
107...J. W. Teaney, John Hogan, John Bates.
112...J. H. Fawcett, M. G. Loverin, N. A. Bacon.
117...A. L. Clark, C. E. Mason, Jos. Hemenway.
119...James G. Hull, H. M. Sampson, P. W. Wikoff.
136...Robt. W. Truett, J. H. Rackerby, T. J. Edwards.
144...N. N. Burper, S. D. Burt, D. D. Hunt.
149...W. D. Alexander, H. B. Kepley, W. McPherson.
160...G. McElwain, J. C. Howell, E. St. John.
169...John H. Palmer, W. H. Huffman, R. Andrews.
174...Adam Kemper, F. W. Byers, T. J. Kaufman.
177...Lee A. Hall, Jas. F. Chapman, Felix Spurgin.
183...Wm. R. Haight, Asa Kelsey, James Simons.
189...R. H. Adams, Geo. D. Vanhorn, E. W. Dutcher.
190...W. W. Norton, C. F. Slaid, J. C. Wiltsie.
191...R. McConnell, John Dunn, C. C. Burch.
193...John Moyes, Richard Cheadle, John W. Hutson.
194...Wm. Pool, James Bye, Frank Bradshaw.
198...Geo. A. Gilbert, Geo. Marshall, John A. Waltz.
199...W. A. Conkey, B. H. Green, James Smith.
205...J. S. Lobdell, J. B. Hyde, H. S. Dickerson.
206...Carroll C. Boggs, D. W. Barkly, Oliver Holmes.
228...Jas. Bennett, Elihu Dunscomb, Curtis Nichols.
227...J. W. Colwell, John Grisby, Geo. Phirman.
229...M. H. Smith, A. L. Swallow, B. B. Hicks.
231...C. Schoettler, J. M. Dalton, J. A. Hays.
235...Josh. P. Rand, Mich'l McCartney, W. C. Walker.
247...M. A. Cushing, J. W. McChesney, W. A. Bell.
251...Wm. W. Elder, Jas. C. Johnson, John Cuesy.
256...James Philp, G. S. Southworlh, G. W. Earley.
264...A. B. Fitch, Wm. Forbes, J. M. Forbes.
275...W. B. Grimes, N. Kibler, Milton Grimes.
283...A. Marcy, M. Carpenter, Geo. Kleinsmid.
284...R. B. Smith, Geo. D. Hayden, John W. Ash.
285...G. W Tilton, Peter Wolf, G. W. Wolf.
287...H. Hudson, H. T. Wright, L. H. Reed.
295...Oscar J. Reese, G. W. Williams, Jacob Craven.
298...D. Huntington, B. F. Gardner, D. McClain.
307...John Neff, Wm. J. Frisbie, A. T. McDowell.
313...R. Falley, C. W. Reed, S. B. Lake.
319...H. A. Barnard, J. G. Saulsbury, J. B. Magill.
331...A. F. Nisbet, E. Blackford, J. M. McCormick.
332...W. H. Lamb, W. Taggart, C. Bye.
340...John L. Drennan, Henry Gough, John M. Hill.
344...W. R. Philips, O. M. Southwell, Wm. Moore.
345...L. C. Belding, Jr., J. Q. Russell, Daniel Fryer.
347...G. W. Hartman, Wm. Freeman, Wm. Black.
352...H. S. McKibben, F. Shurtleff, J. W. Maberry.
354...James M. Stout, J. G. Spencer, Wm. P. Brooks.
360...J. L. Blanchard, L. M. Andrews, Wm. H. Alter.
366...Benj. R. Hickok, S. A. Newcomb, Isaac Cosler.
370...Daniel Wingate, W. A. Dodds, Alex. Lowery.
372...Wm. Livingston, Jas. McC. Lee, Risley Haines.
376...Gabriel F. Keath, Morgan Carlton.
378...A. Mellen, David Shannon, C. L. Hazen.
379...Alfred Seehorn, F. J. Ulrich, James Peirce.
381...L. T. Lemon, T. D. Wilcoxen, James Durst.
383...E. McDaniel, S. Z. Roth, D. D. Bailey.
392...H. J. Short, James Smith, John Gray.
397...Lewis Miller, H. Meinhard, J. Gift.
399...Reuell W. Morse, Wm. T. Lewis.
401...C. H. Ellenwood, C. Finefield, D. A. Walden.
407...Newton Griffing, J. R. Bowers, John E. Tuttle.
417...J. F. Lamb, Wm. E. Pritchard, P. A. Smith.
419...J. L. Morton, J. P. Woodside, Josiah Whitnell.
421...J. Freeman, Enoch Buckingham, G. W. Burson.
427...T. J. McBride, Wm. J. K. Owen, Jas. Milne.
428...A. Stewart, Thos. Jefferson, Samuel Faxon.
432...Wm. J. Jackson, J. W. Kennedy, J. B. Beadles.
437...L. Wampold, D. Westermeyer, Leon Maadel.
440...A. Salisbury, Geo. C. Gill, G. B. Houk.
442...J. M. McClary, J. M. Hendricks, Aaron Jacobs.
443...E. J. Allen, S. C. Rowell, John Cool.
445...Jas. W. Lumpken, J. J. Leach, E. G. Duckels.
446...John L. Donovan, C. F. McNeill, E. Kice.
448...G. N. Price, J. W. Hensley, W. H. Langdon.
450...J. D. Sanborn, S. P. Colburn, W. L. Tuttle.
456...S. T. DuBois, Geo. S. Taylor, L. A. Swaney.
463...C. Capps, A. C. Farmer, T. B. Ross.
466...T. A. E. Holcomb, John Buck, B. F. Ross.
467...John Halfield, D. C. Webb, M. V. Shanks.
470...John Donovan, John North, St. J. Van Arnam.
473...Samuel Horner, P. C. Reed, J. H. C. Gordon.
475...Wm. Towell, T. C. Kirkland, Jas. H. Kingston.
483...Chas. S. Todd, C. S. Mitchell, J. P. Johnson.
484...Jonathan Hook, V. M. Gilmore, Wm. McNeill.
487...J. F. McAnally, J. H. Stuart, J. G. Mitchell.
489...W. H. Eidson, James Stewart, J. B. McNair.
495...W. E. Chitwood, Thos. Smith, J. H. McSparin.
497...Jacob Stillwaugh, J. L. Greene, J. Hawkins.
498...C. W. Schirmer, Lemuel Wilson, S. C. Shumard.
503...T. J. Whitehead, H S. DePew, Samuel W. Bird.
504...Geo. W. Davis, Luke H. Hite, Wm. A. Knight.
509...M. L. Howe, Wm. Parker, Blasdell Foster.
512...Dr. Lee Smith, A. Buchanan, James E. Miller.
523...J. M. VanDeren, J. A. Wright, Dallas Davis.
524...J. B. Geer, Wesley Brainard, J. W. Ludlum.
528...W. P. Pierce, G. Dahlem, E. N. Weese.
532...Wm. R. Batten, Chas. Carpenter, H. Betterman.
536...E. McAllister, Geo. Niver, D. Robertson.
538...Chas. H. Bacon, E. L. Gooding, Wm. Hanley.
541...J. J. Carrey, J. J. Cleveland, Joseph Hartman.
544...G. F. Hillig, L. P. R. Yaple, Thurston Stopher.
545...Arthur Paullin, W. H. Davis, Henry Callum.
546...James J. Rider, J. N. Corrington, S. Corrington.
547...Wm. Wayne, Robert Lee, Wm. Adams.
548...M. Hayward, J. P. Blank, H. J. D. Maynard.
558...Jas. L. Bishop, Jos. H. Freeman, Curtis Ball.
560...M. A. Cline, John F. Robb, Abram Allen.
561...E. C. Johnson, John Young, A. S. McGrew.
568...Jas. M. Munn, M. L. Dunning, E. P. Burlingham.
569...Evans Scott, Geo. Main, E. F. Binns.
571...H. C. Clark, Otis Durfee, James M. Hough.
575...O. P. Burghett, T. F. Berry, George S. Deans.
576...B. J. Van Court, J. H. Atkinson, Geo. Crosby.
581...J. H. Samson, W. J. Williams, R. S. Hundley.
583...Robt. Suppiger, H. M. Thorp, Louis Kinne.
584...O. F. Price, John M. Morse, J. C. Stewart.
588...Samuel Rawson, F. A. Sabine, S. G. Barnes.
589...A. Bugh, Geo. W. Gray, J. P. Westbay.
592...Sylvester Redfield, Wesley Park, E. F. Brown.
593...D. B. Fonda, L. A. Budlong, Geo. Dunlap.
594...E. P. Robertson, Cullen Keefe, S. White, Jr.
600...W. L. Reed, Eli Drum, B. J. Mallone.
601...S. M. Gentry, J. A. Nevins, E. C. Park.
603...Aug. G. Fetter, Geo. W. Ewalt, J. T. Alexander.

High Priests, Kings, and Scribes, as Returned up to Feb. 6, and not before Reported.

Nos. High Priests. Kings. Scribes.
2...A. W. Hitchcock, S. Brown, W. R. Stubblefield.
5...A. W. Blakesley, James Lowe, S. O. Taylor.
8...Geo. D. Hayden, John H. Kohne, Jas. Mann.
10...C. L. Higbee, S. R. Gray, Wm. Steers.
15...A. F. Rodgers, T. P. Yerkes, B. F. Culp.
18...Henry Burgower, T. Brittingham, E. Burrall, Jr.
21...A. A. Murray, J. B. Babbitt, R. J. Young.
23...E. L. Cronkrite, Jacob Krohn, Geo. P. Kingsley.
24...F. K. Conkling, E. B. Perry, Henry Richings.
28...Geo. O. Ide, C. J. Peckham, J. H. Fawcett.
32...Jeremiah Curl, W. H. Geohegan, Joseph Beyls.
33...J. D. Hamilton, H. G. Ferris, Wm. A. Patterson.
36...J. Northrup, A. L. Salisbury, G. B. Richardson.
37...Henry F. Clark, R. M. McArthur, John Paul.
45...C. Kirkpatrick, H. C. Hacker, W. C. Rich.
51...J. C. Smith, D. Wann, E. A. Small.
55...J. W. Johnson, E. E. Waggoner, E. D. Steele.
60...John B. Powell, Samuel Strouse, J. B. Lininger.
64...D. C. Jones, J. M. Morrow, J. S. Muzzy.
66...Derrick Lamb, C. Bye, W. Taggart.
69...J. T. Moulton, A. D. Bascom, Louis Schaffner.
78...H. C. Clark, I. B. Hatch, A. Burchim.
87...T. A. Brown, T. D. Craddock, Geo. Wright.
88...Geo. White, John P. Grubb, B. W. Alkire.
98...B. Kersey, G. N. Pierce, W. H. Eastman.
100...A. N. Lodge, J. D. F. Jennings, Hardin Goodall.
103...D. S. Booth, James Douglas, L. D. Burgess.
105...Samuel J. Dodds, R. Snider, B. G. Stover.
108...A. Sallee, John Eddy, S. W. Johnston.
113...S. J. Toy, Wilson Hoag, J. W. Scott.
116...James Davie, Geo. W. Sparks, M. A. Cline.
129...Peter C. Rooney, A. B. Fitch, Nathan Whitney.
130...Jas. Thompson, O. P. A. Myers, Jos. H. Moore.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—Isa. 8, 20.

DECISIONS BY THE GRAND MASTER.

26. Entered Apprentices, who, by their own neglect, have failed to apply for advancement for one year, must petition anew in writing for the other degrees, be regularly recommended, and pass through all the forms of reference, investigation, report, and ballot. The same rule applies to Fellow Crafts.

27. The oldest chartered lodge in any city, town, or place in Illinois may receive and try charges against any Mason affiliated elsewhere, or non-affiliated, who may be residing within its jurisdiction.

28. A lodge U. D. can not add to its numbers by affiliation, nor can it try its members. Its only accessions while U. D. are by way of degrees.

29. Objections made by a member, to advancement of a candidate for any degree, either before or after election, without reasons stated, is in the nature of a rejection, until the objections are removed or withdrawn, nor can the lodge lawfully advance the candidate, or give consent to any other lodge to entertain the application, while such objections remain.

After a proper lapse of time, and when it is reasonably certain that the objections will not be withdrawn, the candidate should be notified that he is rejected, his money should be returned, and the usual notices sent as required by law.

30. Ballotings in all cases, except by dispensation or in trials, take place at regular meetings only. Examinations as to proficiency may be had in open lodge at any time before or after balloting.

31. Should any lodge U. D. initiate a candidate who has been rejected in this jurisdiction at any time heretofore or hereafter, without first obtaining the unanimous consent of the lodge which rejected him, its dispensation will be liable to be vacated.

32. Every candidate for initiation must have the limbs, members, and senses of the body that a man ought to have. The fixed and unchangeable landmarks of Masonry regard neither the time, the manner, the place, or the cause of dismemberment, disfigurement, or mutilation. The fact alone, like the law, is to govern a Mason.

33. Any pretended lodge of Masons, working anywhere in the State of Illinois, without regard to race or nationality, which does not hold a dispensation or charter from the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Ancient, Free, and Accepted Masons, is, together with any member thereof, clandestine, and all Masonic intercourse with any such clandestine lodge, or member or members, is strictly unlawful and forbidden.

34. Every lodge and every Mason in this jurisdiction is cautioned and directed to regard and treat as clandestine, any person claiming to be a Mason and hailing from any pretended lodge which is not within the jurisdiction of and subordinate to a recognized Grand Lodge of the State, district, dominion, territory, kingdom, empire, or country where situate; and of which is here mentioned the following: The States of Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, the District of Columbia, the Territories of Colorado, Idaho, Montana and Washington, the Dominion of Canada, including the Grand Lodges of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick.

35. Lodges in this jurisdiction should be opened and closed on the first, second, and third degrees at every regular communication.

36. No brother can be suspended or expelled without charges, notice (if to be found), trial, and conviction.

37. A lodge has a by-law that no member shall be entitled to vote who is in arrears for dues: a brother in arrears votes at an election; is it a subject of charges?

When an election of officers is about to take place, the Master should have every brother in reach notified of the time of election, and the amount of his dues, and that in default of payment he will not be entitled to vote. When ready to proceed to election, the names of delinquents should be read and opportunity given to pay. After which, delinquents should be notified that they are not entitled to vote. If any delinquent, after such notice, should vote at any such election, he would be guilty of an intentional violation of the by-laws. Otherwise, in my judgment, the offense is a censurable irregularity simply, which should be guarded against in future, but insufficint to justify charges.

A Cane Tribute.

We have received a long account of the presentation of a cane to the venerable Frederick Bell, late High Priest at Hillsboro, who had been chief officer from the first, but at the late election declined further service. After the Chapter had adopted several happy resolutions, Hon. A. H. H. Rountree, an old-time Mason and gentleman, made the presentation speech, from which we cull the following:

That you may carry with you into your retirement an evidence of that high appreciation, and at the same time, in a measure, relieve the debilities arising from increasing age, as well as gratify themselves in doing you honor, the companions of your chapter have obtained and dedicated to your use this staff for your declining years, which I am requested to present to you with these expressions of affectionate regard, and at the same time to present also a copy of these, the very expressive resolutions of your chapter, with the earnest prayer that this staff may long be your companion, reminding you constantly of the affectionate regard of your companions, coupled with their desires that many, many, long, long years of usefulness may still remain to you.

And now, Companion Bell, having fulfilled the wishes of your companions, permit me most reverently, sincerely, and affectionately to pray that the Great High Priest above—The Grand Author of the Universe—may take you into his holy keeping, so that when done with earth and earthly cares, your departure hence will be an entrance into the Grand Chapter above.

The cane is ebony, silver-mounted, and upon receiving it Father Bell replied as follows:

For this beautiful token of your friendship, receive my sincere thanks. Although I have passed many mile-stones which mark the progress in the journey in life, still I hope to have the pleasure of frequently meeting with you, my beloved companions, ere I am called home to dwell in the Tabernacle above.

"Here the exile, o'er the waste,
Trudging homeward, shall repose;
All his toils and dangers past,
Here his long sojournings close.
Entering through the sacred veils,
To the holy cell he bends;
Then, as sinking Nature fails,
Hope in glad fruition ends."

But so long as I walk upon the earth, the cane you have presented me will support my old age until I am called to cross the dark stream whose turbulent waters flow between time and eternity.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me." To me it has been, is, and will be a pleasure to think of the devoted faith, the willing zeal, and increasing union and liberal-mindedness which have characterized you from our acquaintance. The memories awakened by this pleasant occasion are happy ones. I recall similar scenes when I was the recipient of friendship's mementoes, but none of them will, in the future, be cherished more than the present one. Companions, I hardly know how to thank you for your kindness; time, distance, nor the force of circumstances can ever lessen in my soul the sense of gratitude and love begotten here. To-night my active duties among you cease. Need I say that my heart is full of blessings toward you? my dear companions, you know it is. Continue in well-doing, and in due time you shall reap your reward if you faint not.

"In the quarries should you toil,
Make your mark.
Do you delve upon the soil,
Make your mark.
In whatever path you go,
In whatever place you stand,
Moving swift or moving slow,
With a firm and honest hand,
Make your mark.

Silver Service.

Our brethren at St. Joseph, Mo., are not unmindful of service or merit.

W. Bro. Joseph S. Browne has just vacated the Master's chair, after a service of ten years in various capacities in St. Joseph's Lodge No. 78.

The presentation was made in public by Rev. J. W. Flowers, Chaplain, who, among other good things, remarked:

Allow me to congratulate you upon the fact that the duties of your office (symbolized by the square, the compass, the level, and the plumb-line), you have faithfully and successfully discharged for several years. In the name of and for St. Joseph Lodge I say these things to you. For this faithful discharge of duty, the brethren through me return to you their grateful acknowledgements. Permit me again to invite your attention to this service. On it will be found engraved the Square, symbolizing morality and virtue; the Compass, teaching the duties of circumscribing our desires; the Level, indicating our common origin, and the fact that all will be brought down at last to death, where goodness alone secures approval; the Plumb line, which teaches us so to act as to be worthy of a coming immortality. This service, with all these significant symbols, I now present to you from St. Joseph Lodge, as a slight testimonial of the regard and esteem in which you and your years of service are held by them.

And thereupon Bro. Browne responded as follows:

Allow me, Reverend Sir, through you, to return my heartfelt thanks to my brothers of this lodge for these elegant tokens of their regard, which shall ever be cherished by me as valued mementoes of their kindness and affection. I avail myself of this opportunity to tender my grateful acknowledgements to each officer and member for their uniform kindness and courtesy, and for their hearty and unanimous support while serving as their Master, and to express the hope that by the influence of the pure principles of our Order, we may all so "act by the Plumb," and "square our actions by the Square of Virtue," that, when called from our terrestrial labors here below, we may "meet upon the Level" in the Celestial Lodge above.

The service consists of a massive silver pitcher, two silver goblets lined with gold, and a large silver salver. The articles were handsomely chased and ornamented with Masonic emblems.

Banquet and Ball of the Chicago Commandery, K. T.

The first annual festival and banquet of the Chicago Commandery No. 19, K. T., was held at the Sherman House, and was a very fine affair. The knights had determined to hold a convocation at which their ladies could be present, and so show them the gallantries of which they were the possessors, as the lineal successors of the "knightly days of old."

In point of attendance and elegance, as well as in those significant little accessories that mark true culture, the party was certainly the finest of the season. For its general perfection, much credit is due to Sir Knights A. M. Bennett, George F. Letz, and E. C. Hubbard. The knights appeared in full uniform, decorated with the various orders and ribbons they were entitled to wear, and the ladies being arrayed in silk fabrics and decked with jewels, the scene was one long to be remembered.

Among Masonic notables present may be mentioned Charles E. Munger, Deputy Grand Commander of the State; Drs. V. L. Hurlbut and J. V. Z. Blaney, Past Grand Commanders; P. C. Wright, Deputy Grand Commander of Iowa; E. C. Hamilton, Eminent Commander, of Laporte; T. T. Gurney, Eminent Commander of Apollo; R. D. Lawrence, Eminent Commander, of Springfield; J. M. Pearson, Grand Generalissimo; A. J. Dunning, Grand Captain General of Illinois; W. M. Egan and George Gardner, P. Cs. of Chicago Commandery; and other distinguished individuals from abroad.

At half-past eight the assembly filed into the spacious ball room, which was so filled that at first much inconvenience was experienced, but by the management of the floor committee affairs were soon satisfactorily arranged. The supper room was splendidly ornamented, and the long tables were loaded with substantials and delicacies.

The Great Western Band furnished the music.

The entertainment did not conclude until the approach of the small hours, and will be long remembered by the Sir Knights and their fair companions.—Chicago paper.

Miscellaneous Reading.

The Rescue.

It was in the month of February, 1831, a bright moonlight night and intensely cold, that the little brig I commanded lay quietly at her anchors inside of the Hook.

We had a hard time of it, beating about for eleven days off the coast, with cutting northeasters blowing, and snow and rain falling for the most of that time. Forward, the vessel was thickly coated with ice, and it was hard work to handle her, as the rigging and sails were stiff, and yielded only when the strength of the men was exerted to the utmost. When at length we made the port, all hands worn down and exhausted, we could not have held out two days longer without relief.

"A bitter cold night, Mr. Larkin," I said to my mate, as I tarried for a moment on deck to finish my cigar.

The worthy down-easter buttoned his coat more tightly around him, looked up to the moon—and felt at his red nose before he replied—

"It's a whistle, captain, as we used to say on the Kennebec. Nothing lives comfortable out of blankets in such a night as this."

"The tide is running out swift and strong; it will be well to keep a sharp look-out for the floating ice, Mr. Larkin."

"Aye, aye, sir," responded the mate, and I went below.

Two hours afterwards, I was aroused from a sound sleep by the vigilant officer.

"Excuse me for disturbing you, captain," said he, as he detected an expression of vexation on my face; "but I wish you would turn out and come on deck as soon as possible."

"Why, what's the matter, Mr. Larkin."

"Why, sir, I have been watching a cake of ice that swept by at a little distance a moment ago; and I saw something black upon it; something that I thought moved; the moon's under a cloud, and I could not see distinctly, but so help me God, I believe there's a child floating out to sea, in this freezing night, on that cake of ice."

We were on deck before either spoke another word. The mate pointed out, with no little difficulty, the cake of ice, floating off to the leeward, and its white glittering surface was broken by a black spot; more I could not make out.

"Get me the glass, Mr. Larkin; the moon will be out of that cloud in a moment, and then we can see distinctly."

I kept my eye upon the receding mass of ice, while the moon was slowly working her way through a heavy bank of clouds. The mate stood by with a glass. When the full light fell at last upon the water with a brilliancy only known in our northern latitudes, I put the glass to my eye. One glance was enough.

"Forward there!" I shouted at the top of my voice, and with one bound I reached the main hatch, and began to clear away the little cutter which was stowed away in the ship's yawl.

Mr. Larkin had received the glass from my hand, to take a look for himself. "My God!" he said in a whisper, as he set to work to aid me in getting out the boat—"my God, there are two children on that cake of ice!"

The men answered my hail, and walked lazily aft. In an incredibly short space of time we launched the cutter, into which Mr. Larkin and myself jumped, followed by the two who took the oars, I rigged the tiller, and the mate sat beside me in the stern sheets.

"Do you see that cake of ice with something black upon it, lads?" I cried; "put me alongside of that, and I'll give you a bottle of rum each to-night, and a month's extra wages when you are paid off."

The men bent to their oars, but their strokes were uneven and feeble. They were used up by hard duty of the preceding fortnight, and though they did their best, the boat made little more way than the tide. This was a long chase—and Mr. Larkin, who was suffering as he saw how little we gained, cried out—

"Pull, lads—I'll double the captain's prize; two bottles of rum and two months' pay; pull lads, for the love of God, pull!"

A convulsive effort at the oars told how willing the men were to obey, but the strength of the strong men was gone. One of the poor fellows washed us twice in recovering his oar, and then gave out; the other was nearly as far gone. Mr. Larkin sprung forward and siezed the oar.

"Lay down in the bottom of the boat," said he to the man, "and captain, take the other oar; we must row for ourselves."

I took the second man's place; Larkin had stripped to his Guernsey shirt, and as he pulled the bow, I waited for the signal stroke. It came gently, but firm, and the next moment we were pulling a long, steady stroke, gradually increasing in rapidity until the wood seemed to smoke in the oar-locks. We kept time, each by the long, deep breathing of the other. Such a pull! We bent forward until our faces almost touched our knees, and then throwing all our strength into the backward movement, drew on the oar until every inch of the space covered by the sweep had been gained. At every stroke the boat shot ahead like an arrow discharged from a bow. Thus we worked at the oars for fifteen minutes—it seemed to me as many hours. The sweat rolled off of me in great drops, and I was enveloped in steam generated from my own body.

"Are we almost to it, Mr. Larkin?" I gasped out.

"Almost, captain—don't give up; for the love of our dear little ones at home, don't give up, captain!"

The oars flashed as the blades turned up to the moonlight. The men who plied them were fathers, and had fathers' hearts; the strength which nerved them at that moment was more than human.

Suddenly Mr. Larkin stopped pulling, and my heart for a moment ceased its beating; for the terrible thought that he had given out—crossed my mind. But I was quickly reassured by his voice:

"Gently, captain, gently—a strike or two more—there, that will do"—and the next moment the boat's side came in contact with something, and as Larkin sprang from the boat with his heavy feet upon the ice, I started up, and calling upon the men to make fast the boat to the ice, followed.

We ran to the dark spot in the center of the mass, and found two little boys, the head of the smaller nestling in the bosom of the larger, fast asleep! The lethargy which would have been fatal but for the timely rescue, had overcome them. Mr. Larkin grasped one of the lads, cut off his shoes, tore off his jacket, and then loosing his own garments to the skin, placed the cold child in contact with his own warm body, carefully wrapping over him his great coat, which he procured from the boat. I did the same with the other child; and we then returned to the boat, and the men, partially recovered, pulled slowly back.

The children, as we learned when we subsequently had the delight of restoring them to their parents, were playing on the ice, and had ventured on the cake, which had jammed into the bend of the river, ten miles above New York. A movement of the tide set the ice in motion, and the little fellows were borne away on that cold night, and would inevitably have perished, but for Mr. Larkin's espying them as the ice was sweeping out to sea.

"How do you feel?" I said to the mate, the morning after this adventure.

"A little stiff in the arms, captain," the noble fellow replied, while the big tears of grateful happiness gushed from his eyes—"a little stiff in the arms, captain, but very easy here," and he laid his hand on his manly heart. My quaint, brave down-easter! He who lashes the seas into fury, and lets loose the tempest, will care for thee! The storm may rage without, but in thy bosom peace and sunshine abide always.

◆

The Story of a Bee.

What a big chestnut tree that was, down by the brook! In summer time it was like a huge green umbrella, all full of glancing, bright-eyed squirrels, and birds that popped in and out of their nests, chatting away like so many Frenchmen. And in the autumn, when the leaves fluttered down, and the red apples began to glow in the orchards, what a bursting open of brown prickly burrs there was, and what a falling of shiny big chestnuts! I tell you, there was a running and scampering then among the little boys at the farm-house, and the squirrels, and the greedy field mice! Which got most, we don't pretend to say; but as the squirrels were the earliest risers, and moreover were always promptly on hand after the brisk autumn gusts sent the nuts rattling down through the boughs, long before Jack and Tommy could get their caps and boots on, we rather think the little bushy tails came out first and foremost.

But that was not all the big chestnut tree held. About half-way down the main trunk there was a great hollow place, where a colony of wild bees had built up their cells, and filled them with delicious, gold-cored honey. Busy little people they were, always on the wing, and generally on the buzz, and great travelers besides.

"Don't you think those bees make an unnecessary noise in the world?" said Spot, the toad, as he sat in Silverwing's bower, one day. Now, Spot, being neither handsome nor good-tempered, had a habit of grumbling at everybody and everything, which made him rather disagreeable company.

"Here comes Mrs. Buzz, now, I should think her wings would be tired, gadding here and there. I shan't stay to hear her gossip!"

And Spot hopped briskly away, scolding as he went, greatly to Silverwing's relief.

"Won't you take a seat on my rose-buds, Mrs. Buzz?" said Silverwing, good-naturedly.

"Well, perhaps I will," said the busy little bee. "The truth is, Silverwing, I'm in trouble."

"Dear me!" said good-natured little Silverwing, "what's the matter?"

"It's that boy of mine, Lazylegs," said Mrs. Buzz. "He sits all day on the comb, eating honey, and won't stir out to look for sweets among the flower-bells. Nothing that I can say to him makes the least impression, and only yesterday the queen-bee said she would turn him out of the hollow tree, if he didn't alter his course of conduct. Just fancy the disgrace of having my boy, Lazylegs, turned out of the hollow tree!"

"It would be awful, indeed," said little Silverwing.

"I think," said Mrs. Buzz, "that if you would step around and talk to him, Silverwing, it would do more good. Here it is bright noonday, and every bee abroad except him, and there he sits, gorging himself with honey, and listening to the foolish stories of the chattering little yellow bird that lives in the crook of the tree! I don't wonder the queen-bee gets out of patience!"

"Nor I either," said Silverwing. "However, I will go round and see what I can do, Mrs. Buzz."

The July sunshine was very hot, but under the big chestnut tree it was cool and shady, where Silverwing floated in and out of the green boughs upon a glancing thread of sunlight.

There sat Mr. Lazylegs in the opening of the hollow tree, winking his sleepy eyes, while his mouth was all smeared with fresh honey.

"Lazylegs," said the Fairy, balancing herself on her sunbeam, "why don't you go to work?"

"Work!" echoed the little drone. "Don't you see how hot it is? Work never did agree with me, Fairy Silverwing."

"But all the rest of the family are working!"

"Because they are fools it's no reason I should be one."

"But, Lazylegs, you ought to earn your living."

"I went out last week, Silverwing, and you can't imagine what a pain I had under my yellow belt. Besides, I'm a poet, and poets never work."

"Fiddlesticks!" said Silverwing, in great scorn.

"Yes, but I am indeed. Shall I read you the poem I wrote this morning on the wrong side of a chestnut leaf?"

"I won't trouble you to read it, Lazylegs; you had a great deal better go out and try to get a little honey against winter weather."

"Oh, I assure you that's entirely against my principles," said Lazylegs. "I may go up to the farm-house towards evening. I always try to get out of the way when the old folks come grumbling home, with their everlasting clack about 'shiftlessness,' and 'indolence,' and 'coming to poverty.' Then I come quietly home, when they are all fast asleep and snoring. There's a fine family of hornets among the blackberry bushes, and we have fine times stinging the cherries by moonlight."

"Lazylegs, I'm afraid your're a miserable vagabond," said Silverwing.

"Oh, no! you're mistaken. I'm only a gentleman of leisure," answered Lazylegs, pertly.

So Silverwing skimmed away on her sunbeam, feeling very sorry for hard-working, industrious Mrs. Buzz.

But the queen bee had overheard this conversation from her nook in the crystal cells, and no sooner was Silverwing gone, than she sent her maid of honor to summon Lazylegs to her presence.

"Well, your majesty, what's wanting?" said the drone, flippantly.

"I want you to get out of my sight and hearing," said the queen bee, indignantly. "I won't have such a ne'er-do-well in my swarm. Now go, and never come back."

"Just as your majesty says," said pert Lazylegs, drawing out his gauzy wings to make a low bow. And off he went, humming a tune he had learned from the little boys who came to play under the chestnut tree.

"The hornets will take me in," said Lazylegs. "They're jolly, hospitable fellows."

But Lazylegs found himself entirely mistaken. The hornets liked an occasional frolic with Lazylegs very well, but they had no idea of being burdened with him all the time.

"No you don't," said Striped Jacket, the chief hornet. "Go about your business, and don't hinder my boys and girls from working."

Lazylegs whimpered a little, but nobody paid any attention, as he wiped his eyes with his wing, and went on up to the farm house, to see what the big grasshopper under the currant bushes would say to him.

"I'm really afraid, at this rate, I shall have to work for a living, like the commonest bee in the swarm," thought he. "Hallo! here's something quite extraordinary!"

It was a gilded cage, hanging out on the parlor window, with cups of seed, and cups of water, and oh, delight! a great lump of sparkling white sugar pushed in between the wires; while on a wooden perch in the centre of the cage, a fat brown mocking bird sat with his head under his wing, fast asleep.

"This is famous," chuckled Lazylegs. "Who wants to go sticking their noses into honeysuckle bell and hollyhocks, when there's such fat living as this to be had for no trouble at all. Here goes for a fine supper of white sugar, such as all the bees in the swarm never tasted before."

But Lazylegs, in his incautious haste, buzzed so loudly, and attacked the crystalline lump so greedily, that the brown mocking bird waked up from his afternoon nap.

"Hallo!" thought the mocking bird, "here is uninvited company, but I'll soon settle his business."

And before Lazylegs knew what he was about, the mocking bird had darted from the perch, and swallowed him, wings, legs, yellow belt, and all.

That was the end of Lazylegs, and poor little Mrs. Buzz never knew what had become of her graceless son.

"I'm afraid he's gone to Australia," said the little mother.

"Just as well," said the queen be. "He never would have come to any good here."

The mocking bird knew all about it, of course —but he kept his own counsel.

"If any of the rest come to inquire about him, I'll serve them just the same!" said the warlike bird.

But no one came for Lazylegs. Like all indolent people, he had very few friends, and so the mocking bird had no more bees supper.

Woman.

Give ear, fair daughter of love, to the instructions of prudence, and let the presence of truth sink deep in thy heart; so shall the charms of thy mind add lustre to the elegance of thy form; and thy beauty, like the rose it resembleth, shall retain its sweetness when it's bloom is withered.

In the spring of thy youth, in the morning of thy days, when the eyes of men gaze on thee with delight, and nature whispereth in thine ear with the meaning of their looks: ah! hear with caution their seducing words; guard well thy ear, nor listen to their soft persuasions.

Remember that thou art made man's reasonable companion, not the slave of his passion; the end of thy being is not merely to gratify his loose desire, but to assist him in the toils of life, to soothe him with thy tenderness, and recompense his care with soft endearments.

Who is she that winneth the heart of man, that subdueth him to love, and reigneth in his breast?

Lo! yonder she walketh in maiden sweetness, with innocence in her mind, and modesty on her cheek.

Her hand seeketh employment; her foot delighteth not in gadding abroad.

She is clothed with sweetness, she is fed with temperance; humility and meekness are as a crown of glory circling her head.

On her tongue dwelleth music; the sweetness of honey floweth from her lips.

Decency is in all her words; in her answers are mildness and truth.

Submission and obedience are the lessons of her life, and peace and happiness are her reward.

Before her steps walketh Prudence, and Virtue attendeth at her right hand.

Her eyes speaketh softness and love; but Discretion, with a sceptre, sitteth on her brow.

The tongue of the licentious is dumb in her presence; the awe of her virtue keepeth them silent.

When scandal is busy and the fame of her neighbor is tossed from tongue to tongue, if charity and good nature open not her mouth, the finger of silence resteth on her lip.

Her breast is the mantle of goodness, and therefore she suspecteth no evil in others.

The troubles of her husband are alleviated by her counsels, and sweetened by her endearments: he putteth his heart in her bosom, and receiveth comfort.

Happy were the man that should make her his wife; happy the child that shall call her mother.

She presideth in the house, and there is peace; she commandeth with judgment, and is obeyed.

She ariseth in the morning, she considers her affairs, and appointeth every one to their proper business.

The care of the family is her whole delight; to that alone she applieth her study; and elegance, with frugality, is seen in her mansion.

The prudence of her management is an honor to her husband; and he heareth her praise with a secret delight.

She informeth the minds of her children with wisdom; she fashioneth their manners from the example of her own goodness.

The word of her mouth is the law of their youth: the motion of her eye commandeth their obedience.

She speaketh, and her servants fly; she pointeth, and the thing is done; for the law of love is in their hearts, and her kindness addeth wings to their feet.

In prosperity she is not puffed up; in adversity she healeth the wounds of fortune with patience.

Happy is the man that has made her his wife; and happy the child that calleth her mother.

The Dying Wife to Her Husband.

The following most touching fragment of a letter from a dying wife to her husband, was found by him after her death, between the leaves of a religious volume, which she was very fond of perusing. The letter, which was literally dim with tear marks, was written long before the husband was aware that the grasp of a fatal disease had fastened upon the lovely form of his wife:

When this shall reach your eye, dear ——, some day when you are turning over the relics of the past, I shall have passed away forever, and the cold white stone will be keeping its lonely watch over the lips you have so often pressed, and the sod will be growing green that shall hide forever from your sight the dust of one who has so often nestled close to your warm heart. For many long and sleepless nights, when all beside my thoughts were at rest, I have wrestled with the consciousness of approaching death, till at last it has forced itself upon my mind; and although to you and others it might now seem but nervous imaginings, yet, dear, it is so! Many weary hours have I passed in the endeavor to reconcile myself to the thought of being separated from you whom I love so well, and this bright world of sunshine and beauty; and hard, indeed, it is to struggle on silently and alone, with the sure conviction that I am about to leave all forever, and go down alone into the dark valley! But "I know in whom I have trusted," and leaning upon His arm, "I fear no evil." Don't blame me for keeping all this from you. How could I subject you, of all others, to such sorrow as I feel at parting, when time will soon make it apparent to you! I could wish to live, if only to be at your side when your time shall come, and pillowing your head upon my breast, wipe the death damps from your brow, and usher your departing spirit into its Maker's presence, embalmed in woman's holiest prayer. But it is not to be so, and I submit. Yours is the privilege of watching, through long and dreary nights, for the spirit's final flight, and of transferring my sinking head from your breast to my Saviour's bosom! And you shall share my last thought; the last faint pressure of my hand, and the last feeble kiss shall be yours; and even when flesh and heart shall have failed me, my eye shall rest on yours till glazed by death; and our spirits shall hold one last communion, till gently fading from my view—the last of earth—you shall mingle with the first bright glimpses of the unfading glories of that better world, where partings are unknown.

Well do I know the spot, dear ——, where you will lay me; often have we stood by the place, and as we watched the mellow sunset as it glanced in quivering flashes through the leaves, and burnished the grassy mounds around us with strips of burnished gold, each perhaps has thought that some day one of us would come alone, and whichever it might be, your name would be on the stone. But we loved the spot; and I know you'll love it none the less when you see the same quiet sunlight linger and play among the grass. that grows over your Mary's grave. I know you'll go there often alone when I am laid there, and my spirit will be with you then, and whisper in the waving branches, "I am not lost, but gone before."

◆

[Advertisement.]

W. Bro. C. W. Clark.

At a regular meeting of Mt. Pulaski Lodge No. 87, A. F. and A. M., held on Saturday, the 23d day of January, 1869, the following resolution was offered and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we feel indebted to W. Bro. C. W. Clark, late Master of this lodge, for the faithful discharge of the duties assigned to the chair so ably filled by him during the last five years, and the interest manifested in the prosperity of the lodge. In grateful ackowledgement of his invaluable services, we unite in returning to Bro. Clark our sincerest thanks.

Died.

In Polo, Ogle Co., Feb. 3, Bro. WILLIAM FRAZER, Senior Warden of Mystic Lodge No. 187, and E. King of Tyrian Chapter No. 61, aged 29 years.

A kind husband, valuable citizen, zealous craftsman, and a warm-hearted Christian. His memory will ever be held in grateful remembrance.

At Russellville, Jan. 27, Bro. ANDREW PINKSTAFF, a member of Russellville Lodge No. 348.

A good father, citizen, and Mason. The lodge passed several sympathetic resolutions, and Bro. Morgan, of the Legislature, speaks of him in high terms.

Moneys Received for Masonic Trowel,

FROM JAN. 10, 1869, TO FEB. 5TH, INCLUSIVE.

$1.25 each.—J. B. Anthony, W. H. Beckwith, J. S. Buckley, John Booth, J. T. Bullard, N. Bailey, J. M. Bennington, H. Countryman, S. H. Claspill, G. W. Carico, F. P. Cram, J. J. Cain, J. M. Chain, B. H. Crofts, Thos. Conant, A. B. Davidson, J. R. Davis, J. L. Franklin, L. P. Fulda, H. Hamilton, J. W. Hathaway, H. F. Holcomb, L. H. Howel, H. A. Hazlett, T. J. Heirs, G. H. Hanna, H. Hayward, E. F. Hatch, G. W. Kingsbury, G. W. Lininger, R. P. Nugent, Wm. K. Owen, E. B. Perry, Harlow Pease, P. Roll, J. H. L. Slayton, Jas. Shepard, F. Snider, C. P. Stafford, W. F. Sutcliffe, W. Sweeney, Guy Smith, T. B. Tyler, E. Voester, John Weckel, A. Weigle, X. B. Mendenhall, T. H. McBride, C. G. Manning, E. Meininger, Henry Margraff, Frank Marion, Isaac Orton.

$2.50 each.—O. S. Calvert, H. N. Hogan, S. Macey, H. L. Ogden, H. B. Pierce, A. B. Young.

$3.75 each.—Wm. Lowman, J. F. McAnally.

$5.00 each.—T. B. Babcock, J. L. Berch, B. F. Church, J. L. Dewey, H. Dunn, Jr., G. B. Heberling, W. C. Hewett, H. S. Hook, F. Jones, James Judd, John Keyes, J. W. Kise, D. C. McKelvey, Wm. J. Mix, J. L. Morton, J. A. Nathess, E. Nichols, W. B. Orner, E. S. Richmond, J. H. Samson, B. Thorp, H. Tyrrell, W. W. Walker.

$8.75 each.—L. T. Hewins.

$10.00 each.—Thomas Humble, Wm. Hart, D. A. Morrison, W. F. Mulkey, J. W. Peck, W. R. Penick, Orson Smith.

$1.00 each—Fred. Boyer, S. G. Bronson, W. E. Bacon, J. A. Hunter, Joseph Jones, W. Lewis, Dr. W. McGinniss, A. A. Mitchell, Jas. McKelvey, H. Nichols, Wm. Powel, L. D. Throop, G. E. Terry, John H. Tyler, W. W. Winter, D. Wadsworth.

$2.00 each.—G. W. Barnard, H. L. Currier, D. G. Comstock, C. L. Dew, J. A. Farnham, L. L. B. Miller, John R. Mars, F. M. Simmons, Daniel Weston, P. H. Walker.

$3.00 each.—E. A. Blakesly, Jesse Davis, G. C. King, John Luther, W. W. McAllister, A. Tipsword, D. Wadsworth.

$4.00 each.—C. A. Bradshaw, E. K. Groute, T. J. Jones, N. S. Misener, T. Ruggles, T. J. Vanderslice.

$6.00 each.—James Gall, P. W. Hull, S. B. Knapp, J. L. Morton, M. Maynard, E. S. Robertson, Wm. Snyder, E. A. Simmons, C. M. Thayer, J. C. Winslow.

$7.00 each.—A. French, Henry Gough, J. B. Johnson, Wm. Lockstine, J. P. Smith.

$8.00 each.—R. E. Berry, W. J. Finch, O. B. Hamilton, J. F. McCormack, A. W. Martin, Wm. Simpson, J. S. Whiteside, W. A. Westrope, A. Willing.

$9.00 each.—N. S. Bowmant, F. H. Moseley.

$11.00 each.—S. A. Foster, Robert Lee.

$12.00 each.—G. W. Cummins, J. B. Gillespie.

$13.00 each.—J. F. Cummings, J. R. Lescom.

$14.00 each.—E. H. Curtis, F. R. Sponsler, W. A. Washburne.

$15.00 each.—J. H. Crocker, J. B. Geer, J. C. Johnson.

$17.00 each.—H. N. Hurlbut, F. H. Moseley.

Other Sums.—J. Osman, $6.25; Wm. E. Bacon, $8.25; S. C. Buckman, $18.75; J. W. Bunker, $20.65; R. B. Colcord, $3.90; J. W. Cole, 23.00; J. F. Cummings, 55 cents; L. Federlin, $4.75; S. E. Foster, $3.90; W. L. Greene, $1.50; Isaac Gibson, $2.95; James A. Hawley, $18.00; J. G. O. Harvey, $6.85; E. B. Hollister, $1.30; D. R. Harrison, 35 cents; Geo. O. Ide, $11.85; D. C. Jones, $1.90; L. Keyon, $4.90; N. D. Larner, $31.20; James McKelvey, $5.80; S. B. Mitchell, $5.50; F. K. Nichols, $1.45; S. Olney, $6.75; James Potticary, $3.50; O. M. Rogers, $5.80; D. A. Stitzel, $10.25; J. W. Sweeney, $14.75; W. H. Shepherd, $9.85; G. W. Short, $12.50; John H. Tyler, $3.50; Charles Todd, $7.85; Wm. Thompson, $6.85; D. M. Virney, $3.25; C. H. Wooll, $9.90; G. Whitehead, $7.85.

WANTED.—For a Grand Lodge Library, the Proceedings of 1840, 1841, 1842, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848, 1849, 1852, and 1853, Grand Lodge of Illinois, for which a fair price will be paid, in cash, goods, or for TROWEL, if sent to us by first of April next. H. G. REYNOLDS & SON.

MASONIC HISTORY AND DIGEST,
BY
J. W. S. MITCHELL, M. D., P. G. M., P. G. H. P., AND P. G. C., OF MISSOURI.

Two Volumes, Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

There is nothing in Masonry, from its earliest inception to the last decade, that is not treated of in these volumes, which embrace an account of the Order—in all degrees—from the building of Solomon's Temple, hence throughout the civilized world, and the first written history of Masonry in the United States, to which are added the Old Charges and Ancient Regulations, as collated by order of the Grand Lodge of England in 1722.

Also, a code of Masonic Jurisprudence, illustrated by the author's answers of Law and Usage; a Dictionary of Masonic terms, description of Masonic Jewels, Regalia, etc., etc., etc.

To all Masons of whatever degree or standing, this work is especially valuable, while to the outside world—those who have never crossed the threshold of the "preparation room"—it is replete with interesting information.

The two volumes contain 1,450 pages, beautifully bound in Morocco, full gilt. Price, $10.00.

Sold only by subscription. Address W. B. KERNEY, General Agent, Chicago, Ill., care Western News Co.

Grand Lecturers or others desiring to act as Agents for this work—and willing to make thorough canvass, can have assigned to them specified territory over which they will have exclusive control. 1v8

GREAT PLATTE VALLEY ROUTE.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD!

Overland Mail, Express, and Telegraph Line,
OPEN FROM OMAHA TO BENTON, 595 MILES
from the
Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains.

On and after Sunday, July 26, 1868, the Union Pacific Railroad will run

Two Daily Passenger Trains

between Omaha and Benton, connecting at Omaha direct with the CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN R. W.
for
ALL PRINCIPAL EASTERN CITIES,
and with the
COUNCIL BLUFFS & ST. JOSEPH R. R.
FOR ALL POINTS SOUTH.
At Cheyenne, direct connnections are made with Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Overland Mail Coaches, for Denver and Santa Fe!
and all points in
COLORADO AND NEW MEXICO;
And at Benton for Salt Lake and all points in
UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA,
AND CALIFORNIA.

PULLMAN'S PALACE SLEEPING COACHES
On Night Trains.
Good Eating-Houses along the Line.

PASSENGERS CROSSING THE PLAINS
by taking this road,
WILL SAVE 200 MILES STAGING
And 48 Hours Time.

C. D. WHITCOMB, Gen. Ticket Agt.
W. SNYDER, Gen. Supt.
t12-v7 S. H. H. CLARK, Gen. Freight Agt.

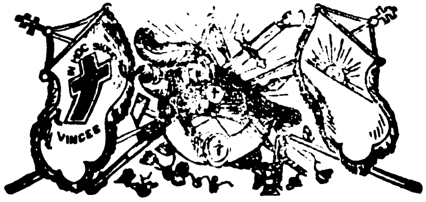
THE ILLINOIS STATE REGISTER.—Published at Springfield, Ill., by E. L. Merritt & Bro., is the Central Democratic paper of Illinois. Daily, per annum, $10.00; Daily, six months, $5.00; Weekly, yearly, $2.00. Money sent by Express or in Registered Letters at our risk. Address
6-6 E. L. MERRITT & BRO.

VIRGIL PRICE



MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Manufacturers of all kinds of
Masonic Materials, Swords,
BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.,
No. 144 GREENE STREET,
NEW YORK.

Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO
KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.

Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords. 1v8-1y

MASONIC FURNISHING STORE.

POLLARD & LEIGHTON,
104 Tremont St., Boston,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
Society and Military Goods,
Sashes, Aprons, Collars, Jewels,

Swords, Belts, Gloves, Gauntlets, Caps, Chapeaux, Charts, Diplomas. Sole agents for Baker's Low-Twelve Bell. All the variety of Clothing for Lodges, Chapters, Councils, and Encampments.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR EQUIPMENTS
Furnished at short notice.

Colored lithographic view of the New Masonic Temple, Boston. Price, $3.00.

Publishers of
WEBB'S MASONIC MONITOR—Pocket edition;
FREEMASON'S POCKET LIBRARY;
WORKING MONITOR;
DICTIONARY AND MANUAL OF MASONIC LAW;
DIGEST OF MASONIC LAW;
TACTICS FOR KNIGHTS TEMPLAR;
and have for sale all other Masonic Books published

BANNERS AND FLAGS.

☞ Manufacturers supplied with all kinds of Materials, Trimmings, etc., for making Regalia, at the lowest prices. 4v7-1y*

MASONIC TROWEL
BOOK BINDERY AND
Blank Book Manufactory.
BANKERS,
Railroad Companies, City and County Authorities, Merchants, &c.,
SUPPLIED WITH FULL SETS OF BOOKS
At Short Notice, Ruled to any Pattern.

MAGAZINES, PAMPHLETS, MUSIC, bound in any style desired, from plain muslin to the finest Turkey Morocco and Gilt Edging. Old books rebound.

THE ILLINOIS JOURNAL.—PUBLISHED Daily and Weekly at Springfield, is the only Republican newspaper printed in the State Capital. It is the Official State Paper, and the Weekly edition penetrates every county. Subscription prices: Daily, $10.00 per year; Weekly, $2.00. Address,
THE JOURNAL COMPANY,
6-6 Springfield, Ill.

WESTERN UNION RAILROAD.
Short and direct route to all points in Central Iowa, Central and Northern Wisconsin, and all parts of Minnesota. Trains on this road make close connection with trains on the Illinois Central Railroad at Freeport, and also with trains on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad at Clinton Junction and Racine Junction.
2v7 R. C. TATE, Superintendent.

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, MARCH 15, 1869. NO. 3.

Poetry.

Lines on the Burial of a Senior Warden.

Emblem of life, the Scythe of Death, sweeps ceaselessly about;
Emblem of time, the Hour-Glass stands, its sands, unmarked, run out.
How frail is man, how brief his time,
Cut off before he reaches prime,
Help us, O! God, with strength divine!

The Spade, the Mattock, and the Grave, their solemn lessons teach;
Be ready when the alarm is given, is what they say to each;
Work soon must cease, in temple new,
Not made with hands, now hid from view,
The worthy shall their work renew.

Broken Columns are a symbol of the frailty of our race,
And they are an illustration, which the Craft alone can trace—
The mem'ry of departed worth;
To all they say, e'en from our birth,
Dust must to dust, and earth to earth.

Death loves, 'tis said, a shining mark; it changes light to gloom,
The morn of life to eve—the long night of the tomb;
We mourn to part, yet can not stay
The summons calling friends away;
It will admit of no delay.

Our brother here must go, and in the lonesome grave be laid.
Sunder all ties below, death's call must be obeyed;
Sorrowing friends and kindred dear,
Though sadly met around his bier,
Can not retain him longer here.

His morn was bright as May, but night soon cast its pall;
Short was his working day, when came the Master's call.
So mote it be, let all respond,
Kinsmen who feel affection fond,
And brethren by Masonic bond.

His place is vacant—in our midst he'll be no longer seen;
His mem'ry, like Acacia's sprig, we'll cherish ever green;
When to the West our eyes we turn,
In coming days, we'll often mourn,
For him who never can return.

May he have joined that ransomed throng, that multitude who there
Still meet upon the Level, but who part not on the Square.
Peace to his soul! soft rest his head;
Let charity its mantle spread
O'er all the faults of him who's dead.

Draw, then, around his open grave, and the last honors give.
His soul to God we now commend, his mem'ry with us live;
We lay his body in the dust,
Reposing in the blissful trust,
The resurrection of the just.

D. C.

The Two Rabbis.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

The Rabbi Nathan, two score years and ten,
Walked blameless through the evil world, and then
Just as the almond blossomed in his hair,
Met a temptation all too strong to bear,
And miserably sinned. So, adding not
Falsehood to guilt, he left his seat, and taught
No more among the elders, but went out
From the great congregation girt about
With sackcloth, and with ashes on his head,
Making his gray locks grayer. Long he prayed,
Smiting his breast; then, as the Book he laid
Open before him for the Bath-Col's choice,
Pausing to hear that Daughter of a Voice,
Beheld the royal preacher's words: "A friend
Loveth at all times, yea, until the end;
And for the evil day thy brother lives."
Marvelling, he said: "It is the Lord who gives Counsel in need." At Ecbatana dwells
Rabbi Ben Isaac, who all men excels
In righteousness and wisdom, as the trees
Of Lebanon, the small weeds that the bees
Bow with their weight, I will arise, and lay
My sins before him.

And he went his way
Barefooted, fasting long, with many prayers;
But even as one who, followed unawares,
Suddenly in the darkness feels a hand
Thrill with its touch his own, and his cheek fanned
By odors subtly sweet, and whispers near
Of words he loathes, yet can not choose but hear,
So, while the Rabbi journeyed, chanting low
The wail of David's penitential woe,
Before him still the old temptation came,
And mocked him with the motion and the shame
Of such desires that, shuddering, he abhorred
Himself; and, crying mightily to the Lord
To free his soul and cast the demon out,
Smote with his staff the blankness round about.

At length, in the low light of a spent day,
The towers of Ecbatana far away
Rose on the desert's rim; and Nathan, faint
And footsore, pausing where for some dead saint
The faith of Islam reared a domed tomb,
Saw some one kneeling in the shadow, whom
He greeted kindly: "May the Holy One
Answer thy prayers, O stranger!" Whereupon
The shape stood up with a loud cry, and then,
Clasped in each other's arms, the two gray men
Wept, praising Him whose gracious providence
Made their paths one. But straightway, as the sense
Of his trangressions smote him, Nathan tore
Himself away: "O friend beloved, no more
Worthy am I to touch thee, for I came,
Foul from my sins, to tell thee all my shame.
Haply thy prayers, since naught availeth mine,
May purge my soul, and make it white like thine.
Pity me, O Ben Isaac, I have sinned!"

Awestruck Ben Isaac stood. The desert wind
Blew his long mantle backward, laying bare
The mournful secret of his shirt of hair.
"I too, O friend, if not in act," he said,
"In thought have verily sinned. Hast thou not read,
Better the eye should see than that desire
Should wander? Burning with a hidden fire
That tears and prayers quench not, I come to thee
For pity and for help, as thou to me.
Pray for me, O my friend!" But Nathan cried,
"Pray thou for me, Ben Isaac!"

Side by side
In the low sunshine by the turban stone
They knelt; each made his brother's woe his own,
Forgetting, in the agony and stress
Of pitying love, his claim of selfishness;
Peace, for his friend besought, his own became;
His prayers were answered in another's name;
And, when at last they rose up to embrace,
Each saw God's pardon in his brother's face.

Long after, when his headstone gathered moss,
Traced on the targum-marge of Onkelos
In Rabbi Nathan's hand these words were read:
"Hope not the cure of sin till self is dead;
Forget it in love's service, and the debt
Thou canst not pay, the angels shall forget;
Heaven's gate is shut to him who comes alone;
Save thou a soul, and it shall save thy own!"

GENERAL GRAND CHAPTER.

Proceedings of the Triennial Convocation at Saint Louis.

ADDRESS OF THE GENERAL GRAND HIGH PRIEST IN FULL.

The seventeenth triennial convocation met at St. Louis, Sept. 15, A. L. 5868, A. I. 2398.

GRAND OFFICERS.

John L. Lewis, General Grand High Priest.
Ira A. W. Buck, Dep. Gen. Grand High Priest.
A. T. C. Peirson, General Grand King.
J. Q. A. Fellows, General Grand Scribe.
John McCllellan, General Grand Treasurer.
John D. Caldwell, General Grand Secretary.
William Hacker, Gen. Grand Capt. Host.
James L. Gould, Gen. Grand R. A. Captain.

The Grand Chapters of California, Connecticut, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Wisconsin, were represented in full; Arkansas, by three representatives.

CHAIRMEN OF COMMITTEES.

On Credentials.—John D. Caldwell, Ohio.
On Finance.—Moses Dodge, Maine.
On Foreign Correspondence. — John W. Simons, New York.
On Masonic Jurisprudence.—L. E. Barber, Arkansas.
On Grievances.—H. G. Hazelrigg, Indiana.
On Doings of General Grand Officers.—James M. Austin, New York.
On Charters and Dispensations.—John L. Yeates, Maryland.
To report appropriate reference of topics in address.—Seymour H. Stone, New York.
On so much of the address as relates to Delaware.—Thomas J. Corson, New Jersey.
On so much as relates to the District of Columbia.—Salathiel C. Coffinbury, Michigan.
On so much as relates to Grand Chapters which have ceased their relations with the General Grand Chapter.—Harman G. Reynolds, Illinois.

Nothing comes unfinished from the pen of Comp. Lewis, as the following address clearly shows:

EXCELLENT COMPANIONS:—Seventy years ago, in the quiet capital of the State of New York, on the banks of the lordly Hudson, just below where it receives its largest tributary, the National League of Royal Arch Masonry, the progenitor of this body, was organized; and, having survived two generations of mankind, now assembles in triennial convocation in this great and growing city, which then was not, on the banks of the "Father of Waters," not far from the confluence of one of its mightiest tributary rivers.

Fitting symbol is this, of this department of Freemasonry; the tiny rivulet flowing from its limpid fountain, denoting the individual companion, merging its waters into the broader creek, the chapter; the creek pouring its swelling stream into the tributary river, the State Grand Chapter; and that again pouring itself into the broader channel of the now majestic river, on whose bosom navies may ride, and have ridden—the National Grand Chapter. And yet in its jurisdictional and governmental features the analogy fails, for it is in this respect most like the giant oak of the forest, from the root of whose parent stem all life and vitality are derived, which nurtures the branches, then the clustering twigs and leaflets, and which, if stricken, every limb withers, and all its foliage shrivels and falls.

Forever flowing be those streams, and brightly flashing be their waters, from the fountain of individual love and benevolence, till they leap in one broad volume into the ocean of humanity; forever verdant be that stately tree, "gayly to bourgeon, and proudly to grow," till it stands out like the monarch of the woods, breasting and braving the storms of the rolling centuries!

Three-score and ten years are the traditional limit of the life of man, but are yet only an atom of space in the history of nations, or of aggregated communities like ours. Of the grand old spirits that assisted in the formation of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, there is not to-day a solitary survivor; and yet the blazon of their renown is as bright, and their memory as fervently cherished, as though they were present to bestow their wonted patriarchal blessing. If I have aught for which to be grateful in my Masonic life, it is in the recollection that in earlier and sunnier days, before the storm-clouds lowered and the thunder rolled upon the darkening pathway of existence, it was my privilege to sit at the feet of some of these wise and learned Gamaliels of our Craft as an humble, although it may be an unprofitable disciple. Be the recollection of their priceless services and their manly devotion, our re-animating guide and monitor as we gather here to-day; and may the Spirit of the living God, the Great Architect of the Universe, which inspired His devout worshipers in ancient days, in the infancy of art, to erect splendid and beautiful temples to His honor, be present to assist in our chapter, to give light to our councils, and to implant in our inmost hearts an earnest and increasing desire to preserve and perpetuate that which our fathers have transmitted to us of the Good, the Beautiful, and the True!

Of all the Masonic bodies which have had a rightful existence since the days of King Solomon, none has had such obstacles to encounter as this G. G. Chapter, and none, in the face of such impediments and resistance, have achieved more important and triumphant results. Most of us are followers of the banner of Beauseant—the banner of the Cross—to which we owe and render a life-long and fadeless devotion, deserved and just; and yet that grand old standard has scarcely won such victories as the ensign of Zerubbabel, which has also the "Lion of the Tribe of Judah" emblazoned upon its ample folds: and if it be that the trowel is wielded, as well as the sword, it is but to indicate that the intellect and industry must contrive and build that which courage and constancy will so faithfully guard.

The design which the founders of this body had in view commends itself both to our respect and affections. It was to combine and concentrate the united wisdom and labors of a great fraternity in a cherished common cause, that we might all, through the length and breadth of the land, both teach and be taught; and that the distant portions of our great fraternity in the nation might be brought into communion with each other as the attached members of one common family. And if such were the design when there were but seventeen States of the Union, of which thirteen were confined to the Atlantic sea-board, how vastly more important is it when twenty others have been added to the number, and the domain in which its labors are wrought is spread from ocean to ocean, and almost from the frigid to the torrid zone! The friends of this national body are content to rest the whole argument in its favor upon this single position. They love to mingle thought and feeling with their distinguished and honored companions of the several State jurisdictions; to look upon the faces and listen to the voices of the great Master Workmen of our time, whose distinguished abilities and unblemished worth are upon the tongues of our wide-spread brotherhood in every jurisdiction; and it is with a feeling of sadness and disappointment that we have gone out from our convocations, missing the words of eloquence and wisdom from these companions in the North and the South, the East and West, who at other times and in other places have added vigor and life to the public councils of the Craft. Although in our stated convocations in the past, but little may have been done in a spirit of rule, and certainly nothing in a spirit of misrule; yet who of us has not felt cheered and re-animated for his heart-work in our fraternity by these comminglings of spirit? And if, as it pains us to remember, we have met and parted to meet no more upon earth with those whom we have thus learned to love and honor; with what deeper satisfaction and profounder reverence can we dwell upon the instructions of those whose accents shall never again fall upon our ears, but which yet linger in our memories like the swelling notes of some inspiring anthem whose cadences in by-gone years have enkindled within us a glow of loftier devotion? If, enfeebled in body and burdened with distracting cares, some of us have traveled long weary miles half way across a continent, and yet so near its center, to meet upon the banks of the Mississippi these honored and cherished companions for the last time on earth, who will say that we are not richly repaid for the toil and sacrifice, if it be that we but clasp hands and utter our farewells before the eventide? These thoughts may awaken saddened recollections, but such names as Bull, and O'Sullivan, and other mighty ones of the Craft, now passed away from us, will not soon be forgotten.

Beloved companions! brethren and friends of other days, who have gone out from our fold, return once more to the old roof-tree! Beloved companions, our brethren and friends in spirit, with whom we have communed often in spirit and affection, cast your lot with us in the coming time! We speak in no other spirit but that which distinguishes our Fraternity, for we have no selfish ends to accomplish. If you have judged that there were evils in our organization, assist in their correction; if good may be attained, come, and with a spirit of honest and hearty welcome we invite you to share it, now and ever more.

That the aims and purposes of the G. G. Chapter, as constituted, were beyond this recompensing spirit of fraternization, but yet in perfect harmony with it, need not be asserted; that there has been at times a pernicious—I do not say willful—misunderstanding of those aims and purposes, it is my duty to affirm.

In the formation of the G. G. Chapter there seems to have been three prominent objects in view:

1. The necessity of a body which should promote the extension and cultivation of Royal Arch Masonry in unoccupied territory, where no Grand Chapter existed.

2. The erection of a common tribunal for the arbitrament of difference of State Grand Chapters; and,

3. The establishment and dissemination of a uniform system of work and lectures.

The latter two have been classified according to their importance, and not in their natural order. To produce uniformity of work in Capitular Masonry, it was necessary that there should be a common tribunal to adjust the differences between conflicting systems. And it is here that the fears and alarms which have at times undermined the influence and impaired the usefulness of the G. G. Chapter have had their origin—the fear that there should be developed some great overshadowing agency or power which should at some unguarded moment throttle the State bodies; that the mother should ruthlessly and unnaturally take the life of her own offspring; and the national body should destroy or impair the powers of the constituencies from whose continued existence alone it could itself continue to exist, and whose prosperity must be its prosperity. If there be no State Grand Chapter there can be no G. G. Chapter; if there be a State Grand Chapter with crippled or diminished powers, then is the national body to that extent crippled and injured. The danger apprehended is that some new and monstrous system of work, differing from them and in the State's jurisdiction, should be promulgated and tyrannically enforced. The work is to be taught and promulgated by the first four G. G. officers, and hence must receive the assent of three out of four of them, always chosen from different States, and always located in far distant parts of the national jurisdiction from each other. With respect to the lectures, it may be positively asserted that there are so few differences in various parts of the jurisdiction, that neither fear nor danger can arise respecting them.

The arguments against the continuance of the G. G. Chapter deduced from the facts in its history have been two, and the positions have been destructive of each other:

1. There is danger from the powers of the G. G. Chapter; and,

2. It having no powers, or, having them, never having exercised them, is useless.

It has been briefly shown that the danger can have no real existence; it were almost vain, and certainly is not wise, to extend the argument further and to show that the fears entertained by respected companions are equally groundless. It is one of the anomalies in our Capitular history that no such fears nor dangers are entertained respecting the Grand Encampment of the United States, the very nature of whose organization, and hence the powers granted in its Constitutions, being far more peremptory, not to say arbitrary, and which claims for its legal subordinates some of these very jurisdictions whose fears of hidden dangers in subordination to the G. G. Chapter have been most distinctly expressed. It scarcely need be said that this allusion to the Grand Encampment is only made by way of argument, and in no other spirit than that of the highest respect to it, and its subordinates, State or individual.

It can not be denied that the G. G. Chapter has manifested at times a marked reluctance to exercise the powers with which it is unquestionably invested, and whose exercise would have benefited the general interests. But justice should be extended towards it, and what has been termed pusillanimity should be regarded as prudence. Conscious of the possession of rightful power, it has even been guarded in its exercise, and that fact alone is sufficient, or should be sufficient, to allay every fear for the future. No danger need be apprehended from representatives who constitute the controlling power in the G. G. Chapter, and who are the officers of the State bodies, that they would betray their trusts and vitally wound the constituencies of whom they are officially as much a part as they are of the national body.

It is scarcely expedient to discuss the subject of uniformity of work further than has been done incidentally. Its importance is not underrated, while the opinion is expressed that in dwelling too much upon it in our past Masonic history we have been grasping at the shadow and letting go the substance; we have been giving "tithes of mint, anise, and cummin," to the neglect of the "weightier matters of the law." Though our ritual leads us back to the period of the predominance of the ceremonial law, yet it has dawned upon our minds, as it did upon the minds of those who composed the Grand Council of the olden times, that these ceremonies were but the types and shadows of better things to come. We must not impair in the least degree the force or significance of those beautiful and expressive types, nor displace them for the great lessons which they so forcibly impress upon the mind, but they were merely symbols of more enduring substance; and the shadows should be like those of the morning, and not the evening rays of the sun, reaching out towards the future of the rising day, and not casting out their giant proportions as if caused by its closing beams. Each jurisdiction should certainly have a perfect uniformity within itself, and if a true, orthodox, and correct standard can be found, all should conform to it, so far as possible. The convictions of years have not changed the opinions long ago expressed upon this subject, but have been confirmed by more matured judgment and extended experience. If there be aught of heresy in them, your judgment will pronounce their condemnation and affirm the right.

But it is said that the G. G. Chapter is useless!

Useless! when we have shown that by its great conservative powers it has added joy and beauty to our institution; useless! when it has bound together by the strongest ties those who were not only the giant intellects of the fraternity, but of the nation; useless! when it has brought into life and existence the largest number of the grand chapters within its jurisdiction, and the sound of the gavels of its subordinates is ringing on the slopes of the Pacific, both in the Northern and Southern Hemispheres; through our widely extended territories as soon as civilization has penetrated their wilds; and beyond the seas, upon the shores of the distant Mediterranean. Useless! when it has been the agent of strengthening and purifying Craft Masonry where it most needed strengthening and purifying.

Utilitarianism itself must be silenced by such a volume of facts and experience.

Upon one point the G. G. Chapter has certainly ever been firm and consistent—in the assertion and maintenance of its jurisdiction; a right which has been concurred in by the consent of all parties and persons concerned, and is now fairly and conclusively established. The right of jurisdiction claimed and conceded is within all the territory in every portion of the territorial domain of the United States, and over all Royal Arch bodies therein where a State Grand Chapter did not exist at the time of its organization, and over those State Grand Chapters which have been at any time a part of its constituency; and also concurrent jurisduction with other grand bodies of Capitular Masonry beyond the United States, in all vacant territory.

Upon this point it concedes nothing, because it can not concede anything without aiming a blow at its own existence. It must deny the right of independence or secession, either voluntary or forcible, or cease to be not only a governing, but an existing Masonic body. In the assertion of this right, both theoretically and practically, I have not abated anything of the position taken by my respected predecessors in office.

It would be mere speculation to point out the relative position held or to be assumed by the G. G. Chapter, to any of its subordinates who have occupied, or may hereafter occupy this relation to it. It may be that its own constitution forbids any action on its part in the premises. It may be that it is unwise to discuss, or even to present it. It may be that the question of jurisdiction is fraught with more danger to its existence than that of work and lectures, or any other which has come before it.

Whatever may be the event—and I do not prophesy evil, because, relying upon the zeal, intelligence, and good will of R. A. companions, I believe it to be far distant—it is to be hoped that the G. G. Chapter will never recede from a position so essential to its existence, although the jurisdiction claimed is rather nominal than real in its practical exercise, but will rather nail the colors to the mast, and if it must perish, let it go bravely down with them flying and unfurled.

Sundry amendments to the Constitution will claim your attention at our present convocation, and your serious attention is claimed for them from their important bearing upon the future welfare of this body, the question being, in fact, whether the amendments adopted in 1859 shall continue to be in force, or the former provisions revived. The principle involved is one of moment, in view of the lights before us; and should there be any other features in the Constitution which need revision in order to define the powers and relations of the G. G. Chapter and its constituents, or to adapt them to the settled landmarks of Masonic law, let it be faithfully and fully done. Nothing is so essential to good government and the governed, and to insure harmony and tranquility, as justness and soundness of doctrine in the fundamental law; nothing for us is more desirable than the perpetuity and unimpaired prosperity of this body.

A question arose during the past year which has claimed a large share of attention in the locality affected by it, from its bearing upon the Masonic standing and relations of individual R. A. Masons. Let its history briefly be stated, corroborated as it is by documents to be laid before you.

The chapters in the District of Columbia, under the jurisdiction of the Grand Chapter of Maryland and the District of Columbia, being four in number, of which Potomac Chapter was one, desirous of forming an independent Grand Chapter, obtained consent of the Grand Chapter of Maryland and the District of Columbia to have its jurisdiction over them released and ceded. The four chapters then appointed nine delegates each (one chapter appointing through its H. P.) to a convention to be held for the purpose of forming a Grand Chapter. The convention met and resolved to constitute a Grand Chapter, at which point the delegates from Potomac Chapter left the convention, and did not again take their places in it. The convention, consisting of the delegates of three chapters, continued its sessions, adopted a constitution, and elected grand officers, and appointed a day for their installation. At this point of time application was made for the consent required by the constitution. A letter was addressed to me by the late lamented Comp. Whiting, then Grand Master, written in very courteous and fraternal terms, and asking the above-mentioned consent, and, as the time was short, requesting a telegraphic reply, leaving the formal written answer to follow. Acting under the impression that the only consent necessary was that of Maryland, but if otherwise, that all the previous constitutional steps had been taken, a telegraphic answer was forwarded, giving the required consent. The Grand Chapter was subsequently instituted, and the grand officers installed by M. E. Comp. Mackey, P. G. G. H. P.

Having subsequently learned the true state of the facts, and jealous of the rights of this grand body and determined to maintain them, I issued an edict declaring the formation of the Grand Chapter to have been irregular, and fraternally requesting the companions to retrace their steps, and to proceed legally to form anew within thirty days, and promising them all the assistance in my power toward the formation of a Grand Chapter.

This was replied to by an edict from the newly installed Grand High Priest, in substance forbidding any obedience to my edict.

Information subsequently obtained induced me for a time to believe that I had been mistaken in my views upon the question, and I thereupon stated openly, that I should voluntarily withdraw the edict issued by me, and should most willingly and promptly have done so, had I not subsequently obtained official information that my first view of the facts was the correct one.

In the meantime Potomac Chapter, having refused to come under the jurisdiction of the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia, placed itself under the immediate jurisdiction of the General Grand Chapter, a right formally recognized by me, and in consequence of which it was declared by the G. Chapter of D. C. to be a clandestine chapter, and its members clandestine R. A. Masons.

Such is a brief statement of the facts growing out of this unpleasant matter; and if, in making it, I have committed any errors in the details, or omitted any fact essential to a full understanding of the subject, it has been unintentional, and will be easily corrected by the documents. And, in this connection, it is proper to state that, if any statements were made to me by parties which were erroneous, I fully believe the error was unintentional, and without attempt to deceive. The discussion to which the matter gave rise was sufficiently acrimonious, but the only pain that I felt was in the loss of the good will of my companions of the District, and not in any asperity of expression towards me.

The positions taken by me relative to this question are these:

1. That when Maryland ceded its jurisdiction over the chapters of the District, which was before the formation of its Grand Chapter, they became subordinates under the jurisdiction of the G. G. Chapter.

2. That being such subordinates, the consent of one of the first four G. G. officers was necessary before any steps whatever could be taken towards the formation of a Grand Chapter.

3. The convention which formed the Gaand Chapter was irregularly constituted, as others than the first three officers of the chapter were delegates.

The latter two points were irregularities which would have been overlooked, had not the first existed, and had it not appeared that the acts of the convention, as well as the edict of the G. H. P., were in bold defiance of the authority of the G. G. Chapter. Although the latter was subsequent to my edict, yet it manifests the spirit of the body, as it then existed, and was uncalled for by anything in the edict issued by me.

But the whole question is now divested of any practical importance, except as relates to the position of Potomac Chapter and its members. Authentic information has reached me that the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia has resolved to place itself under the jurisdiction of the G. G. Chapter, and to be represented at this triennial convocation. If such be the fact, overlooking—nay, even forgetting—the past, I most cordially recommend its recognition, the irregularities in its formation being healed by your act, and its representatives admitted. The only point for which I have striven, not on my own behalf, but yours, the acknowlegement of the rightful jurisdiction of the G. G. Chapter, sinks all others into insignificance. But, on the other hand, I demand in justice that the Potomac Chapter be protected, its chartered rights as one of our constituents recognized, and its disciplined members fully restored.

In the month of December last I received a petition from twenty R. A. companions at Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, praying for a dispensation for a chapter at that place. Accompanying the dispensation was a memorial stating that the Grand Chapter of that State had not convened for several years, and that neither of its two subordinates had convened for over three years, the warrant of the other chapter having been demanded and surrendered to the acting G. H. P. Under this state of facts I issued a dispensation to Comps. George. W. Stone as H. P., William H. Lee as King, and Alfred Gawthrop as Scribe of a chapter at Wilmington, to be named St. John's, with the proviso, however, that no Grand Chapter should be found to exist in that State, and no working subordinate, it having been recommended by a New Jersey chapter. The record of the Grand Chapter has since been shown to me, affirming fully the facts stated in the memorial, so far as relates to the Grand Chapter. The same record, however, shows that a convocation of the Grand Chapter has since been held at which the three chapters were represented, although one of them is without a warrant, and, as stated to me by the G. H. P., without any new election of officers by either of them. I am fully persuaded that the State of Delaware was vacant territory, and hence under our jurisdiction at the date of issuing the dispensation. The new chapter has been successfully at labor while the other chapters have remained dormant. The newly elected G. H. P., Leslie, proposes, in the most fraternal spirit, to recognize St. John's Chapter, if it will take a warrant from them, and to be represented in future in this body. As this may be done as well after as before legal warrant is issued, I recommend that St. John's Chapter be duly warranted at the present convocation. There is good material in the quarries of Delaware, and I know of no reason why the workmen should remain idle who are willing to work, because warrants lie dormant for the want of authority in any one to demand them. There is in reality no working chapter in that State but St. John's. Upon granting a dispensation to that body an edict was issued by their pretended Grand High Priest, denouncing the G. G. Chapter and its presiding officer in the usual style of such documents, styled by some Masonic; but in the turn of fortune's wheel, he, too, like the fabulous body over which he claimed to preside, seems to have passed into the gulf of oblivion.

I have also received a memorial accompanying a petition for a dispensation for a chapter at Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho, under the following circumstances: On the 18th of June, 1867, the Grand Chapter of Oregon granted a warrant to that chapter, with George H. Coe as H. P., James W. Brown as King, and George H. Dunn as Scribe, and the chapter was constituted under its authority on the 18th of August, 1867. Entertaining doubts of the legality of their warrant, they pray for a dispensation, and for the healing of the companions exalted in the chapter. The Grand Chapter of Oregon seems to have acted under the impression that the G. G. Chapter had virtually ceased to exist. As the papers were received so near the time of this convocation, and the case was an anomalous one, and the companions seeming to have acted in good faith, I deemed it best to lay the matter before you, in order that a warrant might be issued upon such terms as you might deem just. The case is strongly recommended to your favorable consideration. The usual fees accompany the papers.

A petition is also presented for a dispensation for a chapter at Salt Lake City, in the Territory of Utah. For prudential reasons, growing out of my knowledge of the condition of Craft Masonry there, but in nowise affecting the character or Masonic standing of the petitioners, I lay the papers before you for your action. No fees accompany the petition.

A memorial was also presented to me for a new chapter at Constantinople, in Turkey, but being informal, no action was taken upon it by me. It may have been presented subsequently to some other of the G. G. officers, and if so, my knowledge of the petitioners and of the high character of the companion through whom it was transmitted, leads me to urge the granting of a warrant immediately.

Dispensations have been granted for Austin Chapter, at Austin, in Nevada, with De Witt C. McKenny as H. P., William W. Wixom as King, and Henry Mayenbaum as Scribe; and for Helena Chapter, at Helena, in Montana, with William Porter as H. P., Solomon Starr as King, and Cornelius Hedges as Scribe. As the papers in each case were delayed so that no return could be made, warrants to each are respectfully recommended, if deemed expedient in the latter case.

Appeals have been received from the chapter at Helena, and from Santa Fe, in New Mexico, and will be laid before you for your action.

A large number of communications have been received which require no action from you or information to be communicated to you, as many of them were letters asking advice, or requesting information upon matters of no especial interest to the companions at large.

In glancing over the cherished record of the three past years, I have felt the most lively and grateful emotions in contemplating the steady, onward, triumphant march of the Fraternity. The proceedings of the grand chapters, although containing no marked or striking events, have been full of interest, and it is to be hoped that the Committee on Correspondence may present us with an analysis of their transactions, which, from their high character, can not but be graphic and interesting. The interests of Royal Arch Masonry are very dear to me, for 'twas my earliest attachment, and although sickness and care and sorrow have delayed the work of the hands, they have stilled none of the throbbings of the heart.

The greatest pain that I have felt is that in a twenty years' struggle for peace, and in which I have beheld peace achieved in more than one Masonic department, I should be compelled still to struggle for its accomplishment in a Fraternity like ours.

But with a consciousness of upright intention, and with a firm belief in the purity and grandeur of the principles upon which Freemasonry is founded, my courage does not wax faint, nor are my hopes desponding. When temples shall have crumbled into dust, and the Jerusalems of the earth shall have been leveled with the plains by the hand of devastation or footsteps of time, there will be a New Jerusalem, "the child of the skies," in which strife shall not enter nor sorrow be found; and the weary sojourner, having passed the veils of trial, be suffered unmolested forever to assist in rebuilding the temple and house of the Lord.

The next triennial meeting is to be held at Baltimore.

Comp. Reynolds, from the Committee on so much of the Address as relates to Grand Chapters which have ceased to hold relations with the General Grand Chapter, submitted the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

The committee to whom was referred so much of the Address of the M. E. General Grand High Priest as relates to the renewal or opening of relations with Grand Chapters with this general grand body, which have been interrupted or prevented from any cause, would respectfully report:

That the M. E. Grand Chapters of Vermont, Rhode Island, Iowa, Kentucky, North Carolina, Texas, Georgia, and Alabama, have assumed to withdraw from the jurisdiction of this supreme body.

Originally, this body was a National Grand Chapter, having jurisdiction over subordinate chapters only. It then formed Deputy Grand Chapters, and continued to do so for several years, when it assumed the form of a General Grand Chapter, and State Grand Chapters were formed thenceforward.

No Grand Chapters have been formed by any other authority within the United States, with the exception of those of Pennsylvania, Virginia, Florida, and Delaware.

This body holds the first-named chapters of Vermont, Rhode Island, North Carolina, Kentucky, Georgia, Alabama, Texas, and Iowa, subject to its jurisdiction, and is anxious that they set aside their acts of withdrawal, and return to their allegiance, and be represented here without the further action of this supreme body.

Your committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That no State Grand Chapter, organized by the authority of this M. E. general grand body, or which at any time has become a constituent member of this body, can lawfully sever its connection with the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States of America without its consent, but the allegiance of said Grand Chapter is inalienable and now due.

2. That the M. E. General Grand Council of this M. E. General Grand Chapter open correspondence with the Grand Chapters of Vermont, Rhode Island, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Texas, Kentucky, and Iowa, and to induce, if possible, such acts on their part as shall restore harmonious and fraternal relations as constituent members of this body.

3. That the Grand Chapters of Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Florida, be requested to send delegates to the next triennial convocation of this M. E. general grand body, as a committee of conference to arrange terms of union, if practicable, with this M. E. General Grand Chapter.

None of the amendments to the Constitution were adopted.

The following report, submitted by Comp. Stone, in regard to the newly ormed Grand Chapter in the District of Columbia, was fully discussed and considered.

A minority of the committee, to whom was referred so much of the Address of the G. G. H. P. as relates to the Grand Chapters of Maryland and the District of Columbia, respectfully report, that in their opinion the Grand Chapters of Maryland and the District of Columbia, by resolution, duly adopted and published with their proceedings, relinquished jurisdiction over Chapters in the District of Columbia, and a Grand Chapter having been formed from those chapters, and being here present by their grand officers, and asking recognition by this general grand body, therefore,

Resolved, That the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia is hereby recognized as a regular Grand Chapter, and its officers entitled to seats in this General Grand Chapter.

Resolved, That Potomac Chapter, within the territorial jurisdiction of the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia, not having united in the formation of said Grand Chapter, is now under the jurisdiction of this General Grand Chapter, but without territorial jurisdiction over candidates for the capitular degrees.

Resolved, That all acts of censure, suspension, or expulsion, growing out of the formation of the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia, be declared null and void, and the Comps. of the District of Columbia who have been in affiliation with Potomac Chapter be, and are hereby declared to be in good and regular standing as members of such chapter.

The first and second resolutions were adopted by a large majority; the third by yeas, 47, nays, 26. The fourth resolution was adopted without a division.

Charters were granted for new chapters at Santa Fe, New Mexico; Virginia City, Nevada; Austin, Nevada; Idaho City, Idaho; Helena, Montana; Wilmington, Delaware; Smyrna, Turkey.

The following resolution, offered by Comp. Lewis, was unanimously adopted:

Resoved, That the cordial and most heartfelt thanks of this G. G. Chapter be, and are hereby gratefully tendered to the Mayor and Common Council of the city of St. Louis; to its citizens generally, and to the Masonic Fraternity of the State of Missouri, for their generous and unbounded hospitality, for their unwearied attentions to our comfort and convenience during the present convocation, and for their courtesy and good-will extended to us on every occasion; and that the remembrance of their kindness will ever live in our memories.

The matter of Delaware was referred to the General Grand High Priest, who has since found that no Grand Chapter is in existence in that State.

Resolutions complimenting and thanking Past General Grand High Priest Lewis were adopted, and a committee appointed to present the same.

Communications.

Grand Lecturer Hubbard.

Centralia, Ill., Feb. 28, 1869.

H. G. Reynolds, Esq.:

Dear Comp. and G. Master—There is but little call in District No. 20, which speaks well for the condition of the Craft in symbolic Masonry, and everything is quiet on the Little Muddy.

I have had enough to do in the chapter. In November I visited Litchfield and Girard; constituted the chapter and installed the officers at the former, and lectured the latter and exalted six candidates before I left them. Thence to Mendota, where I constituted Bethany Commandery and installed their officers, and lectured the chapter and council. December 1st, visited El Paso, where I lectured Mackey Chapter No. 130, assisted in exalting six candidates, and left them with a promise to return and finish the lecture on the seventh degree. On the 7th of December returned home, and assisted in exalting three candidates in my own chapter, and installed the new officers—W. S. Pease H. P. Success and victory will attend our chapter, for he is the right man in the right place.

On the 12th, visited Cairo, my former home, and lectured the chapter and exalted three candidates. We were favored with the presence of the Grand Chaplain, Comp. Moore, of Metropolis, and several members of his chapter were with him. On the 24th, visited Ashley, and qualified Bro. Hudson to preside over Clay Lodge No. 153, since which time Bro. DeLaneey has visited them and instructed them in the work.

On the 29th December we had our St. John's celebration, by a public installation of the officers of Centralia Lodge No. 202 and Cyrene Commandery No. 23. W. Bro. W. J. A. DeLancey has again taken the gavel, and the Craft are prospering under his charge. There was a large gathering in the evening in our lodge-room, and also in the public hall below, where many of our brethren and visitors enjoyed themselves until the wee hours of the night tripping the fantastic toe.

On the 30th I left for Kankakee, where I found the old veteran, Rodney Ashley, our G. R. A. Captain, who has retired from the East both in lodge and chapter, but ready to aid and assist in the great and glorious work. Comp. H. C. Clark has succeeded him in the chapter, with a zeal which is truly commendable. While there, I instructed them in the work and exalted six candidates, leaving them fully competent to confer all the degrees with credit to themselves and honor to the Craft.

On the 11th of January, met Committee on Work in Chicago, where, after patience and perseverance, we completed the duty assigned to us at the last Grand Chapter, and during the month of March the High Priests of the constituent chapters will be informed of the result of our labors. While there, our P. G. Scribe, Comp. Hawley, called on us, and on the Monday following, Jan. 18, I visited his chapter and assisted in conferring the M. E. and R. A. degrees on twelve candidates before leaving them. On the 21st, visited Sterling and installed the officers, and left them in good spirits. Thence we wended our way to Ottawa, where we found Comp. H. F. Clark presiding over Shabbona Chapter No. 37. Ten years ago this winter, when called to lecture them, Comp. Wallace, who fell at Fort Donelson, was presiding. Here we met many familiar faces, prominent among them was Comp. Wade, who takes charge of the chapter during the introduction of strangers among the workmen. We also found a strong desire to perfect themselves in the work, and, after exalting six candidates, am confident they are qualified to make darkness light and crooked things straight. The last evening, we were joined by C. E. Munger, D. G. C., Rev. Chas. A. Gilbert, G. Prel., Stearns, G. S. D., together with Denker and Stevens, from Joliet, on which occasion the orders of knighthood were conferred on Rev. Mr. Cohan, and at an early hour we wended our way to the depot, where, after an affectionate adieu, we separated—they for home, and I, after a few hours' ride, was greeted by the companions of El Paso, where, after exalting six candidates, I left them in full possession of the work, and started for home, where our companions were waiting to confer the R. A. degree.

On the 14th February, visited Bloomington Chapter No. 26, which Comp. Stillwell has presided over for two years. Here they were anxious to be set right, and after eight days left them (after exalting three candidates) in good working order. On our way home, stopped at Decatur and called on our E. G. King, Comp. Murray, who still presides over Macon Chapter No. 21. He has not recovered from the broken limb which prevented him from being present at our last annual convocation. There we met our P. G. M. and present R. E. G. Commander, Gorin—all are in good health.

On Wednesday next, with the assistance of Comps. Murray, Gorin, and Quinlan, from Decatur, and M. E. H. P. Pease, DeLancey, and others, from Centralia, I expect to institute a new chapter at Vandalia, where they have some twenty candidates waiting for more light. After setting them all right, my next trip will be down in Egypt, to Shawneetown No. 6, to remove the rubbish and bring to light those sacred treasures, which have been for some time in darkness.

Up to the present date, I have visited twelve chapters, conferred most of the degrees, and exalted fifty-four candidates. Peace and harmony prevail, and all are desirous of receiving the work as adopted at the last Grand Chapter.

Fraternally yours,
H. W. Hubbard.

Boulton Parsons.

Quincy, March 6, 1869.

I see by a Belleville letter in the last Trowel that the putative Boulton Parsons has made his appearance at that place. A reference to The Trowel of August or September, 1867, will discover a rather minute description of this venerable "carpet-bagger," together with some of his antecedents. If he is prowling around this jurisdiction, it might be well to republish it.

Fraternally,
Joseph Robbins.

The following is the letter and description referred to:

Quincy, Ill., Aug. 5, 1867.

Bro. H. G. Reynolds:

Dear Sir—Some days since, an old man applied to me for Masonic charity, giving his name as Boulton Parsons, and claiming to be a member of Owen Lodge No. 128, Covington, Ky. I felt very certain that I had once (in the summer of 1864) assisted him, and that his name was then "Munday," and charged him with it; but he denied the impeachment. He claimed to have belonged to Cynthia Lodge No. 155, at Cincinnati, and that he demitted from it for his present affiliation in Covington. I set him adrift, and wrote to Bro. John D. Caldwell, of Cincinnati, for information, who says:

> I would have saved considerable search over Cynthia Lodge returns if I had first gone to our veteran Tyler, Bro. Joseph H. Covert. After failing to find such names as you mentioned there, and having found that there was no "Owen Lodge" in Covington (but in the interior), I called on "Old Joe." "Know him! yes. He is a liar, a drunkard, and an old beast," he replied; "I drove him down stairs when he last came here, as a drunken, worthless Mason." He has been in the lodges, but is a professional practitioner of imposition on the Craft. He never belonged to Cynthia Lodge, and, of course, not in Covington, Ky., to "125," which is in Owentown. His name is Munday—some say father to "Sue Munday." "He is known here, and in Newport, Ky., for these malpractices," says my informant. Joe says he came into an office, where he commenced making his piteous appeal, when Joe said: "You old scoundrel, you here again?" He answered, "D—n you, Joe Covert, what are you interfering with my business for?" He would meet people on the street, interrogate them, if Masons, claim assistance, and then live the life of a sot on the gains.

During our conversation, I noted him carefully, and this description will be found to fit him pretty closely:

A tall, gaunt man, claiming to be 76 years of age, which is probably correct; has lost his left upper and right lower front teeth; has dark hazel eyes, grey flowing beard and grey hair—nearly white; is bald on the top of his head, but has a few straggling locks on his forehead; is crippled, the right leg being shorter than its fellow, and walks with a cane; looks intemperate and shabby—dirty; he is quite garrulous, and claims to be a pensioner of the war of 1812.

Fraternally,
Joseph Robbins.

The following decisions made by Grand Master Englesby, of Vermont, are good law in Illinois:

You ask if gambling and intemperance and other kindred vices are consistent with, and agreeable to, Masonic law? My best answer is the language of the ancient charges. "Whoever would be a Mason should know how to practice all the private virtues; he should avoid all kinds of intemperance and excess." Again, "Masons ought to be moral men, avoiding all excess injurious to themselves or families, or which would reflect dishonor upon the ancient Fraternity."

Reasons of a personal or private nature should never be allowed to debar an individual from becoming a member of a Masonic lodge. A brother protesting against the advancement of another for such an improper reason renders himself justly amenable to lodge discipline. His charge is, never to allow personal pique or malice to enter into his Masonic action.

The criterion, in case of the loss of a limb, or portion thereof, of a man's eligibility, is the ability to approve himself a Mason. Being unable to do that, he can not, without violating the ancient charges, receive the degrees.

An Entered Apprentice may be tried for unmasonic conduct on charges preferred; the hearing to be had in an E. A. lodge, and the decision made, on report thereto, in a Master's lodge.

A lodge may confer the degrees, at the request of another lodge, good reasons existing therefor, there being no objections in either lodge, having been balloted for in the lodge making the request, and ballots returned clear.

A lodge may refuse to receive as visitor one who, having been rejected by it, goes to another State, receives the degrees, and then presents himself as a visitor, or petitions for membership.

There is no appeal from the decision of the Master; he is responsible to the Grand Lodge alone.

The Master may, and it is his duty as well, to order important matters to lie until the next regular communication before action.

The Grand Lodge By-Laws do not allow of membership in more than one lodge at the same time. A petition for membership must be accompanied by a demit from the lodge to which the petitioning brother belongs. The rule can only be varied when it is clearly made to appear that the lodge to which he belonged has become extinct.

The spirit that dictates slanders or libels, or seeks in an underhanded manner to injure a brother's character, professional or otherwise, is not a Masonic one, and should not be tolerated in a lodge, as it directly interferes with its harmony.

I should not consider it very proper, but on the contrary, highly reprehensive conduct to ridicule the proceedings of a lodge. A brother who would do so would be a very unworthy member.

It is the duty of the Master to see that his lodge is protected against improper impositions, or propositions presented with undue frequency. He has control over all such matters, subject to the Grand Lodge for the proper exercise thereof.

A visiting brother is present only by courtesy, and can exercise the privilege of speaking, or any other participation in the proceedings, simply to the extent that leave is granted, and then his action can be no other than advisory.

A lodge in this State has jurisdiction over a person who has taken the E. A. degree in another State for the purpose of conferring the remaining degrees, provided he has come here to reside permanently, and the lodge in this State is satisfied that the degree has been conferred, and the person is a suitable one to be advanced, both by information and actual observation.

A demit once taken severs the brother's connection with the lodge granting it. The connection can only be resumed by a unanimous vote, in the same manner and under the same regulations as in the case of the application of a stranger to the lodge. It does not matter for what purpose the demit is taken, the result is as above stated. The demit is evidence that the person making application for membership was once a member of some lodge and in good standing. The application must lie over one communication, as in case of new members. If your by-laws require a different method, they are wrong. You are not bound to receive a demit any way except as evidence of the facts set forth therein, and as such to be deposited among the lodge records. A lodge has a perfect right to refuse membership, notwithstanding the demit, if they so choose, and that without charges preferred.

Good for Evil,

We do not approve of noising abroad our charitable deeds, but the following from the Mystic Star shows one of the most strenuous opponents in the ungenerous light of abusing as a sham an institution to which he should feel that he owes a debt of gratitude and kindness. It is not the province of the right hand of Masonry to reveal what her left hand doeth, only in self-defence, to repel the slander which is promulgated, and which, in a great measure, deceives the ignorant. We, therefore, feel justified to reveal to the world wherein Masonry has been a good Samaritan in the family of Rev. C. G. Finney.

"In the city of Oshkosh, Wis., Mr. Finney has a son named after himself, who is a worthy member of the Masonic Fraternity. This Bro. Finney, a few years ago, was accidentally shot, and came very near losing his life. His brethren of the lodge took him in charge, watched over him by day and by night, and by constant care, sympathy, and love for their esteemed brother, his life was saved, and he recovered. And the lodge paid some eighty dollars to experienced watchers to take care of him, and provide for his wants. This was told us by the members of the lodge."—Freemason's Mag.

The Rule of Masonry in France.

We translate the following from "La Constitution et les Statuts Generaux de l'Ordre" of the Grand Orient of France, as indicative of the fundamental laws which govern Freemasonry everywhere, and render it a universal and homogenous society:

"Freemasonry is an institution essentially philanthropic, philosophical, and progressive, and has for its object the investigation of truth, the cultivation of universal morality, the sciences, and the arts, and the exercise of benevolence.

"It has for its principles, the existence of God, the immortality of the soul, and the obligations of humanity.

"It regards the liberty of conscience as the natural right of every man, and excludes no person for his religious belief.

"It has for its motto 'Liberty, Equality, Fraternity.'

"In the elevated sphere where it is placed, Freemasonry respects the religious faith and the political opinions of all its members, but it expressly interdicts in its lodges all discussion of religious or political matters which shall have for their object controversy upon different religions, or criticism upon the acts of the civil authorities, or the diverse forms of government.

"It enjoins upon all its adepts that one of their first duties, as Masons and citizens, is to respect the laws of the country in which they live.

"Freemasonry considers the obligation to work as one of the imperious laws of humanity; it therefore enjoins this obligation upon all its members, according to its ability, and proscribes voluntary idleness.

"It aims to extend to all the members of the human family the fraternal bonds which unite Freemasons everywhere. The propagation of Masonry by word, writing, and good example, is therefore recommended.

"It is enjoined upon every Mason, under all circumstances, to aid, enlighten, and protect his brother, and to defend him against all injustice.

"No one can be admitted to participate in the work of Masonry, who can not prove his rank as a Mason.

"None can be made a Freemason and enjoy its rights except—

"First, He is twenty-one years of age.

"Second, That he is of irreproachable reputation and morals.

"Third, That he has a profession, independent and honorable, and sufficient for his support.

"Fourth, That he is sufficiently educated to enable him to comprehend and appreciate Masonic truths.

"Fifth, That he has resided at least six months in the department where the lodge is situated to which he applies for admission.

"Exceptions are made in favor of persons living in a department or province where there is no lodge.

"The conditions of age are dispensed with in the case of the sons of Masons, who may be initiated at eighteen years, with the consent of their father, mother, or tutor, but can not be admitted to the second and third degrees until they are twenty-one years of age.

"The conditions of residence are dispensed with in favor of soldiers, sailors, and persons who by their profession are constrained to frequent changes of residence.

"In the bosom of Masonic lodges, all Masons are placed upon the level of the most perfect equality. There does not exist between them any other distinction than that of official rank.

"The title of Freemason, as well as the rights and prerogatives attached to it, are forfeited—

"First, By a dishonorable action.

"Second, By dishonorable conduct and a discreditable social position.

"Third, By a violation of engagements entered into at initiation.

"But none can be deprived of his rights as a Mason, but by virtue of a judgment rendered according to the forms prescribed by the constitution and general statutes."—Freemason's Mag.

"1. Is it competent for a less number than nine to ballot for a candidate? The Chapter is opened with a constituted number, and a companion leaves; can it then ballot, as well as transact other business?

"It cannot. Without nine companions present, it is not a Chapter, and can do nothing as a Chapter. As well might a Master's Lodge act with but two present.—Grand Chapter New York.

Beautiful Extract.

We have to-day opened the nineteenth annual communication of the Grand Lodge of California. Young among sister grand lodges, it occupies a high and honorable position; let it be our purpose so to legislate during the present session that, when our recorded acts shall be added to its history, we need not to be ashamed of the result of our labors as workmen of the temple. The history of the past year but repeats the prosperity of its predecessor. Harvests so abundant as to excite the admiration of the world, have brought us increased wealth, and strengthened our confidence in the resources and stability of our young State. The year has, in truth, been to us one of peace and abundant prosperity, yet amid its successes we have been called upon to pause in our labors and exclaim, as we deposited the sprig of acacia in the grave of a beloved brother, this is indeed the end of all our building and of all our labor. There is a vacant place in our temple to-day; a column has broken; one of the principal supports of our conscious edifice has fallen; "the silver cord is loosed, the golden bowl is broken, the pitcher is broken at the fountain, the wheel is broken at the cistern; the dust has returned to the earth as it was, and the spirit unto God who gave it." We mourn the loss to-day of Bro. Henry Hare Hartley, Deputy Grand Master, who departed this life at his home, in Sacramento, on the twelfth day of March last. A special communication of the Grand Lodge was called, and on the seventeenth of March the last sad tribute of respect and affection was paid to his remains. Bro. Hartley had long been identified with us; his name is familiar to all who read our proceedings, as was his manly form and genial countenance to those of you who for the last twelve years have attended our annual meetings. Exemplar of the faith he professed—zealous Mason—Christian gentleman—may the sweetness of the summer's last rose linger long over his resting-place, and green be his memory forever.—Grand Master California.

Is There a God?

How eloquently does Chataubriand reply to the inquiry "Is there a God?" Our French brethren in Masonic error should receive this lesson from their great countryman:

"Is there a God?" The herbs of the valley, the cedars of the mountain, bless Him; the insect sports in His beams; the elephant salutes Him with the rising day; the bird sings Him in the foliage; the thunder proclaims Him in the heavens; the ocean declares His immensity. Man alone has said "there is no God!" Unite in thought at the same instant the most beautiful objects of nature: suppose you see at once all the hours of the day and all the seasons of the year; a morning of spring and a morning of autumn; a night bespangled with stars and a night covered with clouds; meadows enameled with flowers and forests hoary with snow; fields gilded with tints of autumn; then alone you will have a just conception of the universe. While you are gazing upon that sun which is plunging under that vault of the West, another observer admires him emerging from the gilded gates of the East. By what inconceivable magic does that aged star which is sinking fatigued and burning in the shades of the evening, reappear at the same instant fresh and humid with the rosy dews of morning? At every instant of the day the glorious orb is at once rising, resplendent at noon-day, and setting in the West; or rather our senses deceive us, and there is, properly speaking, no East or West or South in the world. Every thing reduces itself to a single point, from whence the king of day sends forth at once a triple light in one single substance. The bright splendor is that which nature can present that is most beautiful, for while it gives us an idea of the perpetual magnificence and resistless power of God, it exhibits at the same time a shining image of the glorious Trinity.

ADDRESS.

BY BENJAMIN B. FRENCH.

[Continued.]

The learned Dr. Oliver, a zealous English Freemason, and the most voluminous writer of the present age on the subject of Freemasonry, has published, among other things, a volume containing twelve lectures, which he entitles "The History of Initiation." In these lectures he gives the history of the initiation into the various mysteries, antecedent to known Freemasonry, in Hindostan, Persia, Greece, Britain, and America—not our modern America, but America as it probably was centuries prior to the peopling of it from Europe. And in his opening of the lecture on the "Ceremonies of Initiation in America," he says: "Some say that America was peopled by the Carthagenians, who peopled the Cape Verd Islands, which are only three weeks' sail from that continent.

Others, judging from the similarity of some religious rites, have conjectured that it was peopled by the Ten Tribes, at the dispersion of Israel. Some think it received its population from China or Japan; others, that it was colonized by some wandering tribes of Japheth, who penetrated into the trackless regions of North America by the straits of Anian. Some have been bold enough to assert that America was not inundated by the deluge, and that consequently the aborigines were antediluvians, and the most ancient people on earth. Others suppose that there were a few individuals preserved on this vast continent at the deluge, that it might be without difficulty re-peopled."

These are a portion of the conjectures, and they are, after all, only conjectures, and the truth can never be known.

We know that a race of aborigines was found here, and we very well know where it went, or whither it is going, but where it came from is and ever must be conjecture. There are facts attending the modern settlement of the country, and the spread of civilization over it, so unaccountable and astounding, as to set history at naught and almost probability at defiance; facts that can be seen and described, but for which no human theory can account. We leave this digression to pursue our subject.

Dr. Oliver also describes at much length, and with much minuteness, the "Eastern Mysteries," the "Mysteries of Bacchus," the "Celtic Mysteries," the "Doctrines of the Druids," the "Gothic Mysteries," and the "Doctrines of Morality," all of which, as you may well suppose, are exceedingly interesting, and will open to a student a vast field for reflection.

He closes this volume of lectures with a corollary, which commences in the following words:

"Such were the famous mysteries of idolatry. I have designedly omitted to draw any formal comparison for the purpose of showing what portion of the true Freemasonry they retained among all their abominations, because the intelligent brother will not fail to discover the points of resemblance wherever they occur."

He then proceeds at considerable length to sum up the similarities between our modern and those ancient rites, and to form his deductions. Those deductions are such as naturally arise in any mind after reading the lectures, and such as must convince any one of what I have before remarked, that some of our Masonic rites and ceremonies have come down from those magazines of the past, and, being divested of the horrors that seemed to adapt themselves to those long-by-gone years, have, in a modified form, been adopted in Freemasonry.

I say divested of the horrors, for it would hardly seem possible to us that human ingenuity could invent such horrible ceremonies as those initiated into these ancient mysteries were forced to undergo; among them, and this is fully sufficient, I think, for an illustration: "A living serpent was inserted into the bosom of the affrighted candidate, which, passing through his garments, was taken out at the skirts of his robe."

Brother Mackey has doubtless either followed the same train of history as Dr. Oliver, or he has founded his theory upon these very writings.

But the long extract which I read from his exicon, immediately preceding this branch of lmy remarks, is based upon a work entitled "The History and Illustration of Freemasonry, compiled from an Ancient Publication," a work from which I have already quoted.

Who was the author of that "ancient publication," we know not. It contains throughout numerous references to both ancient and modern writers, with nothing to distinguish between references made by the original writers and the compiler. Among the authors and books referred to, are the Bible; Herodotus, who died four hundred and thirteen years before Christ; Pliny, who lived in the first century; Aulus Gellius, who lived in the second century; Jambilichus, an eminent philosopher and scholar, who lived in Chalcis Coelosyria, in the fourth century; Scaliger, who died in 1609; and many others of far more modern date; showing conclusively that many of the references could not have been made by the original author.

This curious history commences by showing the cause of the separate professions, the reasons why architecture must have been the first, its superiority to all other mechanical professions. The Institution of Freemasonry is then described, and various opinions as to its origin quoted, and then the writer proceeds to describe all the mysteries heretofore alluded to, more briefly, but in substantially the same manner in which they are described in Dr. Oliver's lectures, and then comes an allusion to the "Dionysian Artificers, in very nearly the same language used by Dr. Mackey in his Lexicon; so nearly identical is it that no one can for a moment doubt that it is the source from whence Dr. Mackey drew his information.

I will quote a few sentences from what follows the writer's description of the Dionysian Mysteries:

"Hitherto," says our ancient author, "we have considered the Dionysian Mysteries under an unpropitious aspect. Let us now trace them in their progress from Europe to Asia, etc.

"About one thousand years before Christ, (very near the time, you will mark, my brethren, of the building of the temple,) the inhabitants of Attica, complaining of the narrowness of their territory, and the unfruitfulness of its soil, went in quest of more extensive and fertile settlements. Being joined by a number of the inhabitants of surrounding provinces, they sailed to Asia Minor, drove out the inhabitants, seized upon the most eligible situations, and united them under the name of Ionia. As the Greeks, prior to the Ionic migration, had made considerable progress in the arts and sciences, they carried these along with them into the new territories, and introduced into Ionia the mysteries of Minerva and Dionysius before they were corrupted by the licentiousness of the Athenians. In a short time the Asiatic colonies surpassed the mother country in prosperity and science. Sculpture in marble and the Doric and Ionic orders were the result of their ingenuity. They returned even into Greece; they communicated to their ancestors the inventions of their own country, and instructed them in that style of architecture which has been the administration of succeeding ages. For these improvements, the world is indebted to the Dionysian Artificers, an association of scientific men who possessed the exclusive privilege of erecting temples, theatres, and other public buildings in Asia Minor."

This ancient writer then goes on to describe the principles, rites, ceremonies, and customs of this society, as I have before remarked, very much as Dr. Mackey describes them.

Now, mark the manifest error into which Brother Mackey has fallen, by not observing with sufficient care those very important things—when history is concerned—dates. He himself says: "The priests of Dionysius, having devoted themselves to architecture, established, about a thousand years before the Christian era, a society of builders in Asia Minor, who are styled by the ancient writers 'The Fraternity of Dionysian Architects,' and to this society was exclusively confined the privilege of erecting temples and other buildings."

All writers concur in fixing the date of the commencement of the building of the Temple at 1015 or 1016 years before Christ. This ancient writer, from whom I have quoted, fixes the time when the inhabitants of Attica went into Asia Minor as about one thousand years before Christ, and, in Asia Minor, and after this migration, this society of Dionysian Architects was formed, if I comprehend history aright. Could it have been formed, and have become so eminent as to have been sent, as Bro. Mackey supposes, to assist King Solomon in building the temple, in fifteen or sixteen years after those who formed it left Attica for Asia Minor? I think not, and the more I examine this subject the more I am confirmed in the belief that we should not go back of the erection of the Temple for the formation of our Masonic institution, with its rites, customs, ceremonies, and symbols, as it now exists.

Doctor Oliver, after having completed his very voluminous and interesting writings on Freemasonry, closes with a "valedictory," in which he says, speaking of a certain point of time in his own writings, "the plan being now fairly opened, it appeared to me to be necessary, before proceeding further, to obviate an objection which had been raised against the antiquity and originality of the Order, by bringing forward a series of authentic evidences to prove that Freemasonry stands proudly on its own basis, without being indebted to the religious mysteries of heathen nations; for it was confidently affirmed by some respectable authorities, that the death of Osiris, Adonis, or Bacchus, which was celebrated in those institutions, constituted the prototype of the mysteries of Freemasonry."

Our learned brother then proceeds to mention some of the arguments used by Voltaire, Volney, Professor Robison, and others in relation to this subject, and states the course he pursued in publishing his "History of Initiation," already referred to, and concludes by saying that all these things are "entirely unconnected with the traditional origin of Freemasonry." Brother Mackey is indeed a bright and shining light of our Order, but, with all deference, and in the most affectionate fraternal spirit, I am constrained to say that in some things his zeal has outrun his prudence, and he has, in my opinion, come to some conclusions that his premises do not justify. He is not alone, however, for there are many who would fain carry Freemasonry back to the Garden of Eden.

I am content to go back 2,870 years, and claim that we can establish that antiquity, and that he who seeks to go back further only loses himself in the clouds of mystery that he can not fathom—the horrors of initiations that chill his blood—and the uncertain myths of ages of barbarism, immorality, and crime! And I rejoice to find that the good and learned brother, Dr. Oliver, after all his investigations and writings, came very much to the same conclusions that I had before I ever read a line of his works.

And now I will return from this long digression.

During the building of King Solomon's Temple, there is no sort of doubt Freemasonry took somewhat the form and shape which it now bears—I think I am justified in saying all the material form—and at the building of that Temple occurred a tragedy which has given the most striking feature to Freemasonry as it now stands, and no doubt has stood from the days of our first Grand Masters to this day. As that tragedy occurred near the closing of the work, it is highly probable that it took the place of some other legend among those who bore away from Jerusalem the system of organization used at the Temple. It may even have been instituted by Solomon himself, in commemoration of the beloved victim, and as an appropriate close of the advancement of a brother to the summit of Ancient Craft Masonry.

The practical masonry of the Temple having ceased, and the Temple having been dedicated to the Most High, the workmen scattered abroad, and bore with them into other countries the perfect system of organization which had rendered the work upon the Temple so acceptable.

For seven years were they engaged in the work; for, as Josephus says, though it was a great work, and required wonderful and surprising application, yet God, for whom it was made, so far co-operated therewith, that it was finished in the forementioned number of years.

And have we not a right to conclude that the same co-operation of the Almighty rendered all the arrangements in regard to the workmen perfect, both as a system of labor and one of morality?

For seven years the Entered Apprentices, Fellow-Crafts, and Master Masons, under their several leaders, had gone harmoniously onward. As the sun rose in the east, they cheerfully responded to the stroke of the Master's gavel; when it reached the meridian, the voice of the Junior Warden was heard calling the Craft from labor to refreshment, and anon calling them again to labor; and as the glorious orb sank in the west, the glad sound came from the Senior Warden that they should approach him, receive their wages, and go satisfied to their retirement.

All saw the beauty of the work they had accomplished. They saw it filled with the glory of the God of heaven; they looked back, as the man looks back to the home of his childhood; they thought of the happy days and months and years they had enjoyed with their brethren, and more, of the perfect order that had always existed; and they bore their rules, regulations, and forms of labor, as if they had been their household gods, with them whereever they went.

From that time onward Freemasonry gradually became theoretical, symbolical, and emblematical; or, as it has been defined, "a sublime system of morality, veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols and emblems."

[To be continued.]

◆

Cryptic Masonry.

WASHINGTON, PA., Feb. 15, An.-Dep. 2869.

Editors of the Keystone:

In my last letter I gave you the reasons why the Grand Council of this State confers the degree of Royal Master as the first degree of the council. Following the same thought, it is natural to suppose, that the Super Excellent Master would follow, because the incidents upon which it is founded are those immediately connected with the first temple. In the former you have all the arrangements made in regard to its erection; in the latter, its destruction and the overthrow of the Jewish people. Every Royal Arch Mason when he is exalted to this supreme and august degree, feels that the history is not perfect, that there is a link wanting in the chain to make it perfect, finished, and complete, and the Cryptic Mason, after he is in possession of it, feels that he has found the last link.

I know full well that I will be met with the assertion that the Super Excellent Master's degree has been but lately added to the degrees of the council, and that in some States they do not confer it. This assertion, however, does neither destroy its antiquity nor the facts upon which it is founded. Let us carefully examine the incidents connected with the degree, and determine its relative position, discarding the idea whether it is of ancient or modern origin, for all the degrees of the Ancient York Rite, as now practiced in the United States, except the primitive degrees of E. A., F. C., and M. M., are peculiarly American by right of invention, and among the number we claim that of Super Excellent Master.

The S. E. M. degree refers to the last night in the reign of Zedekiah, when the forces of Nebuchadnezzar besieged the City of Jurusalem, destroyed the temple, took Zedekiah prisoner, slew his wife, children, and nobles, put out his eyes, and carried him and the children of Israel into Babylonish captivity, and demonstrating to the Free and Accepted Mason, that unless he possesses a firm and abiding faith in the GREAT I AM, unless he lives to the requirements of His law, unless he worship Him in spirit and in truth, God will punish him. Hence it is evident, as our manuals assert, that this degree teaches and inculcates true devotion in spirit and in truth, in contradistinction to idolatry—teaching, by the sad example of Zedekiah, life's vicissitudes, and urges us by precept and example to become wiser and better.

What high and holy thoughts are concentrated in the symbolism of this degree! The square, the triangle, and the circle. In the former our minds are irresistibly carried back to the erection of the tabernacle in the wilderness by Moses, Aholiab, and Bezaleel, divided nto three parts, a type of the temple which was built at Jerusalem. Of the ark and the altar, and the candlestick, and table of shewbread, of the vestments of the High Priest, and of that peculiar sentence, Holiness to the Lord, which Royal Arch Masons admire, venerate, and love. Nay, it tells us that this self-same tabernacle accompanied the children of Israel in all their journeyings, with its divinely appointed furniture, until the promised land was reached.

The Triangle, in its three equal sides, demonstrates the three equal attributes of Jehovah, viz: His Omniscience, His Omnipotence, and His Omnipresence; while the circle reminds us not only of the lesson we were taught as E. A., of a point within the circle, but proves clearly and satisfactorily that while it is an emblem of friendship, yet the friendships of life are easily broken. But this circle proclaims to the Super Excellent Master, that while the friendship of life is changeable and evanescent, yet it is especially an emblem of eternity, which can never, never be broken, and which encourages the hope, full of immortality in the divine promises. Yes, the circle is an emblem of eternity.

"Archangels day
And night into its glories look; the saints,
The elders round the throne, old in the years
Of Heaven, examine it perpetually;
And every hour, get clearer, ampler views
Of right and wrong—see virtue's beauty more;
See vice more utterly depraved and vile;
And this, with a more perfect hatred, hate,
That, daily love with a more perfect love."

The history of this degree embraces the whole history of the children of Israel from Saul, the first King of Israel, down to its last King, Zedekiah—embracing a period of four hundred and ninety-seven years, during which time twenty-two kings reigned.

It might also be proper to remark, for the benefit of the Masonic student, that Zedekiah was the son of Josiah, that he was established on the throne by Nebuchadnezzar, to whom he swore fealty by the name of God—but from the Bible we learn that, notwithstending all the kindness of Nebuchadnezzar, he rebelled against him, forsook the religion of his fathers, and God, to punish him, destroyed both the temple and Zedekiah, and scattered the Jewish people, and to this day they have never been acknowledged as a separate nation.

Fraternally yours, in S. V.

ALFRED CREIGH.

◆

History of the R. A. Degree.

It is very difficult, at this late day, to trace the history of the Royal Arch as a separate and independent degree. That it was originally connected with the degree of Master Mason, there can be no doubt; but whether it was incorporated with the Master Mason's degree ritualistically, or whether it was added as an addenda, can not now be ascertained.

It was first worked, or supposed to have been, as a separate degree in England about the year 1745, and about the same time it was claimed to have been worked in a Lodge in Sterling, Scotland, but of this latter fact there is no well-defined evidence. The first conclusive evidence of its existence in Scotland was in 1778, when it was worked by St. James Lodge, in Ayr: the same Lodge, a few years later, conferred also the degree of Knight Templar. In this country the degree was conferred in Lodges as early as 1767. The history of the degree, if it were possible to collect it, would form a very interesting chapter; but it is to be feared that it is now too late to procure such a history with any minuteness or authenticity.

If the members attach importance to Masonry, it should have a history—a written history. But such a production will require toil, earnest, continued toil, and it is to be feared with little recompense. If Masonic history could be woven into a romance, and be called a novel, it would find purchasers and readers, and the author and publisher compensated.—Review.

◆

AS PAST MASTERS, have we, as we solemnly promised when we were installed, endeavored to work diligently, live creditably, and act honorably by all men; and have we kept our agreement to promote the general good of society, to cultivate the social virtues, and to propagate the knowledge of the art?

As Most Excellent Masters, have we availed ourselves of all suitable occasions to impart light to such as were in darkness; and has our deportment in the outward walks of life been such as to maintain that fair and unstained reputation which should ever distinguish those who have passed through the solemn and impressive ceremonies of this beautiful degree?

Have we, as Royal Arch Masons, attentively studied and treasured up the lessons of wisdom, to be found in that sacred Book of the Law, which though once buried and lost for gloomy ages, beneath the ruins of the temple, has, in this age of improvement, been multiplied by countless numbers, and so cheapened as to place it within the reach of the poorest and the most destitute?—E. H. English.

◆

An Examination.

There are differences of opinion as to the proper method of examining visiting brethren. Some stick to a beaten routine, while others ask such questions as may suggest themselves as tests. We make no decision as to which course may be correct, believing that both methods, or a mixture of both, may in certain cases be followed. A brief examination, if satisfactory, is always preferable, because the examining brother is always taken away from the labors of the lodge. The following mode described by the Evergreen is very brief indeed, and yet the examining brother must have "toed the mark," and astonished the would-be visitor.

Some fourteen years since, while Master of a flourishing lodge in Illinois, we had for a Junior Warden, a stalwart fellow, who, not to put too fine a point on it, needed "saving grace" as much as any man we ever knew. One night a seedy, self-recommended Masonic beggar, stumbled into the ante-room, and applied for admission. The J. W. was sent out to examine him, and that examination was about as follows: Beggar—"Be you boss?" J. W.—"Muchly," Beggar—"Well I want to go in, and have forgot the gripe and the pass." J. W.—(with a nod to the amused Tyler, who at once opened the door, which was at the head of a short flight of stairs)—"Well, I'll give them to you." Whereupon he took the fellow by the coat collar, and lifted him to his feet in a jiffy. Then grasping him forcibly by the neck, he led him to the door and remarked: "This is the gripe, and this (applying the toe of his boot to the seat of his breeches) is the pass," and incontinently the beggar disappeared into the outer darkness, and great was the fall thereof. It is scarcely necessary to say that the report of the committee was accepted and adopted.—Dispatch.

◆

AS A general rule, it is not the part of wisdom to advise the increase of Masonic bodies or encourage Masons to take more degrees. The profane come into the Order of Freemasonry without solicitation and without advice. This is a fundamental principle, and it is one of the impregnable safeguards. The law and the virtue of the blue lodge can never be waived without a sacrifice of honor and an injury to the Mason's profession. But after the Masonic aspirant has gained the first solid landing in the third degree, and has proved himself proficient, and an expert Master Mason, it can not be improper to tell him there is something beyond in which he might be interested, whenever he feels ready to pursue his journey toward the source of light. Then let him choose his own time to start. He eventually becomes a Royal Arch Mason; and the chapter degrees are certainly in an unfinished state, so far as the plan and philosophy of the Order are concerned. The council, though properly distinct in jurisdiction, constitutes the supplement to the Royal Arch, and the Mason who has brought to light hidden treasures of great benefit to the raft is entitled to know something of the manner of their concealment. In short, if he be a zealous and worthy Royal Arch Mason, he should be encouraged to take the council degrees; not by persuasion, but by ready access to them. Every true Royal Arch Mason should be admitted, as speedily as possible, a Royal and Select Master, if he desire it. To carry out this design it is requisite to have a council established wherever there is a chapter, and that the fees for the council degrees should be kept at the lowest possible rate.—Thos. E. Garrett, Mo.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Editor,
IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY

H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

One copy, one year..$1 25

All communications should be addressed to H. G. Reynolds, or The Masonic Trowel, Springfield, Ill.

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for The Trowel.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

Notice.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., MARCH* 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

◆

Re-Application for Affiliation.

Some misapprehension exists in regard to the matter of affiliation. A Master Mason, bearing a demit, applies to a lodge for admission to membership. The demit is evidence of good standing in the lodge granting it. His application is testimony of good-will to the membership of the lodge where he seeks admission. He has done his part. It becomes the lodge to regard him favorably, but the duty of searching into his character and personal attributes are none the less than in the case of an applicant for the degrees in Masonry. Without expecting perfection, or freedom from faults, the committee have a right to know that he has no vices. They have a right to know, and should know, that his affiliation would add to the strength of the lodge. Being satisfied, and making a favorable report, then comes the ballot.

Here comes a principle never to be lost sight of. No brother, whatever may be his standing, is to be admitted to membership to the grief or discomfort of any member. The lodge owes protection to its own members in everything pertaining to their personal comfort and rights. It will be urged, truthfully, too, that this privilege may be abused. This does not affect the principle. Masonry, like the State, has general laws. The lodge should not have admitted one who can be governed by malice, or who will vent his meanness or spite through the ballot. If such should be the case, the fault lies in the action of the lodge, and not in the law. The presumption is, that every member is a "just and upright Mason." No greater calamity can befall a lodge than to have faulty, mean blocks. However well-concealed their defects, they will surely come to the surface, and in no place with more certainty than in the ballot. We think that every Mason can see this at a glance. In general, justice or charity govern the ballot; malice and meanness seldom. When these latter prevail, if a good man is kept out, a bad one is not let in. So no general harm results. But the broad mantle of charity hides many defects. Every Mason is bound to act justly, but there are places and positions in the temple where charity should be excluded. If any brother is satisfied that an application for degrees or affiliation will add no strength, he stands upon his conscience before the Invisible One, and justice requires him to say NO by his ballot. And with the Invisible One let the secret rest, until the "thoughts of all hearts are revealed." Under such circumstances, a brother applying for admission may be rejected. He took the risk, and should cheerfully abide the result.

The question here arises, how soon can the rejected brother apply again? Before answering this, we observe that the 42d section Grand Lodge By-Laws, in regard to mistakes or misapprehensions, may be made to apply to such cases. We say, may, because it is not certain that such is a fair construction, but if any lodge should apply it to such a case, we do not think it would be seriously objected to.

When can the rejected brother apply again? If he has any personal pride, or self-respect, or if the lodge has any respect for its own rejecting brother, or for individual manhood, never. We think the one ballot in such cases is, and should be, final.

But where shall the brother go? This is to be wrought out in another article. He has lost no rights or standing.

◆

Disqualification to Vote.

We have been called upon lately, in several instances, to decide to what extent a brother may be disqualified to vote by the by-laws of his lodge.

If by-laws could be framed to meet individual cases, there would be a great variety of them; they should be based upon general principles, and be treated in the same manner, for no law can stand the test of criticism that is enacted for a mere temporary exigency. There are some matters of voting that no lodge regulation can reach. So long as a Master Mason is a member, there are some duties for him to perform, no matter what his immediate status may be, which he can not lawfully avoid, and which the Master of the Lodge should take care to see performed.

The Grand Lodge By-Laws require a two-thirds vote of all the members present to suspend or expel, and a like number to restore a suspended Mason, or to recommend an expelled member to restoration; the same laws require that it shall take a unanimous vote of all the members present to recommend an expelled member to re-instatement to lodge membership. No principle of criminal law is better settled, than that an accused person shall be held innocent until he is proven guilty. He may pass through the hands of the examining magistrate, the coroner's inquest, and the grand jury, where but one side is usually heard—may be held in prison to await his trial, or be required to give bail for his appearance, yet all these steps, taken to secure the ends of justice and for the security of society, are of no weight when arraigned before the court and a trial jury, in determining the question of innocence or guilt. Up to that hour, if on bail, he may vote or do any other act that any other citizen may do.

The principle of the criminal law in this respect is true in Masonry. In all trials, all members present except the accuser and accused must vote. If it takes the vote of a member who is behind with his dues to make more than one-third to acquit, the same rule requires it to be given. The same is true in regard to restorations and re-instatements.

So, too, every member present must vote upon an application for initiation, advancement, or affiliation, unless excused by a unanimous vote.

How far a lodge may go in disqualifying members in voting by their by-laws, in the absence of any grand lodge regulation or provision in the Old Charges, is a matter of some question. That some bar may be interposed to prevent lawlessness and disintegration not only seems right, but indispensable. On all questions relating, incidentally as well as directly, to matters pertaining to trials, ballot, advancement, affiliation, proficiency, restorations, and re-instatements, every member should vote in all, upon the principle that the greater includes the less.

But upon questions involving the outlay of money, the ordinary business of the lodge, and in the election of officers, every lodge has the power and the right to say that if a member is in arrears for dues, he shall not vote, unless he can show that his delinquency is not his fault. The disposition of such delinquents furnishes a theme for another article.

◆

Objections by a Fellow Craft.

The question has been asked us, "can a Fellow Craft object to the advancement of an Entered Apprentice?" A Fellow Craft has an unquestionable right to object to the advancement of an E. A. or the initiation of a candidate; so may an E. A. object to an initiation.

The query then arises, what weight is such an objection entitled to? The 45th section of the Grand Lodge By-Laws, Illinois, reads thus: "Advancement to the degrees may be stayed at any time, for good reasons, by the lodge or Master."

No. 16, Standing Resolutions, is in the following words:

"The lodge has no right to interfere with the right of private ballot; and that, if a member of a lodge objects to conferring a degree upon a petitioner, even after the ballot is passed and is found fair, and does not disclose the reasons therefor, he stands in the same position as if he had cast a black ball, and his reasons can not be demanded by his lodge, nor should the degree be conferred until the objection is removed."

1. Any member may object to an initiation, passing, or raising, without reasons, without question, and without censure, upon the presumption that his motives or reasons are good.

2. The lodge has the power to stay a candidate at any time; so has the Master; but the reasons must be good. In the case of an objecting member who, of course, is a Master Mason, neither the Master nor the lodge is entitled to reasons, unless they are voluntarily given; if not given, the will of the objecting member is supreme; but such is not the case with an objection by a F. C. or E. A., for they are not members. The objection is subject to consideration by the lodge or by the Master, and if the reasons are insufficient in the estimation of the lodge, or if deemed frivolous by the lodge, they may seem otherwise to the Master. Either of the two powers may stay the candidate. If considered not good reasons by both the lodge and the Master, the objection is thrown aside.

3. What are good reasons? That is for either the Master or the lodge to decide. We have no objection to giving our opinion, as we have been solicited to do. If we were acting as Master, and a F. C. or E. A. were to object to conferring a degree, we should consider the character of the objector; if such in mind, ability, honor, and worth, as to preclude the probability of bad motives or puerile reasons, we should not ask him for them; but if we had reason to suppose that the objector might be easily influenced, or would consider his personal objections too much, we should want his reasons. They would be sacred secrets with us. A Fellow Craft is higher in grade than an E. A., and in due time is to become a candidate for the third degree. We should consider carefully whether the reasons were such as would make it uncomfortable for the F. C. to be a member in the same lodge with the E. A. or a candidate for initiation. We should consider carefully whether the reasons were such that the good of Masonry required that the candidate should be stayed.

An E. A. is a Mason, and we should take the same course with his objection, precisely, as we should that of a F. C.

4. A member objecting to the conferring of a degree without reasons, whatever his motive may be, is shielded by his membership; but a F. C. or E. A. who makes a similar objection, must give reasons if required, and by so doing subjects himself to the malicious, mercenary, or captious use of the black ball, or to an objection, by a member who strikes his blow and is shielded by his silence. It argues some manliness and nerve for one who is himself a candidate to make an objection. The very precariousness of such an objector's position, would induce us to give full consideration to his reasons.

◆

Grand Lodge Sovereignty.

Some unexpected work in the office of Grand Secretary of the Grand Chapter—the protracted absence of the Deputy Grand Secretary, requiring some assistance to Bro. Miner—and an unusual and unlooked for press of other duties, have prevented us from devoting the time necessary to consult books and authorities, and to the study of so important a subject. At present, it occupies the first place in our thoughts, but some new ideas will prevent us from giving form and expression to them until we are fully prepared. We hope to be able to demonstrate that the Grand Lodge of Illinois is sovereign, Masonically, over all Masons and all territory in the State.

◆

Bombay, India.

We are in receipt of three beautiful photograph likenesses of the handsome face and person of W. Bro. H. H. Avron, Masonic Librarian of Bombay, India. One represents him as Master, another as Librarian, and the third with our Fellow Craft's chart clearly photographed before him, as he is giving instruction. We have them framed and put up in our store, and we return the W. brother our sincere thanks.

◆

Fire and Loss.

By a letter from R. W. Wilson Hoag, we learn that at mid-day January 18, the hall of Paxton Lodge No. 416, at Paxton, Ford county, was destroyed by fire.

A large sum had been expended in fitting up. Some furniture was saved in a damaged condition, and some relief is afforded by insurance. The Odd-Fellows kindly permit them to use their hall, until the brethren can fit up again. Measures are taking to start a Council R. and S. Masters, and, in no wise discouraged, Paxton Lodge and Ford Chapter will soon be in full armor again.

◆

1842.—Will some brother send a copy of proceedings to James H. Hart, Shawneetown, Ill., for the year 1842, with a bill for the same, to enable Warren Lodge No. 14 to make up a complete set of proceedings; the lodge will pay a good price for the same, or exchange proceedings of 1845, 1850 (special), 1855, 1859, 1861, or 1863.

◆

St. Joseph, Missouri.

The following list of officers ought to have appeared in the last number:

St. Joseph Chapter No. 14.—C. A. Rowley, H. P.; L. F. Weimar, King; R. J. S. Wise, Scribe; W. P. Sanders, Treas.; George Addy, Sec.

St. Joseph Lodge No. 78.—James A. Adams, W. M.; Philip Arnholt, S. W.; John Pinger, J. W.; John B. Howard, Treas.; R. J. S. Wise, Sec.

Zeredatha Lodge No. 189.—Chas. F. Knight, W. M.; W. L. Craig, S. W.; Daniel O'Toole, Jr., J. W.; John Williams, Treas.; John L. Jourdan, Sec.

◆

From a Master.

We give place to the following extract from a letter recently received, similar to so many of a like character, that we have nearly ceased to mention them. We commend the leading idea to the attention of Worshipful Masters:

> I have long since been of the opinion that every Master should see to it that the members of his lodge, but more especially the initiates, should early be made acquainted with the advantages that may be gained by regularly reading The Trowel, and it is with a view of having it where they may see it as well as hear of it, that I have ordered a copy for the lodge. I can not but think that if the Masters of the six hundred or more lodges of this jurisdiction would interest themselves as they might, you would soon find your subscription list a formidable one, and the lodges and individual members thereof greatly benefited. Would it not be well to call the attention of Masters of lodges to this subject occasionally.

◆

Animosity Dying Out.

A good brother who acted as agent for us in the northern part of this State for several years, is now residing in the State of Iowa—a State, by the way, classed now among the three Western Powers. He says:

> On coming here I found myself surrounded by brethren who expressed themselves hostile to the Grand Secretary of Illinois; but I soon succeeded in procuring a club for The Trowel, and two years ago I presented, and Cedar Lodge No. 11 accepted, my offering of Bro. Reynolds' photograph, and it remains suspended in the S. E. The feeling of animosity has almost entirely disappeared.

◆

Earl of Dalhousie.

A splendid engraving of the Earl of Dalhousie, Grand Master of Scotland, came with one of the numbers of the (London) Freemason's Magazine, which we have placed in a frame for our sanctum.

◆

Sycamore Commandery No. 15.—Daniel Dustin, E. C.; H. B. Peirce, Gen'o; S. O. Vaughan, C. G.; Charles T. Stuart, Treas.; Royal D. Branch, Recorder.

◆

Craftsman's Assurance Company,

Friend Reynolds:

I notice in the February issue of The Trowel a paragraph in relation to the Craftsman's Life Assurance Company of New York, and I respectfully ask a portion of your space to say a few words on the subject:

The idea seems to obtain that the company is being run as a Masonic organization. It has nothing to do with Masonry, beyond the fact that it seeks to illustrate a Masonic principle, in urging the brethren to provide against the wants of old age and death, by securing policies of life insurance while yet in the days of youth, and before the evil days have come upon them. To this end, the stockholders have invested $200,000, and bound themselves, by a provision in the charter, to receive only legal interest therefor; the directors and committees give their time without fee or reward, and thus the entire profits of the business are given to the policy-holders for their benefit in reducing the amount of premiums required, or in increasing the ultimate amount to be paid by the company at death. Lodges have been invited to avail themselves of this advantage, and extra premiums have been offered them to induce concerted action for their own benefit.

Do you notice anything specially unmasonic in urging men to provide against the contingencies of old age, or to put by a modicum for the benefit of their dependent families, should death suddenly call them away? Are the men who give their money to form the capital upon which these assurances rest, at a less rate of interest than they could obtain for it elsewhere, to be specially condemned? Can any one point out a single name in the list of directors that could, by any possibility, be lent to any transaction not of the most honorable and straightforward character? If not, do you notice any good reason why Bro. Mitchell, or any other man, should "give the concern his hearty opposition, now and forever."

Fraternally,

John W. Simons.

◆

Look out for him!

Murphysboro, Ill., March 9, 1869.

Editor Masonic Trowel:

Dear Sir and Bro.—From the 14th day of January last until about eight days ago, we had among us a man calling himself Peter Johnson. He worked here one month, and during that time behaved himself in an exemplary manner. After that time he took to spreeing, and wound up by leaving his boarding-house, kept by a brother Mason, leaving (in arrears) before breakfast, and wearing off an overcoat belonging to the brother boarding him. He was also in debt to a brother of whom he bought goods and borrowed money. The man undoubtedly is or has been a Mason, and claims to hail from Escambia Lodge No. 15, Florida, which lodge has been written to, but no answer received as yet.

He is a man of small stature; has heavy, dark moustache, side and chin whiskers; a pale, and rather rough face; speaks English very fluently; is very well mannered; during eating, wipes his mouth very frequently with a handkerchief; says he was born on the Island of Cuba, and raised from a child in New Jersey, where he professes to have been made a Mason; claims to speak six or seven different languages; usually writes individual matters in Spanish; claims to have been chief engineer of a marine engine, lately, at Pensacola, where he got seriously hurt by some accident, and was thence taken to a place about eight or nine miles south of Iuka, Miss., where he claims to have lain sick several months just before coming here.

He says he has traveled by water to most ports of the world—among them, ports in China, which he visited as "coolie agent." He is 42 years old; claims to have a daughter living with his mother at Havana, Cuba. He is a first-rate business man; writes a beautiful round hand.

He wore off a heavy black overcoat, lined with black and white checked flannel; a dark coat, with one row of buttons, under the same; dark pants; had a satchel containing some underclothes.

Very fraternally yours,

Chas. W. Shimer, W. M.
Murphysboro Lodge No. 498.

◆

The Little Chief is published at Indianapolis, Indiana, by Shortridge & Alden, at 75 cents per year. It is designed for children, and is a pretty good work—worth fully the price.

Tidings.

Items.

The railroad business in the United States affords employment for 420,000 men.

Iowa is an Indian word, pronounced E-O-Wah, and means "always at home."

Hartford, Conn., has built a School House which seats 1,300 scholars, and cost $185,000.

The rates of passage by steamer from San-Francisco to New York, are—first cabin outside rooms, $202; dining saloon, $162; second cabin, $116; steerage, $71.

The Grand Lodge of Michigan convened at Detroit, Jan. 12. A. T. Metcalf of Kalamasoo, was elected Grand Master; M. A. Partridge, of Birmingham, Deputy; Thomas N. Lee, of Houghton, Deputy for the Upper Peninsula; E. R. Landon, Detroit, S. G. W.; J. V. Lambertson, Rochester, J. G. W.; Rufus W. Landon, Niles, Grand Treasurer; James Fenton, Detroit, Grand Secretary.

Illinois furnished the New York market, last year, 165,668 cattle, of which number, 46,027 were taken from Champaign county.

The Supreme Court U. S. has decided that coin contracts can be enforced.

At the recent term of the Supreme Court in this State, Hon. O. H. Miner was admitted an Attorney and Counsellor at law.

Thanks to Senator Yates, and Messrs. Bromwell, Logan, Marshall, Ross, Cook, Judd, and Burr, for Congressional documents.

We are under many obligations to our esteemed brother, Hon. D. H. Morgan, Representative from Lawrence and Wabash, for several copies of the Adjutant General's Report. Bro. Morgan is always at his post, and is one of the most sagacious and intelligent members of the House.

James T. Brady, a celebrated lawyer in New York, and a member of Ivanhoe Lodge, died February 6, in the 54th year of his age. Notwithstanding his connection with Freemasonry, he received extreme unction, and the Catholics made much display at his funeral.

In the Masonic Asylum of England, for aged and decayed Freemasons, 484 have received relief since 1842, at a cost of $140,000. In the Widow's Home, 109 have been relieved at a cost of $55,000 within the same time.

Grand Inspector Pricket has completed a course of lectures at Bear Creek, Hillsboro, Irving, and Butler.

The Methodists, both male and female, are to vote on the question of lay representation.

Rev. Ammi Nichols, of Braintree, Vt., is 88 years old—has preached 64 years, of which time he has preached in Braintree 58 years.

It is estimated that there are more than 400,000 affiliated Masons within the territorial limits of the United States, and that of these not more than 36,000 are subscribers for any Masonic publication.

Public Debt—Bearing coin interest, $2,107,850,050; bearing currency interest, $71,410,000; matured debt not presented for payment, $6,910,996; bearing no interest, $424,191,720; grand total, $2,610,362,707.

Kansas City, Mo., has a population of 31,140.

M. L. Sullivan has a farm of 40,000 acres in Ford county, and John Alexander has one of 23,000 acres in Champaign county. Too large.

Louisiana—Grand Lodge.—Samuel M. Todd, New Orleans, Grand Master; S. G. Parsons, Deputy; Amos Kent, S. G. W.; John L. Barrett, J. G. W.; James C. Batchelor, New Orleans, Grand Secretary. Grand Chapter.—Samuel M. Todd, Grand High Priest; S. G. Parsons, Deputy; R. G. Stirling, G. King; Hugh Breen, G. Scribe; J. C. Batchelor, Grand Secretary. Grand Council.—H. R. Swasey, New Orleans, Grand Master; Rufus L. Bruce, Deputy; John G. McWilliams, Th. Ill.; H. P. Buckley, G. P. C. W.; Gustavus Sontag, Grand Recorder. Grand Commandery.—J. P. Hornor, Grand Commander; J. A. Stevenson, Deputy; W. R. Whitaker, G. Gen.; M. A. Colongue, G. C. G.; H. R. Swasey, G. Prel.; Gustavus Sontag, Grand Recorder.

Comp. Morgan, Secretary at Watseka, says that the new chapter is out of debt and progressing finely.

The Fremont Tribune, published at Fremont, Nebraska, comes to us with an eloquent address delivered by Rev. J. A. Van Anda, December 29.

The Holy Lodge of St. John, chartered June 24, 1734, at Portsmouth, was the first lodge established in New Hampshire.

The Boston Masonic Monthly says it prints forty instead of thirty-six pages. Adding one to nine makes ten. Its What Not calls our notice of the Monthly friendly. If we had classed it among the Peorians, we presume our notice would have been very friendly.

The Chicago cheese trade is estimated at $900,000 annually.

Thanks to P. G. M. Bromwell for a Directory of Churches, Masonic bodies, and other societies.

Governor Palmer's father died recently at Litchfield, Montgomery county, aged about 80 years. He stood High in Madison and Montgomery counties, and was a devoted member of the Baptist Church.

We tender to Hon. Philip Swigert, Senator, of Frankfort, Ky., for ourself and for our Grand Secretary, our warm and sincere thanks for duplicate Legislative biographical sketches of the late Governor, Lazarus W. Powell, and John L. Helm, both deceased.

Ill. Bro. Daniel Sickels, Secretary General, will please accept our thanks for a copy of the proceedings of the Supreme Council, held at New York last June.

The next session of the Supreme Council G. Ins. Gen. A. & A. Scottish Rite, will be held in Boston on the 16th of June next.

Grand Lecturer Dewey says of the lodges at Galesburg: "all is peace and harmony within our borders at Galesburg. All the lodges are doing well."

We were not quite sure in regard to the Hall of Monitor Lodge in our last number, but we now learn that it is occupied by Monitor Lodge alone. We have often asked ourself why the lodge is named "Monitor." Our solution is, that it is emblematic of Watch Manufactory in that thriving city.

Grand Lecturer Ashley returned to Kankakee February 27, from lecturing O. H. Miner Lodge, only to find the Masonic hall, with all its jewels, furniture, fixtures, clothing, and charters, consumed. The loss is full $3,000, and only $1,500 insurance. The Secretary had the record and seals of Kankakee Lodge and Chapter at his office. Bro. Ashley goes on his present tour to Caberry U. D., Onarga, Watseka, Forrest, and Gilman. He reports peace and quiet in his district.

R. W. Leander Church, of Woodstock, is again lecturing. He has posted the new lodges at Capron and Jefferson, and is now lecturing at Coal Valley, Rock Island county.

Royal and Select Masters, New York.—The Grand Council met at Albany, February 2. A committee was appointed to confer with the Grand Commandery, and request that all candidates should be in possession of the Cryptic degrees. Charles H. Platt was elected Grand Master; John Boolo, Deputy; James McCreadie, P. I. G. M; John D. Williams, Prin. Con.; and Josiah Shove, New York, Grand Recorder.

In California there is one woman to three men; in Nevada, one to eight; and in Colorado, one to twenty.

The feathers of a full grown ostrich will sell for $100 per year.

Those who wrong others, generally slander them to cover their own infamy.

R. W. Bro. Julius L. Dewey is busy lecturing. A good brother of Altona Lodge says of him; "His manner of instructing is pleasing, and he gives a clear and distinct understanding to the listener."

Grand Chapter—New York.—The annual convocation was held at Albany, February 2. Sixteen charters for new chapters were granted. The matter of the degrees of Royal and Select Master was considered, and jurisdiction over them declined. The Grand Chapter has taken possession of the order of High Priesthood, and fifty-nine High Priests were consecrated. John W. Simons, of New York, was elected Grand High Priest; R. G. Williams, Deputy; J. B. Chaffee, Grand King; David F. Fay, Grand Scribe; and Christopher G. Fox, of Buffalo, Grand Secretary.

George Peabody has given away $6,135,000.

The crops in the South are estimated at $400,000,000.

California has 475 miles of railroad in operation.

It is estimated that the corn crop of the United States, this year, is 900,000,000 bushels; wheat, 220,000,000 bushels.

◆

From Peoria.

Peoria, February 15, 1869.

Editor of Trowel:

Dear Brother:—Thinking you would like to know how the work goes on in our city, I seize the present opportunity to give you an item. The different bodies of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, as you are probably aware, have been for some time established at Yates City. The members having no hall suitable for working, and the Masons of Peoria being anxious to take the degrees, it was thought best to change the place of meeting to Peoria. Bro. W. A. Stevens, of Chicago, D———, came to Peoria on Friday, 12th inst., and conferred the degrees upon twenty, some being Chapter Masons, others Knights Templar. The Yates City officers having tendered their resignations, the following officers were elected to fill the vacancies:

Consistory.—Commander-in-Chief, J. E. Dow; First Lieut. Commander, W. O. Hewitt; Second Lieut. Commander, Samuel Tart; Minister of State and Grand Orator, W. J. Brown; Grand Chancellor, E. H. Collins; Grand Secretary, and K. of S., J. E. Pillsbury; Grand Treasurer, M. E. Erler; Grand Engineer and Architect, John Steiger; Hospitaller, Thos. Gantt; Master of Ceremonies, J. S. Carr; Standard Bearer, S. W. Ottenheimer; Captain of the Guard, Geo. Billings; Sentinel, S. P. Cummings.

Chapter.—Master, W. O. Hewitt; S. W., W. J. Brown; J. W., Alex. Hearst; G. O., H. W. Wells; Treasurer, M. E. Erler; Secretary, J. E. Pillsbury; Hospitaller; Thos. Gantt; Master of C., J. S. Carr; Capt. of G., J. R. Smith.

Council.—Sov. Prince G. M., W. J. Brown; Grand High Priest, Geo. Billings; Senior G. W., S. W. Ottenheimer; Junior G. W., Geo. Lloyd; G. Sec., K. of S. and A., J. E. Pillsbury; Treasurer, M. E. Erler;

Master of Ceremonies, J. S. Carr; Master of Entrances, John Steiger; Tyler, E. H. Collins.

Lodge of Perfection.—Thrice Potent Grand Master, J. S. Carr; Hiram of Tyre Deputy, Samuel Tart; Venerable Senior Grand Warden, W. J. Brown; Venerable Junior Grand Warden, S. W. Ottenheimer; Orator, H. W. Wells; Treasurer, M. E. Erler; Secretary, K. of S. and A., J. E. Pillsbury; Master of Ceremonies, Alex. Hearst; Captain of Guard, J. E. Dow; Hospitable Brother, Thos. Gantt; Tyler, S. P. Cummings.

On Saturday, the 13th, all the above officers, except Bros. Wells and Gantt, who were unable to be present, were duly installed by Illustrious Bro. Stevens, D——. J. E. P.

Impostors.

O'Fallon Lodge No. 576, Feb. 16, 1869.

Harman G. Reynolds, G. M. of State of Illinois:

Dear Sir and Brother:—Inclosed I send communication from Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. I also received a reply to my letter of inquiry.

W. McLeish is a sharper; he wanted assistance, has a very interesting family with him. We told him to tell us all he knew about Masonry, which he did. We then informed him we did not understand that kind of Masonry, and that we could not recognize him as a Mason.

Hoping he may meet such a reception wherever he goes, I respecfully remain,

Yours, fraternally,
L. Simmons, Secretary.

Grand Lodge of Massachusetts,
Office of Grand Secretary,
Boston, Feb. 11, 1869.

Grand Secretary Grand Lodge of Illinois:

R. W. Brother:—I have just received information from O'Fallon Lodge, within your jurisdiction, that one W. McLeish is at O'Fallon, and represents that he is a member of Joseph Warren Lodge, of this city. This McLeish is well known here. He is an impostor and a big scoundrel, and will probably give your lodges some trouble unless he is promptly met.

Fraternally yours,
Solon Thornton, Grand Secretary.

Expulsion.

At a meeting of J. D. Moody Lodge No. 510, A. F. & A. M., held at their hall in Iuka, Ill., on the evening of the 23d of January, A. L. 5869, by a unanimous vote of the Lodge, Bro. F. E. Williams was expelled from all the rights and privileges of Masonry.

Published by order of the lodge.

J. A. Irwin, Sec.

By Grand Ledge Lodge No. 179, at Grand Ledge, Michigan, May 30, 1868, Mr. Francis L. De Groff.

Published by request of lodge.

S. Chadwick, Sec.

High Priests, Kings and Scribes, as returned up to March 6th, and not heretofore Reported.

Nos. High Priests. Kings. Scribes.
13...Geo. Richards, Thomas Bollen, Wm. Amett.
14...H. B. Pierce, D. L. Zabriskie, C. C. Stevens.
16...Jos. Holland, R. Patton, C. Bodeman.
19...R. D. Hammond, J. B. Kyle, H. Ervin.
22...M. Hennoch, John Jassoy, James Walker.
25...S. Waggenseller, P. Weyhrich, S. Roney.
26...John M. Stillwell, Wm. Spurgin, Sam'l. S. Park.
27...S. S. White, H. C. Knowlton, E. H. Aiken.
30...A. H. Swain, J. A. Boynton, James Wilson.
31...P. A. Armstrong, A. M. Cleveland, John Jacobs.
40...J. A. Parker, Joel L. Cox, I. N. Lowe.
41...Michael Rogers, Spencer Ellsworth, T. E. Gapen
44...J. G. Mangold, H. W. Johnson, F. M. Youngblood.
48...A. T. Pipher, J. C. Johnson, E. T. Fisher.
49...Morris Holcomb, John Shuld, Frank Smith.
50...J. M. Henley, L. W. Falkner, C. F. Columbia.
53...Geo. H. Halliday, Chas. A. Walker, N. Boice.
54...W. W. Fisher, H. S. Parcels, George Tucker.
57...Sydney T. Osman, E. G. Allen, Charles Smith.
58...C. C. Halladay, James Clark, James M. Higby.
59...A. H. C. Barber, Eason Johnson, R. M. Ewing.
62...R. F. Cunningham, Jos. Hypes, G. W. Seaman.
65...C. F. Tenney, J. O. Sparks, T. T. Pettit.
67...J. F. Smith, B. T. Smith, James N. Hogg.
68...Sylvester Stevens, W. V. Thompson, C. Wilson.
70...Burns Archer, Wm. T. Martin, Jas. R. Patten.
71...Jos. H. Lufkins, A. H. Irwin, James Johnson.
73...J. W. Green, P. P. Parkhurst, W. M. Jackson.
74...Geo. E. Lounsbury, A. J. Dougherty, C. Wilson.
77...Jas. W. English, Jas. B. Samuel, Wm. R. Davis.
79...J. C. Corbus, Geo. Emerson. J. W. Edwards.
80...Ed. Blackshaw, R. A. Webber, E. Halbertstadt.
81...Cyrus D. Kendall, L. F. Rayburn, L. M. Plant.
83...Thomas W. Hay, R. S. Graham, Thos. L. Ross.
84...George W. Staley, Calvin Mitchell, J. G. Burch.
89...Harlow P. Walker, Daniel Hay, J. H. Sawyer.
90...J. B. Mulliken, A. W. Burnside, Geo. M. Peal.
92...J. N. Williams, W. H. Wineman, J. M. Bennington
94...G. W. Hartman, M. D. Coffeen, James Davis.
95...A. W. Martin, Adam Brewer, Silas Bruce.
99...H. B. Wright, J. E. Bliss, J. T. Bullard.
102...D. D. Shumway, B. F. Barnes, W. W. Anderson.
104...L. Slocum, T. G. Black, R. Brown.
107...J. H. Furnam, G. W. Culver, B. C. Whitcomb.
110...John W. Page, Edward Kipp, J. S. Jordan.
111...A. P. Lionberger, B. F. Newlon, Jno. Cooper, Sr.
112...E. A. Gove, Fred. Nodine, O. M. Southwell.
114...G. A. Woodford, L. N. Pittwood, C. F. McNeall.
115...O. H. Paddock, L. Johnson, W. W. Watkins.
117...N. P. Keyes, Jos. Slade, S. B. Brown.
118...W. B. Grimes, Nathan Kibler, John Skadel.
119...Hobart Hamilton, T. M. Stith, J. T. Brooks.
120...S. D. Kirkpatrick, D. C. Amsden, Thos. Tiller.
122...H. S. De Pew, T. J. Whitehead, W. Aird.
123...Wm. McLean, Henry Hosmer, John L. Kennar.
124...J. C. Reynolds, O. P. Hall, R. K. Hawley.
125—A. P. Forsyth, Samuel Shy, A. J. Hogue.
127...G. S. Barstow, Moore Conger, B. B. W. Locke.
128...Jos. B. Titus, W. B. Kilner, J. N. Sager.
131...Martin Nichols, Jas. Peirce, F. J. Urech.
132...Fountain Jonos, W. E. Eastham, C. C. Armitage.
133...J. W. Agard, H. M. Rogers, G. W. Scott.
134...Jas. Mayor, Jacob S. Ross, John Miller.

Masters and Wardens as Returned to March 6, and not yet Reported.

Nos. W. Masters. S. Wardens. J. Wardens.
14...F. L. Rhoades, Victor Karcher, A. D. Reddick.
28...H. C. Talbott, E. Voerster, Wm. Lofinck.
48...A. H. Barry, D. L. Zabriskie, J. H. Burley.
58...J. C. Johnson, A. T. Pipher, J. A. Piatt.
72...E. F. Henderson, Jas. Douglas, J. M. Staley.
81...Milo Winchell, John Rose, Geo. Strong.
106...D. G. Hammond, E. J. Jones, J. L. Fahnestock.
152...J. H. Worley, J. H. McGraff, J. C. Marshall.
156...John L. Orendorff, Oliver W. Spear, W. A. Jones.
158...Smith Searles, Jas. B. Perry, Chas. Colby.
210...R. B. Latham, Geo. W. Parker, J. A. Niles.
213...James T. Slack, Wm. Willis, David Huger.
222...C. W. Carroll, J. L. Kennar, T. W. Hurst.
223...J. H. Hazlitt, Chas. J. McIntire, B. F. Severs.
228...James Bennett, Elisha Dunscomb, C. Nichols.
232...Calvin Mason, B. H. Rankins, N. D. Fox.
239...Chas. W. Roberts, P. G. Byron, Philip Rosignol.
245...J. F. Alexander, E. T. King, R. L. Mudd.
246...Geo. A. Hall, T. F. Tucker, T. P. A. Simons.
250...W. C. Wilson, Wm. Dyar, E. Callahan.
252...Lewis L. Troy, Geo. M. Snyder, Jas. M. Smith.
255...Peter C. Wood, J. H. Davis, R. S. Allen.
263...Wm. J. Brown.
266...C. M. Grammer, R. Deighten, W. E. Jamison.
270...E. J. Hill, J. M. Wilson, D. M. Lawrence.
290...O. Wilson, C. Wilson, J. Brett.
292...Louis Zeigler, W. W. Fales, P. Jenkins.
294...A. W. Cowan. H. H. Hill, Isaac Umphenoor.
312...John Quinlan, J. H. Babbitt, A. L. Wright.
317...Herman Neftzger, J. D. Anly. S. D. McCauley.
320...John Sargent, J. M. Bridges, Geo. Chape.
329...G. W. Stone, Wm. Eckles, David Byler.
350...Timothy M. Morse, J. B. Negley, S. S. Clayburg.
355...E. M. Eaton, Jacob Wentz, John Bevens.
362...Henry Palmer, James Marvel, J. F. Palmer.
365...C. D. Moore, W. H. Camp, A. G. Gregory.
390...Caleb Reed, Wm. N. Young, J. B. Waters.
396...B. G. Glenn, J. W. Crume, B. B. Olmsted.
412...John L. Marvel, Geo. Fuller, F. Brooks.
415...Almit Powell, Richard Davidson, John Morris.
422...P. L. Sherman, H. A. Harvey, Thos. C. Clarke.
423...R. P. Wales, H. W. Wales, B. Noble.
426...Jas. H. Hale, Geo. W. Dudderer, James Walker.
429...Thos. Barham, John H. Sands, E. N. Fisher.
430...Jas. G. Philips, Peter Smith, Jas. M. Heartley.
431...J. A. Houston, D. Masters. J. S. McCartney.
433—Josiah Dow, W. H. Morris, H. White.
434—M. L. Chase, John Rendleman, R. A. Rushing.
435...A. B. Avery, M. A. Lewis, D. Robinson.
447...Sampson Taylor, Geo. Conover, Jos. Henry.
458...M. P. Haynes, C. A. Furlong, John Scobey.
460...Eli Brock, R. A. Moss, H. W. Pride.
462...L. M. Hobart, John March, Albert Matthews.
464...F. N. Pennock, J. J. Reaburn, B. F. Spicer.
471...A. M. Hobbs, J. R. Marshall, Myron Hopkins.
477...S. S. Chapman, E. L. Marquis, John Brevoort.
479...J. W. Agard, Wm. Holgate, Jas. M. Rogers.
480...Jas. F. Benner, David Gillespie, W. B. McNeall.
499...Alonzo Peirce, A. R. Scott, W. J. Tulley.
501...Jos. H. Nichols, W. T. Dickenson, H. P. Grant.
506...Aaron F. Kane, John Anderson, Geo. K. Wright.
507...A. Lockie, V. H. Morey, A. M. Stephenson.
511...Thos. W. Tefft, Herman Crauson, B. Heglow.
518...Newton Pierpoint, L. N. Mitchell, D. E. Perkins.
525...F. M. Savage, R. G. Scott, A. M. Clark.
530...J. L. Beerkholter, R. J. Cook, T. C. Ohrstel.
534...Abram Neff, A. W. Birch, A. T. Wells.
535...W. A. Griffin, Edgar Bell, Freeman Shaw.
551...C. S. Hall, R. Williamson, O. J. Gunn.
555...Joseph Gondolf, Henry Koch, Wm. Fuchs.
567...J. H. Essry, A. J. Ice, F. M. Saddler.
573...W. W. McMann, E. A. Crane, H. B. Elliott.
579...Wm. H. Stubbs, Wm. A. Pearson, J. B. Keirich.
580...Thos. F. Kelley, John Rader, T. T. Rader.
582...Jas. F. Boulware, A. H. Nelson, Isham G. Laine.
590...H. H. Catlett, John S. Cox, John Smoot.
598...J. C. Gill, S. F. Furber, T. R. Hayden.
599...J. S. McClelland, J. F. McCormack, W. M. Marley.
604...H. W. Mead, J. P. Ercanbrack, T. S. Goodell.

A. and A. Rite in Chicago.

The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Masonry, represented in Chicago by Occidental Sovereign Consistory, Gourgas Chapter of Rose Croix, Illinois Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem, and Van Rensselaer Grand Lodge of Perfection, met in convention, last week, at the Masonic Temple, on Dearborn street, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday.

There were present many from abroad who have distinguished themselves in the rite. Among others, E. G. Hamilton, 33d degree of Indiana; Judge P. C. Wright, 32d degree, of Iowa; Horleck, Bailey, and others, from Wisconsin; J. C. Reynolds, of Springfield, Ill., and W. A. Stevens, Illustrious Deputy for the State of Illinois.

Some thirty gentlemen availed themselves of permission at this time to join the rite, and degrees were conferred from the fourth to the thirty-second, inclusive.

Ill. Bro. Van Rensselaer, the venerable patriarch of the A. and A. S. Rite in the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States, while on his way from his home to Chicago, received the attentions of an enterprising pickpocket, who relieved him of his watch. His friends here, having learned of this fact, went to work with that promptness which characterizes Western men generally, and in a few minutes a sufficient sum was volunteered to make up the loss.

A costly, handsome gold watch, appropriately inscribed, with a rich gold chain attached, was presented to him by the members of the consistory. Dr. V. L. Hurlbut, Sovereign Grand Commander, in making the presentation in behalf of the consistory, spoke feelingly, and somewhat as follows:

"Ill. Bro. Van Rensselaer: I am desired by the Sublime Princes of Occidental Sovereign Consistory to present to you this trifling testimonial, as a tangible evidence of the warm affection with which you have inspired us. This simple gift is in no degree commensurate with the weighty obligations which, by untiring devotion to our cause, you have laid upon us. No one brother has done so much as yourself towards establishing the enviable reputation of the rite in the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States of America. You stand among us as an apostle of the A. and A. S. Rite, having climbed to the Pisgah height of Masonic knowledge, gathering and treasuring as you went the holy truths whose practical application purifies and elevates the soul above the grosser elements of life—a mine of rarest wealth, with resources unfailing. We trust this will be a cherished souvenir, reminding you daily of the bond which unites us in one brotherhood, and which we hope will draw us in still closer fraternal embrace to your great loving heart, and continually bring to your mind the faces not only of those you have this night, but also the many others here present whom you have raised to this high-grade. Will you please accept?"

In response the Ill. brother made a few appropriate and feeling remarks, expressive of his gratification and pleasure, and so ended the pleasant little episode.—Chicago Tribune.

Your trowel will teach you that nothing is united together without proper cement; no strict union, nor external polish can be made without it. And, as the trowel connects each stone together by a proper disposition of the cement, so charity, that bond of perfection of all social union (which I earnestly recommend to you all), links separate minds and various interests together; and, like the radii of a circle, that extend from the center to every part of the circumference, makes each member have a tender regard for the real welfare of the whole community. But as some members will be refractory in every society, your hammer will likewise teach you how to use becoming discipline and correction towards such like offenders. If they will not submit to rule, you may strike off the excrescences of their swelling pride, till they sink into a modest deportment. Are they irregular in their practices? Your hammer will instruct you to strike off each irregularity, and fit them to act a decent part on the stage of life. Do any affect things above their stations? Your hammer will teach you to press them down to their proper level, that they may learn in the school of discipline that necessary knowledge—to be courteous.

It is calculated that twenty-seven tons of paper per day are used in Paris by journals, reviews, and pamphlets.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—Isa. 8, 20.

DECISIONS BY THE GRAND MASTER.

In this number we shall depart from the usual habit of numbering decisions, and answer the queries in the following well-written letter at length. The following is the letter, omitting date, name, and place:

M. W. H. G. Reynolds:

Dear Sir and Bro.—Will you be kind enough to give me your opinion in the following case:

A petition for initiation is rejected by a certain lodge, and after a year has elapsed the person again wishes to petition, but to another lodge, which lodge petitions the one by which he had been rejected, for leave to receive his petition, and to confer the degrees upon him if he should be found worthy. This petition from a Lodge is presented and a motion made that it be granted. The Master orders the ballot spread, and instructs the brethren that "We are about to vote on the petition of —— lodge, for leave to receive the petition of ——, and to confer the degrees upon him if he should be found worthy. This you will do, avoiding all private piques and quarrels, and vote solely for the good of Masonry. Ballot not clear, and petition not granted.

The above case suggests the following questions, on which I respectfully ask your decision:

1st. Does the law requiring the "unanimous consent of the rejecting lodge" furnish any authority for spreading the ballot on a petition of this character, or is there any law giving such authority.

2d. Where there is no law prescribing the manner in which a vote shall be taken, should we not, in taking the same, be governed by parliamentary usage?

3d. Is it right to spread the ballot on a motion?

4th. In the case stated, had the Master any right to instruct the members in a manner similar to that in voting on a petition for initiation?

5th. In the case stated, in view of the Master's instructions, viz: "We are about to vote on the petition, &c.," did or did not the members vote on the motion? If they did not, was not the proceeding irregular, and would it be proper to expunge the record of the vote having been taken, and proceed to vote on the motion?

6th. Can a petition of this character, from one lodge to another, after being regularly acted on and not granted, be again presented? and if so what length of time must first elapse?

7th. In the supposition that every lodge will faithfully perform its Masonic duties, does not the rule requiring "the unanimous consent of the rejecting lodge" resolve itself into a question of courtesy between lodges?

We shall not follow the queries in regular order, nor shall we answer each one, for the reader will perceive, as he passes on, that some of the queries are disposed of in replying to or answering others.

In order to a proper understanding of the whole subject and to a judicial answer to the queries, it becomes necessary to consider the law guarding the perpetual secrecy of the ballot, the status of a rejected applicant, the law of consent, and the duty of a rejecting lodge. The law of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, alone, will be considered.

The last clause of the 48th section of the Grand Lodge By-Laws is in the following words:

"No Mason shall be required by the Master or lodge to give his reasons for the vote which he has deposited, for the very secrecy of the ballot is intended to secure the independence and irresponsibility of the voter."

The 49th section provides that the ballot shall be taken "upon the moral, intellectual, and Masonic qualifications of the applicant."

The 26th section Grand Lodge By-Laws reads as follows: "No lodge acting under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge shall knowingly receive any candidate in any of the degrees in Masonry, who has been rejected by any other lodge, without first receiving the unanimous consent of the lodge that rejected him."

The foregoing quotations from the Grand Lodge By-Laws settle the following points:

1. That the candidate rejected is under the jurisdiction and control of the lodge that rejected him until it gives unanimous consent for another lodge to receive him.
2. That it is the duty of the rejecting lodge to protect the brother who casts a black ball, in his entire "independence and irresponsibility" to any earthly tribunal or person.
3. That upon an application of a lodge to receive the petition of a rejected candidate, the vote must be taken by ballot, in order to complete an unbiased "unanimous vote," within the meaning of our own statutes, otherwise the secrecy of the previous ballot is liable to exposure, and the independence and irresponsibility of the voter is destroyed.

The foregoing points dispose of all the legal principles involved in the letter and queries of our able correspondent.

A matter or two of practice requires some attention.

1. In the case of an application of a lodge to receive the petition of a rejected candidate, the Master has the power to take a vote, or to entertain a motion to take a vote upon the application. He also has the right to refuse to entertain such a motion, but courtesy to the applying lodge requires that such reasons should be extraordinary. In voting upon the application, courtesy and every other consideration but conscience is excluded.
2. Uniform usage in this jurisdiction—such usage as makes it common and binding law—requires a rejected candidate for initiation to wait one year before applying again.

Miscellaneous Reading.

The Dinner of the Months.

Once upon a time, the months determined to dine together. They were a long time deciding who should have the honor of being the host on so solemn an occasion, but the lot at length fell upon December; for, although the old gentleman's manners were found to be rather cold, upon first acquaintance, yet it was well known that when you once got under his roof, there was not a merrier or more hospitable person in existence. The messenger, too, Christmas Day, whom he sent round with his cards of invitation, won the hearts of all; although he played several mad pranks, and received many a box in return. February begged to be excused coming to the dinner, as she was in very bad spirits, on account of the loss of her youngest child, the twenty-ninth, who had lately left her, and was not expected to return for four years. Her objection, however, was overruled; and being seated at table between the smiling May and the merry old fellow, October, she appeared to enjoy the evening's entertainment as much as any of the company.

The dinner was a superb one, all the company having contributed to furnish out the table. January thought, for the thirtieth time, what he should give, and then determined to give a calf's head. February, not being a very productive month, was also a little puzzled; but at length resolved to contribute an enormous cake, which she managed to manufacture in most beautiful style, with the assistance of her servant, Valentine, who was an excellent fellow at that sort of ware, but especially at bride cake. March and April agreed to furnish all the fish; May and June to decorate the dishes with flowers; June to supply plenty of excellent cider; July and August to present the dessert; September a magnificent course of all sorts of game, excepting pheasants; which exception was supplied by October, as well as a couple of hampers of fine, home-brewed ale; and November engaged that there should be an abundance of ice. The rest of the eatables, and all the wine, were provided by the worthy host himself.

Just before sitting down to table, a squabble arose about precedence—some of the company insisting that the first in rank was January, and some that it was March. The host, however, decided in favor of January, whom he placed in the seat of honor, at his right hand. November, a prim, blue-nosed old maid, sat at his left; and June, a pleasant, good-tempered fellow, although occasionally rather too warm, sat opposite him, at the end of the table.

The dinner was admirably served. Christmas Day was the principal waiter; but the host had been obliged to beg the attendance of some of his guests' servants, and accordingly, Twelfth-night, Shrove Tuesday, and Michaelmas Day, officiated in various departments; though Shrove Tuesday was speedily turned out, for making too free with a prim, demure servant maid, called Good-Friday, while she was toasting some buns for the tea-table.

A short, squash little fellow, called St. Thomas' Day, stood behind December's chair, and officiated as toast-master; and much merriment was excited by the contrast between the diminutive appearance of this man, who stood behind June, at the other end of the table. Master Thomas, however, was a very useful fellow; and beside performing the high official capacity which we have mentioned, he drew the curtains, stirred the fire, lighted and snuffed the candles, and like all other little men, seemed to think himself of more importance than anybody else.

The pretty blushing May was the general toast of the company, and many compliments were passed on the elegant manner in which she had ornamented the dishes. Old January tried to be very sweet upon her, but she received him coldly. January at length ceased to persecute her with his intentions, and transferred them to November, who was the same politics as himself, although she had not been quite so successful in supporting them. Poor May had scarcely got rid of her venerable lover, before that sentimental swain, April, began to tell her that he was absolutely dying for her. This youth was one moment all sunshine and smiles, and rapture, and the next he dissolved in tears, clouds gathered upon his brow, and he looked a fitter suitor for November than for May, who, having at last hinted as much to him, he left her in a huff, and entered into close conversation with September, who, although much his senior, resembled him in many particulars.

July, who was of a desperately hot temper, was every now and then a good deal irritated by March, a dry old fellow, as cool as a cucumber, who was continually passing his jokes upon him. At one time, July went so far as to threaten him with a prosecution for something he had said, but March, knowing what he was about, managed to keep on the windy side of the law, and to throw dust in the eyes of his accusers. July, however, contrived to have his revenge; for being called upon for a song, he gave "The dashing White Sergeant" in great style, and laid a peculiar emphasis upon the words "March, March away," at the same time motioning to his antagonist to leave the room.

April having announced that it was raining hard, January was much perplexed as to how he should get home, as he had not brought his carriage. At one time when he was looking very anxiously out of the window, to discover if there were any stars visible, October, at the suggestion of May, asked him if he thought of borrowing Charles' wain to carry him, as he had done so great a kindness to its proprietor? This put the old fellow into such a passion, that he hastily seized his head gear, a red cap, sallied out through the rain, and would most likely have broken his neck in the dark, had not February sent her footman, Candlemas Day, after him with a lantern, by whom he was guided in safety to his lodgings in Frog Alley.

On the retirement of the ladies, February, May, August, and November, the host proposed their healths, which were drunk with the usual honors; when April, being a soft-spoken youth, and ambitious of distinction as an orator, began to return thanks for them, in a very flowery speech, but was soon coughed down by December and March; and March, by the by, at length got into such high favor with his old enemy, July, that the latter was heard to give him invitation, saying that if ever he came to his side of the zodiac, he should be most happy to see him. October told the host that, with his leave, he would drink no more wine, but that he should be glad of some good home-brewed and a pipe. To this December acceded, and said he should be happy to join him, and he thought his friend March would do the same. March having nodded assent, they set to, and a pretty puffing and blowing they made. April, however, continued to drink Madeira, while June, July, and September stuck with exemplary constancy to the Burgundy.

After repeated summonses to the drawing-room, they joined the ladies at the table. November drew herself up, and affected to be quite overpowered by the smell of smoke, which March, October, and December had brought in with them; although it was well known that the old lady herself could blow a cloud as well as any of them. August, a grave, stately matron, of extraordinary beauty, although perhaps un peu passee, officiated as tea-maker. Good Friday, who by this time had recovered the fright into which Shrove Tuesday had throw her, handed about the toasted buns; and Swithin, a servant of July, was employed to keep the tea-pot supplied with water, which he too often did to overflowing.

Tea being over, the old folks went to cards; and the young ones, including October, who managed to hide his years very successfully, to the piano-forte. May was the prima donna, and delighted every one, especially poor April, who was alternately smiles and tears during the whole of her performance. October gave them a hunting song, which caused even the card tables to be deserted; and August sang a sweet, melancholy canzonet, which was rapturously encored.

At length, Candlemas Day having returned from seeing Old January home, his mistress, February, took leave of the company. April, who was a little the worse for the wine he had drunk, insisted on escorting November, although she had several servants, and her road was in the opposite direction to his own. May went away in her own carriage, and undertook to set June down, who lived very near her. The road was hilly and steep, but her coachman, Ascension Day, got the horses very well to the top, and July and August both walked home, each preceded by a dog-day, with a lighted torch. September and October, who were next door neighbors, went away in the same hackney-coach; and March departed as he came, on the back of a rough Shetland pony.

◆

A Scene in Moab.

From the Examiner and Chronicle.

Perhaps the imagination of a man could not paint for itself a more affecting or a nobler spectacle than the last scene in the life of Moses. For more than a century, from the shores of the Nile to the banks of the Jordan, he had been the commanding figure of a great history. He had carried a great people on his heart. He had experienced every vicissitude of life. The words which the great apostle applied to himself, are literally true of the great prophet. He had been harassed "by journeying often, by perils of robbers, by perils from his countrymen, by perils from the heathen, by perils in the city, by perils in the wilderness, by perils in the sea, by perils among false brethren." Every one of these specifications is true of Moses as of Paul.

During his service as lieutenant-general of the Lord of Hosts, he had seen a generation of mankind, in unnumbered thousands, rise and fall around him, as the steadfast cliff feels the tide swell and fail with its innumerable waves. God had rent the heavens and come down to speak to him face to face. The Eternal had rifted the clouds and thick darkness that were round about him, and the dreadful banner of his justice were unrolled before his servant.

He had seen the desert sown with bodies of men as a ploughed field is sown with grain. For forty years he had seen the wilderness behind him keeping a bloody record of his devious track. He had reoognized the footsteps of God in the great waters. He had heard him marching through the wilderness.

For a generation and a half he had been going to find a land which the Lord had promised to his people. And now he was on the edge of that land—to die there, without entering!

If Godfrey had been struck from the saddle just before he led his Crusaders through the gates of Jerusalem; if Columbus's vessel had split on a reef in sight of the New World's green shore; each would have felt, for a sharp moment of agony, the pang of a disappointed life. But how far deeper the darkness that would naturally come down on the soul of the great captain, when he heard the words: "Get thee up into this mountain Abarim, unto Mount Nebo; and behold the land of Canaan; and die in the Mount whither thou goest up. Thou shalt see the land before thee, but thou shalt not go thither." There were forty colossal years of life, like so many Cyclopean pillars, shattered at one blow!

But Christ knew the strength of the man with whom His chastisement was dealing. He knew the toughness of the bow He was bending, and that it would not break. He, by His grace, had made the man Moses very meek, above all men on the face of the earth. And into the meekness of that great heart this last trial sank, like a great rock into the sea, and left only a ripple. With what majestic self-possession he announced to the people his disappointment: "Also the Lord hath said unto me, Thou shalt not go over this Jordan." It is written that the meek shall inherit the earth; how strange that the meekest man of all should have no inheritance in it, not even a foot-breadth!

Yet his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated, when, a hundred and twenty years old, he "went up from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah; and the Lord showed him all the land of Gilead, unto Dan, and all Naphtali, and the land of Ephraim, and Manassah, and all the land of Judah, unto the utmost sea, and the plain of the valley of Jericho, the city of palm trees, unto Zoar." And though he might not pass over Jordan, nor taste the milk and honey of Israel's land, and though his bones must rest, far from their kindred, in a strange valley, yet the eye that swept from Moab to the utmost sea was filled with prophetic as well as present glory. Moses saw a better country, that is a heavenly, and there was none to forbid his entrance there. His Lord only kept him out of Palestine, that he might take him to himself; and his hundred and twenty years of weariness would soon be lost in an eternity of rest.

His grave must be lonely, unhonored by men; yet the archangel should stand sentinel over it, through unknown centuries. He now was alone upon Mount Nebo; but he should yet stand with his redeemer upon the Mount of Transfiguration. He had no home on earth; but reserved in heaven he saw the glories of an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading, echoing with the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb.

◆

Early and Late, New and Old Potatoes; Humbugs.

From Colman's Rural World.

The fever is up and running high on the potato; and now is just the time for you to get badly bit, in buying seed potatoes of the eastern seedsmen.

Gregory is offering a new one; Heffron is offering a new one; Hovey & Co. advertise a new one; Mr. Breese, on the prestige of the Early Rose—he being the originator—has a new one also.

Reader, when you begin to see reports in the papers, that this man has bought a few bushels of these new potatoes, at from $80 a bushel to $200 a bushel, be shy—there is dishonesty in the transaction somewhere. And no greater humbug has ever, in our judgment, been put upon the people, than the Early Rose—we mean for the price it was sold at. We bought a few pounds at the rate of $140 a bushel; gave them a great deal of care; got no more potatoes, and no earlier, and not as good quality, as the old Mercer or Early Goodrich. We believe the latter will prove to be the Earlier variety every year; while we were told this Early Rose was from two to three weeks earlier.

A large number of varieties from England, claiming great excellence; among them the Early Race Horse—which we hope will soon run out of the country; for, if the race in it is for earliness or quality, it is now distanced; if racing for the palm of least potatoes for seed planted—then it has distanced all competitors.

We have bought everything offered of the potato kind, to get the best; and are fully satisfied with Early White Sprout, Early Goodrich, New White Peach Blow, Mercer, and Jackson White. Any farmer, planting these, will have early and late; good yield; good quality; and little if any disease at all.

From dear experience, I can willingly part with Coppermine, Cuzco, Early Cottage, Andes, Amazon, Garnet Chili, Calico, Monitor, Orono, Titicaca and Early Rose, with all the batch of English Seedlings.

In the mean time experiments will go on, and there will be great improvements made in the potato; and old varieties will be offered under new names; worthless new ones will appear, and command a large price; and the good people will be ready to bite again.

◆

A Woman's Work.

The truthfulness of the following sketch, by Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, of what some woman accomplished, will be appreciated by many farmers' wives, and perhaps its publication may induce greater sympathy for his partner in some husband's mind:

"I declare that the woman who is able to systemize and carry on smoothly the work of an ordinary family, illustrates higher sagacity than is called for by seven-tenths of the tasks done by man. Men take one trade and work at it; a mother's and housekeeper's work requires a touch from all trades. A man has his work hours, and his definite tasks; a woman has work at all hours, and incessant confusion of tasks. Let any man do a woman's work for a single day—wash and dress the children—having provided their clothes the night before; see that breakfast is under way to suit a fault-finding husband; the wash boiler on with water for the wash, and the clothes assorted ready for the washing; the dish-water heating, and the luncheon brought out for the school-goers; a nice dinner in the good man's dinner-pail; the beds made after proper airing; the father's convenience exactly hit for family prayers; the systematic sweeping of the house at least once a week, and of living rooms once to three times a day, according to the number of men to bring in the mud; the actual washing and outhanging of clothes; the drying, sprinkle, and to-morrow the ironing of the same; the sorting and mending of them, and the provision of new ere the old give out; the making of bread three times a week, with cake and pies intercalated judiciously; pickles, preserves, and cellar stores to be laid in, and not forgotten in their season; children's manners to be attended to; company to be entertained; her own person to be tidied up to please his eye; the tired him to be welcomed and waited on by the no less tired her, and the home made cheerful; his trousers to be patched after he goes to bed, 'so he can put them on in the morning;' the children to be helped about their lessons, and reminded not to forget their Sunday school lesson; the shopping and marketing to be done for the household; house repairs to be attended to, and matters in general to be kept straight around home. Meanwhile, 'papa must not be hindered about his work,' because his work brings the money. But man's work does not tax the head, and heart, and hand, as woman's work does."

◆

PRIMITIVE STYLE OF SKATING.—Fitz-Stephen in his account of the sports of the young citizens of London on the ice in the twelfth century, notes their expertness in using the bones of animals as a means of increasing their velocity, "taking in their hands poles shod with iron, which at times they strike against the ice, they are carried along with as great rapidity as a bird flying, or a bolt discharged from a cross-bow." A Dutch engraving, representing sports on the ice in the town-ditch at Antwerp, 1594, illustrates this practice. A child is using the jaw-bones of a horse or cow as a sledge, and propelling himself with pointed staves.

◆

A seven hundred ounce gold nugget was lately unearthed in Queensland, Australia.

UNFORGOTTEN WORDS.

"Have you examined that bill, James ?"

"Yes, sir."

"Anything wrong ?"

"I find two errors."

"Ah ! let me see !"

The lad handed his employer a long bill that had been placed on his desk for examination.

"Here is an error in the calculation of ten dollars which they have made against themselves; and another of ten dollars in the footing."

"Also against themselves ?"

"Yes, sir."

The merchant smiled in a way that struck the lad as peculiar.

"Twenty dollars against themselves," he remarked in a kind of pleasant surprise. "Trusty clerks they must have."

"Shall I correct the figures ?" asked the lad.

"No ! let them correct their own mistakes; we don't examine bills for other people's benefit," replied the merchant. "It will be time to rectify those errors when they find them out. All so much gain as it now stands."

The boy's delicate moral sense was shocked at so unexpected a remark. He was the son of a poor widow, who had given him to understand that to be just was the duty of men.

Mr. Carman, the merchant, in whose employment he had been for only a few months, was an old friend of his father's, in whom he reposed the highest confidence. In fact, James had always looked upon him as a kind of model man, and when Mr. Carman agreed to take him into his store, he felt that a good fortune was in his way.

"Let them correct their own mistakes." These words made a strong impression on the mind of James Lewis. When first spoken by Mr. Carman, and with the meaning then involved, he felt, as we have said, shocked; but as he turned them over again in his thoughts and connected their utterance with a person who stood so high in his mother's estimation, he began to think that perhaps the thing was fair enough in business. Mr. Carman was hardly the man to do wrong. A few days after James had examined the bill, a clerk from the house by which it had been rendered called for settlement. The lad, who was present, waited with interest to see whether Mr. Carman would speak of the error. But he made no remark. A check for the amount of the bill rendered was filled up, and a receipt taken.

"Is that right ?"

James asked himself this question. His moral sense said no; but the fact that Mr. Carman had so acted bewildered his mind.

"It may be the way in business"—so he thought to himself—"but it don't look honest. I wouldn't have believed it of him."

Mr. Carman had a kind of a way with him that won the boy's heart, and naturally tended to make him judge whatever he might do in a most favorable manner.

"I wish he had corrected that error," he said to himself a great many times when thinking in a pleased way of Mr. Carman, and his own good fortune in having been received into his employment. "It don't look right, but may be it's the way of business."

One day he went to the bank and drew the money on a check. In counting it over he found that the teller had paid him fifty dollars too much, so he went back to the counter and told him of his mistake. The teller thanked him, and he returned to the store with the consciousness in his mind of having done right.

"The teller overpaid me fifty dollars," he said to Mr. Carman, as he handed him the money.

"Indeed !" cried the latter, a light breaking over his countenance; and he hastily counted the bank bills.

The light faded as the last bill left his fingers.

"There's no mistake, James." A tone of disappointment was in his voice.

"Oh, I gave him back the fifty dollars. Wasn't that right ?"

"You simpleton !" exclaimed Mr. Carman, "don't you know that bank mistakes are never corrected ? If the teller had paid you fifty dollars short he would not have made it right."

The warm blood mantled the cheek of James under this reproof. It is often the case that more shame is felt for a blunder than a crime. In this instance the lad felt a sort of mortification at having done what Mr. Carman was pleased to call a silly thing, and he made up his mind that if they should ever overpay him a thousand dollars at the bank he should bring the amount to his employer, and let him do as he pleased with the money.

"Let people look after their own mistakes," said Mr. Carman.

James Lewis pondered these things in his heart. The impression they made was too strong ever to be forgotten. "It may be right," he said, but he did not feel altogether satisfied.

A month or two after the occurrence of that bank mistake, as James counted over his weekly wages, just received from Mr. Carman, he discovered that he was paid half a dollar too much.

The first impulse of his mind was to return the half dollar to his employer, and it was on his lips to say, "You have given me half a dollar too much, sir," when the unforgotten words, "Let people look after their own mistakes," flashing upon his thoughts, made him hesitate. To hold a parley with evil is to be overcome.

"I must think about this," said James, as he put the money into his pocket. "If it is true in one case it is true in another. Mr. Carman don't correct mistakes that people make in his favor, and he can't complain when the rule works against himself."

But the boy was far from being in a comfortable state. He felt that to keep half a dollar would be a dishonest act. Still he could not make up his mind to return it, at least not then.

James did not return the half dollar, but spent it for his own gratification. After he had done this it came suddenly into his head that Mr. Carman had only been trying him, and he was filled with anxiety and alarm.

Not long after Mr. Carman repeated the same mistake. James kept the half dollar with less hesitation.

"Let him correct his own mistakes said he resolutely; "that's the doctrine he acts on with other people, and he can't complain if he gets paid back in the same coin he puts in circulation. I just wanted half a dollar."

From this time the fine moral sense of Jas. Lewis was blunted. He had taken an evil counselor into his heart, stimulated a spirit of covetousness—latent in almost every mind—which caused him to desire the possession of things beyond his ability to obtain.

James had good business qualifications, and so pleased Mr. Carman by his intelligence, industry, and tact with customers, that he advanced him rapidly, and gave him, before he was eighteen years old, the most reliable position in the store. But James had learned something more from his employer than how to do business well. He had learned to be dishonest. He had never forgotten the first lesson he had received in this bad science; he had acted not only in two instances, but in a hundred, and always to the injury of Mr. Carman. He had long since given up waiting for mistakes to be made in his favor, but originated them in the varied and complicated transactions of a large business, in which he was trusted implicitly; for it had never occurred to Mr. Carman that his failure to be just to the letter might prove a snare to this young man.

James grew sharp, cunning, and skillful; always on the alert, always bright and ready to meet any approaches towards a discovery of his wrong doing by his employer, who held him in the highest regard.

Thus it went on until James was in his twentieth year, when the merchant had his suspicions aroused by a letter which spoke of the young man as not keeping the most respectable company, and as spending money too freely for a clerk on a moderate salary.

Before this time James had removed his mother into a pleasant house, for which he paid a rent of four hundred dollars; his salary was eight hundred, but he deceived his mother by telling her it was fifteen hundred. Every comfort that she needed was fully supplied, and she was beginning to think that after a long and painful struggle with the world, her happier days had come.

James was at his desk when the letter was received by Mr. Carman. He looked at his employer and saw him change countenance suddenly. He read it over twice, and James saw that the contents produced disturbance. Mr. Carman glanced toward the desk, and their eyes met; it was only for a moment, but the look that James received made his heart stop beating.

There was something about the movements of Mr. Carman for the rest of the day that troubled the young man. It was plain to him that suspicion had been aroused by that letter. O, how bitterly now did he repent, in dread of discovery and punishment, the evil of which he had been guilty! Exposure would disgrace and ruin him, and bow the head of his widowed mother even to the grave.

"You are not well this evening," said Mrs. Lewis, as she looked at her son's changed face across the table, and noticed that he did not eat.

"My head aches."

"Perhaps the tea will make you feel better."

"I'll lie down on the sofa in the parlor for a short time."

Mrs. Lewis followed him into the parlor in a little while, and, sitting down on the sofa on which he was lying, placed her hand upon his head. Ah, it would take more than the loving pressure of a mother's hand to ease the pain from which he was suffering. The touch of that pure hand increased the pain to agony.

"Do you feel better ?" asked Mrs. Lewis. She had remained some time with her hand on his forehead.

"Not much," he replied, and rising as he spoke, he added, "I think a walk in the open air will do me good."

"Don't go out, James," said Mrs. Lewis, a troubled feeling coming into her heart.

"I'll only walk a few squares." And James went from the parlor and passed into the street.

"There is something more than headache the matter with him," thought Mrs. Lewis.

For half an hour James walked without any purpose in his mind beyond the escape from the presence of his mother. At last his walk brought him near Mr. Carman's store, and at passing he was surprised at seeing a light within.

"What can this mean ?" he asked himself, a new fear creeping, with its shuddering impulse, into his heart.

He listened by the door and windows, but he could hear no sound within.

"There's something wrong!" he said; "what can it be ? If this is discovered, what will be the end of it ? Ruin ! ruin ! My poor mother !"

The wretched young man hastened on, walked the street for two hours, when he returned home. His mother met him when he entered, and, with unconcealed anxiety asked him if he were better. He said yes, but in a manner that only increased the trouble she felt, and passed up hastily to his own room.

In the morning the strangely altered face of James, as he met his mother at the breakfast table, struck alarm into her heart. He was silent, and evaded all her questions. While they sat at the table the door bell rung loudly. The sound startled James, and he turned his head to listen in a nervous way.

"Who is it ?" asked Mrs. Lewis.

"A gentleman who wishes to see Mr. James," replied the girl.

James rose instantly, and went out into the hall, shutting the dining room door as he did so. Mrs. Lewis sat waiting her son's return. She heard him coming back in a few moments; but he did not enter the dining room. Then he returned along the hall to the street door, and she heard it shut. All was silent. Starting up she ran into the passage, but James was not there. He had gone away with the person who had called.

Ah, that was a sad going away. Mr. Carman had spent half the night in examining the accounts of James, and discovered frauds of over six thousand dollars. Blindly indignant, he sent an officer to arrest him early in the morning; and it was with this officer that he went away from his mother, never to return.

"The young villain shall lie in the bed he has made for himself!" exclaimed Mr. Carman, in his bitter indignation. And he made the exposure completely. On the trial he showed an eager desire to have him convicted, and presented such an array of evidence that the jury could not give any other verdict than guilty.

The poor mother was in court, and audible in the silence that followed came her convulsed sobs upon the air. The presiding judge addressed the culprit, and asked if he had anything to say why the sentence of the law should not be pronounced against him. All eyes were turned upon the pale, agitated young man, who rose with an effort, and leaned against the railing by which he stood, as if needing the support.

"Will it please your honors," he said, "to direct my prosecutor to come a little nearer, so that I can look at him and your honors at the same time?"

Mr. Carman was directed to come forward to where the boy stood. James looked at him steadily for a few moments, and then turned to the judges.

"What I have to say to your honors is this" (he spoke calmly and distinctly), "and it may in a degree extenuate, though I can not excuse my crime. I went into that man's store an innocent boy, and if he had been an honest man I would not have stood before you to-day as a criminal."

Mr. Carman appealed to the court for protection against an allegation of such an outrageous character; but he was peremptorily ordered to be silent. James went on in a firm voice.

"Only a few weeks after I went into his employment I examined a bill by his direction, and discovered an error of twenty dollars."

The face of Mr. Carman crimsoned.

"You remember it, I see," said James, "and I shall have cause to remember it while I live. The error was in favor of Mr. Carman. I asked if I should correct the figures, and he answered, 'No, let them correct their own mistakes; we don't examine bills for other people's benefit.' It was my first lesson in dishonesty. I saw the bill settled, and Mr. Carman take twenty dollars that was not his own. I felt shocked at first; it seemed such a wrong thing. But soon after he called me a simpleton for handing back a fifty dollar bill to the teller of a bank, which he had overpaid me on a check, and then"—

"May I ask the protection of the court?" said Mr. Carman.

"Is it true what the lad says?" asked the judge.

Mr. Carman hesitated and looked confused; all eyes were on his face; and judges and jury, lawyers and spectators felt certain that he was guilty of leading the unhappy young man astray.

"Not long afterward," resumed Lewis, "in receiving my wages I found that Mr. Carman had paid me fifty cents too much. I was about to give it back to him, when I remembered his remark about letting people correct their own mistakes, and said to myself, 'let him correct his own errors,' and dishonestly kept the money. Again the thing happened, and again I kept the money that did not of right belong to me. This was the beginning of evil, and here I am. If he had shown any mercy I might have kept silent and made no defense."

The young man covered his face with his hands and sat down, overpowered with his feelings. His mother, who was near him, sobbed aloud, and bending over, laid her hands on his head, saying:

"My poor boy! my poor boy!"

There were few eyes in the court room undimmed. In the silence that followed, Mr. Carman spoke out:

"Is my character to be thus blasted on the words of a criminal, your honors? Is this right?"

"Your solemn oath that this charge is untrue," said the judge, "will set you in the right." It was the unhappy boy's only opportunity, and the court felt bound in humanity to hear him.

James Lewis stood up again instantly, and turned his white face and dark, piercing eyes upon Mr. Carman.

"Let him take his oath if he dare!" he exclaimed.

Mr. Carman consulted with his counsel and withdrew.

After a brief conference with his associates, the presiding judge said, addressing the criminal:

"In consideration of your youth, and the temptation to which in tender years you were unhappily subject, the court gives you the slightest sentence, one year's imprisonment. But let me solemnly warn you against any further steps in the way you have taken. Crime can have no valid excuse. It is evil in the sight of God and man, and leads only to suffering. When you come forth again after your brief incarceration, may it be with the resolution to die rather than commit a crime."

And the curtain fell on the sad scene in the boy's life. When it was lifted again, and he came forth from prison a year afterward, his mother was dead. From the day her pale face faded from his vision as he passed from the court-room, he never looked upon her again.

Ten years afterward a man was reading a newspaper in a far western town. He had a calm, serious face, and looked like one who had known suffering and trial.

"Brought to justice at last!" he said to himself, as the blood came to his face; "convicted on the charge of open insolvency, and sent to state prison. So much for the man who gave me in tender years the first lessons in ill-doing. But, thank God, the other lessons have been remembered. 'When you come forth again,' said the Judge, 'may it be with the resolution to die rather than commit a crime,' and I have kept this injunction in my heart when there seemed no way of escaping except through crime; and God helping me, I will keep it to the end."

Ups and Downs.

"Sir, bring me a good plain dinner," said a melancholy looking individual to a waiter at one of our principal hotels in the State.

"Yes, sir."

The dinner was brought and devoured, and the eater called the landlord aside and thus addressed him:

"You are the landlord?"

"Yes."

"You do a good business here?"

"Yes" (in astonishment).

"You make, probably, ten dollars a day clear?"

"Yes."

"Then I am safe. I can not pay for what I have consumed. I have been out of employment for seven months, but have engaged to work to-morrow. I have been without food four-and-twenty hours when I entered your place. I will pay you in a week."

"I can not pay my bills with such promises," blustered the landlord, "and I do not keep a poorhouse. You should address the proper authorities. Leave me something for security."

"I have nothing."

"I will take your coat."

"If I go into the street without that, I will get my death, such weather as this."

"You should have thought of that before you came here."

"You are serious? Well, I solemnly aver that one week from now I will pay you."

"I will take your coat."

The coat was left, and a week afterwards redeemed.

Seven years afterwards a wealthy man entered the political arena, and was presented to a caucus as an applicant for a Congressional nomination. The chairman of the caucus held his peace. He heard the name and history of the applicant, who was a member of the church and one of the most respectable citizens. The vote was a tie, and he cast the negative, thereby defeating the wealthy applicant, whom he met an hour afterward and to whom he said:

"You don't remember me?"

"No."

"I once ate dinner at your hotel, and although I told you I was famishing, and pledged my word and honor to pay you in a week, you took my coat and saw me go out into the inclement air at the risk of my life without it."

"Well, sir, what then?"

"Not much. You called yourself a Christian. To-night you were a candidate for nomination, and but for me you would have been elected to Congress."

Three years after, the Christian hotel keeper became a bankrupt. The poor dinnerless wretch that was, is now a high functionary. We know him well. The ways of Providence are indeed wonderful, and the world's mutations almost beyond conception or belief.

Alexander H. Stephens.

On a certain occasion Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, was engaged in a political discussion with Hon. Benjamin F. Hill, of that State, when the latter charged him with saying that he (Stephens) could eat Judge Cone for breakfast, himself (Mr. Hill) for dinner, and Governor Cobb for supper. To which Mr. Stephens quickly replied: "I never said it; but if I had, the arrangement of the meals would have been somewhat different. I should not have taken Mr. Hill at dinner, where he has placed himself, that being the heartiest meal of the day. In fact, I should prefer him for supper, in accordance with that wise rule of medicine which prescribes a light diet to sleep on!"

At another time Mr. A. R. Wright, of Georgia, is said to have drawn the fire of the "great Georgian" in the following way: Mr. Stephens, at the time of the great Know-Nothing conflict in the South, was accompanied by a favorite dog named Rio, and the intelligent animal was almost as well known on the hustings as the statesman.

Mr. Wright, at the close of a political speech, turned to Mr. Stephens and said: "Sir, I demand a list of your appointments. I intend that the people shall have information. I want to know when and where you are to speak, for I intend to dog you all around this Congressional district."

"Then," retorted Mr. Stephens, pointing his long thin finger to his dog, sleeping on the stand at his feet, and lifting his fife-like voice to the highest note—"then I shall send Rio home. One dog at a time is enough!"

Among the thousands who have read the speech of Vice President Stephens, of Georgia, against secession, made November 14, 1860, there are probably few who have heard of an amusing incident that followed it. At the close of the speech the leader of the opposition party, Hon. Robert Toombs, arose, and after complimenting Mr. Stephens as one of the purest patriots, moved that the meeting give three cheers for him and adjourn, which was done. Governor Herschel V. Johnson, who was present, met Mr. Toombs on their return to the hotel, and said to him in substance: "Sir, your action to-night, coming from so prominent a secessionist, deserves all praise, and I for one can not forbear to congratulate you upon such handsome conduct and admirable behavior."

Toombs put on that droll look which always precedes his best hits, and said, drily, "Yes, I always behave myself at a funeral."

An overgrown political opponent once undertook to sneer at the diminutive size of Mr. A. H. Stephens, and said, "I could put a little salad oil on you and swallow you whole." To which Mr. Stephens at once replied, "and if you did you would have more brains in your bowels than you ever had in your head."—Editor's Drawer, Harper's Magazine.

Boys, You are Watched.

A group of men, at the opening of the State Legislature, were talking of the applicants for position in the various offices in the gift of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Of course, there were a good many applying, and there must be some disappointment falling somewhere; and they were canvassing the matter to make it as nearly right all round as possible.

There were two desiring the same place in the Senate chamber, both boys, verging into manhood—one the son of a high State official, the other the son of an officer who had died in the army in the late civil war. He had already performed the duties of the place he sought again.

This is the substance of remarks made, showing the truth of the assertion at the head of this article.

"Well, gentlemen, I think J—— ought to have this place, or a better one, if we can give it. He isn't a governor's son, and he hasn't any great friends to push him; but a boy who will do as he did at the last session—not spending his earnings on himself, never seen with a cigar in his mouth, or strutting along the street in dandy clothes, but quiet, and well-behaved, saving all his money and carrying it home and giving it to his mother—that boy, I say, deserves as good a place as we can give him." And so, though he had not that place he did get one as good, and probably better.

Now, boys, these words are for you. Nothing is more certain than that if this boy had given way to the temptations assailing those who are on the boundary line or the debateable ground between boyhood and manhood—if he had learned to smoke and been seen smoking, if he had strutted in stunning and flashy clothes, if he had been all that is so well understood as comprehended in the term "fast," if he had not honored his mother—a precious, praying mother at home—and been a quiet, modest, pure-minded, gentlemanly boy, he never could have secured the appointment that now enables him to help his mother again.

He did not know that he was watched particularly. Probably he was not. But men are unconsciously observing; if not with the purpose of influencing future conduct, yet future conduct is influenced, as in this case. The character earned by him by his simple, unaffected ways and dress, by his filial affection and faithfulness, stood him in good stead; and because those who had watched him approved of what they saw in him, they help him all they can.

There are boys in such a great hurry to be men that they ape their vices.

Well Said.

Such an example would stimulate our brethren to the performance of every known duty, and in a few years, as our borders are extended, Christian knighthood would present such a moral standard and influence, that the combined energies of our enemies and the powers of darkness would flee before the light of truth and the influences of good morals and the Christian religion. Then, when we shall look back over the "rugged path of life," we shall see the fruit of our labors, "that we have not spent our strength for naught, or labored in vain." We should "not be weary in well doing." The promise is, "In due season ye shall reap if ye faint not." With fortitude, constancy, and courage, maintain the precepts of that holy religion which we profess, let our good works so shine before men that they may be compelled to say, "how these brethren love each other," and may "He who is able abundantly to furnish you for every good work preserve you from falling into error; improve, strengthen, establish, and perfect you," and finally greet you with, "Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—J. R. Hartsock, Iowa.

Married.

At Metropolis, Ill., Feb. 21, 1869, by Rev. I. H. Scott, Bro. JOHN B. YOUNG, of Golconda Lodge No. 131, to Miss ALICE HOFFMAN.

Died.

In Staunton, Macoupin county, W. Bro. LUKE S. COON, at an advanced age in life.

The deceased was the first Master of Staunton Lodge, and has ever been an influential member, a good husband, citizen, and father.

In Newton, Jasper county, January 26th, Rev. Bro. JACOB E. REED, Chaplain of Newton Lodge No. 216, and Secretary of Newton Chapter No. 109, aged seventy years.

Moneys Received for Masonic Trowel,

FROM FEB. 6TH, 1869, TO MARCH 5TH, INCLUSIVE.

$1.25 each.—J. W. Brown, J. H. Bovee, C. E. Broadwell, Chapman & Short, Chas. Cook, F. Clark, R. F. Colburn, J. B. Dailey, R. C. Edgerton, Jacbo E. English, Wm. Freeman, A. T. Ferguson, W. B. Grimes, Henry Gould, F. Gollon, F. Henick, W. G. Hubbard, J. D. Harbert, O. J. Harlan, J. H. Hazlett, H. Jones, A. G. Jones, W. B. LaSalle, Wm. Lavely, C. F. Mulky, E. L. Marquis, W. H. H. Moobery, Charles Moultrop, W. J. Mitchell, S. C. Parker, James Peterson, George C. Porter, H. Palmer, F. M. Reynolds, M. Smith, W. G. Smith, Secretary J. D. Moody Lodge; John Sharp, C. W. Temple, Robert Whitley, O. A. Whittemore, J. H. Wagner, John Whitley, Benj. Zarley.

$2.50 each.—W. J. Brown, Charles Burnett, L. F. Gentry, L. A. Hamblen, Wm. Johnston, R. Maxwell, J. F. Moore, C. C. Percival.

$3.75 each.—George E. Miller, P. C. Rooney, J. R. Fairfield.

$5.00 each.—Dixon Brubban, J. M. Comegys, M. A. Cushing, John D. Duncan, L. W. Lyon, C. M. Macomb, A. R. Robertson, W. M. C. Reynolds, G. P. Randall, D. Vail.

$1.00 each.—Wm. E. Beam, C. A. Bradshaw, B. F. Church, H. L. Currier, W. H. Chany, J. L. Dewey, E. E. Drumb, James Eads, H. N. Hurlbut, O. B. Hamilton, George O. Ide, D. A. Morrison, John Morrison, W. E. Roberts, G. W. Stoker, B. Scarlette, J. H. Shannon, J. T. Smith, W. Thompson, B. J. Vancourt, F. M. Webster, Louis Federlein, John P. Ferns, I. T. Dement.

$2.00 each.—W. D. Davis, S. J. Dodds, W. M. Horrell, H. Jones, James McKelvey, F. H. Moseley, Casper Magill, W. E. Roberts, C. S. Todd.

$3.00 each.—R. Ashley, T. W. Cochran, N. Gurney, John B. Kellam, R. W. Millar, E. W. Roberts.

$4.00 each.—P. W. Hull, O. M. Southwell, Dr. Squire.

$6.00 each.—J. T. Binkley, C. M. Thayer (twice).

$7.00 each.—H. Ervin, Dr. D. H. Morgan, H. C. Parrott.

$8.00 each.—J. L. Gall, Jonathan Meacham, W. F. Spring, C. M. Thayer, B. J. Van Court, R. G. Wales.

$9.00 each.—F. L. Rhodes.

$10.00 each.—W. H. Alden, G. Dahlem, A. Hass, V. R. Harriott, L. W. Lyon, J. C. McEhiney, E. Sill.

$12.00 each.—R. K. Hawley, M. Montgomery, E. S. Pope.

$14.00 each.—S. C. Amend, Wm. S. Easton, E. W. Wood.

$15.00 each.—J. H. C. Dill, John Marvin.

Other sums.—Luke Bonestiel, $8.75; John Billington, 40c; J. H. Bashforth, $3.65; Cal. & Pac. News Co. $1.80; Wm. Clayton, $3.60; G. N. Chittenden, $8.75; M. A. Cline, $5.10; H. S. De Pew, $18.00; W. J. Finch, $1.90; M. E. Ferguson, $21.25; L. Keyon, $1.15; Jas. Ledgerwood, $1.50; B. Mendenhall, $1.15; S. Olney, $4.50; Samuel Patton, $3.65; H. Palmer, $7.50; Sam'l Thomas, $8.75; R. P. Wemple, $7.25; C. M. Wooll, $1.90; R. H. Waterman, $4.50.

WANTED.—For a Grand Lodge Library, the Proceedings of 1840, 1841, 1842, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848, 1849, 1852, and 1853, Grand Lodge of Illinois, for which a fair price will be paid, in cash, goods, or for TROWEL, if sent to us by first of April next. H. G. REYNOLDS & SON.

GREAT PLATTE VALLEY ROUTE.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD!

Overland Mail, Express, and Telegraph Line,
OPEN FROM OMAHA TO BENTON, 595 MILES
from the
Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains.

On and after Sunday, July 26, 1868, the Union Pacific Railroad will run

Two Daily Passenger Trains

between Omaha and Benton, connecting at Omaha direct with the CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN R. W.
for
ALL PRINCIPAL EASTERN CITIES,
and with the
COUNCIL BLUFFS & ST. JOSEPH R. R.
FOR ALL POINTS SOUTH.

At Cheyenne, direct connnections are made with Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Overland Mail Coaches, for Denver and Santa Fe!
and all points in
COLORADO AND NEW MEXICO;
And at Benton for Salt Lake and all points in
UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA,
AND CALIFORNIA.

PULLMAN'S PALACE SLEEPING COACHES
On Night Trains.
Good Eating-Houses along the Line.

PASSENGERS CROSSING THE PLAINS
by taking this road,
WILL SAVE 200 MILES STAGING
And 48 Hours Time.

C. D. WHITCOMB, Gen. Ticket Agt.
W. SNYDER, Gen. Supt.
t12-v7 S. H. H. CLARK, Gen. Freight Agt.

THE ILLINOIS STATE REGISTER.—Published at Springfield, Ill., by E. L. Merritt & Bro., is the Central Democratic paper of Illinois. Daily, per annum, $10.00; Daily, six months, $5.00; Weekly, yearly, $2.00. Money sent by Express or in Registered Letters at our risk. Address
6-6 E. L. MERRITT & BRO.

VIRGIL PRICE

MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Manufacturers of all kinds of
Masonic Materials, Swords,
BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.,
No. 144 GREENE STREET,
NEW YORK.

Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO
KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.

Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords. 1v8-1y

MASONIC FURNISHING STORE.

POLLARD & LEIGHTON,
104 Tremont St., Boston,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
Society and Military Goods,
Sashes, Aprons, Collars, Jewels,

Swords, Belts, Gloves, Gauntlets, Caps, Chapeaux, Charts, Diplomas. Sole agents for Baker's Low-Twelve Bell. All the variety of Clothing for Lodges, Chapters, Councils, and Encampments.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR EQUIPMENTS
Furnished at short notice.

Colored lithographic view of the New Masonic Temple, Boston. Price, $3.00.

Publishers of
WEBB'S MASONIC MONITOR—Pocket edition;
FREEMASON'S POCKET LIBRARY;
WORKING MONITOR;
DICTIONARY AND MANUAL OF MASONIC LAW;
DIGEST OF MASONIC LAW;
TACTICS FOR KNIGHTS TEMPLAR;
and have for sale all other Masonic Books published

BANNERS AND FLAGS.

☞ Manufacturers supplied with all kinds of Materials, Trimmings, etc., for making Regalia, at the lowest prices. 4v7-1y*

MASONIC TROWEL
BOOK BINDERY AND
Blank Book Manufactory.

BANKERS,
Railroad Companies, City and County Authorities, Merchants, &c.,
SUPPLIED WITH FULL SETS OF BOOKS
At Short Notice, Ruled to any Pattern.

MAGAZINES, PAMPHLETS, MUSIC, bound in any style desired, from plain muslin to the finest Turkey Morocco and Gilt Edging. Old books rebound.

THE ILLINOIS JOURNAL.—PUBLISHED Daily and Weekly at Springfield, is the only Republican newspaper printed in the State Capital. It is the Official State Paper, and the Weekly edition penetrates every county. Subscription prices: Daily, $10.00 per year; Weekly, $2.00. Address,
THE JOURNAL COMPANY,
6-6 Springfield, Ill.

WESTERN UNION RAILROAD.
Short and direct route to all points in Central Iowa, Central and Northern Wisconsin, and all parts of Minnesota. Trains on this road make close connection with trains on the Illinois Central Railroad at Freeport, and also with trains on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad at Clinton Junction and Racine Junction.
2v7 R. C. TATE, Superintendent.

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, APRIL 15, 1869. NO. 4.

Poetry.

The Return.

"Hast thou come with the heart of Childhood back?
The free, the pure, the kind?"—
So murmured the trees in my homeward track,
As they played to the mountain wind.

"Hath thy soul been true to its early love?"
Whispered my native streams;
"Hath the spirit nursed 'mid hill and grove,
Still revered its first high dreams?"—

"Hast thou borne in thy bosom the Holy prayer
Of the child in his parent halls?"—
Thus breathed a voice on the thrilling air,
From the old ancestrial walls.

"Hast thou kept thy faith with the faithful dead,
Whose place of rest is nigh?
With the father's blessings o'er thee shed,
With the mother's trusting eye?"—

Then my tears gushed forth in sudden rain,
As I answered—" O, ye shades?
I bring not my childhood's heart again—
To the freedom of your glades.

"I have turned my first pure love aside,
O bright and happy streams!
Light after light, in my soul have died
The dayspring's glorious dreams.

"And the holy prayer from my thoughts has passed—
The prayer at my mother's knee;
Darkened and troubled I come at last,
Home of my boyish glee!

"But I bear from my childhood a gift of tears,
To soften and atone;
And oh! ye scenes of those blessed years,
They shall make me again your own."

◆

The Angel of Patience.

To weary hearts, to mourning homes,
God's meekest angel gently comes:
No power has he to banish pain,
Or give us back our lost again,
And yet, in tenderest love, our dear
And Heavenly Father sends him here.

There's quiet in that angel's glance,
There's rest in his still countenance!
He mocks no grief with idle cheer,
Nor wounds with words the mourner's ear;
But ills and woes he may not cure
He kindly trains us to endure.

Angel of patience! sent to calm
Our feverish brows with cooling palm;
To lay the storms of hope and fear,
And reconcile life's smile and tear;
The throbs of wounded grief to still,
And make our own our Father's will!

O! though who mournest on the way,
With longings for the close of day,
He walks with thee, that Angel kind,
And gently whispers "be resigned:
Bear up, bear on, the end shall tell
The dear Lord ordereth all things well!"

Mrs. Hemans.

◆

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows, and in miseries:
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

Shakespere.

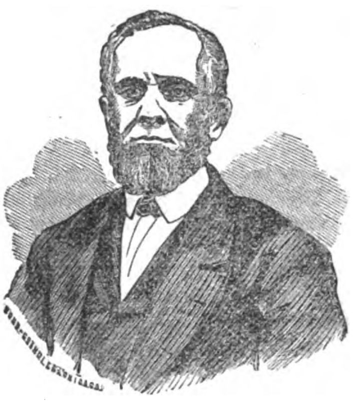
◆

Grand Chapter Manual.

The manual (or monitor) of the chapter work, as compiled by the committee appointed by the Grand Chapter, is now ready for distribution. Price, $1.00 per copy, sent by mail, postage paid.

As the books are sold for the Grand Chapter, orders not accompanied by the cash will not be filled. Address H. G. Reynolds, Jr., or MASONIC TROWEL.

Biographical Sketches.



Jerome R. Gorin.

The eminent and distinguished brother whose name heads this article, was born October 12, 1817, and is now nearly fifty-two years of age. The father, John D. Gorin, was born in Fairfax county, Virginia, April 26, 1790, and was of English descent. The mother, Martha Thomas, of Welsh ancestry, was born in Edgefield county, S. C., May 30, 1788. They married in Christian county, Ky., February 25, 1807. Both were Presbyterians of the old school.

John D. Gorin was a man of marked character, and came to Vandalia in 1828, where he kept tavern. Vandalia was at that time, and until 1839, the seat of government. The old Grand Lodge went down in 1827; we suppose that old Vandalia Lodge went down with it, for we have never been able to learn anything about it since. On the 10th of January, 1839, the present Temperance Lodge No. 16 was opened, under dispensation from Missouri, and John D. Gorin was S. W. December 18, 1840, he was elected Master, and the subsequent year Treasurer. May 5, 1846, his earthly remains were buried with Masonic honors.

The subject of this sketch received the rudiments of his education in a log school-house in Christian county, Ky.; the benches were made of the one-half of a log, split and reduced to shape by the broad-axe, supported by rough legs fitted to holes made with an auger. The doors were made of clap-boards split like staves from blocks, with holes in the walls, without glass, for light. The fire-place and chimney were built of stone, sticks, and clay, and the first was capacious enough to admit logs eight feet long. At the door was suspended a board shaped like a paddle; on one side was the word in, on the other, out. When the word in was in sight, any one could get liberty to go out, and when he returned, he turned the paddle, and until he returned and reversed its position, none others could get the privilege. The paddle is an institution we have never seen in Illinois. All the rest we are acquainted with. His first teacher was the Hon. Levi D. Boone, M. D., now a distinguished citizen, and formerly Mayor, of Chicago.

The family kept the old "Brick Tavern" in Vandalia for many years. In those days, members of the Legislature traveled for the most part on horseback, and kept their horses at hand during the session. A venerable member who boarded at the hotel had a fine mare, and as the horses were taken to water, this mare was always appropriated by Jerome, and whenever he could see the owner on the hotel steps, a touch in the rear of the saddle would set her to kicking and plunging, which made the old man furiously angry. The boy usually got whipped, but the fun was too rich to mind the flogging.

In 1832, Bro. Gorin came to Decatur; there were not more than a dozen houses in the place, and the whole county—three times its present size—had less than 250 voters. Now, Decatur has between 9,000 and 10,000 inhabitants, and the county gives more that 3,000 votes. In 1865 and 1856, he was elected one of the town board, and Clerk and Attorney in 1860.. During that year he prepared the revised code of city ordinances, most of which, unchanged, are still in force. Since that time, the people have elected him Mayor and Alderman repeatedly. At the November election, 1856, he was chosen a member of the General Assembly.

His wife, Eleanor E. D. Fawcett, was born Feb. 18, 1823, in Charlestown, Jefferson county, Va. While a small child, her parents emigrated to Tennessee, and her father, having business to New Orleans, was killed on return trip by the blowing up of a river steamer. The Mississippi River is his grave, and the roar of its ever-descending waters constantly chants his sad requiem. Afterwards, the family settled within twelve miles of Chicago, where the mother married a Methodist preacher, largely known in those days as "Father Walker," who was a missionary among the Indians, and the daughter could speak the Pottawatomie language for many years as fluently as any native. They were married April 1, 1845; have buried one child, and have three sons and three daughters living. One son is of age and a Mason. Both parents are Methodists, and Bro. Gorin is Steward, Trustee, and an active officer in Sunday-Schools, besides holding several responsible positions in city schools, cemetery board, &c.

By profession a lawyer, but now cashier of the Banking House of I. Milliken & Co.

At the first meeting held under the charter of Macon Lodge No. 8, October 16, 1841, Jerome R. Gorin was initiated an Entered Apprentice, and on the 18th was passed and raised. At the election succeeding, he was chosen Secretary; was a representative in Grand Lodge October, 1843, and was elected Senior Warden in 1843 and 1844, Treasurer in 1845, and S. W. in 1847. Shortly after this he removed to Taylorville, and was the first Master of Mound Lodge, now No. 122, at that place. In 1854, he appears again as Master of Macon No. 8, and has since been elected in 1861, '2, '3, '4, '5, and 1866.

In 1855, the Grand Lodge elected him Senior Grand Warden, and again in 1862; Deputy Grand Master in 1863, and again in 1865, and Grand Master, nearly unanimously, in 1866 and 1867.

From 1860 forward, he has been every year in Grand Lodge, often Chairman of Finance Committee, and serving laboriously on several others.

Bro. Gorin was exalted in Springfield Chapter No. 1 in 1842. In 1854 he joined with others to procure a dispensation for a chapter at Decatur, now No. 20, of which he was King. The chapter elected him High Priest in 1856, and Scribe in 1861, and he has served several years as Captain of the Host. The orders of High Priesthood were conferred on him in 1861, and he represented his chapter in 1861, '2, '3, '4, '5, '6, '7, and '8, and served on important committees.

In Cryptic Masonry, he passed the circle in Springfield Council No. 2, in October, 1860.

A dispensation was granted for a new council at Decatur in 1864, and chartered the same year as No. 16, of which Comp. Gorin was Principal Conductor, which position he has ever since held.

He received the orders of Knighthood in Belvidere Commandery, at Alton. In 1859, a commandery was chartered at Decatur, under the name of Beaumanoir, Jerome R. Gorin, Commander, which position he has filled a large portion of the time since. After two terms of service as Grand Generalissimo, and two as Deputy Grand Commander, he was elected Grand Commander of Templars last October by a very decided majority. He was also one of the thirty-one who received the Scottish Rite degrees in Occidental Consistory in March, 1865, at the hands of the venerable Bro. Van Rensselaer.

In person about six feet in height, strongly built, dark complexion, a pleasant, genial gentleman, who will make friends anywhere.

His administration as Grand Master was a complete success, and he retired from the position with honor.

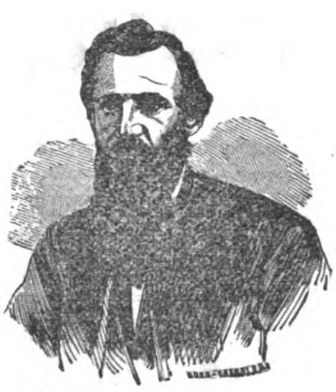
As a presiding officer, he succeeded well, was cautious and prudent, and seldom made mistakes. He represented the Grand Chapter and Grand Commandery at St. Louis last September. As he is still hale and strong, he may be looked for in Grand Lodge for twenty-five years to come, and may sit with his grand-sons, when the Masonic people of Illinois will number from two to three hundred thousand.

◆

Architectural Review.

Some months since we noticed, in connection with other journals, the excellent magazine published by Samuel Sloan, Architect, 819 and 821 Market St., Philadelphia. The subscription price is $6 per annum, published monthly. Single copies, 50 cents. For sale by A. J. Bicknell, of this city, to whose politeness we are indebted for a copy of the April number. In our travels, we visit many towns where architecture as a study has hardly commenced; we find many wealthy agriculturists who would build houses and lay out grounds in good taste, if possessed of the information necessary, and at but a trifle more expense.

We not only wish that these works were in the hands of builders and mechanics, but that they were in the house of every thrifty farmer.



George W. Lininger.

David Lininger and his wife, Elizabeth, both of German descent, were born in 1807, and trained up in the Lutheran Church, and have been distinguished for an elevated, steadfast Christian faith. They were married in 1828, and of the seven children, four await their coming. The eldest, Daniel, a member of St. John's Lodge, at Peru, died March 8, 1866, being then thirty-eight years of age. The parents are still living, in the enjoyment of a liberal competence, which they dispense with liberal hospitality. Of the two remaining sons, George is the youngest, and was born in Franklin county, December 14, 1834. The family came to Knoxville in 1847, and at the age of eighteen he commenced life, with but a moderate education, as a dry goods clerk.

At that time the family had removed to Peru, and, after a proper term of service, his fidelity, industry, and capacity secured him a partnership with Mr. J. Ash. Success attended the firm for one year, when it was assumed by B. S. & G. W. Lininger, and carried forward two years, at which time George became the sole proprietor, and so continued until 1868.

Being warned that his close application to business was rapidly undermining his health, and that a change in business and in climate was demanded, he took a tour with his brother last summer through Iowa, Kansas, and Missouri. The result is a location in connection with Bro. E. L. Shugart, lately of Princeton, at the flourishing city of Council Bluffs, Iowa, opposite Omaha, where they are engaged in a large business in the sale of agricultural implements.

While living at Knoxville, he became attached to Caroline M., daughter of Hon. George Newman, who was born April 12, 1837. The childish love grew into the life of the man and woman, and resulted in marriage December 15, 1856. One son is not; a daughter, Florence, now nine years old, lives to bless and cheer this happy union.

The early religious training has not been disregarded, and he discloses his profound reverence for his early instruction by a close attendance upon the services of the Protestant Episcopal church.

In all the moral, business, and private relations of George W. Lininger, there has never been a suspicion against him. Judgment, courtesy, and fidelity, have marked his entire life. Now, with moderate means and unblemished character, he has chosen a new field, greatly to the regret of his former associates, and as greatly to the advantage of those among whom he has cast his lot.

What a splendid character is this for a Freemason! He was initiated in St. John's Lodge No. 13, at Peru, October 2, 1856, passed December 4, and raised January 5, 1857; was elected Secretary the following June; elected Junior Warden in June, 1858; Senior Warden in 1860; Master in 1862, '3, '4, '5, '6, and '7.

He represented the lodge from 1860 until last October, and has usually served with credit, and twice especially as Chairman of Committee on Mileage and Per Diem, and, in 1866, Chairman of Committee on Lodges U. D. No charters were granted that year as a matter of form. Every case was carefully investigated, and every charter was based upon merit.

We are unable at this writing to state where he received the chapter degrees, but feel certain that he must have received them in Cement Chapter No. 58, sometime in 1859–60. In 1860 he, as H. P., with others, obtained a dispensation for a chapter at Peru, which was chartered the same year, as No. 60. He represented the chapter as High Priest in 1861, and was again High Priest in 1866. We can not find the proceedings of 1862 and 1863, and can not state what positions he held those years. That he was a representative we are confident, for he was appointed Grand Royal Arch Captain in 1863, elected Grand Captain of the Host in 1864, Grand Scribe in 1865, Deputy in 1866, and Grand High Priest in 1867. The order of High Priesthood was conferred on him in 1860.

The degrees of Royal and Select Master were received in Springfield Council No. 2, in October, 1861.

In 1862, Comp. Fisher, then Grand Puissant, granted a dispensation for a new council at Peru, with Comp. Lininger for the first Master. It was chartered No. 12. The council continued him as chief officer in 1863, '5, and '6. As representative or officer, no year has seen him absent since 1863; was elected the third officer in 1866, and Deputy in 1867, and would have been elected Grand Puissant had he remained in the State.

The orders of Knighthood were conferred on him in Ottawa Commandery, of which he was Commander in 1866. One of his last Masonic acts was to procure a charter, in October last, for a new commandery at Peru, of which he was Commander while under dispensation.

If there is any one good thing in which our beloved brother excels all others, it is faithfulness. Nothing is left at random or to uncertainty. He finishes what he begins, and his material improves in the working. His pride is to do his work well. The great distinction he has attained is in Capitular Masonry. Upon his installation as Grand High Priest, it became necessary for him to appoint a committee to revise the work and prepare a manual. M. E. Comps. Hubbard, Egan, Munn, Miner, and Pearson, were selected. He kept his eye on every detail, attended every meeting, and at the meeting of the Grand Chapter, was able to give a complete exemplification of the opening and closing lectures to the great delight of all old Royal Arch Masons who were present.

As a presiding officer, kind and courteous, but cool, clear, and positive. In person, about 5 feet 10 inches high, with a grave but pleasant countenance, and a frank, manly air, that inspires affection and respect.

He represented the Grand Chapter at St. Louis last September, and served on an important committee.

Since his removal to Council Bluffs, he has organized Excelsior Lodge U. D., of which he is Master, and Star Chapter U. D., of which he is H. P.

St. John's Lodge, at Peru, presented him a Past Master's jewel of gold, valued at $75, and when about to leave, the lodge presented him a gold-headed cane. And he writes us that he has received the Past High Priest's jewel voted by the Grand Chapter.

In a note to us, he says: "I have given twelve years of my life to the study of Masonry, and I feel as though I had just begun to learn. I have often been reminded that I was paying too much attention to Masonry. I might be worth a little more in dollars and cents, but, on the other hand, I would have been much poorer in the end. I have always endeavored to lay by a little each year, so that we have always had plenty to eat, drink, and wear."

That testimony is priceless. In conclusion, we but repeat the earnest desire of every Mason who knows him, that his life may be long and happy, and that he may attain to the highest positions among the Iowa Craftsmen.

Communications.

To Reckon Mentally the Moon's Age on any Day.

The following rule will give the age of the moon correctly, on an average, just as ordinary clock time is the average time as given by a sun-dial or noon mark:

Rule—Call March the first month, April the second month, May the third, and so on; note the epact for the year, as given in the almanac (for 1869 it is 17). Then add the number of the month, day of the month, and epact together; if this sum is less than 30, it is the age of the moon in days; if more than 30, subtract 30, and the difference is the moon's age; thus, take March 27: we see

March is month No	1
Day of the month is	27
The epact is	17
	45
Subtract days in lunar month	30
Age of moon, days	15

which is full moon. Again, take December 3d, what is the moon's age on that day?

December is month No	10
Day of the month is	3
Epact is	17
Age of the moon, days	30

that is, it is new moon. Again, will it be moonlight on July 4th next?

July is month No	5
Day of the month	4
Epact is	17
Moon's age in days	26

therefore a dark night. Again, will it be moonlight on the 10th of November?

November is month No	9
Day of the month	10
Epact is	17
	36
Subtract days of lunar month	30
Age of moon, days	6

therefore, moonlight till late in the evening.

The epact for this year must be used until March, 1870, and January and February, 1870, called the 11th and 12th months respectively.

JAMES FENTON.

DETROIT, March, 1869.

Dedication.

MT. STERLING, Ill., April 2, 1869.

H. G. Reynolds, Grand Master:

M. W. SIR AND BRO.:—On the 27th ult. I visited Benevolent Lodge No. 52, at Meredosia, Morgan county, Ill., and dedicated their new hall at that place. The brethren of the lodge deserve great credit for the very fine, commodious, and well appointed lodge-room they have built for the practice of the beautiful rites of our beloved Order. I have not seen a finer lodge-room any where than the brethren of Benevolent Lodge have secured for their lodge. The lodge is in fine condition, and prospering, under the rule of Bro. S. S. Winnegar, who is now serving his fourth term as Master of that lodge. May his shadow never grow less, and may Benevolent Lodge still continue to prosper, until their present commodious hall will be too small for them.

Fraternally yours,

A. A. GLENN.

Michigan.

The Grand Lodge held its annual communication at Detroit, January 13th. Salathiel C. Coffinbury, Grand Master; James Fenton, Grand Secretary. Two hundred and eighteen lodges were represented. We have heretofore spoken of the Grand Master as one of the ablest who ever filled the oriental chair of that Grand Lodge; and that is much to say, after such predecessors as Cass, Fenton, and Moore. He says what he wishes to, and all he wishes to, in a clear and comprehensive manner, and his annual addresses are excellent models for Masonic or State papers.

The following extract from the address disposes of a class of cases, conjoining the right of withdrawal and an implied renunciation of Masonry. The points are well taken, and the decisions are logical, right, and legal. What is a man's honor worth who has none?

The following correspondence suggested and required the decisions which follow. The correspondence is addressed to Blissfield Lodge No. 114, and by that lodge submitted to me for my direction in the premises:

To the Blissfield Lodge of F. & A. M.:

Permit me to express to you my thanks for having conferred the three first degrees of Masonry upon me without charge. Now, from your Fraternity, I ask you to give me as generously full release. To this request I have been urged by a sense of duty which has long been growing. It is not possible for me to indorse the Institution or to feel bound by its obligations. Delay on your part to act will effect no change in my wishes or convictions: therefore let me hear of your disposal of my case as soon as possible.

Yours, &c.,
D. H. E.

Another letter from the same brother, addressed to the Secretary of the same lodge, dated October 18th, 1868, is as follows:

Please to find inclosed my withdrawal from the fraternity of F. & A. M., with my pledge of honor not to avail myself of its rites and benefits forever. May I ask you to send me as soon as possible the official evidence that my withdrawal is complete.

Yours, &c.,
D. H. E.

This note enclosed the following writing, bearing the same date:

I, D. H. E., of my own free will and accord, do hereby withdraw myself from the Fraternity of F. & A. Masons, and pledge my honor that I will never make myself known as a Mason by sign, token, or word, or receive any of the rights or benefits of Masonry hereafter.

(Signed) D. H. E.

These documents were forwarded to me by the Secretary of Blissfield Lodge, with a note as follows:

I am requested by our lodge to ask you if this lodge can legally accept the withdrawal from all the rites and benefits of Masonry of one of its members.

To these inquiries I replied as follows:

Such a withdrawal as our brother proposes is incompatible with the spirit of Masonry, and inconsistent with its duties. He can not by his withdrawal, impair our obligations to him, nor absolve us from our obligations and duties to his family. His pledge of honor is worthless. One who has taken the solemn Masonic obligations, and openly declares that he does not feel himself bound by them, certainly will not entertain any high respect for his obligations of honor.

Your lodge can not accept such withdrawal, neither can it discharge a brother from his Masonic obligations and duties.

A lodge can not ignore its obligations to a brother, nor can it discharge itself or its members from them, except by trial for unmasonic conduct, and a sentence of suspension or expulson from all the rights and benefits of Masonry, upon conviction.

I recommend to your lodge to prefer charges of unmasonic conduct against the brother, for declaring that he can not indorse the institution of Masonry, and that he does not feel himself bound by its obligations. A brother who does not acknowledge the force of these obligations ought to be expelled from the Order.

By this answer to the lodge, the following questions were decided, which I submit for your approval, revision, modification, or reversal, confident that the great legal ability associated in this Grand Body will rule justly in the premises:

1st. A Mason can not, in form, resign his membership of the Order, withdraw himself from its duties, nor discharge himself from its obligations.

2d. A lodge has not the power to discharge a Mason from his duties as such, nor absolve him from his Masonic obligations.

3d. Could it do so at the request of a brother, the claims of the family of the brother upon the Order would remain unimpaired, for acts of either the lodge or the brother, which would compromise such claims of third parties, could have no effects against the rights of such third parties.

4th. A Lodge can not avail nor absolve itself and its Masonic brotherhood from their obligation to a brother, only by a sentence of suspension or expulsion from all the rights and benefits of Masonry against such brother, upon a fair trial and conviction.

5th. A brother who will not indorse the moral theories of Masonry and its sublime, humane lessons, and who declares that he will not be bound by its solemn obligations, ought to be expelled from all the rights and obligations of Masonry.

The committee on the forms of demits say:

A demit is a letter of dismission and a recommendation to another lodge. It is not intended to be permanent in its character as a certificate of good standing in the Order; but only evidence that the brother named therein was, at the time of its issue, in good standing in the subordinate lodge; that he had paid all dues, and a recommendation to any other lodge within whose jurisdiction he shall reside.

As a rule, all demits which have been long issued should be looked upon with disfavor, if the brother holding the same resides within a reasonable distance of a regular lodge.

The first paragraph is good law; the second, good counsel.

The committee on Masonic law made report, in a matter of physical disabilities, as follows, which was adopted:

Bro. Johnson, after having been passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, received a severe injury, which resulted in necessitating an amputation of his left leg, below the knee.

Your committee are called upon to express their opinion as to whether Bro. Johnson is, under the facts presented, eligible to the Master Mason's degree.

Your committee are of the opinion that he is not.

While Bro. Johnson's misfortune is deplorable, and must excite the sympathy of the Fraternity, and while in all other respects he may be thoroughly qualified for admission to the sublime degree, yet it is in this case irreparable.

Your committee find that, in conferring the several degrees, the ancient landmarks, rites, and traditions must be strictly adhered to. The loss of an arm or foot is an irreparable obstacle to the conferring of any of the three degrees. In arriving at this conclusion, your committee find no discrepancy or disagreement among Masonic writers, and it seems to them to be too plain a proposition for argument.

Your committee were instructed to report a resolution to this grand body, providing for cases of the character above referred to. Accordingly, they respectfully submit, for your consideration, the following resolution:

Resolved, That any physical injury or imperfection which would render the conferring of any of the degrees upon a candidate or brother desiring advancement, as required by the work or ritual, either impossible, imperfect, or incomplete, is an insuperable objection to farther progress, until such injury or imperfection be cured or removed. And in case of loss of hand or foot, such defect is remediless.

The following are the grand officers for the current year:

A. T. Metcalf, Kalamazoo, Grand Master; A. Partridge, Deputy; E. R. Landon, S. G. Warden; J. V. Lambertson, J. G. Warden; Henry M. Look, Grand Visitor and Lecturer; Rev. C. C. Yemans, Grand Chaplain; R. W. Landon, Grand Treasurer; James Fenton, Detroit, Grand Secretary; C. G. Curtis, S. G. Deacon; Seth Pettibone, J. G. Deacon; F. Hart, G. Marshal.

ADDRESS.

BY BENJAMIN B. FRENCH.

[Concluded.]

I have gone on, until what I intended should be a mere exordium is a lecture in itself.

I started with the purpose of attempting to show some of the benefits of Freemasonry as a mere social institution; but the subject of my proposed lecture will now stand only as a conclusion, the exordium being in fact the lecture.

I will consider now the social effect of Freemasonry on mankind.

We all admit the happy effect of social intercourse among those whose proximity of residence has brought them into constant communion with each other; and most of us, perhaps all, can turn their minds back to the paternal hearth-stone, whereon, in their childhood and youth, they played with the dear ones of the household—to that beloved home where, under the guardian parental care, all was happiness and joy and love. And after the separation which riper years are sure to bring with it, who is there who has not felt the overwhelming joy that pervades the bosom when the long-separated family again assemble beneath the paternal roof-tree?

This is the beautiful, the sweet, the joyful sociality of kindred; and were it not ordained by Him who scattered the people engaged at the building of the tower of Babel, that mankind should still continue to be scattered over all the earth, perhaps no ties other than those of association and of kindred would be necessary to one of the great purposes of our being—social intercourse. But as men were scattered then, so have they, from that day onward, been scattered, and when one world was found insufficient to their purposes, the mighty waters of the Atlantic were crossed, and another world, as it were, was given to civilized man!

Under this Almighty decree, man required something stronger than the mere ties of neighborhood—something that would embrace a more extensive circle than the golden chain of kindred—something by which the man of Europe, the man of Asia, and the man of America, should they chance to meet for the first time on a desert island, could say to each other, "we are brethren;" could make known to each other that they were bound by the strongest human ties to sustain, support, protect, and defend each other. And this strong bond that was wanted, was, by the wisdom specially bestowed by God on one of our race, formed and perfected, and has stood the test of ages against all its enemies and all its revilers, and is at this moment as strong, as effective, as powerful for good, as it was on the day that Solomon dedicated to the Most High the beautiful Temple which he had erected. And what is most singular in regard to it, and would, if anything could, mark its divine origin, is, that from its initiation to this day it has posseseed a universal language, not in words, I admit, but, if possible, more impressive than words, by which one brother can make himself known to another, and can call upon him in his hour of distress, although no spoken language may be mutually known to them.

One of the social effects of Freemasonry is shown in the assembling together of a company of good and true men in the lodge-rooms as often as once a month, and there uniting as brothers in adoration of God and in good will to one another, striving to improve themselves, and seeking to devise plans by which the happiness of their fellow-men may be increased.

When we consider, my brethren, that no month of the year passes away without the assembling, all over the civilized world, of thousands upon thousands of bodies of men, as we are now here assembled, whose duty and whose pleasure it is to protect the weak, to encourage and recompense virtue, to spread abroad the principles of morality, to preserve the holy deposit of honor, to afford relief to those who are sick, to bind up the wounds of the broken-hearted, and extend the warm sympathy of brotherhood to those who are in affliction,—does not that alone present to the mind a picture of social intercourse far more sublime than any one that ever either nature or art presented to the eye?

Not only every month, but every day of every month, there are more or less of these social assemblages, which do honor to mankind; and I presume now, at this very moment, had we the power of omnipotent vision, we could look into hundreds of lodge-rooms, where the greater and the lesser lights are gleaming upon and about the altar; where the Master, Wardens, and brethren are in their places; where harmony, brotherly love, good will to men, and adoration to God, mark the moments as they pass, and where every one is constantly reminded by the reflection from—

"That hieroglyphic bright
That none but craftsmen ever saw,"

which gleams in the east, of Him—

"Who molded in his palm the earth
And hung it in the skies."

When we bring all this to the eye of our minds and reflect seriously upon it, does it not present to us one effect of social intercourse, the benefit of which can scarcely be calculated by man?

There is another great point which we ought by no means to overlook in the consideration of these Masonic communications. Referring back to the initiatory statement of these remarks, that "man is essentially a social being," we must remember that some men are so constituted that they are really unhappy, unless they can enjoy in some way the society of their fellows. And how many, oh how many, have been reclaimed from associations tending to all sorts of human degradation, by becoming members of our institution. And, while many have been thus reclaimed, the number that has been saved from ever entering on the downward course, by early association with the Masonic fraternity, can never be known and hardly be imagined!

When the brethren are assembled in the Lodge, they are all equal; so that in the Masonic hall, more than in any other place beneath the heavens, man can enjoy the true social intercourse of his kind. He whom the trappings of wealth and office surrounds, and whom the false estimate of the world places above his fellows, and the equally false etiquette of society assigns a walk in life superior to many of those about him, when in the Lodge, finds every one his equal.

For my part, my brethren, I believe in the equality of honest men everywhere. That minds, either by birth or by cultivation, are unequal, I know; for all ploughmen are not Robert Burnses; nor are all who profess to be orators Daniel Websters.

Nature made both these men great in their several walks, and they both delighted to mingle with their fellow-men of all classes wherever they chanced to meet with them. But, as we pass along the great highway of life, the man of honest heart and upright walk, though of uncultivated mind, and steeped in poverty to the very lips, is as worthy of our salutation and our kind recognizance as he is whom abundant wealth and high station enables to lord it over his fellows.

Freemasonry has its social effect as well outside of the Lodge as in it. Let a worthy brother go anywhere where there are brethren of the Craft, and he is at once made welcome in the family circle of them all. The wives and daughters are equally as prompt to extend the welcome as the brother is who acknowledges the Fraternity. And let me say here, that although women can not be admitted members of the Order, it is my sincere belief that the female sex has received as much, and I am not certain but more, benefit from Freemasonry than the male. Let but the wives of men who have been reformed by Freemasonry—the widows to whom has been extended the hand of Masonic charity and brotherly affection, the orphan daughters to whom the brethren of the deceased fathers have been even more than fathers, and the females of many a household where misfortune has entered with its heavy hand, and want has only been kept away by the kindness of Masonic charity—all speak their gratitude; and the vast volume that it would add to the record of woman's regard for our Institution would convince the world that Freemasonry was by no means for the benefit of man alone. Oh no, my brethren; if our wives and our daughters, our mothers and our sisters, could be for a moment forgotten, either within the lodge or out of it, we should hardly hold the Institution in that high estimation that we now do.

In cities where there are many lodges the social effect of Freemasonry is not so apparent as in places of less population, where there is, perhaps, but a single lodge. Still, even in cities, families are drawn much closer to each other in consequence of the fraternal ties that unite the male members. But my own experience in years long gone by, in the villages of my native State, was, that in each village where a lodge was located the families of the Fraternity seemed to be almost as strongly bound to each other in the ties of affection as were the fathers, sons, and brothers by the mystic tie. But, after all, the true test of the social benefits of Freemasonry is found by the brother who travels in lands foreign to his own, and finds when far away from home those who are willing to give him a welcome to their dwellings, to minister kindly to his wants, and when he departs to bid him God-speed upon his journey.

Many incidents could be cited from Masonic history of brethren who owed everything, even to their existence, to brethren only recognized as such on the instant of extreme need or extreme peril.

I shall, however, only detain you with two instances related to me by the brethren themselves. An intimate friend and brother had occasion a few years ago to proceed from the mouth of the Amazon River with two small steamers to Loreto, in Peru, a distance of some 1,500 miles. After proceeding up some six or seven hundred miles he became ill, and concluded to place the steamers in the care of a friend and to return himself as he best could to Para, from whence he started. His return was made in boats, hired of the natives as he passed along. I will relate his story, as nearly as I can, as he related it to me after he arrived safe and in good health at my house in this city:

"On my way down," said he, "I landed each night at some respectable-looking place where I could get proper accommodation, and to my surprise I hardly entered a respectable dwelling where I did not find its proprietor a Freemason. The moment it was ascertained that I was one, no effort was spared to make me comfortable, and many of those with whom I passed the night had their own canoes manned early in the morning and sent me forward a day's journey, recommending me to some friend with whom I could pass the next night. One brother at whose house house I stopped on my way up—for we did not run the steamers in the night—hailed me on my return as if he had been my father. He did everything he possibly could for my comfort, and insisted, when I was ready to leave, upon sending me forward (I think he said to his destination) in his own boat, well-manned and provisioned."

I give here, of course, but an outline of his glowing description of his journey down the river; but he closed it by saying: "And now, Brother French, I tell you seriously, that had I not been a Freemason, I do not believe I should have ever reached Para alive. To my brethren on the banks of the Amazon I owe it that I am here giving you this account of the benefits I have received in almost a land of barbarism by being a Freemason."

Such was his story, and a better, truer, or more reliable man and Mason lives not on earth.

The other instance I shall mention is that of a brother who, a few years since, traveled over much of Europe. He took with him such passports, letters, and papers as he thought necessary for his safety, and such as might expedite his business. Among other things, he took his Masonic diplomas, and in relating to me the fact, he said that, while the seal of the United States and his letters from the highest dignitaries of this nation were treated only with respect, when he exhibited his Masonic diplomas a new light seemed to break upon those to whom he exhibited them, and he at once found enough who were ready to do anything for him in their power. And he concluded with expressing the idea that he should prefer to take his chances in any place on the continent of Europe with a Masonic diploma, rather than with a letter under the great seal of the United States, with the sign manual of the President.

These are facts, and they might be multiplied to thousands; and yet there are those who pretend to believe that Freemasonry is a useless institution; that it has outlived its day, and may as well be suffered to expire!

As well might they say that the noonday sun might be extinguished, and as well might they attempt to extinguish it!

Thousands of years have passed since the existence of Freemasonry began, and it is at this moment the strongest human society in the world; and only when the sun shall be blotted from the heavens will it cease to exist.

Legislation against Freemasonry.

The New York Mercantile Journal, of a recent date, contains the following article with reference to the late political movement at Washington against Freemasonry:

A petition from certain citizens of Ohio was presented to the Senate of the United States, the latter part of last month, praying Congress to refuse charters to any secret associations, and to repeal the law under which the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia obtained its charter.

The petitioners based their hostility to the ancient institution of Freemasonry on several serious charges, which, if well founded, would have fully justified their action.

Our duty as public journalists, leads us to examine these charges, as the organization thus assailed extends over all the world, and claims to have been established with the praiseworthy object of inculcating the practice of social and moral virtue.

A careful study of its history has convinced us that it is, what it professes to be, a beautiful system of morality, veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols. There are no secrets as to its principles and objects.

The first of the charges referred to, is that "Masonic associations are dangerous to republican governments." Nothing can be more untrue than this.

Monarchy is hereditary, Freemasonry an elective institution. In the one the sovereign, claiming to rule by an inherited right divine, is regarded as the fountain of all honor and power, in the other, the people are acknowledged to be the only source of control.

All officers in the Masonic Fraternity, being in the gift of the Craft, government is strictly elective, and, consequently, republican in its form and character.

Freemasonry dangerous to republican institutions! It might be as well said that knowledge was dangerous to freedom. The true model of a well-ordered republic is a just and duly constituted Masonic lodge.

Our own great Washington, the memory of whose virtues, valor, and patriotism, will remain forever enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen, was one of the greatest ornaments of the Fraternity. Identified, as he was, with the Institution, if it had been antagonistic in its principles or practice to republican government, he would have contented himself with a Presidential chair when he might have mounted a royal throne?

The wiseacres of Ohio, whose minds it may be impossible to irradiate with the light of truth, also assert that, for a long time, Masonic societies have directed their efforts, in this country, toward the support of slavery and the inception of rebellion in its behalf. In reply to this, suffice it to say that every Mason is strictly enjoined "to be a peaceful and quiet citizen, true to his government and just to his country; not to countenance disloyality or rebellion; but patiently to submit to legal authority, and conform with cheerfulness to the government of the country in which he lives." The charge of inciting to rebellion, &c., is, therefore, as false as that of "perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar," which was brought against the founder of Christianity.

Who does not know that the essential characteristic of Masonry, when not perverted, is charity, and that brotherly love, relief, and truth are the corner-stones of the Masonic temple? How, then, can that be a pro-slavery institution, which teaches its members to aid in the erection of that universal and eternal temple, which will one day inclose all humanity within its precincts?

The petitioners say that Freemasons are "bound by barbarous oaths repugnant to law, human and divine."

This is another infamous falsehood. The solemn obligations which Masons voluntarily assume have been entered into by some of the wisest and most virtuous men of all ages and countries since the days of King Solomon. Would they have bound themselves by "barbarous and unlawful oaths?"

Again, it is charged by the petitioners that the youth of the country are taught in Masonic lodges "the pernicious practices of conspiracy," and that these institutions, through the use of vague signs and symbols, insidiously calculated to deceive, "habituate the young and innocent to the ways of duplicity and demoralization." The allusion to the young and innocent is easily disposed of, as no one not of lawful age can be made a Mason.

As to the rest, we have the best authority for stating that a desire of knowledge and a sincere wish of being serviceable to his fellow-creatures is the "open sesame" for every man to every Masonic lodge on the face of the globe, and if any evil thing be discountenanced by Freemasonry more than another, it is disloyalty or conspiracy against lawful government. Its signs and symbols constitute a universal language understood by all Masons. True, they are secret and inviolable. This, however, is a manifest necessity, for were it otherwise, how could one Mason know another, with whom he was previously unacquainted, with certainty? The signs and symbols are only vague to the uninitiated, but to Masons instructed in those duties toward God and man which Masonry inculcates, they are full of meaning, truth, and power. Wherever the light of knowledge has dispelled the mists of ignorance, or the torch of science revealed the hidden wonders of creation, or an altar been erected to the great Architect of the Universe, there Masonry exerts its benign influence, uniting men in an adamantine bond of "brotherly love."

Death of Ill. and Rev'd Bro. Chas. H. Platt, New York.

There is no more trite saying, and nothing more solemn than the conviction, that death comes inevitably to every one. It is our painful duty to announce that another eminent Freemason, divine, and exemplary gentleman, the Ill. Bro., Rev'd Charles H. Platt, 33°, Rector of Christ Church (Episcopal) at Binghamton, New York, Senior Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge; Grand Chaplain of the Grand Chapter; Grand Master of the Grand Council R. and S. Masters; Grand Prelate of the Grand Commandery of the State of New York, and at the union of the bodies of the A. A. Rite for the Northern Masonic Jurisdiction of the United States, appointed Grand Prior of the Supreme Council, has been suddenly taken from our midst, quietly taking his flight to that "Home not made with hands," on the morning of Thursday, February 26th, ult.

Our deceased friend and brother never appeared in better health, than when in attendance on the several Grand Bodies and Council of Deliberation, which met at Albany, New York, on the second of February last, and his cordial greeting and cheerful assurances to his brethren there assembled, will long be treasured by those who had the pleasure of then being associated with him.

But he is gone from among those who loved and respected him so much on earth, and we can not but indulge the aspiration, that kindred spirits will meet again, for

"Is it not sweet to think hereafter,
When the spirit leaves this sphere,
Love, with deathless wings shall waft her
To those she long hath mourned for here.
Hearts, from which 'twas death to sever,
Eyes, this world can ne'er restore,
There, as warm, as bright as ever,
Shall meet us and be lost no more."

In the social circle, he was a shining light; in him, Masonry had an ardent supporter, and it can with truth be said, he ever lived up to its dictates and principles. In the Church of Christ he had attained a proud position for his unaffected piety and learning; and the tribute paid to his remains, when they were carried to their last home on Friday, 27th ult., by a large and respectable congregation, who had so long enjoyed his ministrations, clearly proved how truly and sincerely they mourned him.

We have now before us, the last address which he ever delivered as a Mason, being his remarks as Grand Master to his companions in the Grand Council of R. and S. Masters of the State of New York, on the 2d of February last; and for beauty of diction, terseness, yet comprehensiveness of style, clearly proved him a scholar of a high order of attainments.

After paying a high eulogium and tribute of respect to the memories of the late Dr. Bradley Parker of New York, and Charles A. Fuller of Tennessee, he concluded his address in the following eloquent passages, which to us have, at this present writing, somewhat of a premonition:

"The dread catastrophe that hovers in the very atmosphere of Masonry is Death. But the Light that beams through the same atmosphere is Life—Life at the command of the Master—Life rising out of the ashes of the dead.

"'To die, is landing on some island shore
Where billows never beat, nor tempests roar;
Ere well we feel the friendly stroke, 'tis o'er.'

"One of the ever-honored patrons of Freemasonry has condensed its instruction into these few golden syllables: 'We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren.'

"Companions, be this our ideal. Let us be faithful to this exalted pattern. It will admit diversities of sentiment. It tolerates kind and enthusiastic discussions. It prompts us to be manly first, that there may be play for brotherly concession. But it harbors no malignities, permits no hypocrisies, and endures no frauds. Whenever my name shall wear the funeral drapery upon your record, and the silence and darkness of the grave shall forbid me to vindicate myself, let the fidelity to which we are pledged be the surviving voice to attest that fervency and zeal were the imperishable inmates of my heart."

We have no doubt he sleeps well. Let his memory be ever treasured by the true and faithful.—Keystone.

The Sepulcher of Solomon, King of Israel.

BY DNALXO.

The first object that meets the eye of a traveler approaching Jerusalem from the southward, is a lofty minaret rising from the midst of the group of irregular buildings on the southern brow of Mount Zion, known as Neby Daud.

The principal building of this group, is the Cænaculum, which stands immediately over the vault said to be the sepulcher of Solomon King of Israel, and of David his father.

The Cænaculum and the adjoining buildings were formerly a Franciscan convent, and the order had its chief seat there from 1313 to 1561, at which date they were finally expelled under the following circumstances, which furnish a remarkable instance of religious intolerance, and of its well merited punishment.

A Constantinople Jew of great wealth and influence, whilst visiting Jerusalem, begged permission of the latin superior to pray at the Tomb of David, but his request was insolently refused. The Jew said he would be revenged, and on returning to Constantinople, rebuked the Grand Vizier, for allowing the tomb of one of the great Prophets of Islam to remain in the hands of infidels.

This reproof, assisted by large bribes, gave the Jew his revenge, for the Franciscans were expelled from their convent, and the place has ever since been held by the Moslems. Their mosque in the lower story of the Cænaculum is the most jealously guarded of any of the sacred places in or around Jerusalem, and very few Europeans have been able to gain access to it. Sir Moses Montefiore and his party were admitted to the mosque in 1839, and saw the cenotaph through a trellised doorway; but were not permitted to enter the room in which it stands. A few years ago a Miss Barclay, having disguised herself as a Turkish lady, was enabled by the kind assistance of a Mahometan lady-friend to penetrate to the sacred chamber. She says, "the room is insignificant in its dimensions, but is furnished very gorgeously. The tomb is apparently an immense sarcophagus of rough stone, and is covered by green satin tapestry richly embroidered with gold. To this a piece of black velvet is attached with a few inscriptions from the Koran, embroidered also in gold. A satin canopy of red, blue, green, and yellow stripes hangs over the tomb; and another piece of black velvet tapestry, embroidered in silver, covers the door in one end of the room, which, they said leads to a cave underneath. Two tall silver candlesticks stand before this door, and a little lamp hangs in a window near it, which is kept constantly burning."—(Extract from Dr. Barclay's City of the Great King.)

The satin covered monument described by Miss Barclay is merely a cenotaph, the real tombs are in the cave below, the royal sepulchers being doubtless hewn in the rock, like all the tombs of great men in that age.

It is related that when the Cænaculum was being repaired during the 12th century, some workmen were employed to quarry stones from the foundations of the original wall of Zion. Two of these men found a cave whose mouth had been covered by a stone. They entered this cave in search of treasure, and proceeded till they discovered a large hall, supported by marble columns, encrusted with gold and silver. In this hall on their left, was a sort of table, with a sceptre and crown of gold lying thereon. This was the tomb of Solomon, and on the right, in a similar state, was the tomb of David, and in a like manner the tombs of the kings of Judah. Seeing some large coffers, the two laborers were about to enter the hall, when a blast of wind like a hurricane threw them to the ground, and there they remained insensible till the evening, when they heard a voice commanding them to quit the place.

They immediately rushed forth, and told their strange tale to the priest who had hired them. A learned Rabbi, who was sent for, asserted that this was indeed the tomb of the great king of Israel, whereupon the cave was walled up, so as to hide it effectually.

Like many other equally extravagant legends, this, is probably founded on a narrow basis of truth, though subsequently improved on by the lively imaginations of those by whom it has been handed down to posterity.

It has of course been disputed that this is really the sepulcher of the kings of Judah, yet it is a fact, that now for nearly five centuries, Jew, Christian and Moslem are alike agreed in regarding the cave under the Cænaculum as the spot where lies the ashes of Solomon, king of Israel, of David his father, and of the kings of Judah their successors.

The time may come, when the mosque and cave will be thrown open, and all doubts set at rest; while the brethren who may then fortunately be in the Holy Land will be able to make a pleasant pilgrimage to the last resting place of our great Grand Master, King Solomon. —Freemasons' (London) Magazine.

◆

Grand Chapter of Kansas.

The proceedings had October 19, 1868, are at hand.

As usual, the address of Grand High Priest Rees is in his peculiar vein. We do not believe he could talk prosaically if he tried. The following extract in relation to the General Grand Chapter accords with our views precisely:

> It was my fortune, since we met before, in part to represent this body in the General Grand Convention of Order. I am proud to say that every representative from here was in his place. Under your instructions, I proposed amendment to the constitution of that body, striking out as a capitular degree the order known as Past Master. No action could be taken, further than to lay it over to the next triennial session, yet many members seemed impressed with a desire to place this order where it properly belongs, that our impressive ritual might not be marred with this discordant interloper; and from the intimations that I heard, we safely may assume that three years hence the expression of that body will have been to strike it out. The pending amendments to the constitution, tending to increase the power, were not disposed of, but were laid over for some further consultation. There does not seem to be a disposition to invest that body with a greater power than now possessed. Many were impressed with a desire that that grand body be perpetual, but only as a social and advisory convention, with such expressed authority and delegated power as is now given, and nothing more. 'Tis certainly a benefit to meet and mingle with, triennially, the prominent of every State; a benefit to be esteemed incalculably great amid the conflicts of the outer world; for while it is the few alone in person who enjoy this pleasing interchange of thought and feeling, yet it is a center from which radiates the strong cohesive sentiment that binds together all the elements of our most venerable, most loved, and cherished Order. No prejudice of section was permitted there. New England's representatives were mingling with their brothers of the South as if no strife had e'er disturbed the harmony of sections. The soldiers of opposing armies, who had met in many a bloody field in all the panoply of war, still bearing on their persons scars of many a wound received, most probably, from brothers of the Order, embraced each other in fraternal love, forgot the past in social intercourse and kindly feelings. The sunny South came kindly forth to elevate a northern man to honor most distinguished that the body could bestow; and in return a son of the Palmetto State, who on the southern fields had bravely fought, still bore his wounds with pride, and yielded only to overpowering force, was, by New England's votes with others, honored with the second office in the council. It was a happy thought that there all difference was laid aside, and gives us stronger promise for the future, tells us that there is a chamber yet on earth where, 'mid the strange commotions of the world, still peace and confidence and harmony reside; though from its windows we may gaze in horror on the foundering barks, tossed, crushed, and shattered 'mid contending waves, the darkness of the scene relieved alone by sparkling white caps as they dance upon the bosom of life's troubled ocean.
>
> Though hate with fiendish gaze controls the outer world, and maniac vengeance grasps the hilt, the blade all reeking with a brother's blood, and man, lost in the fury of more dire contending passion, laughs at the desolation he creates, yet from this chamber reaches out the hand, and, while it may not still the storm, it lifts the trembling victim from these scenes of woe and soon enfolds him in the arms of love. It tells of our long continued line of never-ending perpetuity. When Scotland's poet wrote of hope, he might have said of Masonry the same:
>
> " When wrapt in fire the realms of Ether glow,
> And Heaven's last thunder shakes the world below,
> Thou undismayed shall o'er the ruin smile
> And light thy torch at Nature's funeral pile."

The Committee on Correspondence have fallen into the same error which we find in several other proceedings. Comp. John C. Reynolds, our son, introduced a resolution looking to a dissolution of the General Grand Chapter. To any such measure we were then, had ever been before, and have been ever since, unalterably opposed, and it was upon our motion that the measure was defeated.

Owen A. Bassett, of Lawrence, was elected Grand High Priest, and E. T. Carr, of Leavenworth, Grand Secretary.

◆

Masonic Persecution.

The bull of Clement the XII., when issued in 1738, met with little favor in France, although as we have shown, some attempt was made to destroy the Order in that country. The French looked upon it as arbitrary and unjust, and the Parisian Parliament refused unanimously and positively to register it. In the Ecclesiastical and other States of Italy, the torrent of persecution burst across the land; Clement's Bull was followed by an edict, dated 14 January, 1739, full of the same malignant bigotry, and denouncing the same terrible punishments as did the first leaden messenger. The servitude of the galleys, the torments of the rack, and a fine of a thousand crowns in gold, were the threatened punishments to persons of every description, who should dare to presume to attend a Masonic meeting.

In Tuscany, the persecution was conducted with frightful vigor and violence. Crudeli, a Mason, was arrested at Florence, and thrown into the dungeons of the Inquisition. Here he was subjected to all the hellish tortures of the rack, and at last, sentence of imprisonment for life was passed upon him for harboring Masons. It reflects the highest honor upon the memories of the members of the Grand Lodge of England of that time, that no sooner did they hear of Crudeli's sad fate, than they obtained him enlargement, and sent him a large sum of money to assist him in his necessities. When Francis de Lorraine, who had been initiated at the Hague in 1731, ascended the Grand Ducal throne, among one of the first acts of his reign was to set at liberty all those Masons who had been imprisoned by the Inquisition. Still further to mark the high esteem which he entertained for the Order, he attended, and gave personal assistance at the constitution of several lodges in Florence, and other parts of his dominions.

This enlightened conduct upon the part of Francis was, however, not followed by other Italian monarchs, who, blind adherents of the Vatican, like bloodhounds shown the quarry, rushed forth to destroy the doctrines and murder the adherents of Freemasonry. This however they failed to do, for Masonry continued to flourish in Italy, despite torture, fire, and imprisonment, and in 1751 there were working lodges not only in Tuscany, but in Naples, and other places, as well as in the Eternal City itself.

About a month after the edict following the bull had been published, a French work appeared, entitled "An apology for the Society of Freemasons." The Pope at once issued a decree condemning it, and ordered the Ministers of Justice to have it consigned to the flames in one of the public streets of Rome. The Romish Church has never been able to see beyond the point of its nose. This French work was a very lame thing, and the putting of it in the Index Expurgatorius and burning copies was not likely to tend to the suppression of its sale, or the destruction of a number by fire, to the annihilation of the doctrines and Order of Freemasons.

The wise men of Gotham, in history most renowned for sapience, were very much troubled by crows, who used to come and pick up the seed which they sowed. The wise men held a council, where it was resolved that a crow should be caught, stripped of his feathers and then tied to a stake in the field, as a warning to all his black coated fraternity. A crow was accordingly caught, and in spite of his vehement protestations he was properly plucked, taken out to the fields, and tied to a stake, and left there. The Gothamites went home satisfied, that now the pest was removed from their lands, and retired rejoicingly to bed.

On the morrow they found the crow dead, and round his featherless body, the ground black with his kin busily engaged in avenging his death by unearthing and gobbling up the seeds.

This story has always struck us as extremely applicable to the Church of Rome. The Gothamite of the Vatican seizes upon some brother, and puts him to the torture, fines and imprisons him, and then expects to see the whole of Masonry disappear. Much to his disgust it does not, but like the plant which grows the harder the more it is trampled on, so does our Order grow the more powerful the more it is persecuted. The struggle between Rome and Freemasonry has lasted now 130 years, and while the one languishes like a broken down jade, the other daily and daily increases in strength, and when the one is a relic of the past, the other will still be the promise of the future.—Freemason's (London) Magazine.

◆

Important Letter.

A letter dated June 17, 1867, at Patras, Greece, brings the sorrowful news that on the 16th June, after the closing of divine service, incendiary placards against Freemasonry, invoking God's wrath against them, were distributed among the people. At twelve o'clock M. a rabble, numbering two or three hundred, attacked the house of a quiet, peaceable man, a photographic artist by occupation, because he was supposed to be the head of the Freemasons. Windows, furniture, etc., were smashed, and his house, with the one adjoining, burned to the ground. By the greatest exertions only, and with the aid of faithful friends, the photographer succeeded in making his escape from the daggers of his persecutors. He was hunted for in every direction, and would have undoubtedly fallen a victim to the wrath of the mob had he not succeeded in reaching a foreign steamer lying at anchor in the port. Half an hour after the occurrence, the police and armed men made their appearance on the scene of the riot, whereupon the mob dispersed. It was the intention of the rabble to fire the dwelling of every Freemason in the place. On the day following, a demonstration was made to raze the house of another Freemason, which, however, was frustrated by the timely arrival of the police. A young man was most brutally beaten in his own house, and another escaped a similar fate by presenting a pistol and threatening to shoot down the first man who attempted to lay hands upon him. Since then the foreigners have called upon their consuls for protection for themselves and their property. The police also took precautionary measures, and peace has not since been disturbed. The chief mover in this persecution of Freemasons is said to be the son of a Greek ex-Minister of State, because he was rejected by a newly constituted lodge on account of his notoriously bad and immoral character. It is also stated that incendiary articles published in a public journal in Athens, and the fanaticism of a physician and a lawyer, contributed to incite the populace. They insist that the Freemasons were in league with the devil, that they were conspiring to overthrow the orthodox church, etc. The authorities are said to have taken the matter very coolly, and it is reported that an officer of high position has expressed himself "that he greatly regretted that one house only was burned to the ground."

If scenes like these had occurred when Greece was under the heel of the Turk, it might have been attributed to the barbarism of the people. But what palliation is there for a regenerated Greece? They are a disgrace to the nation. Even the authorities looked on apparently with complacency, and mob-law was rampant and supreme. The laws of the land and of society are violated with impunity, and the rabble stride through the streets with murder and arson inscribed upon their banner.

But if it is claimed that the rioters were the dregs of the town, what explanation can be made of the following article, which appeared in a public journal of the day, and which reads as follows:

"I assume that the people of Patras have burned the lodge and killed all the Masons. Where is the law that condemns him who has killed the wolf? Has not Christ himself said of those who give offense to their brethren, 'that it would be good for them if a mill-stone was tied around their neck, and they were drowned in the depths of the sea.' Would they not have benefited humanity and performed a work of love, if they had done what Christ has taught? Such a work, according to Christ's teachings, would have been wholesome for the Masons themselves, because it stops their bad acts, that are a vexation to the souls of the brethren, and which will be the more punishable in the judgment to come."

Can it be believed that the above is written in the present age of civilization? The auto da fes, the rack of the inquisition, never proclaimed murder and rapine with more boldness. But where such doctrines are openly and boldly proclaimed and taught, where the mob is permitted to walk about unpunished and unmolested, and where it is unblushingly asserted that such acts are not crimes, but God-pleasing deeds, and that it is a religious duty to burn down the dwellings of their neighbors who differ with them in opinion, where it is proclaimed that murder resounds to the glory of God and truth, can it be said that justice exists? Deep must be the social degradation of a people that upholds such a government and such doctrines. Its moral sense is at a low ebb.

Balustre.

From the Grand Orient of Heredom at Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, near the B. B. and under the C. C. of that Zenith, which answers unto 32° 46′ 38″ N. Latitude, and

From the Grand Orient of Heredom at Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, near the B. B. and under the C. C. of that Zenith, which answers unto 42° 20′ N. Latitude.

The Supreme Council (Mother-Council of the World) of the Sovereigns, the Grand Inspectors-General, Grand Elect Knights of the Holy House of the Temple, Grand Commanders of the Holy Empire, of the 33d and last degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, whose See is at the Grand Orient first aforesaid: and

The Supreme Council of the Sovereigns, the Grand Inspectors-General, Grand Elect Knights of the Holy Temple, Grand Commanders of the Holy Empire, of the 33d and last degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, for the Northern Juriediction of the United States, whose See is at the Grand Orient last aforesaid:

BY THE SOVEREIGN GRAND COMMANDERS:

To the Most Puissant and Most Illustrious Brother, Grand Maitre de l' Ordre Maconnique en France, and the Illustrious Brethren of the M. P. and M. Ill. Body, le Grand Orient de France, Supreme Conseil pour la France et les possessions Francaises.

SALUT. SALUT. SALUT.

It is known unto all the Masonic world that the Supreme Council having its See at Charleston was established on the 31st day of May, 1801, for the whole of North America, and that from it, mediately or immediately, all the legitimate Supreme Councils in the world have derived their existence.

In the year 1815 the said Supreme Council ratified the creation, by one of its members, of the Supreme Council for the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States, having its See at New York, whence it afterwards removed to Boston, where it now has its Grand Orient, having jurisdiction over the Northern States.

In the year 1839 a body, claiming to be a Supreme Council for the State of Louisiana, was unlawfully established at New Orleans, and continued to exist until the 17th day of February, 1855, when, by a concordat on that day effected, it submitted to the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, as the supreme authority of the rite in all that jurisdiction, including the State of Louisiana, and its members became members of the Grand Consistory of Louisiana, under the obedience of the Supreme Council at Charleston; and two of them, afterwards, became members of that Supreme Council.

After the surrender of its powers by the body claiming to be a Supreme Council for the State of Louisiana, Jacques Foulhouze, once a member of that body, but who had retired from it before the effecting of said concordat, associated with himself two or three others who claimed to be 33ds, and set up a body, which he styled "The Supreme Council of the 33d degree for the Free, Sovereign and Independent State of Louisiana." That State had always been within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction, the necessary consequence of which was, that the body so established was not only illegal and illegitimate, but spurious. Mons. Jacques Foulhouze received his 33d degree from the Grand Orient of France, which then was and still is in alliance with both our Supreme Councils, our Ill. Bro. Albert G. Mackey, Sec. Gen. H. E., being its Grand Representative and Garant d' amitie near that for the Southern Jurisdiction. Consequently, on the 4th day of August, 1858, the Grand Orient of France addressed itself to the said Jacques Foulhouze, apprising him of its alliance with that Supreme Council, and its recognition of it "as the supreme, constituting, and governing authority of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States;" and, claiming his allegiance, sworn to itself, it invited him to dissolve, immediately, the organization which he had formed, on pain of its condemnation, and forfeiture of his rank as an Inspector-General.

The said Foulhouze refusing to obey, was, by the Grand Orient, formally divested of his rank and character of Inspector-General, and the body created by him declared illegitimate.

Nevertheless, the said body, though thus denounced, condemned as spurious by both our Supreme Councils, and acknowledged by no lawful Masonic power in the world, continued to exist, and still continues to maintain a precarious and unlawful being, under the presidency of M. Eugene Chassaignac. From the beginning it violated the Masonic common law of the United States, by establishing and chartering lodges of Master Masons within the jurisdiction of the M. W. Grand Lodge of the State of Louisiana, and was, therefore, denounced by that sovereign body; and all the temples of Symbolic Masonry in the United States were closed against all who, pretending to be Master Masons, were members of the illegitimate lodges created by said spurious Supreme Council.

These, Most Illustrious Grand Master and Brethren of the Most Puissant Grand Orient of France, are all facts of history, which no one can dispute.

The two legitimate Supreme Councils for the Northern and Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, have always accepted and recognized as the Organic and Supreme Law of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, the Grand Constitutions and Secret Institutes, purporting to have been made in the year 1786, by which no more than two Supreme Councils could be established in the United States. Whether these are or are not recognized by you is not important, for the reason that when the Supreme Council at Charleston was established in the year 1801, it styled itself the Supreme Council of the United States, within whose limits no other Supreme Council, then, or until 1813, existed; that so soon as Louisiana was acquired from France and became part of the United States, the same became a part of the Jurisdiction of the said Supreme Council, and it did immediately thereafter, in fact, occupy the same by its Deputy and Legate, Ill. Bro. J. B. M. Delahogue, sent by it to New Orleans to organize bodies of the rite.

We fraternally represent that the jurisdiction of the Grand Orient of France over the whole of France and the French possessions, might be disputed with as much justice as that of our Supreme Councils over the whole of the United States; that is to say, without justice, or right, or reason. A Supreme Council established in a nation, whether in an empire, a kingdom, or a republic, has jurisdiction co-extensive with the limits of such country, if, when it is established, no other Supreme Council has obtained jurisdiction there. This is the common law of Freemasonry.

The organized body under the presidency of M. Eugene Chassaignac, composed of persons expelled from Freemasonry by the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Master Masons of the State of Lousiana, has had no lawful origin, it being the coninuation of that claiming to be a Supreme Council, and organized by M. Jacques Foulhouze, without any authority or power whatever.

If a Supreme Council for the State of Louisiana can be established and recognized by the Masonic Powers of the world, so also can one be established in every one of the States, if not in every one of the Territories, of the United States. These bodies, so numerous, and with constituencies so small, would at once cease to be of any importance or entitled to the respect of the great Masonic powers, and would fall into merited contempt; while the 33d degree would become as common and as purchaseable as the degree of Master Mason—for there are now thirty-seven States in the United States.

Nevertheless, Most Illustrious Grand Master and Illustrious brethren, you have been pleased, on the fifth day of November, A. D. 1868, to recognize and acknowledge the said spurious body, presided over by the said M. Eugene Chassaignac, as a lawful and regular Supreme Council, and have entered into fraternal relations with it. And this you have, moreover, been pleased to do, without previous consultation with or notice to either of our Supreme Councils, with both of which the Grand Orient had, at the time, friendly relations of long standing, and a Grand Representative near each of our Supreme Councils, and each of us had accredited a Grand Representative to you.

We have learned your action with profound regret, and are constrained fraternally, but in the most energetic manner, to remonstrate against it, and to ask that it be revoked.

This we do, because your recognition of the spurious body in question, is in reality to decide a question as to the extent of the jurisdiction of one of our Supreme Councils; a question of which, in regard to the State of Louisiana, the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction is the sole judge, and can not admit, or patiently tolerate the assumption of superiority which an attempt by a foreign body to decide such a question, implies. It is also, not only an act of grave discourtesy to the Supreme Council, although you have been pleased to declare that you do not assume to decide between it and the body at New Orleans, and that there is nothing hostile in your action in the premises, but it is in fact an open act of hostility against it, which would warrant and justify the immediate suspension of all correspondence with your Most Illustrious body, on the part of the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction, and of its prohibition against the reception, as visitors, by any of the bodies of its obedience, of any Masons acknowledging the authority of the Grand Orient of France.

But these are measures to which the said Supreme Council would be very reluctant to resort, while any hope remained that the Grand Orient of France would recall its hasty action, and abandon the spurious body in question to the merited contempt with which it is regarded by all American Masons.

The Supreme Council for the Northern Jurisdiction has a direct interest in this question, hence it never can consent to the establishment of a precedent for the recognition by any foreign Masonic power, however illustrious, of a spurious body of the Ancient and Acceeted Scottish Rite, that may be established within its jurisdiction. It will resist and solemnly protest against any claim of a right so to intervene in its domestic controversies, by any Masonic body in the world.

If the Grand Orient should think fit to persist in its recognition of the spurious body in question, it will in fact divest itself of its Masonic character, by an alliance with a spurious body of expelled Master Masons, and by recognizing as Masons, and receiving as visitors, and allowing its subordinates to receive those who have been denounced as clandestine Masons by the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, and whose organization is pronounced spurious by both of our Supreme Councils, and by those of South America; and it will, in that case, find all the Grand Lodges of the United States making common cause with the Grand Lodge of Louisiana.

We do therefore invite the immediate attention of the Grand Master of the Masonic Order, and the brethren of the Grand Orient to the matter in question, and an early reply to this balustre, that it may not be necessary to convoke our Supreme Councils for their action in regard to the same.

And we do hereby renew to the Grand Master assurances of our high and fraternal consideration and esteem. May our Father, who is in Heaven, have him and the brethren of the Grand Orient in His holy keeping.

Given under our hands and the seals of our arms as Soverign Grand Commanders, and the grand seals of our Supreme Councils caused by us to be affixed to these presents, and the same to be countersigned by the Ill. Secretaries General of the Holy Empire, of our respective Supreme Councils, at the respective Grand Orients aforesaid, at Charleston on the 18th of the Hebrew month Adar, A. M. 5629, and at Boston on the 25th of the Hebrew month Adar, A. M. 5629, answering unto the 1st and 8th days of March, 1869, V. E.

ALBERT PIKE,
Sov. Gr. Commander of the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States.

ALBERT G. MACKEY, Secretary General.

JOSIAH H. DRUMMOND,
Sov. Gr. Commander of the Supreme Council for the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States.

DANIEL SICKELS, Secretary General.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Editor,
IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY
H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

One copy, one year..$1 25

All communications should be addressed to H. G. Reynolds, or The Masonic Trowel, Springfield, Ill.

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for The Trowel.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

Notice.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., APRIL* 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

First Series of Visitations.

We had not found leisure to visit Paris since the death of the venerable patriarch, Jonathan Young. Having his memory in view, we arranged a series of visits at Paris, Mattoon, and Pana. Starting from home after midnight, March 13, we had a good rest on the sleeping car of the T. W. & Western R. R., our good brother, Eugene Burrill, Conductor. Soon after the peep of day, we found ourself in a new and superb car on the Central Railway, and began soon to discern the outlines of farms, dwellings and improvements, where but a short season since no sign of culture appeared. That whole beautiful prairie country in the neighborhoods of Tuscola, Arcola, and Milton seems to be improved. Once more we saw the sun rise from the open prairie, seeming to lift itself with its golden rays from the bowels of the Earth. It was a sublime sight. From Mattoon we soon found ourself in where Inspector Burr and W. Bro. Weider, the Masters of Prairie and Paris Lodges, were ready to receive us. Accompanied by Bro. Weider, we visited the resting-place of Father Young, where we found his grave in good condition, with a wreath, emblematic of victory, covering the head; a cross, a symbol of his religious faith, resting upon his breast; the letter G below, in token of his Masonic character; and over the foot, a circle within a circle, emblematic of Time and Eternity. These tokens of affection, placed there by his two sons, Capt. Jonathan Young, Commander U. S. N., and Stephen Young, M. D., of Terre Haute, powerfully impressed us with a sense of their filial respect for the principles and professions of their honored father. Returning to the city, we examined his will, where we found a distinct recognition of salvation through Christ alone, a warm testimony in favor of Masonry, and a declaration of loyalty to the government of the country. We then paid our respects to his widow, whom we found in her old dwelling, amply provided for by the providence of her deceased husband, and living with her daughter, Mrs. Davis—now also a widow with two children. Her husband, Dr. Davis, had few equals in his profession, and was an ardent Mason and member of Prairie Lodge. He died a few weeks since, retaining his senses until the last moment, testing his own pulse as mechanically as he would that of a patient.

PARIS,

Mrs. Young detailed to us, with much emotion, the incidents and circumstances attending Father Young's death.

In the evening, Prairie Lodge was opened, and the members of Paris Lodge were numerously in attendance, with several brethren from other lodges. Our reception was warm, brotherly, and in proper Masonic form. The exercises were profitable, and the lodges are in good working condition. They are rapidly recovering from their disastrous loss by fire, and contemplate erecting a good hall soon. The commandery and chapter have Dr. Curl for their presiding officer, and Comp. Burr presides over the council.

On Sabbath we attended the Methodist Church, and listened to a powerful discourse from Sir Knight Wallace, the Presiding Elder of the circuit.

Since we were in Paris before this, large and substantial business houses, and numerous residences, some of them costly, have been built.

Taking the cars for the West, Monday, the 15th, we stopped at where we readily found W. Bro. W. H. Brown, Master of Kansas Lodge, Rev. A. P. Forsythe, H. P. of Kansas Chapter, and Past Masters Shy, Herrick, Zink, and Boyer, with quite a gathering of other brethren. The hall was soon warmed, and the lodge opened, when we were received with the honors, and gave the brethren some counsel and advice. Kansas Lodge is well officered, and is made up of the best material. Thence to where, falling in with Past Master Teel, we were soon introduced to W. Bro. Ginther, formerly a member of the Legislature from Cook county, and now engaged in business in Charleston, and the Master of the lodge. Measures were immediately taken to convene the brethren, and we looked in upon Past Grand Master Bromwell, who has just returned from Washington. With him we visited several brethren, and at night found the lodge-room full, and were ceremoniously and cordially greeted in form. An hour or two was spent in remarks and conversation—profitable, we hope, to all. A good night's rest in a good hotel, kept by Mr. French, formerly of this city—and he knows how—and we found ourself in the morning in the hospitable hands of W. Bro. Ginther, and at no charges. The Union Hotel at Charleston is a good place to stop at. Large and costly buildings have also been erected in Charleston in all directions. The morning train landed us in the crossing place of the Chicago branch of the Central R. R., and the St. Louis, Alton & T. H. We were instantly reduced to captivity by Breth. Lefever and Rose, and placed in the custody of Capt. Harlan, a prince among good fellows, and "mine host" of the Pennsylvania. Our prison house consisted of a nice parlor, with bed-room, and the usual attachments, where our loneliness was dispelled by the presence of Worshipful Bro. House, Past Master Lefever, and several other brethren. We lacked nothing. In the evening we were escorted to the Masonic Hall, received with all the honors due to so distinguished a captive, in the presence of a large concourse assembled to see us "grin and bear it." Not content with gorging us at our quarters, we were literally stuffed with coffee, turkey, pastry, &c., etc., at the banquet hall. We said our say, and our captors enjoyed themselves hugely in putting us through the "shorter catechism."

KANSAS,

CHARLESTON,

MATTOON,

Bro. House is a capital presiding officer, and an excellent workman in the symbolic and capitular degrees. He is well sustained by his officers and brethren, and is all right in the work, and a good report will henceforth come up in regular order from Mattoon.

The city is growing rapidly, and has a probable population of 3,000. Several churches, a fine school house, and a large number of extensive business blocks, have been erected. We saw six freight trains standing on the track, or coming in, at one time, on the Central. The amount of coal transported north is amazing. It is a continual puff of the engines and roar of the trains day and night.

Our old time friend, Gen. True, has dropped his notion of going to Kansas, and gone to merchandizing.

Wednesday morning, Breth. House, Lefever, and Rose released us from our captivity without costs, and sent us on our way. We soon brought up at WINDSOR.

We here found W. Bro. I. H. Gilpin, Master, who placed us in the care of Past Master Dr. C. H. Brunk, whose hospitality we enjoyed in an elegant home, enriched with a genteel and sensible wife and charming daughter.

We enjoyed a meeting with the brethren in their hall, talked some, answered questions, and whiled away the time agreeably until the cars took us away, in company with Bro. Riffle, now of Shelbyville, but formerly Master of Cement Lodge, at Utica. Landing at we found Past Master Ladd, who kindly introduced us to Dr. McCoy, the W. M. of the lodge.

PANA,

At the appointed hour we witnessed a correct opening of the ledge in each degree, made some remarks, and were put through the Masonic catechism, until we got enough of it, and were glad to quit. Pana Lodge, and Mattoon Lodge, also, number over eighty members each. A chapter is in good working order. The lodge rooms at Paris, Pana, Charleston, and Mattoon were full.

Our brethren at Pana are very prosperous, and are using the correct work. They contemplate building a good hall. We were greatly surprised at the improvements in the latter place. The city is said to contain upwards of 3,500 inhabitants, has one very large and commodious three-story school building, and another similar one is in contemplation. Brick blocks, churches, elegant dwellings, with shrubbery, fruit, and every convenience, meet one on every hand. Pana is at the crossing of the Terre Haute and Central, and expects that the road from there to Springfield will soon be built.

Our brethren at all the places mentioned will please accept our thanks for their hospitality, attention, and courtesy, and have our heartiest wishes for their Masonic and individual prosperity.

Correction.

In the notice of the meeting of the Scottish brethren at Chicago, recently, the name of "Bailey" was given from Wisconsin. It should have read "Nathaniel Baillie," of Racine, Wisconsin, who is Chief Engineer of the Western Union Railroad, from Racine, Wis., on Lake Michigan, via Freeport, to Savanna, on the Mississippi River, and thence to Rock Island.

Anti-Masonry.

The Morgan excitement commenced about 1827. It did not reach a political position soon enough to affect the presidential election of 1828, but broke down of its own weight after the presidential election of 1832, at which time the candidate of that party received the electoral vote of Vermont by less than two-fifths of the suffrages of the people, the remainder being divided between Gen. Jackson and Mr. Clay.

In 1832, we were for the first time a voter. Our own father had been compelled to abandon the church of his choice; the churches had been divided or broken up; proscription was practiced in every form against Masons and their families; mischievous fanatics parted husband and wife, and broke up families; general disorder reigned, and the passage of laws disfranchising all Masons were openly advocated, and outlawry more than hinted.

For our own part, when we saw our honest, hard-working neighbors—some of whom had fought in the Revolution, and others again in the second war—derided, abused, and scorned by others, who had lived by them and respected them for half a century—when we saw their property destroyed, their rights invaded, and their families proscribed and persecuted—we began to ask what these good men had done to warrant such treatment.

We heard Col. Cyrus Johnston, who commanded a company with distinction at Plattsburg, ask one of his anti-masonic neighbors what he had against him.

"You are a Mason," was the reply.

"Well," said the Colonel, "I am a Mason, and am not ashamed of it. Now, neighbor, how long have you lived by me?"

"Over thirty years," was the answer.

"In all that time, I have had a grist mill and saw mill, have carried on a large farm, and have had small or large dealings with nearly every man within three miles of my mill every year. You have had all your logs sawed at my mill for all your buildings, much of your fencing, and some every year for sale. Have I wronged you to the value of one cent?"

"No," said the anti-mason.

"What has been my reputation as a citizen and business man?"

"Good," was the reply.

"Well," said the Colonel, "you and I have always voted the same ticket. Did you ever know me to vary a hair's breadth for friend or foe?"

"I never did," was the reply again.

"What did I do when A. B., not a Mason, was a candidate for Representative on our ticket, and C. D., a Mason, was a candidate of the other party?"

"I know you did all you could for your own candidate, as I did also," said the neighbor.

Many more questions were asked by the Colonel, all of the same general character. At length, the anti-mason took the laboring oar by saying, "Colonel, knowing your habits and manner of life, if all Masons were like you there would be no trouble. But such is not the case. We war upon Masonry, and to make it effectual, we must war upon Masons also, and compel them to abandon and renounce their corrupt and oath bound league, to break up their lodges, and force them to stand on an equality with their neighbors. The truth is, your society is corrupt, anti-christian, anti-patriotic, and dangerous to liberty. You contrive through your few to govern the many." Stopping at this, the Colonel said:

"I see you are determined on your course of proscription. I have enough, and can stand it. You are wealthy and influential, and you have some neighbors, who are Masons, who are honest, industrious people, and if this proscription is to go on, with your influence and money, they will be ruined."

"Consequences must take care of themselves," said the neighbor. "I am not responsible for their being Masons, and I hope that every Mason who does not renounce Masonry, will be ruined in estate and character as a solemn example to all others to keep out of the old dragon pit."

When this conversation occurred, one Sunday evening, in front of Col. Johnston's mansion, this neighbor, with many others—ourself, then about twenty years old, being one of them—was returning home from a Methodist meeting. After hearing this conversation, we hurried home and related it to our mother.

"O! my boy," said she, "your father is already in serious trouble in church and business, and I expect this persecution will ruin us. But, it is not going to make trouble between him and me. Decide for yourself, my son, but decide carefully; study the matter well, and then do what your conscience says is right."

We watched events. The Masons were quiet, patient, and waited for the storm to pass by. It gathered the force of a whirlwind, the fury of a tempest, and the volume of a tornado. Every Mason in the neighborhood, except Col. Johnston, went down before the blast. Not one renounced or seceded. After the whirlwind—the tempest—the tornado—came the "still, small voice."

If the anti-masonic party could have gained supreme power at that time, the dungeon, torture, gallows, and death, as in Spain and other countries, would have been the fate of every adhering Mason. Such will be the fate of adhering Masons, whenever that fanaticism attains supreme power. Such would have been the sentence pronounced by Stevens, the noted gambler and libertine, whom Pres. Blanchard has just now nearly sainted. Such would have been the verdict of the cold and remorseless Martin Flint, because he was refused admission to the inner sanctuary of a Royal Arch Chapter. Pres. Blanchard would be horrified if we were to place him in any such category; yet, the inevitable tendency of his teachings is to that end. He is in the wrong place; he should be a Roman priest, and then woe to every one who crossed his path. As he can neither bear contradiction nor counter argument, so free speech with him is the shallowest pretense to cover his plans of vengeance and his hatred of the Masonic Fraternity.

Rejected for Membership.

When a brother removes from one lodge jurisdiction to another, and takes a demit and applies for membership, it is, upon its face, good evidence of Masonic zeal. Rejections may occur. They do not occur once in fifty times. When a Master Mason brings a demit and applies for a seat among his new neighbors, he naturally expects warm and welcome companionship, and such is usually the case. But sometimes it is otherwise, and now to a consideration of the status of a demitted Mason.

The 55th section of the Grand Lodge By-Laws reads thus: "A Masonic demit dates from the lodge record when the same was granted, and membership ceases with said date."

The language of the above section fairly implies that no demit can properly issue until it is granted by the lodge. Many lodges have by-laws permitting the Master and Secretary, and occasionally one or the other of them, to issue demits when the books are square and there are no charges pending. We do not need to comment upon liability to abuse or easy action in such cases. To our mind, all such demits are given contrary to the paramount law, and the fact that such is largely the case among our lodges, and the further fact that the seal of the lodge is the highest evidence of legality, and excludes all inquiry behind it by another lodge, makes it necessary, and, in fact, almost indispensable to inquire searchingly into the habits, character, disposition, and surroundings of an applicant. Hence the Grand Lodge has provided, in the 36th section of its by-laws, that no lodge shall act upon any petition for membership until it has laid over one month. This implies careful inquiry and faithful report. If an unfavorable report is occasionally made, it argues in favor of the faithfulness of committees, and if a rejection should occur even where a report is favorable, it argues still further that some brother has important knowledge or reasons which his own security or peace requires him to keep to himself. The presumption is that every member is a just and upright Mason, and that his reasons for rejection are good.

However, a rejection for membership is disagreeable, and it is really criminal to reject a brother, who has thrown himself upon the good opinion of his brethren, without good reasons. The law provides for the entire independence and irresponsibility of the voter, but the law also provides that each voter shall deposit his ballot conscientiously.

There may be rare instances where candidates for affiliation may be rejected from mercenary, malicious, or other unworthy motives. We would rather be in the position of the rejected brother, with our self-respect intact and our duty done, one hundred fold, than in the place of him who has inflicted the injury, and who carries with him continually the consciousness of having done an evil deed. Such a man, wearing the emblems of Masonry—rare we hope—is to be presumed to carry with him "an abandoned and malignant heart," and is unworthy of trust.

What shall such a rejected brother do? If he be a considerate and candid brother, he will reason thus: I have done my duty; I know of no good reason why I should be rejected; but, asking implies both the right for good reasons, and the power for good or bad reasons to reject; I am the victim of the latter; it is folly to suppose that the lodge sympathizes in this injustice, but the unchangeable law excludes inquiry, and now what shall I do? I will act the man and the Mason. I can return my demit and ask for a re-affiliation among those from whence I came; I can apply to some other lodge for membership; if the rejecting brother has mistakenly acted from good motives, he may find out his mistake, in which case the law provides a remedy, or I can bide my time for justice. Before God and my fellow-men, I will maintain by my life the character of a "just and upright Mason."

Deacon Chambers.

Among the early settlers in Galesburg was the gentleman whose name heads this article. He was generally respected, and was regarded as an honest, exemplary citizen.

An old man full of years, he lately departed this life. After repeatedly resenting the proscriptive persecution of Masons by President Blanchard, the latter has recently paraded his name before the public as having renounced Freemasonry upon his death-bed. As we have some knowledge of the Jesuitical character of President Blanchard, and without any positive knowledge of what did occur upon said death-bed, we take it upon ourself to deny the assertion that Deacon Chambers, while in his right mind, ever renounced Freemasonry, and we will give our reasons for our denial:

We were High Priest, in 1849, of Horeb Chapter No. 4, at Henderson, Knox county, being then a citizen of Rock Island. On one occasion, while at Henderson, it was very difficult to procure the attendance of a quorum to do some important work. Deacon Chambers was sent for. He declined attendance for the following reasons:

1. Age and infirmities.
2. That he had long since ceased to meet with the Fraternity for the sake of peace in the church.
3. That Masonry was well enough in itself, but the necessity for its organized form had passed away, in consequence of the development of better agencies and means.

After giving his reasons, he sent his fraternal respects to the members of the chapter, and a brotherly wish for their comfort and prosperity.

When President Blanchard made his malicious raid upon Masons and secret societies in Galesburg, in 1851, it was then understood, and has been so understood ever since, that Deacon Chambers accused him of stating what was untrue, and resented his tirade as unchristian and unmanly.

Further, when connection with secret societies was declared to be a bar to membership in President Blanchard's church, Deacon Chambers utterly refused to submit to it, as was represented to us, and he was specially excepted from its operation.

Lastly, Deacon Chambers' son is a Mason and Past Master of Altona Lodge No. 330, at Altona, Knox county. Our first three reasons are based upon information; the last upon knowledge. In regard to our second and third reasons, President Blanchard ought to have complete knowledge. What is the fair inference? Deacon Chambers was a member of an anti-Masonic church. If Masonry was evil, he was just the man to say so. At no time while in health did he ever say so, and we now solemnly, for the reasons before given, deny that Deacon Chambers renounced Freemasonry while in his right mind, and DEMAND THE PROOF, and until such proof is produced as will satisfy an unbiased jury in a court of justice, we will stand by our denial, and we shall class him, and hold his memory sacred, with Michael J. Noyes, Jonathan Young, Rev. Eliab Going, and A. R. Sawyer, all of whom died in the Christian faith—men whose lives and deaths were sublime testimonies in favor of Masonry.

Many Thanks.

We have received from Bro. L. B. Hunt, of Fairfax, Vermont, formerly of Wataga, Ills., the following papers and documents:

The Washingtonian, published at Windsor, Vt., Sept. 24, 1810; The Anti-Masonic Republican, published at Middlebury, Vt., June 3, 1830, by Edward D. Barber; "A memorial to the Legislature of Vermont," praying for the repeal of the acts incorporating the Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter, presented Oct. 23, 1830, by William Slade and E. D. Barber; a letter by Richard Rush to the Anti-Masonic Committee for York county, Pa., dated May 4, 1831; "Masonic oaths, with notes on the character and tendency of Freemasonry," issued by the Anti-Masonic State Convention of Vermont, and printed by Knapp & Jewett in 1834.

Bro. Hunt is the nephew of the Hon. L. B. Hunt, formerly of Fairfax, but afterwards of St. Albans. He was the especial terror of anti-masons, owing to his keen and pungent wit, and good-natured irony. Large in size, light hair and complexion, a radiant blue eye, always self-possessed, good-natured, full of fun, humor, and withal candid and elegant, he was a splendid set-off to the bathos and lugubrious wailings of the anti-masons. Anti-masonry followed the election of Gen. Jackson, and as Fairfax was a democratic town, Mr. Hunt usually represented it. Tracy, bitter as gall, represented Hartford, and Cushman, the finest debater in the House, represented Hartland—both whigs. Neither of them ever passed the bounds of Legislative propriety. Barber, the editor of the anti-masonic paper at Middlebury, represented that town. A fat, jolly fellow, with no real malice about him, and a fine speaker, but lacking power, he had sense enough to keep himself balanced, and like the other three, was a general favorite, and they would run together. Sabin, from Franklin county, did the solemn, and old Martin Flint, the clover seed dealer, whose dealings prevented him from advancing in the chapter, and who of course seceded, pretended to do up the brine. To such men as Hunt, Tracy, and Cushman, it afforded glorious sport, and it was rich to see them wade in. Barber got candid replies, but when Hunt made a hit at Sabin or Flint, and put on that droll, laughing, inimitable face, saying plainer than words could say, "Now you see it," the House came down in a roar.

We thank Bro. Hunt, and can stand a repetition.

Non-Payment of Dues.

We have a dislike to the system of raising money by annual or quarterly dues. It is, however, so thoroughly engrafted into the habits and policies of our local organizations, that it can not be eradicated, and to attempt it would be folly. In this case, it is wisdom to submit to it, for fear of something worse. The great evil growing out of the system, is non-payment and a large accumulation of indebtedness. The purpose of this article is, to inquire what shall be done with delinquents. Square the books with all those who are unable to pay; prefer charges against all who are able and refuse to pay, and let them be indefinitely suspended; give all who wish to pay, a fair chance, and no more; where the residence of a delinquent is unknown, let the books stand, and if he returns, charge up and demand the whole, and if he does not pay, do as should be done with resident members, according to the merits of the case.

The Secretary should prefer the charge and make the proof.

And we fraternally urge upon our lodges to allow no large accumulations of indebtedness by resident members. The non-payment, by brethren able to square their dues, is an evil example, and encourages laxity and demoralization, and should not be permitted.

Rev. Eliab Going.

The Standard, of March 18, has a long letter in regard to the life and final departure of one of the most useful and self-denying men of the present century. Born in Reading, Vermont, Dec. 5, 1790, and entered the ministry in the Baptist persuasion early in life, together with three of his brothers, and as such labored in various places in New York and Kentucky, and in McHenry, Nora, and Warren, Ills. Last year he was residing with his son at Warren, who died last May, and another son and his wife died at McHenry in September. He removed there to take charge of his son's affairs, but their stay was short. Tuesday, Feb. 23, his wife Sarah died, aged 68 years, and on the following Thursday, the venerable minister of nearly sixty years' service, also entered into rest. In the year 1817 he became a Mason, but for many years, with ardent love for the Institution, he refrained from attendance at Masonic meetings for the sake of peace, but as old age came on, the love of his youth came over him with unwonted power, and as he was soon to be subject to earthly persecution no longer, he commenced his attendance again upon the meetings of the chapter and lodge. His pure, blameless, and sacrificing Christian life, useful and genial conversation, remarkable experiences, and great charity and love, made him a welcome Masonic visitor, and he died as he lived, content with his Heavenly Father's will. Husband and wife were buried in one grave. Two hundred Masons attended his funeral, which was the largest ever known in the place. Rev. G. S. Bailey, of Chicago, conducted the religious exercises.

Jurisdiction over Apprentices and Fellow Crafts.

So long as Entered Apprentices and Fellow Crafts remain such, they are not members of lodges, and they are amenable only to the lodges initiating or passing them, and can be tried by no others, so long as they remain within their jurisdiction; but if they remove from such jurisdiction, they are subject to discipline in such lodges, or in the lodge in the jurisdiction of which they may reside. So long as they remain within the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge where they received the first or second degree, they are held by the lodge to which application was made originally, until they are relinquished by the same. Whenever they remove from the jurisdiction of such Grand Lodge, its sovereignty ceases, and all jurisdiction of its subordinates ceases also, and the Grand Lodge where they locate becomes sovereign, and jurisdiction goes to the nearest lodge. No lodge holds jurisdiction over Entered Apprentices, Fellow Crafts, or non-affiliates beyond the jurisdiction of its own Grand Lodge. When sovereignty ceases, jurisdiction ceases also.

When Fellow Crafts or Entered Apprentices remove from the jurisdiction of one Grand Lodge into that of another, they should be furnished by their respective lodges with certificates of good standing, and the nearest lodge takes jurisdiction over the remaining degrees.

Thomas Cooper.

The Knox Republican brings us the sad intelligence of the death of the venerable THOMAS COOPER, who was born Nov. 9, 1782, and who died in Cacheville, Cal., Sept. 27, at the ripe old age of eighty-six years. The deceased was Tyler of Knoxville Lodge No. 66 for several years, and was much respected in that city.

When his daughter, Mrs. Harvey Hadley, removed to California in 1861, he went with the family, returned in 1864, and again went to California in 1865, where he remained until his death. He was made a Mason in Whipley, New Jersey, in 1822, and died a member of Yolo Lodge, at Cacheville. He leaves many descendants.

Deacon Chambers—Again.

Our readers are requested to read an article in this number in regard to the gentleman, now deceased, whose name heads this notice. Since that article was written, we have received a letter from a gentleman in high standing in Galesburg, covering an important communication, neither of which will be used, unless necessary. We now stand firmly by our denial, and demand of Pres. Blanchard unequivocal proof of his statement that Deacon Chambers ever renounced, denounced, or depreciated Freemasonry, on his death bed or elsewhere; or, in default thereof, that he retract what he has said. If retracted, as truth demands, the matter will rest; if not retracted, it will be followed up.

Biographical Sketches.

We commence in this number sketches of past grand presiding officers, commencing with those last in office, in Grand Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery. This month we give notices of M. W. Bro. GORIN and M. E. Comp. LININGER, with their likenesses. We hope, in May, to be able to notice Th. Ill. Bro. Burr, and R. E. Sir V. L. Hurlbut. Next in order would come P. G. Mas. Bromwell, P. G. H. P. Miner, P. G. P. Hawley, P. G. Com. Lanphere.

Back Numbers of the Trowel Wanted.

A brother in San Francisco requests us to secure him the below mentioned numbers of THE TROWEL, to complete his files. January, February, March, September, 1863; December, 1864; January, May, June, July, August, September, 1865; January, February, March, April, May, June, July, and August, 1866. If any of our subscribers have any of these numbers to spare, and will send them to us by mail, we will return them by mail 20 cents for each number received.

High Priests.

We did not keep the minutes of the Order of High Priesthood, being busy elsewhere, and regret to learn that the names of M. E. Comps. GEO. W. STALEY, of Kaskaskia, and JAMES C. LUCKEY, of Polo, are omitted. The omission, we are fully persuaded, was wholly unintentional, and on our part we had no knowledge of the matter until our attention was called to it by Comp. Staley.

Omissions.

We have had a tedious and painful attack of neuralgia, and although we have tried to get in everything proper, we may have omitted something which should go in. We hope this will be our excuse.

Sat with Washington.

While at Mattoon, we met Bro. D. H. Barrett, a member of Mattoon Lodge, whose father sat in camp lodge with General Washington during the Revolutionary war. Subsequently, he removed from Virginia to Kentucky, where he died, lamented and respected, in 1834.

Proceedings Wanted.

If any Chapter or Companion has duplicate copies of Grand Chapter proceedings 1862 and 1863 (both under one cover), we will be much obliged for one of them, for we have neither a bound copy nor one for binding in the office. We need about thirty copies.

We still want Proceedings of Grand Lodge for 1840, '41, '42, '44, '48, and '53.

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS.

Tidings.

Items.

To persevere in one's duty, and to be silent, is the best answer to calumny.

When the good-man is from home, the good-wife's table is soon spread.

It is not the sharpest people who succeed the best. Many an instrument is so keen that it cuts those who handle it, worst of all.

Cherokee Lodge No. 66, at Rome, Georgia, has undertaken to educate all the orphan children of Masons within its jurisdiction. It has twenty in charge now, and will soon have eight or ten more. Will Pres. Blanchard name any church, in which anti-masonry prevails, that now does or ever did such a thing?

Greece announces peace with Turkey: What about Crete? Is she never to be relieved of Turkish domination?

Two hundred and twenty-five thousand seals were captured last year in Alaska.

"Jennie," said a venerable Scotchman to his daughter, who was asking his consent to accompany her urgent and favored suitor to the altar—"Jennie, its a very solemn thing to get married." "I know it, father" replied the sensible damsel; "but its a good deal solemner not to get married."

Said a justice to a prisoner on trial, "We want nothing but silence, and very little of that."

Ef a man flatters yu, yu can kalkerlate that he is a rogue, or yu're a fule.—Josh. Billings.

It is related that a pupil of the Deaf and Dumb Institution at Paris, being asked "What is Eternity?" replied with a richness and force of conception rarely equaled, "It is the life of the Almighty."

Intense study of the Bible will keep any writer from being vulgar in point of style.—Coleridge.

George Peabody's buildings in London now shelter 1,971 poor people.

Congress has made the following appropriations for Illinois: $1,000,000 for Arsenal and Armory at Rock Island; $30,000 for the Custom-House, and $25,000 for Postoffice, at Cairo; $25,000 for Postoffice, and $25,000 for Court-House in Springfield. Also, $100,000 for the survey of the northwestern lakes.

The Mormons have 26 members in Sandwich, 24 in Boone, 30 in Batavia, 77 in Plano, 57 in Mission, 9 in Leland, 87 in Fox Rivertown, 70 in Amboy, 12 in Janesville, Wis., 34 in Burlington, Iowa, and 17 in Marengo, Ill. They repudiate the plural-wife system, and have a press at Plano, conducted by their President, Joseph Smith.

California Grand Lodge.—Charles Marsh, Nevada, G. Master; Leonidas E. Pratt, Deputy; Theodore G. Cockrill, S. G. W.; Frederick L. Barss, J. G. W.; James Laidley, G. Treas.; Alexander G. Abell, San Francisco, Grand Secretary.

Western Star Lodge, No. 2, Nebraska City, Neb.—John Reed, W. M.; N. S. Harding, S. W.; Granville Stevenson, J. W.; J. S. Hochstettler, Treas.; W. W. W. Jones, Sec'y.; C. W. Seymour, S. D.; M. H. Whittredge, J. D.; P. Y. Morse, Tyler.

There are 209,847 houses in California.

It is now hoped that the first trip by rail from New York to San Francisco may be made as early as May.

Some good brother has sent us the Androssan and Saltcoat's Herald of Feb. 6, which states that the number of initiations for the previous year in Scotland, not including Mother Kilwinning, is 4,319. The real value of the Grand Lodge property, debts deducted, is £5,896.

Public worship in Chicago is conducted in eight languages; in Boston, in four.

Still in Harness.—Comp. G. W. Lininger, Past Grand High Priest, has removed to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he is H. P. of Star Chapter U. D., and Master of Excelsior Lodge U. D.

The editor of the Evergreen classes us among those present when the Scotch Rite was worked in Chicago; a mistake; it was John.

The population of the United States is estimated to be 37,500,000.

The debt of St. Domingo is represented to be $14,000,000.

Henry Ward Beecher's Plymouth church is said to have over 1,700 members. The pew rental is $50,000.

It is said that a widow in Fond du Lac, Wis., has Maj. Andre's watch, and wishes to sell it. Maybe.

People are not necessarily equestrian in their tastes who "pony up."

Delaware.

We are glad to record that this ancient little State has wheeled vigorously into line.

On the 9th of January last, M. E. General Grand High Priest James M. Austin issued his proclamation appointing a convention at Dover, January 20th.

At the time appointed, Washington and Lafayette Chapter No. 1, at Wilmington, Temple Chapter No. 2, at Milford, Hope Chpater No. 3, at Georgetown, and St. John's Chapter, at Wilmington, responded by full delegations.

M. E. Comp. Austin presided, and Comp. Daniel C. Godwin acted as Secretary. A resolution was adopted to form a Grand Chapter, when an election was held, which resulted as follows:

Daniel C. Godwin, Milford, Grand High Priest;
Willis Holden, Deputy;
G. W. Stone, Grand King;
Jacob Moore, Grand Scribe;
Rev. T. P. McColley, Grand Chaplain;
Wm. Springer, Grand Captain Host;
S. A. Hedgeman, Grand Treasurer;
Gen. A. T. A. Torbert, Grand Secretary;

who were installed in ample form by the G. G. H. Priest. The Grand Chapter was then opened in ample form, and the M. E. General Grand High Priest withdrew.

A constitution and by-laws were adopted, and the meetings are to be held at Dover annually, on the third Wednesday in January.

ILLINOIS PRESS ASSOCIATION.

Fifth Annual Convention.

The following circular has been issued to the members of the editorial fraternity of the State:

Dear Sir—The Fifth Annual Convention of the Illinois Press Association will be held in the city of Cairo, Alexander county, on Wednesday, April 21st, 1869. The meeting has been appointed at this early date in order that the excursion proposed may be taken before the weather becomes too warm.

Through the kindness of the Illinois Central, Chicago & Northwestern, and Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroads, members of the Association will be allowed to take one lady, free of charge. It is earnestly requested that as many as can do so will rendezvous in Chicago, where special cars for the exclusive use of the Association will be furnished by the Illinois Central Railroad, for the trip to Cairo, leaving Chicago on the 20th, at 9:15 A. M.

The annual address before the Association will be delivered by Dr. C. H. Ray, editor of the Chicago Evening Post, and the poem by W. H. Bristol, local editor of the Kankakee Gazette.

The Association will be entertained by the citizens of Cairo at a grand banquet and ball, and nothing will be left undone to make the visit of the members a most agreeable and pleasant occasion.

The adjournment of the Convention will be followed by a trip to Mobile, Ala., through the courtesy of the officers of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, who have tendered a special train for that purpose.

The expense of the trip will be merely nominal, as the transportation to and from Cairo, the trip to Mobile, and the entertainment at Cairo, will all be free.

If it is your intention to attend the Convention, please fill up and sign the inclosed blank, and return it at once to E. H. Griggs, President, Rockford, Ill., in order that the necessary passes may be forwarded to you.

Yours fraternally,
E. H. Griggs,
J. R. Mosser,
Orin Waters,
W. H. Bailhache,
Executive Committee.

Impostors.

Murphysboro, Ill., March 20, 1869.

Editor Masonic Trowel:

Dear Sir and Bro.—In relation to an article appearing over my signature in the last number of your Trowel, concerning a Bro. Peter Johnson, I would make the following statements in order to explain the matter.

Bro. Johnson went away as stated, on the 1st day of March, with the intention (then unknown to any of us) of returning in a few days. He did in fact start on his return within two or three days, perhaps, after leaving here, but on account of snow and ice, laid over at a farmer's in this county.

On the 5th day of March, Bro. Johnson wrote me a letter, explaining the fact of his returning—that letter, although written within this county, did not come to hand until the 10th day of March. On the evening of the 9th I mailed you the notice appearing in your last number, and by next mail hastened to stop the publication thereof. As you will remember, I was too late.

Last Saturday a week ago, Bro. Peter Johnson arrived here, bringing with him and returning the coat spoken of in said notice—and did immediately thereupon go to work again with his former employer. I have reason to believe that the matter was caused by some circumstance over which Bro. Johnson had no control at the time.

Very fraternally yours,
Chas. W. Scheimer,
W. M. 408.

Since the foregoing letter was received, the following communication has come to hand:

Pensacola, March 14, 1869.

W. M. of Murphysboro Lodge No. 498:

Dear Sir and Brother:—Your letter of the 2d inst. has been received. We have a member of our lodge named "Peter Johnson." He is a member in good standing. He is new in this place, and has not been absent for a long time, and has never been in Illinois.

The person representing himself as "Peter Johnson" must be an impostor, as there has never been any other member of our lodge of that name.

Yours, fraternally,
Wm. F. Lee,
Sec'y Escambia Lodge No. 15, Fla.

Delavan, Ill., March 19, 1869.

H. G. Reynolds, Esq:

M. W. Grand Master.—About two weeks ago a blind man, named John Maguire, visited our place, and demanded assistance. He claimed to belong to Smithland Lodge, at Smithland, Ky. We relieved his immediate wants and sent him on his way rejoicing. Since then, I have received a letter from A. A. Grayot, Past Master of Smithland Lodge, who says Mr. Maguire is not a member of that lodge, and has no especial claims on the Fraternity, and his conduct at that place was such as would have caused him to have been expelled from the lodge had he been a member.

J. A. Mason, W. M.
Tazewell Lodge No. 586.

Paris, Ill., April 3d, 1869.

Editor Trowel:

One W. G. Gano, of this place, whose name is erroneously given as N. G. Gano, in the list of expulsions in the Grand Lodge proceedings of 1867, is still practicing his old tricks. His plea of "being needy" is undoubtedly correct, but he fails to fulfill his promises. He was expelled for the practice of obtaining money from the brethren in Indiana and this State, and never returning it, and, from information received, I am satisfied he is still pursuing his trade; I take this method of informing the brethren that he is still an expelled Mason, and as such is not entitled to recognition in any respect as a Mason.

Fraternally yours, &c.,
D. M. Weider, W. M.
Paris Lodge No. 268.

Expulsion.

Keithsburg, Ill., March 26th, 1869.

Editor Trowel:

At a regular meeting of Robert Burns Lodge No. 113, A. F. and A. Masons, held at their hall, March 26th, 1869, Bro. William Smith was expelled from all the rights and benefits of Masonry, on charge of defrauding Master Masons, lying, drunkenness, and stealing.

In June, 1868, he applied to Bro. Balfour Cowen, of Virden, for assistance, which he received and failed to return. In November, 1868, he applied to Bro. John Gunning, of Tower Hill, received assistance, and never made return. Sometime during the winter, Bro. W. H. Heaton saw said Smith in Bement, where he was acting as bar tender in a low doggery, calling himself Wm. Johnson. On Bro. Heaton's second visit to Bement, he found that Smith, alias Johnson, had sloped, without settling his hotel bill, which he was owing to a brother. He is supposed to have been concerned in some robberies in Bement, before he left.

Description:—Aged 29 years; about 5 feet 7 inches high; light build; sandy complexion; claims to be a machinist and engineer.

Please give this a place in The Trowel, that brothers may look out for Bill Smith, alias Johnson.

Attest: H. G. Calhoun, W. M.
A. S. Glover, Sec.

Look out for colored whiskers and hair.—Editor.

Masters and Wardens as returned to April 2, and not heretofore reported.

Nos.	W. Masters.	S. Wardens.	J. Wardens.
168...	J. A. McConnell,	D. Reinhard,	H. V. Wilkinson.
176...	David A. Cook,	F. F. A. Newport,	Rob't. Gilmore.
359...	A. S. Babcock,	W. W. Willis,	H. Gage.
382...	T. S. Angelos,	Richard Boston,	Wm. Glossop.
444...	Edward Shearer,	John A. Jack,	John Odam.
451...	J. D. Sanborn,	S. P. Colburn,	W. L. Tuttle.
485...	Isaac H. Elkin,	Thos. F. Hale,	J. D. Patton.
553...	R. D. Hammond,	J. S. Provine,	J. H. Hungate.
555...	Joseph Gondolf,	Henry Koch,	Wm. Fuchs.
577...	John B. Longley,	B. Milliken,	E. J. Morgan.
578...	Joel Smith,	Wiley Ross,	H. W. Green.
585...	Jas. W. Davidson,	J. G. Harvey,	F. F. Henshie.
586...	Jas. A. Mason,	Henry C. Cook,	D. B. Still.
587...	Geo. O. Ide,	R. B. Foster,	C. J. Peckham.
591...	Elias Wenger,	J. S. Forsyth,	A. Dickerson.
595...	John W. Gilpin,	J. B. Daniel,	W. J. Curry.

This, we believe, after careful comparison, embraces every lodge No., either in January, February, March, or this number, except 182, 339, 455, and 602. If however, it should appear that any are omitted, we will take it as a favor to have the omission stated to us.

High Priests, Kings and Scribes, as returned up to April, and not heretofore reported.

Nos.	High Priests.	Kings.	Scribes.
20...	E. Kirkbride.
35...	D. H. Morgan.
42...	Mich'l. Rogers,	Spencer Ellsworth,	T. E. Gapen.
82...	A. A. Sulcer,	E. J. Purdy,	J. C. Winslow.
86...	H. R. Cleaver,	N. Gary,	W. E. Knox.
91...	J. C. Crumb,	B. F. Groesbeck,	M. F. Pierce.
121...	J. H. Toole,	T. G. Kellar,	I. R. Braucher.

We think we have given all the chapter numbers but 9 and 13; we will cheerfully correct any omission.

Miscellaneous Reading.

The Case of a Pipe.

"O, Katey! the idea of keeping a pipe on your drawing-room table!"

The speaker was a bright-eyed girl of seventeen, who was enjoying that great delight of looking over her married cousin's pretty things; and the lady, who had the greater one of showing them—a bride of two months, just installed in her new home—replied with a happy dignity worthy of her situation:

"It is not a pipe, May; only a pipe-case."

"But," persisted the first speaker, "the idea of keeping the nasty thing in such a lovely crystal casket, and amongst all your wedding presents!"

"If it had not been for it I should never have been married, May, and consequently should have had no wedding presents. There is nothing in the house, until Fred comes home, that I prize so much as that old broken pipe-case."

"O, Katey, do tell me why!"

"Well, dear, take off your bonnet and ring for tea, and if I have time before Fred returns, I will tell you the story."

The reader shall have it in Mrs. Katey's own words.

"When you were abroad, dear, the year before last, papa was obliged to go to Constantinople to make the Turks pay him some money they owed him. They had hired one of his steamers to carry soldiers and stores to Crete, and after knocking her about, and half spoiling her, they said she was not what they wanted, and refused to pay, and this after papa had spent I don't know how much in fitting her up according to their own orders. It was horribly unjust, of course; but I think it served papa quite right for helping to oppress those poor Cretans."

"Cretans are people who live in Switzerland, and have goitres, are they not, Katey?"

[No; Miss May's education had not been neglected. A lady of great experience in tuition, and half a dozen masters, had been at her for the last two years, "finishing" her, at the rate of about two hundred guineas a year, and she passed as highly accomplished].

"You goose!" replied the young wife (who but for her chance visit to the East would, perhaps, not have known any better), "you are thinking of cretins. The idea of papa's steamer going up into the mountains of the idiots! Cretans are the people of Crete. May, you ought to remember Crete; St. Paul passed it."

"Yes, I know, and loosed the rudder-bands. But please go on about the pipe-case."

"Well, after a good deal of persuasion, I got papa to take me with him, and, oh, it was so delightfully strange and new! Our room at Missieri's Hotel had a bay-window looking out into the Grande Rue of Pera, and when papa was away on business I have sat there for hours watching the people—people, as it seemed, of every nation in the world, and every class of every nation—as they passed by in their picturesque dresses. If I were to talk for an hour I could not give you a list, much less a description, of the queer living flood which flows up down that narrow street, There is only one better place for gape-seed, and that is on the bridge over the Golden Horn; but there a woman can not stop to look about her, the throng is so great.

"It was at Missieri's Hotel that I first met my husband. He sat next to papa at the table d'hote, and, being able to speak a little Turkish, went with us sometimes to the bazar, and to see the mosques, until we became quite intimate. Papa used to go down to the Porte (the government offices) twice a week (and the oftener he went the further he seemed to be from the end of his business, although he had a dragoman from our embassy to back him up), until the hot season came, and we migrated—as all who can do—to the Bosphorus. May, dear, I have read almost all the books about Constantinople (one enjoys books of travel, I think, most after one has visited the places described), and as cleverer people than I have tried and failed to do justice to that lovely Strait, I will not attempt to picture it for you. We came back via Trieste, saw Naples, the best of the Swiss lakes, and the Rhine; but the Bosphorus, the beautiful blue Bosphorus, when the Judas-tree is in full bloom among the dark cypress, and Mount Olympus has not yet lost his crown of snow, is, to my mind, the gem of all, although associated with the terrible adventure I am going to tell you.

"We put up at the Therapia Hotel, at the Black-Sea end, near Bayakderie, where most of the European ambassadors have summer houses, and nearly opposite a place on the Asiatic shore called Unkiar Eskellaise (the Sultan's Valley), a favorite spot for picnics. There is no village there, only a preposterous marble kiosk, built by a viceroy of Egypt, principally, I believe, to show how much money he could waste; but the valley is very pretty, with turf almost like an English lawn, shaded by great trees, and watered by a little tinkling stream full of home-like ferns and water-flowers.

"We went to the first picnic—rather an overgrown affair—and when we had done dinner, the English division went wandering about into the country. At six o'clock Fred and I found ourselves alone, somehow or other, on the banks of the little rivulet. I can not think how it was that we did not notice the disappearance of papa and the rest of our party, and that it was growing dark. There is no twilight on the Bosphorus. It is broad daylight now, and night in ten minutes. Time passed on rapidly, and yet we were not talking about anything very particular—at least not then. O May, how shocked we were when we returned to the landing place and found all the boats gone!"

"It was shocking of them to leave you behind," said little May, with indignation.

"They did not mean any harm; it was one of those mistakes which often make big picnics end badly. Papa—who was nearly left behind himself through hunting after us—was told that I had gone off in the first boat with the Consul-general and his wife; and so he took a passage with the captain of the Stationnaire, who was going to land a friend at Bebec, and then return to his ship at Therapia.

"Every boat had left; there was not even a caique in sight. There was nothing to be done but to walk to the nearest village—a distance of two miles—and hire one.

"On the road we met two Arnauts, wicked-looking creature as ever I saw; and Fred, not feeling sure of his way, asked them if we were going right. 'Evet, effendi' (Yes, gentleman), said the smaller and better looking of the two; and so we hurried on. We had not gone more than three or four hundred yards when we heard some one running after us, and shouting for us to stop. It was the other man, who half in words, half in gestures, told us that his friend had not understood Fred's question; we were going wrong; we must return a good distance and take a path leading to the right. Not the shadow of a suspicion that we were being deceived crossed our minds. We thanked the man for his civility, turned back, and followed the path he had indicated. It led into a narrow rocky gorge, with woods on each side, and there we came suddenly upon four men, two of them our old friends (?), who stopped the way.

"'Let us pass,' said Fred in Turkish, 'or—'

"He had not finished the sentence before one of the Arnauts stepped forward and snatched my watchchain. The next instant I heard a dull thud, and he fell stunned against the rocks. I do not know what Fred whispered in my ear, as he placed me behind him, and stood at bay, looking O so splendidly handsome! What followed, seemed to my dazed mind like magic. I saw the three ruffians make their rush; I saw Fred put his right hand into his pocket, draw it out again, and hold it towards them. As he did so, I heard a slight click. At that sound and action our assailants fell back, just as the bad spirits in a pantomime quail before the wave of the good fairy's wand. What do you think the dear clever fellow had done? Knowing that with one to support (for I was foolish enough almost to faint) he could not struggle against three, he dropped the lion and assumed the fox, drew out his pipe-case, snapped it to imitate the cocking of a pistol, and held it at the first Arnaut's face, saying that if he advanced one step he was a dead man. Luckily, it was dark, so the stratagem succeeded to perfection. Fred lowered his hand for fear the trick might be detected, and retired in good order, half carrying me, until we got into the open road again. I know what he whispered in my ear then, and it gave me heart and strength.

"The Arnauts followed us a little way, and then struck into the wood and disappeared, cowed, poor wretches, by a leathern pipe-case!"

"Ah, Katey! now I see why you put it among your treasures," said May. "Dear old smelly thing, I beg your pardon," she continued, addressing the object of her former disdain.

"You have only heard half what it saved us from that dreadful night," said Mrs. Katey.

"O dearie! did they attack you again?"

"No. That danger was at an end. We had another, perhaps greater, to encounter."

"Oh, go on; please, go on!"

"Following the road, which we knew now must be the right one, as we had been lured from it to be the more conveniently robbed and perhaps murdered (for I heard that these Arnauts were capable of killing a man for a charge of powder); we arrived without further adventure at the village, where, moored to a rickety platform in front of the usual cafe, we saw four or five caiques. We chose the best looking, and the caiquejee was in the act of casting off the rope which held it to the pier, when a man rushed out of the cafe with a long knife in his hand, and dared him to take us. A violent altercation, which, from the expression of their faces and the gestures they used, I thought would any moment end in murder, ensued. At last an old Turk in green turban interposed his authority (he was the scheik of the place), and it was explained to Fred that the man he had chosen must not take us; he did not belong to that landing; it was his adversary's turn; we must hire him. Fred did not like his looks; he had the eye and the voice, as I was told afterwards, of an opium-eater; he was very dirty, too; whereas most caiquejees are quite pictures of neatness and cleanliness, in their white trousers and Broussa-silk shirts. I felt a horror of him from the moment I had seen that long cruel knife glittering in his hand. But there was no appeal, no alternative; it was Hobson's choice—his caique or none; and so we took it.

"It was what they call on the Bosphorus a two-oar caique; but we" (Mrs. Katey had a brother at Eton, and was learned about boats) "should say it was rowed by double sculls—the stroke pair steer, and the dirty man with the long knife rode stroke. And very well he pulled for the first ten minutes—so well, that most of my nervousness departed, and I began to think how soon, at the rate we were going, I should relieve poor dear papa's anxiety. But all of a sudden our stroke stopped rowing, gesticulated violently for a few seconds, and then burying his hands in his face, burst out crying. The man in the bow rowed on quietly, and took no notice of his partner. He was probably accustomed to such outbursts. We were now in mid stream, where the current runs with great violence, and it was with difficulty that the one rower could keep the head of the caique straight. Fred, seeing this, leaned forward (we don't sit in caiques, you know—we lie down on cushions) and told our stroke, kindly enough, to rouse himself and row. A few words hissed out between his clenched teeth was his reply, and I felt Fred's hand, which (there is no harm in saying so now) clasped mine, tremble a little in spite of himself. I now know what those words were—'Cursed forever be these Giaour dogs, who defile their women, bringing them unvailed into public sight!'

"Then he knelt, and began to say his prayers. There was no doubt about it now. We were in the middle of the Bosphorus, at night, in a crank caique, at the mercy of a man rendered fanatically mad by opium.

"In the midst of his devotions he seized his sculls again, vowing that he would not serve Giaours, turned the boat round by sheer strength, and made for the Asiatic shore. We were absolutely helpless. Violence was out of the question. It requires some practice to sit safely in a caique; to struggle in one is simply to upset it. Poor Fred, on whose forehead I could see the cold perspiration standing in beads, tried persuasion. He would give him double the promised fare if he would go on to Therapia. No answer.

"'Very well,' said Fred, 'go back, and I will take the other caique. I have a right to do so now, as you will not keep your contract.' This mention of his rival was too much for the madman. He sprang up and drew his knife. O the agony of that moment! You have never been in such deadly peril, May dear, and can not imagine what strange thoughts crowd one's mind. We were in peril perhaps half a minute; but it would take me twenty times that space to tell you what I thought. I gave up all hope. I wondered where he would stab poor Fred; if I should die at once on his knife, or be drowned, wounded to death; I wondered where our bodies would be found; if they would be found together, and what they would look like; who would find us; how the news would be broken to papa; where they would bury us, and a dozen other conjectures; whilst the madman, balancing the boat as only a madman could, made three cat-like steps toward Fred. Fred, taken entirely by surprise, had only time to half raise himself and push me back, when at the third step the wretched maniac stumbled. In a moment Fred had him by the ankle, and with a dexterous twist threw him overboard. But this sent the light boat gunwale under, and filled her three parts with water. In his fall the wretch dropped his knife, which Fred seized. He says I behaved beautifully; did not move or scream, and baled out the water with his hat, as he bade me. I do not know what I did, May; I was too terrified to scream. I saw him crawl forward and take one of the sculls, and felt him crawl past me again with it. I knew what he must be doing—keeping off the madman, who was swimming like a fish after us as we drifted. If he had ever got hold of the boat he would have drowned us all. I saw the other man leave his oar and crawl aft, with a knife in his hand, to help his fellow-countryman. I felt that the utmost I could do was to die first; for Fred must have his back to one of his enemies, and, opposing the one, the other must prevail. I was in the act of throwing myself on the second caiquejee, when I heard the sharp swish and steady rumble of oars, real oars, such oars as men-of-war's men pull. I knew it was the gig of the Stationnaire.

"Then I screamed. May dear, I did scream then.

* * * * * *

"When I came to my senses the caique was lashed along side the gig, and bailed out quite dry. The first thing I remembered hearing was Captain Roberts shouting, 'What on earth are you doing, Perry? Do you want to drown the man?' Perry was the bow-man of the gig—a bright-eyed sea-boy of twenty. He had hitched the boat-hook in the waistband of our chief opponent, and was holding him under water.

"'Please, sir," replied Perry, with a grin, 'I was only washing of him a bit afore-hauling of him in.'

"It would have been a service of danger to move me into the gig, so they towed the caique into Therapia, and there we discovered what had caused the man to stumble at the critical moment. It was our old friend the pipe-case, which Fred had dropped as he helped me in when we started from the Asiatic shore.

"Papa was awfully angry with Fred; said he had behaved dishonorably in making me miss our party at the picnic, and a great deal more. Fred behaved beautifully, and only said he hoped to be allowed to explain in the morning.

Before the morning, however, I had talked papa quite round, and he ended the discussion with one of his grunts, and a 'Well, I suppose I know how it will end!'

"You know how it has ended, May. I am the happiest little woman in London, dear; and if I had the Queen's palace, that old pipe-case should have the place of honor in its best room. But hark! that's Fred's ring. Run up and dress for dinner, birdie—he likes me to meet him in the hall."

◆

The Teachings of Nature.

It is well to turn aside at times, from the cares and perplexities of life, and converse, as it were, with the inanimate world. There are many lessons taught in nature—many more than those we see so often written out. I have marveled exceedingly at the cold gaze of some idle eyes which glanced over a lovely scene, or the careless and indifferent air with which I have seen the gazer turn from a lofty mountain, or a grand water-fall, or a beautiful river. How gladly have I turned from such companions and sought friends in the rocks, and trees, and streams! There is an affected romance, so called, which is detestable, as are all affectations, and it is such romance which has caused sentiment to be regarded as ridiculous, and in the end reared a conventional law which forbids the outgush of free-feeling, unless in a certain way, and after certain approved customs. This law has prescribed so many tears, and so many sobs, and so many ah me's! over the coffin of a mother, and a proportionate number at the grave of a sister; it has appointed just the proper amount of astonishment which is to be exhibited when the eye first beholds Niagara in all its grandeur; and it has sometimes condescended to find beauty in other flowers than those of the conservatory, and other gardens than those planted by the hand of "an experienced Scotch gardener."

That person is to be pitied who is bound by this law, no less than is the individual who has no love or appreciation of the truly beautiful. Look at yonder tree, spreading its giant limbs over the cottage it shades. It stood there when the stout old man at the door was a babe. It will stand there when his babes are men. How many changes has it outlived? Verily, they are countless. Nations have grown and died, empires waxed strong and decayed, since that brave tree bent to the first winter blast. All Europe has been grasped in the hand of the child of Destiny, and been again flung or torn away. France has trembled under three dynasties, and a reign of terror; Greece has been twice revolutionized; Spain—Spain's revolutions are yearly; our own country has grown from childhood to vigor and power. The whole world has resumed a new aspect in political and religious matters; it has rocked in earthquakes, and swung on in space, guided by the unerring law of its Maker; and men have been born and grown old, and gone to judgment, and the tree is green and glorious! Truly, in such a view, the rocks of centuries are most solemn witness-bearers. They become the historians of the world; and the stars above us, who have watched all the changes of our planet, may well serve as marks in the volume of memory. If they speak, they but echo through the long centuries the glad anthem of creation.

There is a legend of Arabia, that has its moral, and which is not uninteresting. A traveler over the sands of the desert, tells of his stumbling one day on a pile of stones, far out in the desert. Surprised at so unusual a circumstance, he grouped about in search of some explanation of the mystery, and finding no clue whatever to the nature of the ruin, for such evidently was the object he had discovered, he returned to the spring from which he had wandered, and inquired of his Arab attendants. From them he gathered the subject of the following legend:

It was long ago, in the early ages, when men worshiped false gods, and had no knowledge of the mighty Ruler of the universe, that the young Chaldean gave himself up to the worship of a star. It was strange, passing strange. His steed was fleet, the fleetest, and his arm was strong. His heart had always bounded exultingly when he flew over the plain on his gallant barb, and he never shrunk from battle. Yet they had marked a strange gleam in his eye, and had seen him look often with a wild look at the bright Aldebaran. Suddenly, he gave his steed to his brother and wandered away, on foot and alone, into the desert to this spring, and rested on its grassy border. Then he brought stones a weary way and piled them on a sand-hill, and built him a turret, not lofty, but it towered above the plain, and from far off men saw and wondered. Anxiously he toiled, and stone after stone he laid on the turret till it was finished, and then he knelt on its top and worshiped the God of the Arab.

There, night after night, forgetting the world around, he held high converse with the hosts of heaven, and seemed to talk with the meteor's glare, and with the gleaming starlight, as with familiar spirits. And so the years rolled on, and the desert sage became a prophet among his people. (So said the legend, but this is doubtless an addition of latter years, as the sequel will show.) None dared to go out to battle without consulting him, and knowing from him that the light was propitious; none remained at home when he said go forth. It may be that for a while he deceived himself, and actually believe that he could read the future in the dim star-light of the desert. Be that as it might, men feared him, and said that he alone of all the living held communion with the spirits of the dead, and that ghastly forms on spectral steeds came to his turret, and he passed his night in holy meetings with the unforgotten brave. Then he told them no more of the future, and they began to shrink from him, shunning his tower as the residence of the evil one. He did hold converse with the unseen and spiritual, but it was only as the student of God's works may always commune with his God. He began to read on the page of heaven, at first dimly, then more distinctly, and at last with overwhelmning brilliancy, the great truth, "there is a God."

And he grew old. The dreams of his youth—sunny youth! had faded quite out of his recollection, or if they came, came but momentarily, waking a smile on his withered cheek, as he remembered the light step and fairy form of his long lost. He learned much, but not from books. And here begins the moral of the story. Calm thought and quiet reflection had done their work in his mind, as they will inevitably in the mind of every one who deals in them. Study is of no avail, is not study in its true sense, when it consists merely in the reception of accredited facts without examination or thought.

Years rolled on, and the old man grew mighty in the strength of his soul, yet lacked he the clear knowledge of the Most High. He knew there was a God. He had heard it in the wind and read it in the sky. He knew that the cool breeze from the far palm groves was His breath, and he bowed himself on his knees and felt it among his white locks and on his brow, he longed with earnest longing to know the shape and appearance of the Deity of whose power he learned more and more nightly, and thought more and more daily.

Until, one night, as he was gazing on the heavens and striving to picture to himself the definite form of the God he so blindly, yet so devotedly worshiped, there came across his soul, as it were, a lightning flash from a strange bright land. For as he saw the hosts on high, marshaled in space, countless myriads, increasing with their distance and filling immensity with a dust of worlds, far beyond the power of even his strong imagination to number, then for the first time came upon him the dim idea of Infinity, and startled his soul with hitherto unknown emotions. Suddenly he bethought himself of the immutability of those stars, and the long watch they had kept nightly over the sons of the desert, and he felt that the God of those stars must be beyond his comprehension, "Infinite, Eternal, and Unchangeable." An instant his blood ran with a wild throb through his veins, and his heart bounded exultingly in the consciousness of its first communion with its God—then stilled forever. The Arabs say that a flickering light was seen to move for years around the turret, but none approached it until a long time had passed, and then they found a sun-dried skeleton kneeling on its top. Solemnly and with many rites and forms of those olden times, the worshipers of Aldebaran waited his rising, and when he reached the zenith they hollowed out a bed in the sand floor of the turret, and the astrologer slept there while its walls crumbled and fell. To this day the Arab shuns the hillock, and says that a flame, pale, blue, and fitful, may be seen at times moving about the ruin, in a starry night, when the bright God of the Arab, Aldebaran, is above, and that it is the restless soul of the star-worshiper. Such is the legend, partaking much of the old and fanciful, yet evidently changed and explained by modern tradition. Such as it is, it may serve to illustrate the text, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork."

◆

Humble Friends.

Kindness to animals shows an amiable disposition, and correct principles. The inferior creation were given for our use, but not for our abuse or cruelty. Many of them add greatly to the comfort of domestic life, and also display qualities deserving of regard. The noble properties of the dog, the horse, and the "half-reasoning elephant," have long been known and praised. But among the lower grades of animals, especially if they receive kind treatment, traits of character are often discovered that surprise or delight us.

Cats, so frequently the objects of neglect or barbarity, are more sagacious than is generally supposed. The mother of four young kittens missed one of her nurselings, and diligently searched the house to find it. Then she commenced calling upon the neighbors, gliding from room to room, and looking under sofas and beds with a troubled air. At length she found it in a family in the vicinity, where it had been given by her mistress. Taking it in her mouth, she brought it home and bestowed on it her nursing cares and maternal caresses for a few weeks, then carried it back to the same neighbor, and left it in the same spot where she found it. It would seem as if she wished to testify her approbation of the new home selected for her child, and desired only to nurture it until it should be old enough to fill it properly.

A cat who had repeatedly had kittens taken from her and drowned immediately after their birth, went to a barn belonging to the family, quite a long distance from the house. She so judiciously divided her time, as to obtain her meals at home and attend to her nursery abroad. At length she entered the kitchen followed by four of her offspring well-grown, all mewing in chorus.

Had she foresight enough to conclude that if she could protect them until they reached a more mature age they would escape the fate of their unfortunate kindred?

A little girl once sat reading with a large favorite cat in her lap. She was gently stroking it, while it purred loudly to express its joy. She invited a person who was near to feel its furry softness. Reluctant to be interrupted in an industrious occupation that required the use of both hands, the person did not immediately comply, but at length touched the head so abruptly that the cat supposed itself to have been struck. Resenting the indignity, it ceased its song, and continued alternately rolling and closing its eyes, yet secretly watching, until both the busy hands had resumed their employment. Then, stretching forth a broad, black, velvet paw it inflicted on the back of one of them a quick stroke, and jumping down, concealed itself beneath the chair of its patron. There seemed in this simple action a nice adaptation of means to ends; a prudent waiting, until the retaliation that was meditated could be conveniently indulged, and a prompt flight from the evil that might ensue.

The race of rats is usually considered remarkable only for voraciousness, or for ingenious and mischievous inventions to gratification of apetite. A vessel that had been much infested by them, was, when in port, fumigated with brimstone, to expel them. Escaping in great numbers, they were dispatched by people stationed for that purpose. Amid the flying victims, a group was observed to approach slowly, upon a board placed between the vessel and the shore. one of these animals held in his mouth a stick, the extremities of which were held by two others, who carefully led him. It was discovered that he was blind. The executioners suffered them to live. It was not in the heart of man to scorn such an example.

Another of our ships, while in a foreign port, took similar measures to free itself from those troublesome inmates. Amid the throngs that fled from the suffocating smoke to slaughtering foes, one was seen moving laboriously as if over-burdened. Climbing over the bodies of his dead companions, he bore upon his back another, so old as to be unable to walk. Like Æneas escaping from the flames of Troy, perhaps it was an aged father that he thus carried upon his shoulders. Whether it was filial piety, or respect for age, his noble conduct, as in the previous instance, saved his life and that of his venerable friend.

Sheep are admired for their innocence and meekness, more than for strong demonstrations of character. Yet the owner of a flock was once surprised by seeing one of his fleecy people rushing to and fro beneath his window, in great agitation and alarm. Following her to the pasture, where she eagerly led the way, he found a fierce dog tearing the sheep. Having put him to flight, he turned in search of the messenger, and found her in a close thicket, where she had carefully hidden her own little lamb, ere she fled to apprise the master of their danger. This strangely intelligent animal was permitted to live to the utmost limit of longevity allotted to her race.

The instinct of the beaver approaches the bounds of reason. Their dexterity in constructing habitations, and rearing mounds to repel the watery element, surpasses that of all other animals. A gentleman, who resided where they abound, wished to ascertain whether this was inherent, or the effect of imitation. He took, therefore, to his house, an infant beaver, ere its eyes were opened. It was an inmate of his kitchen, where one day, from a leaky pail, a small stream of water oozed out upon the floor. Out ran the little beaver, and collected sticks and clay, with which it built a dam to stop the passage of the tiny brook.

An Indian, going out to shoot beavers, saw a large one felling a lofty tree. Ere he gave the finishing strokes, he ascended a neighboring hill, throwing his head about, and taking deep draughts of air. The Indian, who steadfastly regarded him, supposed that he was taking an observation of which way the wind blew, as when he made his last effort on the tree he made use of this knowledge to shelter himself from injury at its fall. He then measured the trunk into equal lengths for the height of the house he was to build, and loading his broad tail with wet clay, made a mark at each division. Uttering a peculiar cry, three little beavers appeared at their father's call, and began to gnaw asunder the wood at the places which he had designated.

"When I saw this," said the Indian, "I turned away. Could I harm such a creature? No! He was to me as a brother."

Among the insect tribe the ant sustains a good character for foresight and industry, having been cited by the wise monarch of Israel as an example and reproof to the sluggard.

When Dr. Franklin was on his embassy in France, soon after the American revolution, he one morning sat musing over his solitary breakfast, and perceived a legion of large black ants taking possession of the sugar-bowl. His philosophic mind being ever ready for experiments, he caused it to be suspended from the ceiling by a string. They returned. The sweet food was above their reach. It was worth an effort to regain it. One placed himself in a perpendicular position, and another mounted upon his shoulders. Others ascended the same scaffolding, each stretching to his utmost altitude. Down fell the line. Yet it was again, and again renewed. Then the Babel-builders disappeared. Had they given up the siege? No. They had only changed their mode of attack. Soon they were seen traversing the ceiling, and precipitating themselves upon the coveted spoil, by the string that sustained it. Here was somewhat of the same boldness and perseverance that led Hannibal across the Alps, to pour his soldiers down upon astonished Italy.

Thus the spider that sought so many times to fasten its frail thread, and at length succeeded, gave a profitable lesson to King Robert the Bruce, when he ruminated in discouragement and despair on his failing enterprise.

Parrots are generally considered as senseless repeaters of sounds and words, that convey neither sentiment nor feeling. Now and then, there seems some variation from this rule. A parrot who had been reared with kindness, selected as his prime favorite the youngest child in the family. By every means in his power he expressed this preference. The little girl was seized with a severe sickness. He missed her in her accustomed haunts, and turning his head quickly from side to side, called loudly for her.

At length, the fair form, stretched in its coffin, met his view. In wild and mournful tones, he continued to utter her name. He was removed far from the room, but the shrill echo of his voice was still heard amid the funeral obsequies, pronouncing with frantic grief the name of his lost Mary. Ever afterwards, when the sound of the tolling bell met his ear, the fountains of memory were troubled, and the cry of "Mary! Mary!" mingled with the mournful knell, till it ceased.

Since so many interesting properties are discovered in the inferior creation, where, perhaps, we least expected them, it is well to search for such traits of character as deserve our regard, and consider them as humble friends, that we may better do our duty to them, and please Him who has intrusted them to our protection.

Eccentricities of the Great.

Queen Elizabeth, at her death, left three thousand different dresses; and for a long period during the last years of her life, she could not bear the look of a mirror, dreading to behold the terrible ravages which time had made. Walter Raleigh was, perhaps, the most elegant of all the cavaliers known to us. On the days of receptions at court, his shoes were adorned with magnificent and precious stones, the value of which did not amount to less than six thousand guineas. He wore armor of massive silver, his sword and baldric were likewise enriched with precious stones of the rarest kind. The great philosopher, Descartes, devoted immense attention to his periwigs, and had always four as a reserve in his cabinet, an example of worldly vanity imitated by Richard Steele, who did not spend less than forty guineas on one of his huge black periwigs. Mozart, whose blonde hair was very beautiful, wore it long and floating on the shoulders. A ribbon of bright color somewhat restrained its exuberance behind. The harmless vanity of poor Goldsmith, and the history of his peach-blossom coat, have become almost proverbial. If we may believe Samuel Johnson, Pope went so far in his exalted opinion of himself as firmly to believe he was one of the pivots of the system of the world. The vanity of Allen Ramsey was excessive. On a certain occasion he very modestly placed himself above Peter the Great. "Proud Czar," he cried, "you may be a very fine fellow, but I am not willing to exchange my celebrity for yours." Napoleon I. was not above being vain about the smallness of his foot. He seems also to have been induced to turn snuff-taker from learning that Frederick the Great consumed enormous quantities of snuff. One day Salvator was heard putting himself in parallel with Michael Angelo and Raphael, and affirming that the former had no delicacy, and that the latter was dry and angular. Raphael, so great, seems to have been jealous of the glory and talent of Michael Angelo. Bolardo, the Italian poet, attributed so much importance to his productions, that when he had found a suitable name for one of his heroes he ordered the bells of the village to be rung. Kotzebue was so vain and envious that he could not suffer near him any celebrated personage, even if represented by a statue or picture. The life of Lord Byron was one example of boastful egotism from beginning to end. He was vain of his genius, of his rank, of his misanthropy, and even of his vices, and especially proud of the beauty of his hands and his skill as a horseman and a swimmer. The celebrated critic, Peter Bayle, escaped often from his books and wrapping himself in his mantle, ran with the gladness of a school-boy to the public places, where mountebanks were amusing the multitude. Spinoza amused himself watching the habits of spiders, and was never so delighted as when watching their battles. Cardinal Richelieu sought relaxation from his political labors in violent exercises. Count de Grammont found him leaping in company with one of his domestics to see which could rise the higher. Tycho Brae's favorite amusement was polishing optical glasses. Salvator Rosa frequently played improvised comedies, in which he took the parts of mountebanks, and in the costume of the mountebank he ran through the streets of Rome. Cowper made favorites of hares, and found refuge from gloomy thoughts in making bird cages. Goethe had, as the companion of his studies, a tame snake, but had an aversion to dogs, and also to spectacles, and to those who wore them. Thompson had a garden at Richmond. Of this poet there is a story to the effect that he was so lazy, as, with his hands in his pockets, to eat the peaches off the tree itself. Gray said he had no other desire than to be all the day on a sofa and to read eternally new romances by Marivaux and Crebilion the younger. An occupation of Charles II., somewhat more innocent than most of his other occupations, was to raise fowls in St. James' Park, and to surround himself with numerous troops of those beautiful spaniels which are known by his name. Beethoven liked to splash his feet in cold water at all hours of the day, till his room was converted into a sort of marsh, and the water filtered through into the rooms below. Often, also, in the evening or the morning, he rushed, without any shoes or stockings, through the fields that were wet with due. Voltaire and Swedenborg consumed coffee, Coleridge and De Quincy, opium, to excess. Carlyle, from earliest boyhood had been an inveterate smoker. Some celebrated men such as Shakesphere seem to have had no irregularities. Walter Scott wrote to a friend who had asked some details of his private life. "There is no literary man who has not more to say about his private life than I. Story? God bless you, I have none to tell, sir."

Wish and Will.

"I wish I could play upon the piano as well as Miss Hallet," said Ellen Ross.

"Well, so you will, when you have had as many years' practice," was the reply.

"Oh, I mean now, without waiting so long."

I wonder if wishing will make her a good player. "If wishes were efforts, most men would be great."

"I wish I knew as much as you do, Miss Emilie," said the same young lady.

"So you may, if you will study and improve your time."

"I wish I knew as much now."

"Knowledge does not come into your head of its own accord, Miss Ellen; you have to put it there by efforts of your own."

"I wish I knew my lessons."

"Sit down and study them, and you will soon have your wish."

"I do not feel in the humor for studying; I'd like to know them without."

"'I wish' must be a great help to you, you say it so often. If I could discover the magic, I would use it myself; but it must be invisible to all but yourself, for I can not see that you accomplish a great deal by it, after all."

"Now you are laughing at me. It don't do me any good, I suppose; but it is easy to say it, and I do really wish what I say."

"No doubt you do, if you get it without any trouble. 'I wish' is a lazy friend of yours; he isn't any profit to you; suppose you turn him off, and take instead 'I will.' My word for it, you will find he helps you more than the other. He is the very soul of industry, and he accomplishes more in an hour than 'I wish' does in a lifetime. Say 'I will learn my lessons,' and there will be no occasion for 'I wish I knew them.' You will cut the acquaintance of your old friend when you have tried the new one, I am sure."

Ellen laughed, and said: "Well, I don't wish to dissolve old friendships, but I will try your advice—that is, if I can remember—but 'I wish' is easier to say than 'I will' is to do."

Her resolution is good; let us follow it. 'I will' is the brave word that conquers all difficulties.

◆

See those small youngsters, whose expansive ears
Maternal kindness graz'd with frequent shears;
Each bristling crop a dangling mass becomes,
And all the spoonies turn to Absaloms.

Holmes.

Spring-Balances.

One of our exchanges gives a needed warning against these honest-faced impositions:

"In nearly all the meat markets, and many of the groceries and other shops where articles are sold by retail, are to be found some nice little contrivances for cheating the purchaser and adding to the gains of the seller, called spring-balances.

"The spring-balance was never intended to give value received; it is only convenient to show an approximation to the weight of the substance which is attached to the hook or placed on the suspended support below. The spring-balance is almost the only sort of apparatus that is of more value to the owner the longer it is used. This contrivance is so, for the reason that every strain on the tension of the spring causes it to bend a little easier than at the previous time it was bent; so that, admitting that it furnished a true index of the weight of an article when it was new, it is certain that it will not do so after the lapse of a few months of use.

"Not only is the spring-balance inaccurate when compared with the lever-balance, but it is, after a little use, inaccurate when compared with itself—that is, it will require a greater weight to register the tenth pound on the scale than it did the first; for the reason that smaller quantities are much more frequently weighed than larger ones; or, again, if ten pounds are weighed separately they will not weigh ten pounds when put on the hook or support together.

"No butcher or market-man buys his meat by weight on a spring-balance, and their use is a fraud on fair dealing that communities should no longer tolerate, and which the Canadian government has already prohibited."

Died.

In Murphysboro, Jackson county, Ill., March 13th, Bro. GEORGE P. DEAN, member of Murphysboro Lodge No. 498, A. F. and A. M., aged 56 years 11 months and 22 days.

In Chatsworth, Ill., March 30th, 1869, of Consumption, Mrs. PERSIS S., wife of Bro. Maj. David E. Shaw, W. M. of Chatsworth Lodge No. 539, aged 49 years. She was a native of Carver, Mass. Eastern papers please copy.

Moneys Received for Masonic Trowel,

FROM MARCH 6TH, TO APRIL 2D, 1869, INCLUSIVE.

$1.25 each.—C. Bradford, J. R. Braucher, J. F. Burrill, H. Burrows, Henry Belden, E. C. A. Cushman, E. G. Clark, T. H. Crocker, E. H. Ditzler, J. R. Francis, A. P. Forsythe, J. H. Gray, W. C. Gilbert, Geo. W. Groves, G. A. Gilbert, W. H. Goehegan, W. R. Gearhart, A. M. Hobbs, J. R. Hardin, W. H. House, E. E. Howard, George W. Lininger, Wm. A. Moore, S. W. Mather, H. E. Mason, B. McElroy, N. Milburn, Jr., Samuel Mayer, E. S. Niccolls, W. D. Prathers, E. S. Richmond, C. M. Rawlings, John W. Ross, J. M. Robertson, Fred Rose, J. A. Rogers, Charles Smith, R. G. Stevens, S. C. Snapp, S. C. Stevens, W. L. Sweeney, Joel Smith, J. R. Smith, G. W. Staley, A. Y. Trogden, J. M. Vanderen, Louis Wagner, J. T. Williams, I. U. Miller, L. Wolfe.

$2.50—J. F. Buelware, William Bennie, G. W. Culver, S. C. Palmer, A. J. Rosenbaum, Wm. Sutton, E. A. Smith, F. A. Worcester, A. Wilson, Daniel Wingate.

$3.75 each.—J. A. Combs, Samuel Riddle, E. Voerster.

$5.00 each—E. A. Brockway, W. H. French, J. E. Gorham, W. A. Griffin, T. W. Hay, G. Head, H. H. McConnell, O. C. Woods, D. S. Yates.

$7.50.—Louis Zeigler.

$8.75—J. Apsman.

$10.00 each.—W. H. Brown, J. G. Follin.

$1.00 each.—M. A. Cushing, D. W. Campbell, C. G. Cotting, E. A. Ellsworth, J. S. B. Frazer, W. H. French, H. Gibson, W. C. Hewett, Wilson Hoag, H. N. Hurlbut, G. I. Ladd, D. H. Morgan, T. O. Preston, W. H. Reid, N. S. Turner, C. S. Todd, L. L. Wakefield; Frank Webster.

$2.00 each.—S. C. Amend, R. B. Colcord, Moses Dodge, J. W. Godwin, twice; L. B. Hunt, Caspar Magel, B. Thorp, J. B. Thompson.

$3.00 each.—Geo. L. Cross, Hugh Crockett, P. A. Emory, H. J. Huggins, R. W. Phelps, Wm. G. Smith.

$4.00 each.—John G. Harvey, Wm. M. Jackson, Eli T. Moore.

Other Sums.—T. J. Adams, $1.90; W. C. Benedict, $15.00; J. R. Boyd, $1.20; Joseph Cooke, 1.90; A. Denniss, $2.70; H. Grebe, 75c.; A. Haas, $15.00; D. J. Jones, $1.50; S. Johnson, $11.25; W. B. Kerney, $6.00; W. Lewis, $1.10; John Moyes, $3.60; W. S. Pease, $5.90; J. C. Reynolds, $7.00; G. Summe, $9.00; James Smith, $3.80; G. M. Stroud, $20.00; Stricklin & Cyrus, 90c.; J. K. Seccord, $8.00; D. Williams, 75c.

R. ORENDORFF.
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Business Solicited in the State and Federal Courts.

4v8-6m*

AGENTS WANTED—$10 A DAY.

TWO $10 MAPS FOR $4.
LLOYD'S
Patent Revolving Double Maps
Of America and Europe, America and the United States of America.

Colored—in 4000 Counties.

THESE great Maps, now just completed, show every place of importance, all Railroads to date, and the latest alterations in the various European States. These Maps are needed in every School and family in the land—they occupy the space of one Map, and by means of the Reverser, either side can be thrown front, and any part brought level to the eye. County Rights and large discount given to good Agents.

Apply for Circulars, Terms, and send money for Sample Maps, to J. T. LLOYD, 4v8-1t 23 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

FACTS FOR BUILDERS.

Every Carpenter, and those interested in Building, can save time and money by consulting our Practical Architectural Books. Descriptive catalogues sent free to any address.

A. J. BICKNELL & CO.,
4v8-3t* Publishers, Springfield, Ill.

WANTED.—For a Grand Lodge Library, the Proceedings of 1840, 1841, 1842, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848, 1849, 1852, and 1853, Grand Lodge of Illinois, for which a fair price will be paid, in cash, goods, or for TROWEL, if sent to us by first of April next. H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

GREAT PLATTE VALLEY ROUTE.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD!

Overland Mail, Express, and Telegraph Line,
OPEN FROM OMAHA TO BENTON, 595 MILES
from the
Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains.

On and after Sunday, July 26, 1868, the Union Pacific Railroad will run

Two Daily Passenger Trains
between Omaha and Benton, connecting at Omaha direct with the CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN R. W.
for
ALL PRINCIPAL EASTERN CITIES,
and with the
COUNCIL BLUFFS & ST. JOSEPH R. R.
FOR ALL POINTS SOUTH.
At Cheyenne, direct connnections are made with Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Overland Mail Coaches, for Denver and Santa Fe!
and all points in
COLORADO AND NEW MEXICO;
And at Benton for Salt Lake and all points in
UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA,
AND CALIFORNIA.

PULLMAN'S PALACE SLEEPING COACHES
On Night Trains.
Good Eating-Houses along the Line.

PASSENGERS CROSSING THE PLAINS
by taking this road,
WILL SAVE 200 MILES STAGING
And 48 Hours Time.

C. D. WHITCOMB, Gen. Ticket Agt.
W. SNYDER, Gen. Supt.
t12-v7 S. H. H. CLARK, Gen. Freight Agt.

THE ILLINOIS STATE REGISTER.—Published at Springfield, Ill., by E. L. Merritt & Bro., is the Central Democratic paper of Illinois. Daily, per annum, $10.00; Daily, six months, $5.00; Weekly, yearly, $2.00. Money sent by Express or in Registered Letters at our risk. Address
6-6 E. L. MERRITT & BRO.

VIRGIL PRICE

MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Manufacturers of all kinds of
Masonic Materials, Swords,
BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.,
No. 144 GREENE STREET,
NEW YORK.

Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO
KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.
Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords. 1v8-1y

MASONIC FURNISHING STORE.

POLLARD & LEIGHTON,
104 Tremont St., Boston,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
Society and Military Goods,
Sashes, Aprons, Collars, Jewels,
Swords, Belts, Gloves, Gauntlets, Caps, Chapeaux, Charts, Diplomas. Sole agents for Baker's Low-Twelve Bell. All the variety of Clothing for Lodges, Chapters, Councils, and Encampments.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR EQUIPMENTS
Furnished at short notice.

Colored lithographic view of the New Masonic Temple, Boston. Price, $3.00.

Publishers of
WEBB'S MASONIC MONITOR—Pocket edition;
FREEMASON'S POCKET LIBRARY;
WORKING MONITOR;
DICTIONARY AND MANUAL OF MASONIC LAW;
DIGEST OF MASONIC LAW;
TACTICS FOR KNIGHTS TEMPLAR;
and have for sale all other Masonic Books published

BANNERS AND FLAGS.

☞ Manufacturers supplied with all kinds of Materials, Trimmings, etc., for making Regalia, at the lowest prices. 4v7-1y*

MASONIC TROWEL
BOOK BINDERY AND
Blank Book Manufactory.
BANKERS,
Railroad Companies, City and County Authorities, Merchants, &c.,
SUPPLIED WITH FULL SETS OF BOOKS
At Short Notice, Ruled to any Pattern.
MAGAZINES, PAMPHLETS, MUSIC, bound in any style desired, from plain muslin to the finest Turkey Morocco and Gilt Edging. Old books rebound.

THE ILLINOIS JOURNAL.—PUBLISHED Daily and Weekly at Springfield, is the only Republican newspaper printed in the State Capital. It is the Official State Paper, and the Weekly edition penetrates every county. Subscription prices: Daily, $10.00 per year; Weekly, $2.00. Address,
THE JOURNAL COMPANY,
6-6 Springfield, Ill.

WESTERN UNION RAILROAD. Short and direct route to all points in Central Iowa, Central and Northern Wisconsin, and all parts of Minnesota. Trains on this road make close connection with trains on the Illinois Central Railroad at Freeport, and also with trains on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad at Clinton Junction and Racine Junction.
2v7 R. C. TATE, Superintendent.

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, MAY 15, 1869. NO. 5.

Poetry.

The Ash and the Holly.

"Pray what may your name be? I've thought the whole spring,
That I never once met with so sharp-faced a thing!
Though it may seem uncivil to make such remark,
Yet, really, such leaves—and so odious a bark!—
I declare that if I such an object had been,
I'd certainly gone where I could not be seen."

Thus spoke a young Ash, with a slim, graceful waist,
Who assumed all the airs of a lady of taste,
And scorned the plain Holly, whose title to grace
Was not to be found in fine figure or face;
In fact, not a tree of the forest stood near,
But declared the poor Holly too low for their sphere?

The Holly look'd upward, as though her heart pined—
For 'tis hard to be scoff'd and unloved by our kind;
But she shook the large tears from her leaves so reviled,
And without the least anger, thus answered and smiled:
"'Tis granted, Miss Ash, I'm less graceful than you—
But if I've less grace, I've less arrogance, too!

"I wear not the tassels and flowers which adorn
The boughs of the chestnut, this beautiful morn;
And the river that rolls in this sunlight divine,
Might scorn to reflect such an image as mine;
Yet, 'neath the dark aspect, ye seek to despise,
Lives something immortal—akin to the skies!

„When the clouds of the winter descend in their wrath,
And the shrill tempest blows o'er your desolate path—
When the beauty ye vaunt is all chasten'd and past,
As a thing to be spurned by the foot of the blast;
Then the poor humbly Holly is prized for its own,
And loved in gay halls, where the Ash is unknown.

"There, dress'd in her plain modest garment of green,
With a necklace of coral—she reigns like a queen;
While hearts, young and happy, dance round her and sing,
Till winter appears like a spirit of spring;
And the mirth and the meeting, the music of words,
Seem sweeter than May and the singing of birds.

"Nor deem that my reign is but partial and brief;
No, a love universal yet hallows my leaf;
And the peasant, God bless him, though poor be his cot,
In some favored nook can still find me a spot:
For though I have dwelt in rich mansions at will,
I love the clean cottage, and cling to it still!"

When next ye descant upon "lowness of birth,"
And prize form and feature beyond real worth,
Remember true beauty may center within,
And more than requite for mere darkness of skin;
Appearance, though charming, yet sometimes deceives,
Too oft the least worth may be hid by fine leaves;
As the bird that soars highest and warbles the best,
Is born in the lowest and narrowest nest!

◆

The Song of the Anvil.

BY N. G. SHEPHERD.

Within the village smithy
  Right merrily I ring,
And under the stroke of the hammer
  A tuneful song I sing.

Red glows the wide-mouthed furnace,
  The heaving bellows roar—
You can hear their huge lungs panting
  Outside the open door.

The smith is stalwart and mighty—
  He lifts his sledge on high,
Then lets it fall on the iron,
  And the sparks all round him fly.

With a ready voice I answer,
  And cheer him with my song;
I sing to him while he labors—
  I sing to him all day long.

His arm is brawny and powerful,
  Its strength full well I know;
He strikes with an earnest purpose,
  And heavily falls his blow.

The children stand in the doorway,
  For they love to see him swing
His sledge across his shoulder,
  While cheerily I sing.

My voice goes out to the village;
  You can hear it far away,
As I cheer the smith in his labor
  Through all the live-long day.

With every blow from his hammer
  An answering note I sound,
That over again is repeated
  Wherever an echo is found.

Oh, ye who are sorely smitten
  By the iron hand of fate,
Abide your time in patience,
  Ye have not long to wait.

Oh, young man, eager and hopeful,
  Oh, young man, valiant and strong,
When the blows fall fast and thickest
  Make answer with a song!

—Packard's Monthly for May.

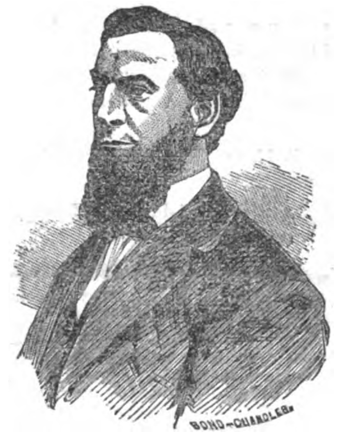
Biographical Sketch.



Vincent Lumbard Hurlbut, M. D.

The subject of this brief sketch, so far, has won distinction as a Templar and Scotch Rite Mason—a distinction of which he may well be satisfied,—considering the number who have filled the position of Grand Commander from Apollo, and the comparative youth of Templar Masonry in Illinois.

Sir Knight Hurlbut was born June 28, 1829, at Honoeye Falls, Monroe county, N. Y. The lineage of the family is traced back to 1630, when William Hurlbut, from England, settled in Dorchester, Mass., and afterwards in Windsor, Conn. The mother's side is also English. The father, Horatio Nelson Hurlbut, was born Nov. 9, 1806, at Batavia, N. Y., and is now a physician and Mason of distinction in Chicago, and a gentleman and citizen of worth and note.

The mother, Sabrina Lumbard, was born Sept. 1, 1812, in Montpelier, Vt., is still alive, and, with her husband, is a member of the Congregationalist church. When Vincent was about four years of age, the family removed to Jefferson, Ashtabula county, Ohio, where the son was chiefly educated at an academy and high school, then noted for a thorough and systematic course of instruction. Prof. Comstock, a graduate of Yale, gave him a thorough course in the languages, and in 1847, he commenced the study of medicine under his father, and pursued his studies in the years 1850 and 1851 in Cleveland College under the tutorship of Prof. Horace A. Ackley of Cleveland, Ohio. The family removed to Chicago in June 1851; Vincent followed in July. Satisfied that he could pass through an elaborate and complete course in Chicago, contrary to previous intentions, he entered Rush Medical College, and graduated with marked distinction and honor at the session of 1851–2, immediately commenced, and is now in a large, successful and distinguished practice. As a citizen he is highly respected; his religious views are liberal, and his pathway is strown with memorials of sympathy and beneficence. In September 1856, he was initiated in Wabansia Lodge No. 160, and was passed and raised in the following October.

The capitular degrees were conferred upon him in Washington Chapter No. 43, Comp. Reuben Tayler, being then H. P., in 1858–9. In 1860, Comp. Johnson, Grand Master, conferred upon him the degrees of Royal and Select Master in Chicago Council No. 4. In 1859, after passing the veils in the Royal Arch degree, he elaborated TRUTH before King Darius, and shortly afterwards passed through the solemn and impressive ceremonies of the Templar degree. Then commenced his rapid advancement from Warder to Prelate, Capt. General, and Commander of Apollo Commandery No. 1, in December, 1862. In 1864 the Grand Commandery elevated him to the station of Grand Generalissimo, and while in a second term of service as Commander of No. 1, in 1867, he was elected Grand Commander. It is conceded by all, we believe, that as a correct, orderly, and impressive workman he is not excelled, and it is rare that any one can preside over so large and talented a body as Apollo Commandery, and preserve and maintain such unvarying unity and order, and inspire such unqualified respect and affection, as characterized the administration of M. E. Sir. V. L. Hurlbut. He governed himself. Careful and deliberate, prudent and just, he ruled more by his example and patience than by his authority. The same was true as Grand Commander. Yet, when necessary, he was inflexible, and to command was to be obeyed.

When the triennial sessions were held last October, in St. Louis, Apollo, assisted by Chicago Commandery, furnished him a royal escort. Our readers are referred to his own account of it, in his address, published in THE TROWEL of last November. It is enough to say that Sir Kt. Gurney, the Commander, aided and abetted by Apollo and Chicago Commanderies entire, began, carried forward, and ended the escort from Chicago to St. Louis and back in true Chicago style, and in a manner honorable to the Grand Commandery of Illinois.

Not having official data at hand, we do not know when Bro. Hurlbut received the degrees of the Scottish Rite. It must have been as long since as 1861, or '2, for soon after that he was presiding over Illinois Council Princes of Jerusalem. This important position fell to his lot for several years. He now presides over Occidental Consistory, perhaps the largest, and for a long time the only consistory west of Ohio. In this department of Masonry he is even more at home than in the Templar bodies. As a presiding judge, we do not think he can be excelled.

In May, 1865, we were side by side in the 33d degree—a circumstance that neither of us will forget. The same year he was elected principal Deputy of the Grand Consistory of the Northern Jurisdiction, and is now an active 33d. How far he may conclude to go hereafter, the future will disclose. If zeal, ability, and rare good sense, with scholarly attainments, are to have proper influence, he will yet—for he is still young—preside over Scottish Masonry in this jurisdiction. He has the good wishes of all who know him, for his future prosperity and a long life fragrant with good deeds and active usefulness.

Communications.

Council of Deliberation, A. & A. Scottish Rite.

In accordance with and pursuant to Art. 25 of the Constitution of 1867, of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite for the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States of America, and at the notification of Sov. G. Insp. Gen., Walter A. Stevens, 33°, Deputy for the District of Illinois, the following illustrious brethren were present in Blair Hall, Chicago, Ill., on the 26th of the Hebrew month Nisan, 5629, answering to the 7th of April, 1869:

Walter A. Stevens, 33°, Deputy; Robert H. Foss, 33°; Vincent L. Hurlbut, 33°; Harman G. Reynolds, 33°; James H. Field, 33°; Gilbert R. Smith, 33°; Henry C. Ranney, 33°; Enoch B. Stevens, 33°; Wm. H. Gale, 33°; George W. Pettee, 33°; Eugene B. Myers, 32°; John D. M. Carr, 32°; J. W. Brewer, 32°; L. A. Jerome, 32°; Wiley M. Egan, 32°; J. Ward Ellis, 32°; A. H. Swain, 32°; J. W. Smull, 32°; L. L. Munn, 32°; A. C. Millard, 32°; Spencer Dewey, 32°; James Hill, 32°; T. T. Gurney, 32°; Gerard Dunning, 32; W. C. Bake, 32°; J. S. Carr, 32°.

At 10 o'clock A. M., Ill. Bro. Walter A. Stevens, Deputy of the District, called the meeting to order as a "Council of Deliberation of the District," and appointed Warren G. Purdy, 32°, as Secretary of the Council.

On motion of Ill. Bro. E. B. Stevens, 33°, a committee on credentials, consisting of Breth. W. H. Gale, 33°, V. L. Hurlbut, 33°, J. H. Field, 33°, was appointed. The report of the committee was received and adopted.

The Illustrious Deputy then delivered the following address:

Peers and Ill. Brethren of the A. and A. S. R. for the District of Illinois:

The Constitutions for 1867, Art. 25, makes it obligatory on the Deputy to summon all those who have received the grade of 33° and the chiefs of all the bodies in his district to assemble as a Council of Deliberation, in the months of November or December. I labored under the impression that at the last session of the Supreme Council, the time was extended to the first of May; but in the printed proceedings of last year I find no such resolutions or amendment to the Constitutions. Secondly, I had desired that we should have the printed proceedings before we should assemble. Yet, had I not been positive in my own mind, that the time had been extended, I should have summoned you in the months mentioned, and it was not until after I had issued the summons for this meeting that I discovered that there was no such provisions printed with the proceedings.

This being our first Council of Deliberation, in accordance with the Constitutions of 1867 (save the time mentioned), owing to none being called by the previous Deputy, Peer, and brother, H. A. Johnson, 33°, who, with other members of the Supreme Council in this District, thought it not advisable to call one last year, and by permission from the Sovereign Grand Commander, it was omitted.

I regret that, at this first assembly of the Peers and Illustrious Chiefs of the A. and A. R. bodies of this district, that he is not permitted to participate with us, owing to his absence in Europe, where his family are, and where the illness of one of his children seemed to demand his personal attention.

The duties of a Council of Deliberation are not specifically defined by the Constitutions, but giving it, I might say, unlimited action as to the subjects that may be brought before it, in relation to the A. and A. Rite.

I desire that the consultations and deliberations of this council shall be mutual on all matters that may be brought before it of interest to the rite.

I indulge in the hope that you will inaugurate such measures as will be promotive of harmony, and excite emulation among the different bodies of the rite in this district, of "who can best work."

It is my wish that the matter of territorial jurisdiction should be clearly defined, for I find already dissatisfaction and trouble arising from concurrent jurisdiction. It would be well to inaugurate some regulation that the contingent expenses of these councils, if not mileage to its representatives, might be paid, so that all the bodies of the rite may know on what financial basis these councils are to be held.

I would also ask your consideration and the expression of your views as to the establishing of some district legislative organization over the subordinate bodies of this rite, by representatives from each.

I close with the hope that this our first council will be one in which mutual acquaintance among the different representatives may strengthen the bond of friendship and fraternal union, and be a stepping stone towards making this rite such that those who come after us, to fill the places we now occupy, will say we acted well our part in diffusing ineffable Masonic light.

Your presence on this occasion demonstrates your willingness to bear your portion of the burden; and I give you each a cordial welcome.

Ill. Bro. Hurlbut moved that the address of the Deputy be referred to a special committee, for recommendation on the different subjects contained therein.

The motion was adopted, and the Deputy appointed Ill. Breth. A. H. Swain, H. G. Reynolds, and A. C. Millard as such committee.

The Council then adjourned until 2.30 o'clock P. M.

At 2.30 P. M. the Council convened pursuant to adjournment.

The Committee on Address of Deputy made the following report:

To the Ill. Deputy and Council of Deliberation now assembled:

On the address of the Ill. Deputy, your committee beg leave to make the following report:

1st. We recommend that the call of this meeting be approved.

2d. Resolved, That the thanks of this Council of Deliberation are due to Ill. Deputy W. A. Stevens, 33°, and that the matter contained in his address be approved. And that that part of the address relating to matter of jurisdiction be referred to a committee of three.

3d. That the part relating to contingent expenses and mileage, be referred to a committee of three.

All of which is most respectfully submitted.

H. G. Reynolds,
A. H. Swain,
A. C. Millard,
Committee.

Chicago, April 7, 1869.

The report was, on motion, adopted, and the Deputy appointed the following committees, viz.:

On Jurisdiction.—Ill. Breth. G. R. Smith, J. W. Brewer, and L. R. Jerome.

On Contingent Expenses and Mileage.—Ill. Breth. H. G. Reynolds, A. H. Swain, S. Dewey.

The Committee on Credentials reported the following members present and entitled to seats in the Council, in addition to those present at the morning session:

D. W. Thompson, 33°; J. C. Gurner, 32°; G. W. Barnard, 32°; E. B. Gilbert, 32°; S. O. Vaughan, 32°.

The Committee on Expense and Mileage then offered the following report:

To the Ill. Deputy and Council of Deliberation now assembled:

The committee to whom was referred the matter of expenses and mileage and per diem, would fraternally beg leave to report that the Constitution of Councils of Deliberations is a sufficient grant of power to provide for its own necessities.

They would, therefore, recommend, that each Lodge of Perfection be required to pay to the Ill. Deputy twenty-five cents for each one of its members annually (including the past year), to defray necessary expenses.

Your committee are of the opinion that this Council has no jurisdiction over the matter of mileage and per diem, and would fraternally recommend that each body entitled to be represented in this Council make suitable provision for a proper representation.

All of which is fraternally submitted.

H. G. Reynolds,
A. H. Swain,
Spencer Dewey,
Committee.

Chicago, April 7, 1869.

On motion, that portion of the report recommending assessment was laid on the table, and balance of the report adopted, and committee discharged.

On motion of Ill. Bro. H. G. Reynolds, it was resolved that this Council shall not incur the expense of printing its proceedings.

The Committee on Jurisdiction then offered the following report, which was received, and committee discharged:

To the Illustrious Deputy:

Your committee to whom was referred the matter of jurisdiction, would respectfully submit the following resolution for the deliberation of this Council:

G. R. Smith, 32°,
L. R. Jerome, 32°,
J. W. Brewer, 32°,
Committee.

Resolved, That this Council of Deliberation respectfully request the Supreme Council of Sov. Ins. Gen. 33°, of the Northern Jurisdiction, to define the jurisdiction of the several bodies of the Scottish Rite in this district.

Ill. Bro. H. G. Reynolds offered the following resolution, as a substitute for the resolution offered by the Committee on Jurisdiction:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to draft rules for the government of "Councils of Deliberation" in this State, and to define what shall be territorial jurisdiction. To make report at the next meeting of this body.

Adopted.

The Deputy appointed as such committee, Ill. Breth. H. G. Reynolds, Jas. H. Field, A. H. Swain, E. B. Stevens, and L. R. Jerome.

Ill. Bro. H. G. Reynolds offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the territorial jurisdiction of the bodies of the A. & A. S. R. ought to be the same territorial jurisdiction as in symbolic lodges.

Adopted.

Ill. Bro. A. C. Millard offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bodies of the A. & A. S. R. of Illinois be governed, in territorial jurisdiction, in the same manner as symbolic lodges are governed, until the Committee on Territorial Jurisdiction shall have reported.

Adopted.

Ill. Bro. W. H. Gale offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That all rejections of applicants for degrees in the A. & A. S. R. in this district be reported by the heads of the bodies where such rejections occur to the heads of all other bodies of the same grade in this district.

Adopted.

Ill. Bro. H. G. Reynolds offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Council of Deliberation be tendered to Blair Lodge No. 393, for the use of this hall, and to the Ill. brethren of Chicago for providing for the necessary expenses of this meeting.

Adopted.

On motion of Ill. Bro. J. W. Smull, thanks were tendered to the Illustrious Deputy for the very able manner in which he had presided over this Council of Deliberation.

There being no further business, the Ill. Dep., Bro. Walter A. Stevens, 33°, declared the Council of Deliberation closed.

Eastern Star.

Springfield, Ill., 17th April, '69.

To the Editor of the Trowel:

Esther, humbly greeting, begs leave to say a few words to your readers about the F. A. T. A. L. sisterhood, Order of the "Eastern Star," of which she is a member.

The F. A. T. A. L. Order of the Eastern Star, as is well known to the Fraternity, is simply an adoptive rite, or order, conferred by the Master Masons for the protection and benefit of their wives, daughters, and sisters; the de-ments of their faith; and so long as they thus grees entitling the initiated to a recognition and protection by the Fraternity, wherever she may be.

It is known to all the world that there is no obligation more inviolable or sacred than the obligations of the Masons, whose ancient rites have been observed, and whose ancient mysteries preserved, through days of weakness, trial, and darkness, until those trials have passed; and now they stand, a wonder and mystery to the world at large; still observing the mysteries of the Craft, increasing in numbers and strength, with the same obligation—given hundreds of years ago—still inviolate.

We are not a body of strong-minded women, looking to the attainment of the ballot-box and the polls, that our voices may be heard in the national assemblies; wearing the gauntlet, ready to hurl it in the faces of our rulers who sit in the nation's high places! We are a dependent body—affiliating with the Order by permission and certificate from our own kindred. We take our obligations solemnly; our lodges are conducted with dignity, though our presiding officers are ladies; and the work of the Order is pleasing, beautiful, exemplary, and instructive.

Dependent upon our kindred for the honor of affiliation, we strive so to deport ourselves at home and abroad that we may be reckoned worthy, in our own proper persons, of the honors conferred by the Order.

The benefits accruing to us by the ties of the Order are not a knowledge of the hidden mysteries of the Craftsmen, or any forbidden knowledge, but the recognition of our kinship with them, and our adoption and protection by them.

In our own chapter, Miriam Chapter No. 1, of Chicago, and all lodges of the Order, we have a fund, if misfortune disable us, from which we can be pecuniarily benefited. If we are ill, we are not left to stranger hand, but our sisters come, faithful to their kinship, as though of one blood, and attend us. Should we be called to God, our sisters will soothe our latest moments; their hands prepare us for the grave; and they will bury us, holding a Chapter of Sorrow to our memory.

We work on faithfully for the interests of our Order, hoping that when we are fully known, and our work appreciated, we shall have the distinguished honor of a more general recognition. "ESTHER."

Of the F. A. T. A. L. Sisterhood, Order of the Eastern Star, Adoptive Rite of Fremasonry, Miriam Chapter No. 1, of Chicago, Illinois.

Masonic Charity.

BY IOWA CITY.

Of the many beautiful lessons which are imparted to the candidate seeking light in masonry, none are more beautiful or important than some of those taught in the third section of the E. A. degree. We would that all Masons practiced these lessons, in accordance with the principles which they inculcate. The lesson in which the theological ladder is introduced, that Jacob in vision saw extending from earth to heaven, imparts teachings which certainly are not among the least of the great principles of Masonry.

The three principal rounds of the ladder are, denominated "Faith, Hope, and Charity; * * * the greatest of these is Charity; for our faith will be lost in sight, hope ends in fruition the boundless realms of eternity." Charity has more than one signification to the Mason: "To contribute to the relief of poor distressed brother Master Masons, their widows and orphans," is certainly one very important branch of Masonic charity. There is, however, another branch equally important, but we fear far more neglected, viz.: "Charity towards all mankind, more especially a brother Mason." To carry with us in our every day life the same feelings and spirit which inspire every true Mason while standing upon the chequered floor.

How sad is the heart of a true Mason, when he hears one brother revile another upon the public highway, in the street, or business house.

Does not such brother know that every word spoken, or deed done, to the injury of a brother Mason, is so much said and done to the injury of the entire Fraternity; that he is doing more to pull down our Institution than all that can be done by Blanchard, Finney & Co.

If our brother steps aside from duty and falls into by and forbidden paths, true Masonic Charity teaches us to whisper good counsel in his ear, and in the most tender manner remind him of his faults, and endeavor to aid in his reformation. So long as he remains a brother among us, let us cover his faults with the broad mantle of Charity; go to him as to one of our own flesh and blood, take him by the hand, and endeavor to lead him back into the path of duty. Thus our brother may be reclaimed, saved to society, and Masonry honored.

There is one place, especially, where Masons frequently forget the solemnity of their obligations, and fail to practice Charity, viz., in the political arena.

While we utterly denounce the introduction of politics into Masonry, we do hold that Masonry should be so far interwoven with politics as to enable us to treat our brethren of opposite political faith as brethren, and not to publicly malign their character, endeavor to injure them morally as well as politically, by giving our assent and aid to every little slander that may be going the rounds against them.

We do not advocate that Masons should support each other for office simply because they are Masons; but when a brother Mason is a candidate upon a platform which we can not conscientiously endorse, let us direct our opposition wholly and entirely to the platform, and not to the brother who is standing upon it. His views and ours differ honestly; let him enjoy his rights as we enjoy ours. Let us still preserve his character untarnished, and while we cast our vote against him, let it be done in such a way as to show to the world that is not our brother we oppose, but the principles of the party with which he is united. How common it is that, so soon as a man is put before the public as a candidate for office, some wiseacre suddenly makes the discovery that there is a great flaw in his moral character; this is published to others, handed from one to another, until a "mountain is made of a mole-hill;" the individual's character receives a blow from which he rarely ever recovers.

We are sorry to say that Masons are sometimes guilty of thus dealing with their brethren, thereby forgetting that they "should vindicate a brother's character when wrongfully traduced." Masons should agree to disagree, and permit the principles of true Charity ever to actuate them in all their deeds and words toward each other—should ever be living ornaact, Blanchard may utter his execrations, Finney may breathe out his anathemas, the "Cynosure" may herald its "weakly" "cantations," but MASONRY will live and flourish as the almond tree, receive the blessings of the G. A. O. T. U., in whom we all put our trust, and need nothing but its own works to defend its fair name.

PEORIA, Ill., April 9, 1869.

H. G. Reynolds, Grand Master:

I suppose I ought to commence by apologizing for taking up your time reading the following; but from long acquaintance, believing that you take an interest in matters pertaining to lodges and the influence of Masonry, I have thought best to write a word or two on a very pleasant meeting we had last evening.

About four months ago the brethren resolved to have a course of lectures on the teachings and moral tendency of Masonry. A committee was appointed for the purpose, and among the distinguished brethren selected as lecturers was the Hon. Bro. Newton Bateman, of your city. He favored us with a visit last evening, and was escorted to the hall, where a large assemblage awaited him.

On being formally introduced, he proceeded at once to deliver a truly interesting address, replete with Masonic instruction, and clothed in beautiful language. None but Masons were admitted, though many thought it would have been a good thing if the "profane," so called, had also been admitted. At the conclusion, a vote of thanks, by all rising, was tendered to our worthy brother. All went away highly pleased, and speaking in the highest terms of the address. We were sorry our Hon. brother could not stay in our city a few days, but his business compelled him to leave this morning on the 8 o'clock train.

We have also been instructed and entertained by lectures before this, delivered by Rev. Bro. R. H. Pullmer and Rev. Bro. W. H. Roberts. Other lectures will be delivered in due course.

Fratornally,

L. KEYON,

Sec. Peoria Lodge No. 15.

Take Notice.

HALL OF CANYON CITY LODGE No. 34, A. F. & A. M.,
CANYON CITY, Grant Co., Oregon,
March 31st, 1869.,

Harman G. Reynolds, Esq., G. Master, Illinois.

DEAR SIR AND BRO.—On the 2nd day of March, 1869, G. W. or W. L. Britton was killed accidentally in a mining claim under the following circumstances: The ground was removed by means of a water-power derrick, and deceased was employed in filling up large tubs for the purpose of hoisting it out. When one of the tubs was about 15 feet above him, the ropes broke; the tub knocked him down and fell on him, crushing him in a fearful manner and causing his death in two hours afterwards. After his death, it was rumored that deceased was a brother Mason, but nothing definite being known, he was not buried by the Fraternity, but the brethren generally turned out in private. At our last stated communication a brother who lives out of town stated that he had examined the deceased and found him to be a Master Mason; deceased told him that he was a member of Benton Lodge No. 64, Illinois, whereon a committee was appointed to further investigate the matter, reimburse the persons who paid funeral expenses, and the Secretary was instructed to communibut charity extends beyond the grave, through cate with Benton Lodge; not knowing where said lodge is situated I deemed it proper to forward the within statement to you, feeling certain that if deceased was a member in your jurisdiction that the proper steps will be taken. Deceased had been here since about October, 1868, but left no papers, or any thing wherefrom might have been discovered his home, but he told some one that he had a wife and three or four children in Illinois.

The funeral expenses so far as assertained were seventy dollars in coin .

I remain yours fraternally,
PHIL. METSCHAN, Secretary.

Presentation.

The brethren of A. W. Rawson Lodge No. 145, A., F. and A. Masons, gave Bro. D. A. Stitsel a pleasant surprise, at their lodge-room, in Pecatonica, Ill., on the evening of April 12, by making him the recipient of an elegant silver pitcher and goblets. On the pitcher were beautifully engraved the words, "Presented to Bro. D. A. Stitsel, by the brethren of A. W. Rawson Lodge, 145, A., F. and A. M., Pecatonica, Ill., April 12, 1869." On goblets, "Ad. and Nellie."

Bro. Stitsel, by election, has served twelve successive years as Secretary of A. W. Rawson Lodge, with honor to the "Order" and great credit to himself.

He has since removed to Gilman, Ill., where he intends engaging in business.

Bro. Stitsel is a man of rare business qualifications, a true friend, good neighbor, an honest, upright man, and worthy the confidence of brethren and business men.

May the blessings of a kind Providence protect and cheer him, and kind friends greet him in his new home, is the ardent prayer of a brother and friend. MIFF.

PECATONICA, April 14, 1869.

Alabama.

The last session of the Grand Chapter was held at Montgomery, Dec. 8, 1868. M. E. Peleg Brown, presided. Representatives were present from fifty-three chapters.

We copy the following from the address:

> In September last it was my privilege to be present in the city of St. Louis during the triennial convocation of the General Grand Chapter of the United States; but owing to a resolution adopted by our Grand Chapter in 1861, tending to sever our connection with the General Grand Chapter, I could not take my seat as a member, but met with the most cordial reception, and was fraternally invited to be present during the deliberations, and availed myself of the privilege, and was present during two of their sessions, at which time that which most interests us came up for consideration.
>
> The difficulty between the Grand Chapters of Maryland and the District of Columbia was finally settled, and the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia recognized as a regular Grand Chapter; also Potomac Chapter No. 8, which refused their allegiance to the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia, was recognized as a regular chapter subordinate to the General Grand Chapter of the United States, but without territorial jurisdiction over candidates for the capitular degrees. These bodies our Grand Chapter can now, without hesitation, most cheerfully welcome, and fraternally extend to them the right hand of fellowship.
>
> Also a preamble and resolutions were there unanimously adopted, by which it was resolved "that the several Grand Chapters that had passed resolutions tending to sever their connection with the general grand body (of which ours is one), were constituent portions of the General Grand Chapter, and had no right to sever their connection without consent, and that a fraternal correspondence be opened with each of them, urging a return to their allegiance.
>
> This matter, companions, deserves your serious and careful consideration. In tracing the history of the General Grand Chapter from its first organization, I can find nothing in its constitution (and which has been several times revised), neither any edict or resolution, that at all conflicts, or is oppressive to the interests of any of the subordinates, each of which being independent sovereignties within themselves for the regulation of their own affairs—her mission being to promote the general interest and welfare of capitular Masonry throughout our Union, taking under her control all territory where no Grand Chapter exists, and having appellate jurisdiction over such decisions and difficulties as may be submitted to it by the subordinates, and whose decision shall be final.
>
> The history of our own Grand Chapter I have not been able to trace as clearly as I desire, but from what is left upon the records of the General Grand Chapter, it is evident that we are indebted to that body for our own existence; and when an attempt was made in 1826 to dissolve the general grand body, Alabama was represented, and voted against that measure. And now, in view of all these facts and other considerations, I feel it my duty to advise this grand body to rescind the resolution adopted in 1861.
>
> With these thoughts, I leave the matter to your wise consideration, firmly believing, as I do, that the only power existing to dissolve the general grand body exists in the majority of the State Grand Chapters composing the same.

The G. H. P. rendered decisions to the following effect: that substitutes are inadmissible; that it is unlawful to receive a petition without the fee; that a candidate rejected should wait twelve months before petitioning again; that a suspension in a symbolic lodge is a suspension in a chapter; that an appeal to the chapter from the decision of the High Priest is not allowable; and that a sojourning companion may be tried in the chapter in the jurisdiction of which he resides.

The following case was brought before the Grand Chapter:

> I desire to call your attention to the situation o our excellent Companion, James Penn, who for so many years was one of the brightest lights of our Fraternity. His great services to the Order, and his present helpless and dependent condition, make a powerful appeal alike to our sense of justice and Masonic charity.
>
> He has for several years been prostrate and helpless as a child from several paralytic strokes. He is entirely dependent upon his daughters; one of them, a young, handsome, and accomplished lady, has, in the most noble spirit of filial devotion, given up society altogether to devote herself entirely to the care of her father, who, helpless as an infant, requires her constant care. The other, a widow, is nobly devoting the whole of her moderate salary as teacher to the support of her father and sister. This, after paying the board of the three, leaves nothing for their other wants.

The Grand Chapter contributed two hundred and fifty dollars.

The Grand Chapter at Washington was recognized. A beautiful jewel was presented to Past Grand High Priest Geo. H. Norris.

Grand Council—Meeting at Montgomery, December 9. George D. Norris, presiding. The following beautiful thought we take from the address:

> As symbolic Masonry forms the foundation of the Institution, so cryptic Masonry is the apex. It is not until we arrive here that we can look abroad over the whole field, and view its heights and depths, its length and breadth. It is not until we stand here that we can view the tall, and stately, and majestic column erected by those who have gone before us; and while we wonder, we are also compelled to admire its admirable proportions, its curious architecture, its superb finish. While at its base we grieved over what we supposed had been irrevocably lost; at mid-height we rejoiced over the invaluable treasure which had been exhumed from its solid foundations; and here, and here only, we learn by whose care, and by what forethought, and by what means, that treasure had been preserved. Here, the blue and the scarlet are interwoven into the royal purple; and while the first forms an enduring foundation upon which to erect our moral and Masonic edifice, the last floats in lofty grandeur around our heads. I know not, companions, what you and others may think of cryptic Masonry, but it has always seemed to me that it displays a breadth of thought, and wisdom, and beauty, rarely excelled; and as the mighty Andes, filled up and projected towards the heavens by the everlasting granite, would be incomplete without the huge caps which shoot into the clouds, so Masonry would lack its crowning glory without these council degrees.

The Committee on Foreign Correspondence allude to the tribute paid to the memory of Michael J. Noyes and Jonathan Young, accompanied by the following stinging remarks:

> We take it for granted that these are honest expressions, and not the mere casting of the mantle of charity over the remains of our companions. We take it for granted that they deserve all that is said of them, and they really were eminent as Masons, and sincerely loved and respected for their virtues, and so are properly held up as beacons to guide the footsteps of those who are following after them; for if it were otherwise, it was to little purpose that their days were lengthened out to upwards of three-score years and ten. We wish as much could be said of more of the companions who are daily falling around us. But we are constantly wondering why some men ever became Masons. With many who become members of the legislature, or of congress, or of other deliberative bodies, the motive is apparent. Their "per diem," or their "per annum," is sure so long as the treasury holds out, and it is certain to find its way into their pockets whether they earn it or not. But with Masonry it is different. None can hope to reap the rewards of the love and esteem of their companions,the reflections consequent upon a well-spent life, and the consciousness of having made some attainments in Masonry, without long years of toil and struggle, of earnest application, of severe labor, of meditation, of study, and thought. And yet thousands are annually joining the "mystic crew," with whom Masonry is but a pastime, an amusement, or that which presents occasions for conviviality. These, when the freshness of the thing is worn off; when the sharp edge of appetite is blunted and dulled; and the novelty is passed away, but seldom enter our doors. They become "rusty," as they express it, and they are seldom seen in our assemblies. They profess great love and regard for Masonry, but they are too busy to cultivate it. As if there would be any good sense in a man's buying a field and planting it out with a variety of fruits and vines, and then suffering the weeds to grow up and choke them to death! But that is the very thing that many are daily doing in Masonry. They become nominally Masons; for years their names are upon the lodge-roll, and annual dues are paid for them to the grand lodge. But at last they die and go we know not whither, and their names are no more remembered among Masons. But what is the use of moralizing? It is the way of many among Masons as it is of others, and will be to the end of time.

Joseph H. Johnson, Grand Puissant; J. M. Dedman, Deputy; R. H. Irvin, G. T. I.; G. T. Deason, G. P. C. W.; W. E. Beaird, G. C. G.; E. M. Hastings, G. Treas.; Daniel Sayre, Montgomery, Grand Recorder; Rev. E. V. Le Vert, G. Chap.; M. D. Moore, G. S.; James Davidson, G. Tyler.

California.

The Grand Chapter met at San Francisco, Oct. 19. Isaac Sutvene Titus, Grand High Priest.

His notice of the convocation at St. Louis is short, and no allusion is made to the festivities or receptions, whatever. Comp. Owen, Grand Secretary, presented the report on correspondence. In the notice of Illinois, he says we are mistaken in our statement that the Grand Chapter of California had decided that a High Priest, King, or Scribe could not demit.

The death of Henry Hare Hartley, P. G. H. P., was appropriately noticed.

OFFICERS:—John W. Harville, G. H. P.; Geo. T. Grimes, Deputy; Jas. L. English, Grand K.; J. H. Neff, G. S.; E. W. Bourne, G. Tr.; Lawrence C. Owen, San Francisco, Grand Secretary; Stephen Wing, G. C. H.; Jos. Isaacs, G. R. A. Capt.; Ira C. Root, G. Guard; Thos. H. Caswell, G. Lecturer.

There are thirty-six chapters in the Golden State, with 1,546 members; average, 43. The two in San Francisco have 290 members. Lafayette Chapter, alone, in Chicago, has 299 members, while Lafayette, Washington, and Corinthian have 685 members.

No proceedings come to us in better style than those of California.

District of Columbia.

Grand Lodge.—There are sixteen lodges in the District. In November, 1868, B. B. French, after many years retiracy, was called again to the post of Grand Master. A special meeting was held March 18, 1868, occasioned by the death of Past Grand Master Wm. M. Ellis. On the following day the remains were buried.

April 9, Grand Lodge attended the unveiling and dedication of the statue of President Lincoln; April 14, the Grand Lodge laid the corner stone of the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church.

The semi-annual communication was held May 5: the Grand Master discussed matters of controversy with Maine and Rhode Island.

May 20, the Grand Lodge laid the corner-stone of the new Masonic Temple; among the articles deposited is The Trowel. The proceedings were full and interesting. Past Grand Master Bromwell delivered the oration; it had a wide circulation at the time.

August 4, Grand Lodge laid the corner-stone of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The annuál communication held Nov. 3.

Grand Master French alludes to his Grand Mastership in the following characteristic style:

> That year having passed away, I now, in accordance with my then avowed intention, announce to the Grand Lodge my determination not to be considered a candidate for re-election. And in doing this, I take the liberty to say, that I do not believe any individual Freemason has been more highly honored than I have by the brethren of this jurisdiction; and for the confidence they have reposed in me for so many years, for the kindness they have ever manifested toward me, for the respect they have always exhibited, and for the brotherly love they have ever bestowed upon me, they have my sincere gratitude, and the warm thanks of my heart.
>
> My feelings of thankfulness, kindness, and affection toward them all, will go down with me to my grave, and will live, I hope and believe, as long as the immortal spirit, implanted in this earthly tenement, shall exist.
>
> Thanks—thanks—thanks—my brethren, to you all. And may the God of Heaven bless, prosper, and protect you.
>
> For the year past I have endeavored to perform every duty that has devolved upon me as your Grand Master. I have made some decisions, which I will not occupy your time by detailing here. All of any importance will be found upon my official letter book, which, immediately after the installation of the brother whom you may think proper to charge with the high and important duties of your Grand Master, will be placed in the archives of the Grand Lodge, where reference can, should it be desirable, always be made to it.

The installation communication was held December 28.

Our Illinois brethren will read the following with unalloyed pleasure:

Bro. Searle, from special committee, submitted the following report, which was accepted and adopted:

> The Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the District of Columbia, to the Most Worshipful Bro. H. P. H. Bromwell, Past Grand Master of Masons of the State of Illinois, greeting, in resolutions of thanks:
>
> Resolved, As the sense of this Grand Lodge, that the oration of Most Worshipful Bro. Bromwell, delivered on the occasion of the laying of the corner-stone of our Masonic Temple, on the 20th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1868, and A. L. 5868, is replete with learning and research into historic and symbolic Masonry; and that the truths which are symbolized by the quadrangle, and those which are represented by the triune, the sublime things symbolized by the square, and the most sublime symbolizal by the triangle, are displayed in living light; while the Divine Order is proclaimed triumphant and universal, to the glory of the Grand Architect of the Universe.
>
> Resolved, That the thanks of this Grand Lodge are hereby tendered to Most Worshipful Bro. Bromwell for his noble and masterly oration; and that, when the temple, whose corner-stone was laid under such auspices, is completed, its length and breadth and height may be equal, and the gronnd floor thereof from the east to the west between the north and the south, may receive in fraternal chain all who may be found worthy, when the Lion of the tribe of Judah shall recognize his own.
>
> Resolved, That these resolutions be suitably engrossed and framed, and transmitted under the seal of this Grand Lodge and the sign-manual of the Grand Master, countersigned by the Grand Secretary.

The grand officers were installed as follows: R. B. Donaldson, Grand Master; J. B. Will, Deputy; J. B. Russell, S. G. W; W. H. Orcutt, J. G. W; Noble D. Larner, 71 Louisiana Avenue, Grand Secretary; C. Cammack, Sr., Grand Treasurer; D. B. Searle, Grand Visitor and Lecturer; Rev. W. V. Tudor, Grand Chaplain; J. T. Powell, Grand Marshal; T. B. Campbell, S. G. D.; J. H. Mills, J. G. D.; G. B. Clark, G. Sw. B.; J. Vermilion, G. Pur.; C. H. Moulton, W. Merts, Grand Stewards; L. Stoddard, Jr., G. Tyler.

The sixteen lodges have 2,290 members; average, 143.

Indiana.

Grand Commandery.—The annual conclave of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of that State closed yesterday. The following officers were elected to serve during the ensuing year:

Thomas Newby, of Cambridge City, M. E. Grand Commander; David P. Wheedon, of Fort Wayne, R. E. Dep. G. Com.; Thomas Pattison, of Aurora, G. Gen.; Elbridge G. Hamilton, of Laporte, G. Capt. Gen.; Chas. Fisher, of Indianapolis, G. Treas.; John M. Bramwell, of Indianapolis, G. Rec.; Rev. Thos. H. Lynch, of Brookville, G. Prel.; Geo. A. Johnson, of Cambridge City, S. G. W.; Geo. V. Howk, of New Albany, J. G. W.; Geo. H. Fish, of Evansville, G. St. B.; Charles Cruft, of Terre Haute, G. Sw. B.; W. F. Cushing, of South Bend, G. Warder; Wm. W. Black, of Indianapolis, G. C. G.

Charters for the following new commanderies were directed to be issued:

Aurora, Muncie, Apollo, at Kendallville and Vincennes.

After the installation of the new officers, the Grand Commandery was closed with full and appropriate ceremonies in due and solemn form.

Kansas.

The Proceedings of the Grand Lodge are at hand. The meeting was at Lawrence, Oct. 20. M. W. Bro. M. S. Adams, of High Prairie, in the chair. Forty-eight lodges were represented. Among them we notice J. W. Campion, of Topeka, formerly of Lincoln in this State, and John H. Brown, Past Grand H. Priest of Iowa, now Grand Master. We think there are several others whom we have formerly known, but are not certain.

The following extract from the address of the Grand Master is full of meaning:

> The question of the jurisdiction of lodges over rejected candidates seems to be disturbing the harmony of the Order, and every year demonstrates more clearly to my mind the necessity of a uniform rule and practice throughout the United States. Several instances have come to my knowledge, where citizens of this State, while temporarily sojourning within the jurisdiction of a sister Grand Lodge, have been made Masons by a subordinate lodge; and in one instance, a gentleman residing in this State, who had been rejected as a candidate for the degrees of Masonry by a lodge under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge, after an absence of about two months, returned home, having been made a Master Mason in Lafayette Lodge No. 16, Michigan; and that, too, as he informs the brethren here, by a dispensation from the Grand Master of that State. I hold the correct rule to be, that candidates rejected in another State can not legally be made Masons in this State, without the consent of the proper authorities where the rejection occurred. According to some of the old constitutions, no lodge could "initiate into the mysteries of the Craft any person whomsoever, without being satisfied, by test or otherwise, that the candidate has not made application to any other lodge and been rejected." In my judgment, before the candidate for the mysteries of Masonry is admitted into the lodge, he should satisfy the brethren, by a declaration made on his honor as a man, that he has never made application to any other lodge for the degrees of Masonry and been rejected; or, if rejected, the consent of the lodge so rejecting should always be obtained before the degrees are conferred.

We have just now had an application for a dispensation to confer degrees on a worthy gentleman, who would be cordially elected in one of our lodges in this State, where he long resided, and where he married, but he is an officer under the general government, and resides in another State; we declined granting a dispensation upon the ground of want of jurisdiction.

The following reports from the Committee on the condition of Masonry are good law in Illinois as well as in Kansas:

> "When a brother has been suspended for non-payment of dues, has he a right to visit a lodge?" And, "if he visits a lodge, and the Master appoints him as Senior Warden pro tem., knowing him to be a suspended Mason, what action should be taken?" beg leave to report that to the first question we answer, "No."
>
> To the second question, that the Master has a right, in the absence of any subordinate officer, to fill his place pro tem. with any Master Mason who may have a right to sit in the lodge. But when a Master of a lodge intentionally violates one of the clearest principles of Masonry, he should, in our opinion, be dealt with according to Masonic usage.
>
> "A subordinate lodge, during the absence of a member, received the petition of a candidate for the degrees of Masonry, which petition was duly referred to its appropriate committee. The committee reported favorably, a ballot was spread, the candidate elected, and the first degree conferred. On application of the candidate for the second degree, the member who was absent during the aforesaid proceedings, being present, objected to the advancement of the candidate, and preferred charges against him, which charges being heard, the candidate was unanimously acquitted. The member then filed his written protest with the Secretary against a further adancement of the candidate, without giving a reason.
>
> "First Query.—Can the lodge advance the candidate?
>
> "Second Query.—Does a brother's protest against a brother's advancement stand good during his absence from meetings?"
>
> Beg leave to report, that to the first query they answer, "No."
>
> To the second query they answer, "Yes."

We fraternally suggest to our Kansas brethren that the standing regulations of 1862 and 1863 need revision, so as to make them conform to the law.

Kansas has seventy-one lodges upon her roll, and 2,645 members, being an average of thirty-seven to a lodge.

The Grand Lodge was organized in 1856; Richard R. Rees was elected Grand Master four times; G. H. Fairchild, once; Jacob Saqui, five times; M. S. Adams, twice. C. T. Harrison was Grand Secretary one term; Charles Mundee, four; and E. T. Carr is in his eighth year.

John H. Brown, Leavenworth, is Grand Master; E. A. Smith, Deputy; C. C. Kellam, S. G. W.; G. W. Hageboom, J. G. W.; Christian Beck, for the eleventh time, Grand Treasurer; E. T. Carr, Leavenworth, Grand Secretary.

New York.

Grand Commandery.—Grand Conclave in New York City, Oct. 5, John A. Lefferts, Grand Commander. It seems as though the descriptions of the festive and fraternal scenes at St. Louis will never end. Hear Sir Knight Lefferts:

> We have all read, in the romances of the olden days, of the grand banquets, where kings, princes, and knights ate from golden dishes and drank from golden cups; when the forests of the earth and the waters of the ocean were made to yield their choicest gifts; when song and jest made the rafters ring with joy and mirth, with stories of love and deeds of valor won. All these, described by master minds, have often caused us to wonder if we should know the olden time, or that it could come again in our day.
>
> Yes; the dream has been realized in St. Louis. For here were banquets fit for the noblest of earth; here were boards groaning under a wealth of viands, that even the eye of a Lucullus might have envied. Mountain, river, and plain furnished their luxuries. The goddess Flora poured forth her wealth in flowers of brightest hue and sweetest pérfume. Here were rare fruits and rarer wines of every clime, with art to embellish and adorn the gifts that nature so profusely supplied. Lavish expenditure and unbounded hospitality met us on every hand.
>
> Such, feebly portrayed, was the grand picture presented at St. Louis, a city that a few years ago was considered an outpost of our civilization; the starting-point of those who went out on the trackless plains lying between them and the Rocky Mounains. But now the iron rail, the luxurious car, and the scream of the steam-whistle, are fast making their way to the vast slopes of the Pacific.
>
> I, with others, was invited to a little excursion (as they called it) to Omaha--a city of a few years' growth, but containing 12,000 inhabitants, a number equal to our city of Brooklyn after it had been settled fifty years. And yet, this new city has her commandery and her representatives at the grand conclave. Soon, very soon, will the vast plains beyond the great river be dotted over with cities like this. And when thus peopled, lodges, chapters, and commanderies, shall fill the length and breadth of the land. Who, then, shall fortell the destinies of our Order; who shall set the limits of its power, or who shall guide and control it to the honor of God and the profit of man?

Past Grand Commanders' jewels were presented to Past Grand Commanders Barnum, Lathrop, and Simons.

A new code of statutes and regulations was adopted. John W. Simons did up the correspondence in his own free and scholarly style. He thinks Illinois Sir Knights give credit for dues and fees. He is mistaken. Dr. Guilbert comes in for some notice. All right; when the Doctor talks, he expects you to talk back. True, he will get angry, but he can't hold malice, for we have tried him.

In commenting upon New Hampshire, the committee says:

> Sir Knight Barrett broaches a new and dangerous doctrine, when he says: "We think a man may well deny the divinity of our Saviour and yet be a good and consistent Christian, and conscientiously promise to draw his sword in defence of Christianity." We are at a loss to understand how a man can be a Christian and yet deny the very essence of the faith which rests on the divinity of its founder. We are, if possible, more at a loss to understand how one who has passed through our solemn ceremonies, and subscribed to our requirements, can allow himself to entertain any question on the subject. In every step of his progress the neophyte is reminded of our Lord and his sacrifice. On every hand he perceives the emblem of a crucified but risen Saviour, and under the sanction of all that men hold most sacred declares his intention to keep and perform his vows of Christian knighthood, which is to maintain the divinity of Christ and the supremacy of that faith, which without him could not exist. We trust that our friend will reconsider his opinion and wield his sword, as every Templar should, in defence of that faith which regards the only begotton Son as one with the Father.

Thirty-six commanderies; 4,094 members; average, 113.

OFFICERS.—John A. Lofferts, Grand Commander; H. C. Preston, Deputy; Geo. Babcock, G. G.; R. N. Brown, G. C. G.; F. L. Stowell, G. S. W.; W. B. Crandall, G. J. W.; John S. Perry, Grand Treasurer; Robert Macoy, 432 Broome St., New York, Grand Recorder; Mead Belden, G. St. B.; A. E. Lytle, G. Sw. B.; J. A. Reed, G. W.; J. B. Chaffee, G. Lecturer; John B. Hunter, G. Tyler.

◆

Priority of Built Structures to Rock-Cut Examples.

BY PICTUS.

In the Magazine for December 12th, 1868, page 471, Bro. A. O. Haye says,—"Pictus has rather startled me out of my propriety in saying that the rock-cut dwellings came up after the built-up edifices. I always thought the contrary, and that the steps were cave, rock-cut, and built up." This idea of Bro. Haye's I consider a mistake, and I may observe en passant that most ancient rock-cut examples were either tombs or temples, not "dwellings" (the houses being generally of a more temporary character); but, be that as it may, the question is—does the priority belong to "built-up" or "rock-cut?" and I most decidedly say that I believe in the existence of built structures long before any rock-cut examples could, or would, be executed; for, before men could hew rock, they would require suitable tools, &c., and the amount of knowledge and experience necessary to cut out a rock-cut tomb, temple, or dwelling, would show that considerable progress had already been made in the arts. But, if rock-cut examples were the earliest, where have they all gone to? And, as for early rock-cut "dwellings," where are they? They would not be liable, like wood, mud, or brick houses to quick decay. If there had been rock-cut "dwellings," before built structures, some of them would surely be extant to speak for themselves, but I know of none. The fact is, rock-cut examples would be, at one time, a new-fangled notion, introduced by somebody long after built structures had been in use. There is then the question of time, for, while the rock-cutting was going on, the men would have to be sheltered; but sheltered where? unless in wooden houses, or ones with earthen walls and wooden roofs, or bricks, or something similar, erected conveniently. As for caves, they would have to be discovered, and there would be considerable difficulty in finding them when and where they were required. However, let us see what history says about man's dwellings. The first is Gen., chap. 2, v. 8,—"And the Lord God planted a garden." This gives the idea of an enclosed place. After the fall they had coats of skins; from "coats" of skins the transition to "houses" of skins would be quite simple; a few branches of trees set up and covered with skins, and a house was formed, which would soon be improved upon. I reject the idea of Adam dwelling in a cave for any length of time (even suppose he had discovered one) for caves and dens of the earth were for animals; but Adam was a man—not such as can be found among the debased tribes of the earth—but a man who, although fallen, could yet remember the time when he held communion with the Great Creator of all. He would not, therefore, burrow in the earth like the beasts; but, as the Lord of the Earth, his dwelling would be above it. Caves, as the habitation of man, are only fit for, and would be only used by savages, men who have become debased, or by those seeking shelter from their own fellows. However, it is remarkable how soon after the fall we read of "building," for Gen., chap. 4, v. 17,—"And Cain knew his wife; and she conceived, and bare Enoch; and he builded a city, and called the name of the city after the name of his son, Enoch." Then several generations after, verse 20,—"Jubal; he was the father of such as dwell in tents." This would show that they were now (some of them, at least) beginning to roam about. Then, verse 22,—"Tubal-Cain an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron." This shows a settled life, and advancement in the arts. Cain, as a husbandman, would have to settle down in a locality favorable to husbandry, and would naturally build houses, as also barns, &c., for his produce and animals. The next "building" I would mention is that of Noah, just before the flood, who erected a large wooden house capable of floating on the water. This erection we commonly know as the Ark—Noah's Ark. Then, the first thing Noah did on leaving the Ark, was,—"And Noah builded an altar unto the Lord." Shortly after we read of the building of the celebrated Tower of Babel, made of burned bricks "and slime (or bitumen) had they for mortar."

I now come to extant stone structures, and the first of these—the oldest stone monuments in existence made by man—is (as almost all authorities coincide in saying) the Pyramids of Egypt. I have imagined some of the oldest of them may have existed even before the flood; but, if not, they come pretty close to its date. Mr. James Ferguson says,—"Turning, then, to the Pyramids—the oldest, largest, and most mysterious of all the monuments of man's art now existing." He also says regarding them,—"With these evidences of extreme antiquity we are startled to find Egyptian art nearly as perfect in the oldest pyramids as in any of the later, or, as it became afterwards, when all the refinement and all the science of the Greeks had been applied to its elaboration;" and I may add another remark, interesting perhaps to some of the brethren. In Lower Egypt "all the pyramids—with one exception (the pyramids of Saccara)—face exactly north, and have their entrances on that side."

Mr. Philip Smith says,—"The great temples, tombs, and statues of Upper Egypt (from which we gain our chief knowledge of the people) were erected under the Theban Kings, who probably reached the acme of their power after the Exodus. But the Pyramids of Lower Egypt were seen by Abraham far across the valley of the Nile, as he approached the royal city of Memphis, with the same general outline for the first sight of which the traveler still strains his gaze."

It is a curious circumstance that even on the walls of rock-cut tombs at Thebes, containing representations of funeral processions, the tomb is often figured as a built monument. The oldest temples of the Egyptians were small and were built. They are known as "Sanctuary Temples."

Mr. Wilkinson tells us that "the early houses of Egypt were of mud; and the masses of that material used in constructing their walls soon led to the simple invention of sun-baked bricks, at once durable and convenient. The flat roof was of palm beams, covered with the branehes of the same tree; and a thick coating of mud laid upon them completed the whole; as in the houses of the poor class of Egyptians to the present day. But it was not till luxury had been introduced that the column performed a part in an Egyptian mansion; and the temple of early Egypt was a simple quadrangular cella."

In ancient Assyria, however, wood was more used than in Egypt, the houses having wooden pillars and roofs, the roofs covered externally with earth to keep out rain and heat. We are also perfectly convinced of the large amount of wood used in the Canaanitish houses of Jericho and Ai, for example, which were burned down B. C. 1451, more especially from the short time it took to set the whole city on fire. As in Joshua, chap. 8, we read that the men of Ai had just left the city, when, on looking back, verse 20, "they saw and behold the smoke of the city ascended to heaven." And I need hardly mention the wood of the forrests of Lebanon.

So much for "built-up," now for "rock-cut." Among the oldest examples I know of is that of Beni-Hassan, about 2000 B. C., which, though a rock-cut tomb, like all other stone architecture of whatever date, shows, as Mr. Ferguson says, "evident symptons of having been borrowed from a wooden original." Elsewhere he says, "Like all rock-cut examples all over the world, these Nubian temples are copies of structural buildings." Sir Gardiner Wilkinson says,—"And when in after times large tombs and temples were excavated in the rock, they borrowed from constructed monuments." He also says,—"It has often been supposed that these (rock-temples) gave rise to constructed Egyptian temples; from the idea that the Egyptians first began to make their places of worship in the rock; but I have already explained that the presence of architraves, over the columns within them, show that they, on the contrary, were taken from built monuments; those members being evident imitations of the beam, from column to column, required to support the roof, and quite unnecessary in an excavation. Besides, it may be doubted whether their first sanctuaries were in the rock; and it is probable that they never cut stone, nor made use of any, till it was wanted for building a sanctuary. The pillar, or column, however, did probably originate in the quarry; as it was wanted to support the roof long before columns were used in temples, which is shown by the early sanctuaries having no portico, and consequently, no columns; but the quarry pillar has not the architrave given to columns in the rock-temples. I may also observe that, though some of the quarries are very old, no rock temple dates as early as built monuments in Egypt, and in excavated temples and tombs the imitation of architrave is always found. The opinion, therefore, that the temples of Egypt were derived from excavated monuments is totally unfounded; and, though the temple borrowed the column from the quarry, as the excavated derived the architrave, plinth, abacus, and many other accessories, from the constructed temple, there is abundant evidence to show that the Egyptian sacred edifices did not owe their plans or mode of building to rock temples."

I mentioned above about the Pyramids of Lower Egypt facing north; but, as for the position of their temples, Mr. Wilkinson says:—"There was no fixed rule for placing Egyptian temples, nor was it considered right, 'if possible that the statue in the cella should look towards the west, so that a person approaching the altar to perform a sacrifice should bow to the east,' as Vitruvius directs in regulating the position of a Greek or Roman temple; and notwithstanding all their superstitions, the Egyptians did not confine the presence of the Deity to any practical point of the compass; the various sacred buildings in the same city being found to face in whatever direction the locality or convenience might suggest. This, indeed, was permitted in Greek and Roman temples; the front being towards the road, or in any other situation, when the proscribed westerly position could not be managed; and Vitruvious is wrong when he states that the Egyptians 'thought it right to make their temples face towards the Nile.'"—Freemasons (London) Mag.

History of the Degree of Grand Elect Knight K. H.

After the death of Pope Boniface the XI., July 13th, 1304, the Cardinals met for the election of a new pope, and found themselves in two factions, French and Italian. Phillip the Fair, king of France, had then several views which could not be accomplished without the assistance of the Pope to be elected; and as his party in the conclave fomented these divisions to favor Phillip's design, he sent for Bertrand Gol, Archbishop of Bordeaux, son to Bertrand, Lord of Killandrow, in the same diocese; and in the conference which he had with him at a pleasant country-seat near St. John of Angely, he informed him of his designs, and the divisions in the conclave—which put it in his power to elect a Pope; and that he was disposed to prefer him, provided he would swear to perform seven articles; the 7th of which was even to be a secret to him until the time for the execution of it should be ripe. Accordingly, he revealed the 6 first articles, which are foreign to our purpose; but not the 7th, for the exact performance of which they took the sacrament to each other's promise. The king having found a man to his purpose, to be agent to his revenge, caused him to be elected Pope and promoted to St. Peter's Chair. In the year 1305, under the name of Clement VI., this Pope established his See at Lyons, where his first care was to execute the first six conditions; when Phillip did not delay in declaring the 7th to the Pope—that by his oath he was to join him in entirely destroying and exterminating the Knights Templar to the extent of Christianity. Here is what had attracted the hatred of Phillip the Fair, and what made him take that barbarous resolution against them all: Sometime before the death of Boniface XI., there happened a sedition in Paris, occasioned by Phillip, who had coined some money which was light, and mixed with base metal; on which the populace were mutinous, and plundered and demolished the house of Peter Barbe, Master of the Mint.

They went afterwards to the king's dwelling, and committed great indecency. The Templars were suspected to have been at the bottom of these outrages, and their ruin was determined by the king; for which purpose he sought the means to assist himself by the death of Boniface XI., in order to put in a Pope, on certain conditions that should be imposed on him. Nothing was now wanting but the pretence; for which purpose they prevailed on two abandoned men, that they should get admittance among the Knights Templar, and when admitted into their mysteries, to accuse the whole Order of the greatest of crimes—which was done. Their names were Gerard Labe, and Benoit Mehuy. They desired to be admitted into the Order, which was easy for them, as they had seemingly honest titles and apparent qualities, besides a supposed credit at court; every matter conspired in their favor, and they were received. But it lasted not long before the Templars repented heartily of having lighted the firebrand, which was the cause of the deplorable and tragic scene when all of the Templars were involved in one common destruction; for these two wretches, soon after their admission, accused the whole Order of the most dreadful crimes, demanding to be separated from them on account of the execrable things suggested to them. The treason is good, but the traitor detestable—thus did they suffer the same lot that was kept for the Templars; for by their treachery they went through the most dismal torments of vengeance by their false accusations. Upon this report to the king he took the secret measures to arrest all the Templars in his dominions, in one day, viz., Oct. 13, 1307, two years after the infamous accusation was made. They seized on all the papers, titles, treasures, and generally all their wealth; over which were placed overseers. King Charles of Naples in like manner ordered all the Templars to be arrested in Provence. Those taken in France were locked up in the castle of Meleen, to take their trial. The Pope at the same time sent for their Grand Master, James de Molay. As soon as he received the order, he came to Paris, with sixty Knights of the Order. They were all arrested and made to suffer the most dreadful torments in order to draw from them a confession of the crimes they were accused of, though without effect, as they bravely dared every torment rather than accuse themselves of crimes they were innocent of, so that on no other proof but the accusation of two infamous wretches, they concluded their trials; and they executed and burnt alive fifty-seven in one day, and the next day fifty-nine, and so on until they had completed almost their total destruction. They pardoned none, not even those two that served them in accusing the whole Order, for as Templars they were included in the general sentence and were burnt alive. The G. M. and the three above-mentioned brethren were nevertheless not comprehended in the first execution; the Pope kept their judgment to himself. The most of the Templars in this persecution were arrested in all Christian states, but were not all put to death.

Philip the Fair was continually hurrying the Pope to make an end of James de Molay and his three companions; after having groaned seven years in prison loaded with irons, they were at last executed and burnt alive, March 11th, 1314, in the Isle of Paris; moving to pity and tears the numerous spectators who were present, for their steadiness, heroic constancy, and solemn vows of their innocence, which was afterward made apparent by an event extremely miraculous. James de Molay seeing himself on the scaffold ready to end his life in the flames, directed to God the following prayer:

"Oh, Almighty and everlasting God, who knowest the innocence of the victims which have been sacrificed, lead our minds to reflect on the reproach and sorrow which attended the death of Thine only Son to redeem us from the slavery of our sins. Forgive the false accusations and imputations which have caused the destruction of the whole Order, and permit that one day the eyes of our accusers may be opened to our innocence, for we have endeavored to walk and to live in Thy fear. Amen."

Then addressing himself to the people, he said: "Good people, who see us ready to perish in the flames, you will be able to judge of our innocence, for now I summon Pope Clement VI. in forty days, and Phillip the Fair in twelve months, to appear before the awful and tremendous throne of God, to render an account for the blood they have so wickedly shed." After which they were hurried to execution, fearing a rescue from the people.

The summons of James de Molay was accomplished, as Pope Clement VI. died the 19th of April the same year, at Rocqanour, on the Rhine; and Phillip the Fair in a twelve month, at Fontainbleau. The news of the persecution of the Templars had already reached the Knights who were left in the Island of Cyprus, and in the absence of the Grand Master had been overpowered by the Turks; when they lost Acre, with several other strongholds, and were obliged to retire to the Isle of Rhodes and the adjacent islands. The persecution against them in open council at Vienna, Oct. 1st, 1311, when their Order was banished, their estates confiscated and left at the disposal of the Pope, who in 1312 gave a part to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem. Those who had escaped the persecution, and had retired to the Island of Rhodes, were obliged to disguise themselves, not losing entirely the hope of seeing the Order re-instated again.

Masonic Courtesy.

No one of the beautiful outgrowths of Masonic covenants is more attractive and satisfying in its development, than is the virtue whose title we make the text of our leader this month.

MASONIC COURTESY: It is the eldest born of those graces which have proceeded out of the marriage, long ago consummated, between brotherly love and friendship. Masonic courtesy: It is the grandchild of the "golden rule," and meets out to another that measure of cordial recognition, the which we look to receive from him whenever time, place, and occasion reverse our relative positions of giver and receiver. No traveled Mason, who has visited lodges in different jurisdictions, and has been the recipient of the delightful manifestations of this virtue, will fail heartily to concur in what we say in its honor. A stranger Mason, who visits a lodge where Masonic courtesy has "free course," never fails to carry away from that checkered floor enduring remembrances of those who so well obey the command of John the Evangelist—"Little children, love one another!" In the gallery of his memory the picture of that scene, which hangs upon the roseate wall, is ever enhaloed, and often is perused by the mind's eye, and he

> "Longs upon that level
> To renew the happy scene."

That lodge is to be envied which is the source of such memories, and its fame becomes widespread. It may not be precise in its ritualism, its officers may not "put on much style;" it may be (as no lodge should be) totally unadorned, and its membership small; but the exposition of Masonic courtesy given habitually by its officers and craftsmen, will make it observable, and will "cover a multitude of (ritualistic) sins." On the contrary, a lodge which has a morose Master, self-important officers, a surly Tyler, and a membership whose manners are repellant, will never be visited more than once by a sojourner, nor will he carry away with him those pleasant memories, the which are apart of the "wages" that are morally and masonically his due. Such a lodge is generally shunned, and, left to its own devices, sooner or later dies of Masonic inanition. And it ought.

That oft repeated and seldom pondered response of the senior deacon, which lays down the proposition that it is a Masonic duty to "welcome and accommodate visiting brethren," every lodge is bound by its covenants to put into its deed. In that response only another expression is given to the axiom we herein announce: that Masonic courtesy is the eldest born of the numerous progeny of brotherly love and friendship, and is the happy and demonstrative grandchild of the golden rule.

Let us, then, beloved, cultivate this virtue wisely and fully, and let it be "deeply impressed upon the mind of every Mason, not only in the government of his conduct while in the lodge, but also while abroad in the world" of Masonic associations.—Evergreen.

A Feature in Masonry, and Interesting Reminiscence.

The remains of William McMillen, one of the founders of the Queen City of the West, who died in 1804, were recently disinterred from the old family burial-place of the McMillens, in Avondale, and transferred to Spring Grove Cemetery. The old lot was a beautiful knoll in the McMillen farm in Avondale, back of the present property of the Lambs and Wests. Here had been buried, when Cincinnati was a village on the river bank, several members of the family, and here they have remained until Cincinnati is a city of 250,000 souls, and the old farm, worth $3,000 an acre, is cut up into building lots for suburban houses.

The new resting-place of the few bones found in the old grave is in the beautiful lot of the Masons, adjoining the soldier's lot, in Spring Grove, where, on the 24th of June next, St. John's day, the Masons propose to dedicate a splendid monument with all the imposing ceremonies and display of which the Order, in strength in Cincinnati, Covington, and Newport is capable.

In 1797, the the N. C. Harmony Lodge, of Cincinnati, conferred the degree of Master upon William McMillen. This was the first lodge of Masons in Cincinnati. Mr. McMillen had purchased, for two dollars, the lot on the northeast corner of Third and Walnut streets, which was then a huge gravel bank out beyond the town. At his death he bequeathed this to the lodge in trust. To-day it is covered by the most beautiful Masonic Temple of the west, and the taxes upon it amount to nearly $6,000 per annum.—Cincinnati Commercial.

THE TROWEL.—Among the most valued of our exchanges is "THE MASONIC TROWEL," edited by Harman G. Reynolds, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois. It is a very neatly printed monthly, of sixteen three-column pages, and afforded at the low price of $1 25 per year. The April number, now before us, contains engraved likenesses and biographical sketches of Jerome R. Gorin, Past Grand Master, and George W. Lininger, Past Grand High Priest. No Mason who desires to keep thoroughly informed should be without THE TROWEL. Address, "THE MASONIC TROWEL," Springfield, Illinois.—Woodstock Sentinel.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Editor,
IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY
H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

One copy, one year.....................................$1 25

All communications should be addressed to H. G. REYNOLDS, or THE MASONIC TROWEL, Springfield, Ill.

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for THE TROWEL.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

NOTICE.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., MAY 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

Examination of Visitors.

Under the regulations of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, every visitor must be vouched for in open lodge, or pass examination. The voucher must be by a well-known brother who has sat in lodge with the visitor, and the voucher must be able to state the degree also, in which the lodge was at work.

The test is indispensable and pre-requisite to an examination. And we shall sustain every Master who requires certified evidence of good standing from the lodge from which the visitor hails as a pre-requisite to the test. After the test, the Master, or a committee appointed by him, are to conduct the examination thoroughly, and in the way that may seem best, being careful to give the visitor neither hints or prompting. We earnestly recommend the mode practiced by Bro. House, W. M. of Mattoon Lodge No. 260. After the test he exhibits the charter of his lodge, and then says "please prove to me that you are a Master Mason." He neither prompts, asks questions, or does anything but listen. When the visitor is through, he tells him that he is satisfied or not satisfied, as the case may be, and that ends the matter for that time.

We urge upon the attention of Masters the importance of furnishing their members, whenever they are about to go any distance from home with a traveling certificate, and that all certificates, more than three months old, should be disregarded. Traveling brethren should surrender their certificates and take out new ones once a quarter year. The importance of this will strike every Master who is besieged by importunate and insolent beggars, who are either expelled or unworthy Masons. We could enlarge to several columns, but prudence forbids. We desire all our brethren to take our say so in this matter, until they can hear further reasons from mouth to ear.

Who May Prefer Charges.

Simons holds that any affiliated Master Mason in good standing, may prefer charges in any lodge; that none others can. This, as a general principle, is mainly true, subject to local regulations.

First. We think that a non-affiliate in good standing may prefer charges in any matter in which he has a personal interest. The contrary is held by many, but the covenant between brethren regardeth neither affiliation nor non-affiliation, but is a personal and binding affair, and an aggrieved worthy brother is entitled to redress and a hearing from every brother.

Second. In some respects, in a legal sense, lodges may be compared to municipalities. Cities have laws, so have lodges; some city laws are local, and the violation of them is punished by city authority; some lodge laws pertain to lodge matters alone, and hence, none but a member can prefer charges for a violation of them.

Third. All offences against the crimnal code are offences against the whole people of Illinois, and are prosecuted as such; the place of trial is fixed and the court named to try the case, but any citizen from any part of the State may prosecute. So in Masonry; all trasgressions of the moral code are offences against Masonic law, and must be tried in the lodge of which the accused is a member, or in the lodge in the jurisdiction of which he resides, and any Master Mason member of a lodge in good standing, has a right to prefer the charges.

Maryland.

The Grand Chapter of Maryland assembled at Baltimore, Nov. 9, A. D. 1868. M. E. Comp. John L. Yeates, G. H. P.

The address of the presiding officer rehearses, in a petulant and arrogant style, the doings of the G. G. Chapter at St. Louis, in the matter of the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia.

His treatment of M. E. Comp. John L. Lewis, late Gen. G. H. Priest, is contemptuous, splenetic, and ill-natured. The argument he makes in relation to the status of his own Grand Chapter and that of the District, is filled with jealousy, acrimony, and a persecuting spirit· The matter is aggravated by a rebellious and revolutionary letter from M. E. Comp. S. C. Coffinbury, which greatly beclouds his splendid governmental administration as Grand Master of Michigan. He would do well to remember his connection with the troubles in Michigan in 1858–9, and Maryland should have remembered his harsh and caverlierly treatment of her own Gilman, before seeking to place his name upon her records as the man of all others to defend her honor.

Notwithstanding the status assigned to Potomac Chapter by the supreme body, she presented herself and was admitted to a participa, tion in the doings at Baltimore, while the title page of the cover retains the old name of "Maryland and the District of Columbia," dressed in the garb of the dandyism of boyhood, or, more like, the rejuvenation of the grey hairs of old age by the vigorous application of an approved color changing tonic.

A few words dispose of the matter. Maryland is an old, and, thus far, an honored jurisdiction. In token of this both the General Grand Chapter and the Grand Encampment U. S. agreed to hold their next treinnial at Baltimore. What Maryland wants of the chapters at Washington, exceeds our comprehension. She consented to let them go and then, Pharaoh like, still held on to them. The material composing the staid old chapters in Maryland, and the chapters in the District of Columbia are uncongenial and incongruous. That the District was once a part of Maryland, cuts no figure; for the District had a Grand Chapter once before. The elements of the two grand lodge jurisdictions from their very dissimilarity never did and never can harmonize.

Society in Washington is elemetal, changing, cosmopolitan, with every new administration; some go to or come from every part of the Republic. With every political change, the comers and goers are much greater still.

This mercurial condition of things in Washington required a separation, and the discontent of Potomac Chapter, born of an unhallowed and ungratified ambition, is discreditable to the chapter itself, while the Grand Chapter of Maryland dishonors herself by fostering the discontent and approving the rebellious and contumacious spirit so plainly manifested.

The Grand Chapter of the District, in a proper and loyal spirit, sought admission into the family of grand chapters, and the supreme body wisely admitted her to the fold. From every portion of this vast nation, Royal Arch Masons will find former associates in Washington, a cordial welcome, and a Masonic home.

Let Maryland content herself; let Potomac Chapter affiliate; "let us have peace."

Charles H. Ohr, G. H. P.; Wm. A. Wentz, Baltimore, G. Secretary.

Templar Manual.

Sir E. B. Myers has kindly sent us a beautifully bound copy of the Templar's Manual, containing tactics and drill, ceremonies in the orders of knighthood, statutes and regulations, ceremonies for installation, burial service, working text for the orders, and forms for trials, prepared expressly by authority of the Grand Commandery of Illinois, and under the direct supervision of R. E. Sir Vincent L. Hurlbut, then Grand Commander.

It is generally understood that the tactics and drill are what is known as the Mitchell Drill, improved, beautified, and perfected by Sir Charles H. Brower.

Diagrams are interspersed throughout the tactics, drill, and working of the orders. Every word of command, with full explanations and comments, are given with military precision, including escorts, triangles, funeral honors, and parades.

It is in all respects a complete Templar manual, and is not only authorized, but is the adopted and only standard in Illinois, and should be owned and studied by every Templar. Published by E. B. Myers, Law Book-seller and publisher, Chicago, Ill.

Lecturers.

R. W. Bro. Leander Church recently lectured the lodge at Coal Valley, Rock Island county, and left the brethren well posted.

At Rock Island, the brethren of Trio gave good attendance; he speaks in high terms of the condition of the membership there.

From there he went to Hamlet, Mercer Co., and posted several brethren who intend to start a new lodge.

The American Builder.

The American Builder, published at 115 Madison St., Chicago, at $3 per year, is on our table. The April number has important articles, headed as follows: Public Parks—Mortar-Aluminum—Stucco Work—Styles of Building, and their proportions—Building News—The Courts, &c.

Among its illustrations is a Country Church, Bro. G. P. Randall, architect; the Commercial Insurance Building, on Washington St., near LaSalle, Chicago, cost, $58.000. It is a beautiful building.

[By the Publisher].

Second Annual Excursion of the Illinois Press Association.

The fifth annual meeting of the I. P. A. was held in Cairo, Ill., April 21st and 22d. According to previous notice sent to the members by the President, a large number of the delegates met in Chicago, and on the morning of the 20th, left that city for Cairo, a special train being provided for them by the Illinois Central Railroad. The accommodations furnished were superb; the cars were new and of the most magnificent kind, and with all the latest improvements for comfort and safety. Rapidly we sped on our way over the broad prairies of our native State, hundreds of miles were passed, and on the morning of the 21st, just as the day god was rising in all his splendor, we arrived in Cairo. The transition from the cold winds and stormy skies of northern Illinois to the balmy atmosphere of the modern Egypt, "Southern Illinois," was exceedingly pleasant. At Cairo, the members of the convention, with their ladies, were taken to the St. Charles Hotel, where they fared sumptuously, and were entertained for two days as the guests of the city. We were surprised at the growth of Cairo. From a comparatively "insignificant mud-hole" of fifteen years ago, it has now become one of the most enterprising cities of the west; situated as it is, at the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, it can not fail to become a populous place. The citizens of the community, well knowing the usual fate of river towns which depend upon the river trade for their support, have turned their attention to manufacturing of different kinds, and Cairo has reason to be proud of her success in that line of business.

On the evening of the 21st, we took passage on the steamer General Anderson, to Mound City. The first place we visited was the U. S. Navy Yard. Commodore Walke and the other officers of the establishment merit our thanks for the pains they took to make our visit agreeable. The navy yard and everything connected with it was exceedingly neat and trim, and its admirable condition reflects great credit on the commandant. The iron-clad monitors lying in the river attracted much attention. While we strolled over these vessels and viewed their impregnable armor, our thoughts strayed back to the times of our national wars and the names of Decatur, Porter, Stuart, Farragut, and a host of other ocean heroes who have sustained the honor of our flag. The Navy Yard at Mound City should be enlarged and improved immediately; but we suppose "Uncle Sam" will not see the necessity for it until the approaching war with England compels him to.

After leaving the navy yard, we visited the National Cemetery, where rest in peace 5,650 of the fallen soldiers of our country. In the evening we were entertained with a splendid banquet at the Stokes House, and at near midnight we returned to Cairo, where we remained one day and then went to Mobile via the steamer General Anderson and the Mobile & Ohio Railroad.

At Mobile we were received with great enthusiasm. We could hardly realize the fact that the people who welcomed us so warmly, were arrayed against us as enemies but four short years ago, and that this city was the last military possession in the Confederate States to surrender to the Union forces. On arriving at the Battle House, Judge McKinstry inflicted upon us a political speech, in which he said many harsh and untrue things about the people of Mobile. We doubt if any of his hearers believed what he said. On the afternoon of the 25th, carriages were furnished us, and we took a long ride on the beautiful and famous shell road, which extends for fifteen miles along the shores of Mobile Bay and the Gulf of Mexico. The road is shaded with all the luxuriant vegetation of the semi-tropical portions of the United States, and the air is burdened with the odor of thousands of flowers, from the humble violet to the regal magnolia. On the morning of the 26th, we saw the steamer St. Elmo blown up. One man killed and several injured.

Tuesday, we took a trip down the bay on the steamers C. W. Dorrance and Annie, under the auspices of the Mobile Board of Trade. This trip was to many of us the most pleasant incident in our entire excursion. On the 27th, our party separated into three parties. One went to New Orleans, one to Montgomery, and one party returned home; private affairs compelled our return with the latter, and it was with reluctance that we turned our face northward and left behind us the genial clime of the "Sunny South," with its beautiful scenery and its generous and warm-hearted citizens. We returned home in quick time, and without any special accidents happening to us.

Before closing this article, we wish to give to our readers our opinion of the south with regard to northern men emigrating there to live. Men from the north, who hold the same political opinions in regard to negro suffrage as those now entertained by the majority of the southern white people, will find the south a very profitable and pleasant country to live in. Farmers, moneyed men, mechanics, and laboring men, are all needed. The idea of secession in the south is dead; and the people there care nothing about a man's opinions on that subject. Neither do they make any objection to a northern man because he has served in the Union army; we saw several of them in the south in business and doing well.

The Evergreen.

In THE TROWEL of January, we gave some notice of our Masonic exchanges, and of The Evergreen we said:

> "The Evergreen, with a cover, published at Dubuque, Iowa, is under the editorial control of Past Grand Master E. A. Guilbert, M. D., whose writings, reports, controversies, and singularities, have given him a national fame. His nag, though a spirited and mettlesome one, does not suit us. But, withal, the Doctor is an agreeable, courteous gentleman and companion, whom one likes to meet; and though you quarrel from the start, yet the disposition to part is wanting. $2 per annum."

In the April number of The Evergreen, the editor comes at us Guilbert fashion:

> "THE TROWEL does not like The Evergreen. So it announces in the first series of notices of exchanges we have ever seen in its columns. These notices were peculiar. Some were undeservedly laudatory, and were written as though the editor were directing the Masonic public of Illinois what Masonic papers to respect and what to condemn. For The Evergreen we may say, that as it did not desire Bro. Reynolds' permission to be born, and has not sought its assistance during its life, it proposes to go on and live, without any reference to the dicta of his index expurgatorius. The future will determine the relative merits of the two papers, between which there should be no controversy "except that noble contention" etc. Prince John's screed is in type, but is necessarily deferred."

Now, Doctor, aren't you ashamed? Are we to be twitted with saying that we don't like the Evergreen, because we said your nag didn't suit us? Does our nag suit you! How we would catch the adjectives if we were ever to insinuate such a thing! We do like the Evergreen, but excuse us, Doctor, from riding your nag! Still, we can bear the least touch of professional malice, after witnessing the operation of the scalpel upon the Monthly and other papers, Won't the Monthly score you? Keep your knife sharp, you will have use for it.

The American Year Book and National Register for 1869.

It presents a general view of the United States, including educational, religious, financial, political, and industrial statistics, and is the initial volume of an annual publication.

From the chapter on "Comparative Statistics of the World, relating to Area and Population," we gather the following interesting facts: Asia contains an area of 17,318,000 square miles, and a population of 805,419,908; America an area of 15,480,000 square miles, and a population of 81,400,000; Africa an area of 11,556,663 square miles, and a population of 190,950,609; Europe an area of 3,781,000 square miles, and a population of 293,083,000, and Australasia and Polynesia an area of 3,425,000 square miles, and a population of 4,000,000.

The United States is the fourth country in extent of area, the tenth in population, and the ninety-fifth in density of population, boasting only 9.7 persons to each of its 3,578,392 square miles. Another equally interesting table gives a list of all the cities in the world containing over 100,000 inhabitants. Arranged in order of population, London stands first on the list, Soochaw second, Paris third, Pekin fourth, Constantinople seventh, Osaka, Japan, tenth, New York thirteenth, Philadelphia fifteen, and Brooklyn thirty-sixth. The census reports of 1866 show that Cincinnati has a larger population than Boston. These are statistics which will much astonish the school-boys who have been accustomed to look on Pekin as unsurpassable, and who have but an indefinite knowledge of Soochow.

Published by O. D. Case & Co., Hartford, Conn.

A Dictionary of the Bible.

Edited by William Smith, LL. D. Published by Jones, Junkin & Co., Chicago, Illinois. No book has been issued from the American press for a long time that deserves so universal a circulation as this. Bible dictionaries have been prepared in former years; some were meagre and imperfect, and all have been outgrown. Calmet's was surpassed by Kitto's; Kitto's, and indeed, all others, have been far outrivaled by this of Dr. Smith, of the London University, and the most eminent lexicographer of the English speaking world.

It contains all the matter of the largest edition, except the numerous disquisitions and critical notes on original Hebrew and Greek terms, which are of no practical value to the general English student, and considerably more than twice the reading matter of the smaller book. With all its elegance and embellishments, it is the cheapest edition.

The publishers want intelligent, energetic men and women to solicit orders for the work. See advertisement.

Neuralgia and Catarrh.

One suffering from the above complaints is in no condition for composition. We have no other excuse for the meagreness of original matter in this number.

Tidings.

Items.

Hon. Daniel D. Pratt, now U. S. senator from Indiana, closed an address, January 24, 1839, at Logansport, in the following words: "Deeply impressed with the attributes of God, Masonry, in concert with religion, joins her voice in ascriptions of praise, adoration, and love to the Maker and moral Governor of the Universe."

Gen. Ely S. Parker, formerly of Galena, Past Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, chief of the Senecas, and a grandson of Red Jacket, is confirmed as Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

It is alleged that but one German was elected to any office in Illinois as high as Lieut. Governor. This is a mistake. Judge Koerner, of Belleville, was elected Judge of the Supreme Court and Lieut. Governor, and Francis Hoffman, of DuPage, was Lieut. Governor under Governor Yates. The present Secretary of State and his opponent are both Germans.

Lines by M. C. B., declined.

Bro. Col. Richard Owens, a noted geologist and naturalist, professor in the Indiana State University, contemplates starting in July for the Holy Land.

Charles Wesley wrote more than seven thousand hymns.

The Supreme Council A. & A. S. Rite, Northern Jurisdiction, will meet in Boston, Wednesday, June 16th.

Dr. Cyrus Nott, President of the Indiana State University, is W. M. of Monroe Lodge No. 22, at Bloomington, Indiana.

Bro. Daniel Tapley, for more than fifty years Treasurer of Rising Sun Lodge No. 6, Indiana, has been a Mason more than sixty years. He delivered an able address to the Craft on St. John's day, last December.

Dip the ends of nails in grease, and they will drive easily into any hard wood, where they would otherwise double and break.

Masonry helps no man who will not help himself. A drone has no business in the Masonic hive; and if by accident one gains admission, he soon gets stung out.

The Union Pacific Railroad sold 10,000 passenger tickets from Chicago to White Pine during the month of March.

Travel over the California Pacific Railway averages 200 passengers daily.

The mother of Henry Ward Beecher died, recently, at the advanced age of eighty years.

Why should men take physic, when temperance and exercise are better remedies?

We acknowledge the receipt of the Bombay Gazette of March 13. The actual expenditure for India for the financial year 1867-68 was £50,039,801.

A child described a snake as being "all tail clean up to the head."

The most learned man is only surprised to find how little he knows.

Momentary opportunities are for sowing little seeds, which may produce great trees and shrubs.

A stump speaker exclaimed: "I know no north, no south, no east, no west." "True," exclaimed an old farmer in the crowd, "and it's time for you to go to school and larn jography."

The basis of Freemasonry is gratitude to the Supreme Being and the study of nature.

While a mother lives, a man has one friend on earth who will not desert him when he is needy.

A melancholy head is Satan's bathing place.

The language of experience is real.

What is the difference between a legal document and a cat? One has pauses at the end of its clauses; the other has clawses at the end of its pawses.

Morality is the bond of union in Freemasonry.

Misfortune and mere crime set no barriers between a mother and her son.

Kossuth is at Genoa, living on the bounty of his friends.

In Switzerland, one who kills another is liable for the debts of the murdered man.

Father William Hamlin, of Providence, R. I., is said to be ninety-seven years of age, and a Mason for sixty-seven years.

A book has appeared in Paris entitled "The Devil, his Grandeur and Decadence."

The population of Boston is estimated at 240,000, of whom one-third are Roman Catholics, with ample church accommodations.

The stipulated boundaries of the new Territory of Wyoming embrace an area of about 107,000 square miles, or 67,480,000 acres. The Pacific Railroad will pass over 480 miles of its territory.

To be discontented with riches, is accumulated poverty.

He that prays as a custom, is a pharisee in his devotions.

The bravest man is he who is afraid of sin.

An indorser is one who shares all the liabilities of another, but in none of the profits.

The King of Denmark is a practical chemist.

No banking or mercantile house in England, but the Bank of England, is allowed to use paper with the water mark.

Cardinal Cullen, of the Catholic church in England, in his lental regulations, warned his people that Freemasons, Ribbon Men, and Fenians could not be admitted to the sacraments.

English railroad companies paid seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars for personal injuries in 1867.

The Pope, now seventy-five years of age, is the oldest reigning sovereign in Europe.

Riches got by fraud are dug out of one's own heart, and destroy the mind.

Granite, although so hard, splits as straight as a chestnut stick. At a quarry in Maine, recently, a block was split out 100 feet long, 8½ feet wide, and five feet thick, and which weighed 300 tons.

At a public meeting in northern Iowa in aid of education, one of its advocates said: "Mr President, I rise to get up, and am not backward to come forward in the cause of education; for, had it not been for education, I should be as ignorant as you are, Mr. President."

To-morrow, which never comes, is the day in which idle men work and fools reform.

Real difficulties are often necessary to cure imaginary ones.

Col. Clark E. Carr, who has served eight years as postmaster at Galesburg, has again been nominated and confirmed.

Six hundred men are working on locomotives in Providence, for the Pacific Railroad.

Rich gold fields have been discovered on the northern frontiers of Russia and Norway. They are said to be very rich.

Women in Boston are taxed on $28,000,000, worth of real estate, and $13,000,000 of personal property.

Louisville prosecutes saloon keepers for allowing boys to play billiards. Right. Boys have no business in liquor saloons, nor —— either.

The national debt of Great Britain is $130.70 to each inhabitant; of France, $58.65; of the United States, $63.00.

Age is venerable in men; women are always young.

We are under many obligations to Bro. David J. Miller for a copy of the Daily New Mexican, published at Santa Fe.

Salaries of Monarchs.—Alexander of Russia, $25,000 per day; Abdul Aziz, $18,000; Napoleon, $14,219; Francis Joseph, Austria, $10,050; Frederick William, Prussia, $8,510; Victor Emanuel, $6,840; Victoria, $6,270.

The highest human habitation on the earth is the Buddhist Monastery of Hanle, in Thibet which is 15,117 feet above the sea level.

The yellowish-brown of Chinese nankins is the natural color.

Politeness is a good investment, but bowing to a lamp-post at any time of day or night is wasted capital.

The Belgians are projecting a society to explore China, with a view to the introduction of railroads, telegraphs, and the development of mineral wealth.

Grand Lecturer Dewey, of Galesburg, recently lectured the lodge at Galva, and won golden opinions. W. Bro. W. O. Brooks, formerly W. M. of Harmony No. 3, now presides in Galva.

The Dixon Telegraph, an excellent paper of the republican persuasion, at Dixon, is now published by J. D. & W. H. Boardman.

A cotemporary says that during the late "unpleasantness," a catfish swallowed a cannon ball. A fish story.

How to acquire a bad temper, bad corns, and a bad gait; wear tight boots.

The milk of one cow in Taunton, Mass., for one year, was worth $500; her keeping cost $144.

Give the devil his due, but be keerful there isn't much due him.

Few have all they need, and none have all they wish.—Southwell.

The man at the head of a household can mar its pleasure, but can not make it. That must rest with the woman, and is her greatest privilege.

Man, without religion, is the creature of circumstances; religion will lift him above them.

"How does that look?" said Mr. Cramp, holding out his hand; "that," said Amos, "looks as if it were out of soap."

Franklin said that if all but himself were blind, he would want neither fine furniture or fine clothes.

Buffalo, with a population of 150,000, is said to be the third and next in size to Brooklyn, in New York.

The State Asylum for the Blind, at Jacksonville, was burned April 20. The inmates all escaped, and are now comfortably provided for.

It is said that a few pieces of horse-raddish root placed among pickles, will prevent scum from gathering on the top of the vinegar.

Massachusetts.

The Grand Encampment, K. T., met at Greenfield, Mass., in special assembly, May 22. Benjamin Dean presiding. In his address he alludes to the Order of Malta, as follows:

> With regard to the Order of Malta, I need only explain the symbolic significance of its emblems.
>
> The military cross of the order, with its eight points, represents the eight beatitudes:
>
> "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for their's is the Kingdom of Heaven.
>
> "Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted.
>
> "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth.
>
> "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled.
>
> "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy.
>
> "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God.
>
> "Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God.
>
> "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake; for their's is the Kingdom of Heaven."
>
> The cross upon the banner of the order is more commonly the cross of Calvary, with the initials of the motto of the order, I. N. R. I., and constantly remind us of Christ and Him crucified.
>
> I certainly need say nothing more to recommend this new society to the female portion of this audience. I know how important, yes necessary, to its success is their sympathy and good-will. But I also know that they have, all of them, like the Scripture Mary, seen the crown of thorns oppress their Saviour's brow; have walked by his side as he ascended Calvary with weary steps; they have all knelt at the Cross, and have received messages concerning Him, from angels of the Lord, and I am assured of their support.

Connecticut Valley Commandery was then constituted.

The annual assembly was held October 30. Wm. W. Baker, presiding. The death of Sir Simon W. Robinson, Past Grand Master of Masons, Past Grand Master of Templars, and Past Supreme Commander of the Scottish Rite, was duly announced, and the following preamble and resolutions, offered by Charles W. Moore, were unanimously adopted:

> WHEREAS, It pleased Divine Providence, on the 16th day of the present month, to remove from his active duties in this life our venerable Past Grand Master, Sir Simon W. Robinson, and, at the age of 76 years, when the grain was ripe for the harvest, and the stalk for the sickle, to take him home, as we devoutly trust, to his heavenly rest; therefore,
>
> Resolved, That, in the decease of our aged companion, we recognize the loss of one who, in all the relations of life, walked worthily of his duties as a Mason and a Christian; of one who, by his kind, social, and sympathizing heart, endeared himself to a large circle of friends.
>
> Resolved, That this Grand Encampment will gratefully cherish his memory as that of a companion who was ever true to its interests, alike in its darkest and in its brightest days.

Sir Knight Dean, Deputy, in his graphic, pleasant style, thus discourseth of St. Louis:

> The meeting of the Grand Encampment being at the same time with the meeting of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter, and the Southern Supreme Council, 33°, having also appointed a meeting there at the same time, induced the Fraternity far and wide to treat the occasion as if it were intended to be a great Masonic festival, rather than a meeting of representatives to legislate for the general good.
>
> Quite a number of encampments, with bands of music, were present. The procession was of Knights Templar only, and about equaled, in numbers and display, the Templar part of the procession on the 24th of June, at Springfield. It was formed on the morning of the 15th of September, the first day of the session, and, after marching through the principal streets of the city, opened right and left, and the members and officers of the Grand Encampment walked through and entered the new Masonic Temple, which had not then been dedicated, and which was on that day for the first time occupied for Masonic purposes.
>
> In the evening of the same day, we attended a banquet given by the Grand Royal Arch Chapter.
>
> On the next day, in the afternoon, the procession of Templars was again formed, and marched on board three splendid steamers, named the Mississippi, Lady Gay, and Belle of Alton. The steamers proceeded up the river a few miles, and then down past the city to Jefferson Barracks, about ten miles, where all disembarked and witnessed a drill and review of the United States Marines at that place.
>
> We returned in the evening. During our progress up the river, the Mississippi struck the sunken wreck of a steamboat, and was run ashore to avoid sinking. While comfortably lying on the ground in the shoal water, the other boats went alongside and took off her passengers.
>
> Thus were exhibited as many of the phases of western river navigation as their guests were desirous of witnessing.
>
> A speaker at one of the banquets playfully remarked that they could do nothing more, unless they should blow up one of the boats.
>
> A sumptuous entertainment was provided in the saloon of each boat; and as we steamed up and down the Father of Waters, white handkerchiefs waved by fair hands from a thousand windows, and the discharge of firearms expressed the congratulations of a hospitable population.

Upon the introduction of M. E. Sir W. S. Gardner, Grand Master of Templars, U. S. A., he addressed the body at great length, and with much ability, upon the necessity of a change from encampment to commandery. In response, the Deputy moved, and the assembly voted, a committee to consider, and report at the semi-annual session, such changes as seem to be advisable.

Massachusetts and Rhode Island have twenty-five commanderies, three thousand and thirty-five members, averaging 121 members to each commandery.

W. W. Baker was elected Grand Commander; Benjamin Dean, Deputy; W. B. Blanding, G. G.; W. S. Shurtleff, G. C. G.; Rev. J. W. Dadmun, G. Prel.; C. A. Stott, S. G. W.; N. Van Styck, J. G. W.; Wm. Parkman, G. Treas.; Solon Thornton, Boston, Grand Recorder.

Pennsylvania.

We have received the annual abstract of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania for the year 1868, through the politeness of R. W. Bro. Richard Vaux, our Grand Representative.

At the quarterly communication December 2d, the following grand officers were elected: R. W. Breth. Richard Vaux, Grand Master; Robert A. Lamberton, Dep.; Samuel C. Perkins, S. G. W.; Andrew R. Potter, J. G. W.; Peter Williamson, G. Treas.; John Thomson, G. Sec. The Grand Lodge Charity Fund is stated at $45,222.39. The Grand Lodge receipts were $64,330-89; expenditures, $63,292.03; balance, $975.95.

The grand annual communication was held December 28. R. W. Richard Vaux, Grand Master. The officers elect were installed, and the appointments made for the year.

Two brethren, well known to our Illinois Templar and Scotch Rite Masons, to-wit: Bro. Jeremiah L. Hutchinson was appointed on the Committee on By-Laws, and C. F. Knapp D. D. G. Master.

The term "York" is dropped, and "Free and Accepted" is substituted. Well and sensible. The address of Bro. Vaux, like all his productions, is elegant, concise, and finished. He reports 259 working lodges, 2,373 members of the Grand Lodge, and 29,340 affiliated Master Masons, being an average of 113 members to each lodge. No. 158, at Philadelphia, is the largest lodge, having 385 members. Several lodges number more than 300 each.

We earnestly commend the following extracts from the address to the reflective consideration of our readers:

> Permit me here to suggest that a fund be raised by lodge contributions, or the bequest of some brother who, like Girard, seeks to do good, or by both united, the income of which should be exclusively devoted, under the care of a committee of the Grand Lodge, to the relief of the widows and daughters of Masons. There is a growing necessity for such a fund. Many instances occur of peculiar suffering by this class, which it is not always easy, promptly, to aid. The want of prompt attention to these persons is a double cause of distress. I beg leave to make these remarks now, because I feel sure that in the coming year some heart will be awakened to their propriety, and a little fountain of Masonic benevolence will begin to flow, in time growing into a stream of joy and gladness for many and many worthy of its benefits
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> I would most fraternally caution all Worshipful Masters to avoid taking the views or opinions from unauthorized sources, on any subject which relates to the work or proceedings of the lodges. However good the motive for giving some views or opinions, the ability to express them in accordance with the regulations of the Grand Lodge, is often wanting. This produces confusion, and the difficulties thus intended to be removed are magnified, and rendered worse than before. There is now no need of volunteer teachers. The Grand Lodge has approved of the means adopted for this purpose by the grand officers, and on them the duty and responsibility are properly placed. With twenty-seven District Deputies, it is no longer a complaint that instruction can not be authoritatively received.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The Grand Lodge Committee on Landmarks have decided, after very careful consideration of the subject, that it is a custom of the Craft, and to be so considered, that when an individual, whose place of residence is within the jurisdiction of a lodge, applies to another lodge at a distance from his home, friends, and neighbors, the lodge to which such application is made should, in a lawful manner, ask the lodge nearest to which such person resides, if there are any objections to granting the application. I desire to invite the attention of the Fraternity to this wise custom. Its observance is a duty becoming more necessary. Freemasonry never proselytes. It seeks no strength in numbers or dignity from men. Those who are well qualified are, if found worthy, admitted; but they must come voluntarily and knock at its temple doors. Hence it is kept free from the contaminating and destroying influences which are gathered into other societies, hidden too often under the specious pretexts that numbers constitute strength, and the worldly popularity of men, unstable as water, as it not unfrequently proves to be, gives importance to such bodies. The pure, the true, the just, who can circumscribe their opinions and passions within the bounds of mutual esteem and fraternal relations; who have self-control and moral courage sufficient to enable them to override the prejudices and bigotries, motives, and debased influences of the outside world; who can perform assumed duties without regard to the strife, contention, and other influences which actuate the ignorant and the arrogant, who in the world pass for wise and respectable; such give lustre to Freemasonry only because they are true Masons. It does not require the wisdom of Solomon to know that the true Mason and the member of a lodge, are not necessarily the same. Membership is attainable by a strict compliance with the severest tests; but Freemasonry in its purity, beauty, and efficacy, is known by our faith in its sublime principles. This is not obtained by forms or ceremonies.

The address contains considerable information in relation to the temple now building, and is followed by the oration delivered at the laying of the corner-stone, with all the prayers, songs, and ceremonies attending.

The report on correspondence displays considerable ability, and is more full than usual for Pennsylvania.

Vermont.

Grand Chapter.—The annual meeting was held at Brandon, Oct. 7. Charles A. Miles, presiding. The Grand High Priest suggested a return to the General Grand Chapter, as follows:

> Secondly, we are to consider whether it would not be well for us to resume our connection with the General Grand Chapter. Our relations with this body, as you probably are aware, severed some years ago, but I find among several of our members a strong desire that they may be resumed. As I was not present when we renounced our allegiance, and the reasons for this measure consequently being unknown to me, I am not prepared to give an opinion regarding the expediency of renewing our connection, but on general grounds, I should judge that this body should be represented in the General Grand Chapter, and that such representation would be both pleasant and profitable, as affording us opportunities to become somewhat better acquainted with the systems and workings of Royal Arch Masonry in our sister States. We should have a grand tribunal to which all difficulty and doubtful questions might be referred, and by whose authority all disputes might be decided, and also we should enjoy through this means a closer Masonic intercourse with the other grand chapters, and thus we might the better preserve the common bond that unites us all together in universal harmony and good-will.

The committee to which the address was referred, reported that they cordially approved and heartily endorsed the truly fraternal and Masonic spirit of the sentiments contained in the address, and recommended their adoption; the report was adopted. We are glad to welcome them once more to the old fold.

The officers for the present year are: Charles A. Miles, G. H. P.; E. A. Jewett, Dep.; Ira

Gifford, G. K.; R. R. Drake, G. S.; C. W. Woodhouse, G. Treas.; John B. Hollenbeck, Burlington, G. Sec.; G. F. Skiff, G. C. H.; Rev. T. F. Stewart, G. Chaplain; J. M. Seavey, G. P. S.; J. T. Shurtleff, G. R. A. C.; Wm. Brinsmaid, Burlington, Grand Steward.

Among the Grand High Priests, we notice Isaac Tichenor, who was Governor many years, Justice of the Supreme Court, and U. S. Senator; John Chipman, who was Chief Justice; Charles K. Williams, for more than twenty years Chief Justice, and then Governor; Nathan B. Haswell and Philip C. Tucker. Joel Green was Grand Secretary eighteen years, and John B. Hollenbeck is now in his fourteenth year of service.

Wisconsin.

The Grand Commandery of Wisconsin held its tenth annual conclave at Milwaukee, on the 20th of January last. Alvin B. Alden, Grand Commander. Of the triennial gathering at St. Louis, he thus speaks:

> I may, however, be permitted to say that it had more the appearance of a friendly gathering of true and courteous Sir Knights, assembled for the purpose of exchanging fraternal greetings and participating in the hospitalities and entertainments which had been so bountifully provided for us by the true and courteous fraters of Missouri, than of a legislative assembly.
>
> It would be utterly impossible, in this communication, even briefly to describe the gorgeous ceremonies attendant upon the meeting of the Grand Encampment, or the knightly courtesies and fraternal hospitalities which were lavished upon the Sir Knights in attendance; but this we venture to say without fear of contradiction, that never before, since the organization of that grand body, has there been so full a representation, or so much of a gorgeous display and knightly hospitality as was witnessed at its last conclave.
>
> Too much can not be said in commendation of the unbounded hospitality and knightly courtesy of our Missouri Sir Knights on that occasion.
>
> There were provided banquets of the most sumptuous character, excursions which eclipsed all efforts hitherto made on similar occasions, and luxuries in lavish profusion, that would satiate the most fastidious, which were tendered to all in attendance. And above all, there was a continued effort on their part to make our stay among them pleasant and happy; in short, to extend to us a truly Western welcome, which was fully appreciated by all who were so fortunate as to be present and partake of their hospitalities and share their courteous attentions.

The address speaks in glowing terms—and truthfully, too—of the escort furnished from Wisconsin, under the command of A. V. H. Carpenter. After alluding to the death of Past Grand Treasurer Dagget, he gracefully declined further honors.

Seven commanderies were represented.

Wm. H. Hiner, of Fond du Lac, was elected Grand Commander; Charles E. Bross, Madison, Deputy; C. J. Pardee, Pardeeville, G. Gen.; Stephen Bull, Racine, G. C. G.; Rev. H. M. Thompson, Nashota, G. Prel.; H. N. Sherman, Beloit, S. G. W.; C. S. Heimstreet, Janesville, J. G. W.; Frank J. Crosby, Milwaukee, G. Treas.; Wm. T. Palmer, Milwaukee, G. Rec.; A. Hoffman, Portage City, G. St. B.; E. D. Filer, Racine, G. S. B.; Wm. Lohmiller, Madison, G. Warder; Thomas Forbes, Milwaukee, G. C. G.

Harlow Pease presented the report on correspondence. Illinois proceedings not included.

The annals of the Grand Commandery show that Henry L. Palmer has officiated seven terms as Grand Commander; Alvin B. Alden, three; Erastus Lewis, five terms as Deputy; D. H. Wright, one; A. B. Alden, one; W. H. Hiner, two; A. V. H. Carpenter, one; H. M. Billings, one term as Grand Generalissimo; John P. Houghton, one; George Hyer, one; D. H. Wright, two; A. B. Alden, one; W. H. Hiner, two; J. C. Rudd, one; J. K. Proudfit, one; J. A. Bate, one; H. S. Baird, one term as Grand Captain General; M. F. McKey, three; B. B. Eldredge, one; A. B. Alden, two; M. L. Youngs, one; D. S. Foster, one; J. A. Horlick, one; Samuel S. Dagget, six terms as Grand Treasurer; D. H. Wright, one; F. J. Crosby, three; John W. Hunt, one term as Grand Recorder, and William T. Palmer, nine.

Wisconsin Commandery, at Milwaukee, numbers 181 members; Janesville, 45; Robert Macoy, at Madison, 61; Fort Winnebago, at Portage, 115; Fond du Lac, 85; Beloit, 88; Racine, 50. Total, 625. The Commanders in the above order are, J. H. Dodge, W. W. Wills, Charles E. Bross, Lyell T. Mead, Wm. D. Conklin, C. P. Whitford, N. A. Baillee.

The next annual conclave will be held at Milwaukee, on the 3d Wednesday in January, A. D. 1870.

West Virginia.

Grand Lodge—The fourth annual meeting was held at Wheeling, November 10. William J. Bates, Grand Master.

In his address, we find that the Grand Lodge of Virginia required that a majority of the lodges in existence in West Virginia in 1861 should give their allegiance to the Grand Lodge of West Virginia; that the charters of such lodges should be returned to the Grand Lodge of Virginia, and that their dues from 1861 to 1865 be paid. For the sake of quiet, the Grand Master recommended that the conditions be complied with, and commissioners were appointed to visit the Grand Lodge of Virginia empowered to adjust all matters of difference.

William J. Bates is Grand Master; B. F. Martin, Deputy; Robert White, S. G. W.; J. G. Davis, J. G. W.; W. P. Wilson, G. Treas.; Thos. H Logan, Wheeling, Grand Secretary; Rev. J. E. Snowden, G. Chaplain; George Baird, G. Lecturer; E. H. Coombs, G. Marshal; C. W. Ferguson, S. G. D.; George Martin, J. G. D.; James A. Park, G. Pur.; T. W. Bliss, G. Tyler.

The summary shows thirty lodges, and 1,590 members; average, 53.

Cœur de Leon Chapter Rose Croix.

Through the politeness of R. W. Bro. G. W. Barnard, we have received a copy of the Chicago Republican, containing a long and glowing account of the annual festival of Cœur de Leon Sovereign Chapter Rose Croix, in Chicago, of which our gifted brother, J. Ward Ellis, the present Grand Master of the Odd-Fellows' grand lodge, is the M. W. and P. Master.

The festival was held at the Sherman House, March 26, which of itself insures success. The Executive and Invitation Committee were Sirs H. C. Berry, A. C. Millard, W. G. Purdy, R. H. Jordan, Reuben Cleveland, H. S. Austin, D. R. Crego, and J. D. M. Carr. We received an invitation, but were sick at the time, and did not respond. Our excuse (late, it is true, and hardly excusable), has been forwarded to Sir Knight Berry.

Notwithstanding the weather was very inclement, the attendance was very large, and the rich and varied costumes of the Sir Knights gave the affair an imposing appearance. We are not given to displaying titles, so we give the names of the officers in this, as in other articles, plain:

J. Ward Ellis, Master; H. S. Austin, Senior Warden; Edward Goodale, Junior Warden; J. B. Bradwell, Grand Orator; D. W. Clark, Jr., Grand Keeper Seals and Archives; J. C. W. Bailey, Grand Treasurer; Aaron L. Brown, Master of Ceremonies; G. W. Kincaid, G. of T.; John P. Ferns, Grand Sentinel, all of 32°.

After feasting and dancing, came the toasts. We make room for the following toasts and responses:

> The Supreme Council, A. and A. S. Rite for the Northern Jurisdiction, U. S. A., Grand East at Boston, Mass.

Response by W. A. Stevens, 33d, S. G. I. G. and Dep. of the A. and A. S. R. for the district of Illinois:

> "Most Wise Knights and Sublime Princes and Peers:
>
> "In answering to the sentiment which has just been given at this our annual refection, is one on which much might be said, in tracing its history from its first establishment in this jurisdiction, now over a half century, which would be pleasing, as well as instructive to many who have not made it a part of their Masonic history. While the Supreme Council of this jurisdiction is not the oldest, yet it is second to none in its world-wide influence.
>
> "In its councils are many of our best citizens, from church and State, whose heads are disposed to contrive things which are well pleasing in the sight of the Grand Architect of the Universe.
>
> "From it England holds its authority. China is planting and budding by its power, a representative in the Alpine homes of Switzerland, thus it is extending to others the ineffable, historic, philosophic, and chivalric Masonry. Communing with all the provinces of South America, Europe, and Asia, holding converse with the whole world by our mystic language, and supporting the tripod of Freemasonry—Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity—in the language of Dr. Oliver, I have ever felt it my duty to support and encourage the principles and practice of Freemasonry, because it powerfully develops all social and benevolent affections; because it mitigates without, and annihilates within, the virulence of political and theological controversy; because it affords the only neutral ground on which all ranks and classes can meet in perfect equality, and associate without degradation and mortification, whether for purposes of moral instruction or of social intercourse; so may we, under the legislative power of our Supreme Council, arise, and, clothed with the 'mantle of Charity,' go forth by example and precept, wage war against our worst enemies, bigotry, ignorance, and superstition. While our beloved country in its united strength wields an influence for good over the entire world, so the Supreme Council of this jurisdiction, with its united subordinates, have a power to spread ineffable Masonic light, coequal with the government in which it has its home.
>
> "In faith and hope the world will disagree;
> But all mankind concur in charity.
> All must be false that thwart this one great end,
> And all of God, that bless mankind and mend."
>
> The Grand Lodge and Grand Master Masons of the State of Illinois.

To this toast, Sir Knight De Witt C. Cregier, Right Worshipful Deputy Grand Master of the State, responded as follows:

> Most Wise Knights, Ladies, and Brethren:
>
> "At the last annual assembly of this distinguished body, I had the honor to occupy a seat at the festive board. To-night, through the favor of Divine Providence, and your courtesy, it is my privilege again to mingle with you on this interesting occasion.
>
> "In obedience to your call to respond to the toast you have just announced, I shall not attempt to conceal the diffidence I experience in the presence of this brilliant assembly, constituting as it does those three great symbolic supports of Freemasonry—Wisdom, Strength, and Beauty, and which are so amply represented by the learned and skillful Craftsmen here present, and by the beautiful women who grace the occasion.
>
> "I was in hopes that the M. W. the Grand Master of Masons of our State, would have been present to-night to represent the Grand Lodge of which he is the head. The many years he has devoted to Masonry in Illinois, qualify him to do justice to the sentiment. He might have recounted to you the progress of Masonry; how, in numbers, wealth, and usefulness its growth has been co-extensive with that of our State; how, from a few score of noble men, whom we delight to call fathers, has grown an institution with 30,000 members and more than 600 lodges.
>
> The Grand Lodge of Illinois has heretofore been the recipient of honors from this body; to-night she receives renewed assurance of paternal respect and esteem from this beautiful branch, of which ancient craft Masonry is the root and the stock. These primary and essential elements to all Masonry, of whatsoever kind, or wheresoever dispersed over the great State of Illinois, are inherent in the Grand Lodge. They are the same to-day as in years past: they are full of health and vigor; they can not wither, but will continue to blossom through sunshine and storm, prosperity and persecution. The vitality and exuberance of this ancient and honored stem is demonstrated by the existence of the magnificent branch which so gracefully surrounds us to-night, and of which Cœur De Leon Sovereign Chapter appears neither a leaflet or a budlet, but a full grown and mature flower, worthy the root, worthy the stock, and worthy the position she has attained among the branches of the great Masonic tree.
>
> "It is hardly necessary to say that Freemasonry is deeply rooted throughout the civilized world, and everywhere it has one grand object in view, which, in the words of our own great and immortal Washington, is to promote the happiness of the human race. But in no part of the world is it more likely to attain this great end than amid the free institutions of the United States, for in Freemasonry of every degree the genius of liberty will ever find a zealous and earnest co-laborer. In Illinois the Craftsmen are rearing a temple whose four grand walls are Temperance, Fortitude, Prudence, and Justice. Its corner-stones are Morality, Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth. Its furniture is the Holy Bible, and high on the pinnacle waves its banner, upon which is inscribed the divine word—Charity. None can enter there who are not moral and upright before God, and of good repute before the world.

"The character of our home structure is second to none, its extent is excelled by only one on this continent, and we are too far advanced in the nineteenth century to have any doubt as to its stability, or to notice the futile attempts which are occasionally made to disturb its ponderous foundation.

"Bro. Chairman, to proceed and stick to the text, would be uninteresting; I therefore, in the absence of the M. W. Grand Master, thank you for the compliment you have extended to the Grand Lodge of Illinois."

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—Isa. 8, 20.

DECISIONS BY THE GRAND MASTER.

38.—There is no general rule, law, or usage, that makes it the general duty of the Junior Warden to prefer and prosecute charges. The lodge can make it his duty by a by-law to that effect, but we advise against it. The Master is charged with the government of the lodge, and in the absence of any by-law, he can assign the duty of preferring and prosecuting charges to the Junior Warden or any other member he may select.

39.—A member or visitor known to be intoxicated, applying for admission, should be refused, and subsequently reprimanded. It is the duty of the Master to protect and preserve peace and comfort in lodge hours.

40.—The vote of the lodge granting a demit severs membership. See Sec. 55, Grand Lodge By-Laws. The member so demitted, can not be re-admitted short of petition, reference, report, and unanimous ballot, as in other cases.

41.—A lodge U. D. has no trial powers. In case it should become necessary to prefer charges against any of its members, they should be preferred and prosecuted in the lodge of which the accused is a member, or oldest and nearest chartered lodge.

42.—If disputes and quarrels of any character exist in a lodge U. D., which can not be amicably and Masonically arranged, the dispensation should be returned. If such a condition of things should come to our knowledge, we should unhesitatingly revoke the dispensation.

43.—The petitions of rejected applicants should be returned to them with their money.

44.—A person rejected for any degree in Symbolic Masonry, in any symbolic lodge, can not lawfully be received into any lodge in Illinois without the unanimous consent of the lodge that rejected him, expressed by ballot.

45.—Query. If a brother demitted removes to another grand lodge jurisdiction, is he liable for dues, before he affiliates?

Ans.—That depends entirely upon the regulations of the grand or subordinate lodge within the jurisdiction of which he resides: The grand lodge can require it or forbid it; but in the absence of any grand lodge law, any lodge may require and enforce the payment of dues from all resident non-affiliates who have not applied and been rejected for membership.

46.—Query. If a non-affiliated Mason is guilty of unmasonic conduct, what lodge has jurisdiction over the offense?

Ans.—While unaffiliated, he is under the jurisdiction of the nearest chartered lodge; if he should affiliate before the charges are preferred, he may be tried in the lodge of which he is a member, or the lodge within whose jurisdiction he resides. In either case he may be suspended or expelled.

47.—In case application is made by any lodge for leave to entertain the petition of a rejected candidate, the leave should be granted unanimously by ballot at a regular communication, and no lodge should entertain a petition of a rejected candidate, until officially informed, that leave is unanimously granted BY BALLOT, at a REGULAR communication.

48.—Any Master Mason, member of a lodge, in good standing, has a right to prefer charges upon any matter affecting the general laws of Masonry, in any lodge in this jurisdiction; such, also, is the general usage, or common law of Masonry.

The Western Union Railroad

Familiarly known as the Scotchman's road, now runs trains regularly through from Racine, on Lake Michigan, in Wisconsin, southwestwardly via Freeport, to Savanna on the Mississippi River, and thence south via Fulton, to Rock Island, and makes important connections with Chicago, Milwaukee, Galena, and Dubuque, Iowa. Also with steamers at Savanna and Rock Island.

R. C. Tate, Racine, is the gentlemanly and successful superintendent.

Impostor.

GRAND SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 27, 1869.

By direction of the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, I hereby warn the Masonic Fraternity against an unworthy Mason, who, in January last, defrauded several lodges in this State by procuring from them money under false pretences. He passed sometimes under the name of BUTLER, and at other times under the name of THOMAS W. COLEMAN; but his true name is J. M. RYAN, as was afterwards ascertained by a letter addressed to his wife, Catherine Ryan, Chicago, Illinois, which was found concealed in the lining of his hat, when he was searched after being detected in his villainy. He represented himself sometimes as a member of Stranger's Rest Lodge, No. 240, Indiana, and at other times as of Eagle Lodge, No. 247, Missouri.

He is about 5 feet, 10 or 11 inches high, would weigh about 155 pounds; has light, sandy hair, high cheek bones; is rather slow to speak, when questioned, but talks fast when talking; has a slight brogue, and is an Irishman by birth.

J. M. S. MCCORKLE,
Grand Secretary.

Expulsion.

NOBLE, Ill., March 27, 1869.

Bro. Reynolds:

I wish you to publish the expulsion of Bro. EPHRAIM BEASLEY, of Noble Lodge No. 362.

We have heard of some money he has obtained already since this charge was brought against him. He was not here to defend the case, and is traveling; so we think it best to publish him.

Yours, fraternally,
A. J. MITCHELL,
Sec. of Noble Lodge No. 362.

ADAM H. BOWEN was expelled by Grant Lodge No. 272, Sedalia, Mo.

JAMES H. RICE, Secretary.

C. M. BABCOCK, by Wataga Lodge No. 291, March 10, 1869,

GEORGE B. SARGENT, by King Solomon's Lodge No. 197.

JAMES A. WAITE, by Marion Lodge No. 130, Sept. 23, 1868

Masonic Publications.

The Masonic Record, for April, is freighted with good articles. In its notice of Cumberland Lodge No. 8, at Nashville, it appears that the first dispensations in Tennessee were granted by the Grand Lodge of North Carolina. The famous lecturer, Wilkins Tannehill, was the first candidate who received the degree in said lodge. Edward Scott, who was at one time Grand Secretary, and a distinguished judge; his brother, Charles Scott, subsequently Grand Master of Mississippi, and Governors John Hall and Samuel Houston, were among the distinguished initiates of Cumberland Lodge.

The Voice of Masonry, for April, J. C. W. Bailey, editor, is at hand. "From Bethel to Nazareth" is one of the Holy-Land articles; also a cut representing the Washington street tunnel, in two sections, with a description of the same; extract from Bro. Goodall's report on correspondence in the Supreme Council; an oration by the editor before Chicago Lodge of Perfection; several of our decisions; a labored description of the refection of Cœur De Leon Chapter Rose Croix, and several minor articles.

The Masonic Token, published quarterly, 4 pages, by Stephen Berry, Portland, Me., dated April 1, contains the elections in 61 lodges, 5 chapters, 2 councils, and one commandery. It also contains a notice of the decease of Samuel Fessenden, P. G. M., which leaves but one of the survivors who assisted in forming the Grand Lodge.

The Masonic Record of Western India for February is full of news from different parts of India, has several valuable editorials, and several excellent selections from American publications; among them a poetical contribution to THE TROWEL, entitled "Diversities."

The Freemasons' Magazine and Masonic Mirror, published weekly at 19 Salisbury street, Strand, London, Eng., is a twenty-four page publication, of the same sized page of TROWEL. The number of March 27 has an article entitled "Masonic Celestial Mysteries," by Henry Mellville, which is to run through several numbers; also No. 13 Masonic Discipline, by Crux; Masonic Notes and Queries, by several writers; valuable and veritable accounts of the Palestine exploration; Memoranda of several charities; Metropolitan and Provincial News; Festivities, Obituaries, Amusements, and Meetings.

The Keystone, published weekly at 237—9 Dock street, Philadelphia, in paper and mechanical style surpasses any weekly that comes to our table. The number for April 10 has a "third paper" on the Holy Land, somewhat poetical and vivacious; also, a story entitled "A lump of Clay;" an editorial describing the ceremonies of constituting Mozart Lodge; a notice of Camden Lodge No. 15, N. J.; with lesser articles.

The Kentucky Freemason, for April, is a specimen number. A sermon by the editor at the funeral of Bro. Jacob Swigert; Masonry and Religion; the Whisky Fair; and Military Life in the Far West, are some of its leading articles. It gives a large quantity of good reading in short sentences, under the following heads: Literary Gems—Freebooter—Wit and Humor. No paper of any sort comes to us with a greater or better variety of literary matter. Grand Treasurer A. G. Hodges, and Rev. H. A. M. Henderson, editors. It is always welcome.

The Review, for February, is at hand. Why so tardy? Somebody described The Review as a "Scrap-Book." Let us test the truthfulness of this ill-natured charge. It has nine leading editorials or original articles, besides eight pages of "Tidings" in fine type. The selections, in some instances, are such items of news as one journal is expected to take in some form from another of kindred character, while its selections are pertinent and excellent. Bro. Cornelius Moore has served the Craft too well, and suffered too severely, to be unkindly treated; and we say, sincerely, that we hope the number who sympathize in the remark above named are few.

The Mystic Star, for April, announces another change of proprietorship. It is now published by Rev. John S. Hanna and Rev. James Billings, 144 Madison street, Chicago. The principal articles in the April number are: Masonry aggressive in Papal territory—Temperance, a Masonic tenet—Freeborn, its derivation, taken from The Monthly—Extensibility of Masonry—The softening influence of our Order—The Bourbons of Spain—Footsteps on the Stairs—Masonry beneficial to women, by Mrs. De Geer—and a tilt at us.

Bulletin of the Grand Orient of France, for January and February. The first contains a decree prescribing the duties devolving upon odges desiring to be represented in the General Assembly, among which we observe the following:

Each body must forward to the Grand Orient, within one month from the time of the general elections, the certificate of the election of their presiding officer, accompanied by his declaration in his own handwriting; also, within the first two months of the Masonic year, a complete list of its active members. Each body (lodge, chapter, or council) contributes one hundred francs to the Grand Orient, and, in addition, a special assessment is levied, upon the lodges only, to pay the mileage of representatives from the departments, which amounts, this year, to one franc and seventy-five centimes per member.

In default of representation by its presiding officer, each body may elect a representative, who must be 30 years of age, an active member of a year's standing, in possession of the highest degree conferred in the body he represents, and an actual resident within the jurisdiction of the same. The bodies in Algeria the French colonies, and foreign countries, are exempt from the latter provision.

The Bulletin also contains the proceedings of the "Council of the Order," and a full report of the "winter fete" of the G. Orient.

There is now no longer any legitimate lodge of the Memphis Rite in France, the two last lodges having renounced it, and obtained permission to work the French Rite. There is, however, a spurious body at Marseilles.

Our brethren in France are giving a great deal of attention to popular education, and are doing a good work in that direction.

The February number of The Bulletin contains more variety, but the items are mostly local. From it we learn that our Jewish brethren are proscribed in the lodges in Denmark.

Le Monde Maconnique for March, is also at hand, full to repletion of news from all parts of France, and the outside world as well. From it we glean the following items:

The Grand Orient of Belgium has elected P. Van Humbeek, representative from Brussels, Grand Master.

Frederico Campanella has been elected Grand Master of the Supreme Council (Scotch Rite) sitting at Palermo, Italy. Several of the lodges in that country have changed the question, usually addressed to the neophyte, "What are your duties to God?" to the following: "What are your duties to your country?"

The Dispatch, Courier, and several other papers, with Masonic Departments, come regularly to hand.

The Evergreen for May, is out in good time. The leading editorials relate to the meeting of the next Grand Lodge, Negro Masons, etc. "Between Succoth and Zeradatha" is a good article, and Comp. Langridge writes a sensible and reasonable communication in regard to the status of Iowa in the General Grand Chapter. "The status of a Mason Under Charges," by Bro. W. R. Penick, of St. Joseph, Mo., we indorse in full. Our John is not of THE TROWEL. Harman G., Jr., publishes THE TROWEL. Please note this, Bro. Evergreen. John is Deputy under Bro. Miner.

The Freemason, of St. Louis, is at hand. "If you were in his place," is a singular article for a captious man to write. "Balloting for Membership" is out of place in a Masonic paper. The views of the editor in support of grand lodge jurisdiction are conservative and Masonic. The selections are excellent, and are quite equal to those of the Masonic Review. Bro. Gouley is a good editor. He is given to superior airs, and, like the favorite on the plantation, he can do a good deal, but no one can serve all.

The great bane of Masonry in Europe seems to be a mania for reform. Every brother, instead of being satisfied to take Masonry as he received it, and transmit it unimpaired to his successors, seems determined to engraft upon it his own political or theological views, and change it to suit his peculiar ideas of "progress." We think, to use an American phrase, that some of our brethren over the water have "reform on the brain." Does it ever occur to them that what they call "progress" may appear to others as retrogression? If we might be permitted to offer a suggestion, it would be that our brethren in Europe, as the first "reform," abolish all political and theological discussions in their lodges, and require of every candidate a simple belief in God—whether the God of the Hebrew, the Mahometan, or the Christian—prohibitiug no man's admission on account of his religion, but requiring that he shall have some religion. Let them do this, and the "millenium of Masonry" they are so ardently longing for, will come sooner than they expect.

The foreign editor of "Le Monde Macomique," under the head of "America," has the following:

> "It is not inappropriate to mention here the unfortunate division which exists among American lodges, and which has its source in the most odious prejudice—the prejudice of color—and an unfortunate spirit of antagonism. Thus, the two German lodges of New York, and the negro lodges of Boston, are considered by all the other lodges as irregular; the former, because they were established by the European Grand Lodge of Hamburg, and the latter because they are derived from the African lodge No. 459, established in 1784, in virtue of a warrant, recalled too late, from one of the Grand Lodges of England. The excommunication which closes these last lodges is caused by the prejudice, still so strong in the United States, against the people of color. The Germans are not negroes, but the hostility of the Americans is provoked against the lodges of German origin because of their incontestible superiority"!!

Really, Messieurs, this is too amusing. We knew that Frenchmen were remarkable for fertile imaginations, but this exhibition of their wonderful powers in that line far surpasses anything we ever knew them to be capable of. In all seriousness, we would say that the matters alluded to do not disturb American Masonry in the least. At no period, and in no country, has the Fraternity been more prosperous than it is in America at the present time.

◆

Death of Bro. Simri Rose, Grand Secretary Grand Lodge of Georgia.

It is with sadness we announce the death of Bro. Rose, which event took place on Sunday morning (April 4th), in Macon, Ga. From the Journal and Messenger, of which he was one of the editors, we extract the following:

> In 1845 Mr. Rose was elected Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Masons in Georgia, an office which he held at the time of his death, and to which he was almost unanimously chosen every successive year.
>
> Mr. Rose married Miss Blount, of Clinton, Jones county, who, with four children, survives him.
>
> His funeral was preached yesterday at the Mulberry Street Methodist Church, by Rev. E. W. Warren, of the Baptist Church, in the presence of one of the largest audiences ever seen in Macon. He was buried with Masonic ceremonies, and his remains followed to the grave by that Order in large numbers, all the surviving members of the Macon volunteers, Macon Typographical Union No. 84, and numerous friends who mourn his death almost as that of a relative. Peace to his ashes!

Miscellaneous Reading.

Landing a Trout.

We sat for several minutes in silence watching. At last, some fifteen rods away, a magnificent fish shot up out of the water after a butterfly which chanced to be winging its way across the lake, and missing it by only a few inches, fell back with a splash into the very ripple he made in rising.

"Now!" shouted John, as he sent the light boat skimming over the water, "give him the feathers, and if he takes, sink the hook to the very shank into his jaws."

I pitched the coil into the air, and by the time it had fairly straightened itself out the boat was in reach of the wake; and obedient to the quick turn of the wrist, the huge fly leaped ahead. It had not reached the surface by a yard, when the water parted and out came the trout, his mouth wide open, quivering from head to tail with the energy of the leap; missed, as he had before, and fell back flat upon his side.

"Quick, quick! cast away!" shouted John, as with a stroke of a paddle he sent the boat sheering off to give me room for the cast.

Feeling that there was not an instant to lose, by a sudden jerk I caused the fly to mount straight up into the air, trusting to the motion of the boat to straighten the slack as it fell. John understood the motion; the boat flew round as on a pivot, and glided backward under the reversed stroke. It was well done, as only John could do it; nor was it a second to soon; for as the tuft of the gay plumes alighted amid the ripples, the huge head of the trout came out of water, his mouth opened, and, as the feathers disappeared between his teeth, I struck with all my might. Not one rod in twenty would have stood that blow. The fish was too heavy even to be turned an inch. The line sung, and water flew out of the compressed braids, as though I had sunk the hook into an oak beam.

Reader, did you ever land a trout? I do not ask if you ever jerked some poor little fellow out of a brook three feet across, with a pole six inches around at the butt, and so heavy as to require both hand and feet well braced to hold it out. No, that's not landing a trout. But did you ever sit in a boat, with nine ounces of lance-wood for a rod, and two hundred feet of braided silk in your double-acting reel, and hook a trout whose strain brought tip and butt together as you checked him in some wild flight, and tested your quivering line from gut to reel-knot? No one knows what game there is in a trout, unless he has fought it out, matching such a rod against a three-pound fish, with forty feet of water underneath, and a clear, unimpeded sweep around him! Ah, then it is that one discovers what will and energy lie within the mottled skin of a trout, and what a miracle of velocity he is when roused. I love the rifle, and I have looked along the sights and held the leaping blood back by an effort of will, steadying myself for the shot, when my veins fairly tingled with the exhilarating excitement of the moment; but if one should ask me what is my conception of pure physical happiness, I should assure him that the highest bodily beatitude I ever expect to reach is, on some future day, when the clear sun is occasionally veiled by clouds, to sit in a boat once more upon that little, lake with John at the paddle, and match again a Conroy rod against a three-pound trout. That's what I call happiness!

Well, as I said, I struck; and, as we afterwards discovered the huge salmon-hook was buried to the shank amid the nerves which lie at the root of a trout's tongue. Then came a fight for the mastery such as never before had I waged with anything that swims. Words should have life in them to depict the scene. Quick as a flash, before I had fairly recovered my balance, partially lost by the energy with which I struck, the trout started, and before I could get a pressure upon the line, not twenty yards were left on the reel. A quick stroke from John, and the boat shot one side; and bearing stoutly on him, tasking the rod to the last ounce of resistance, I slowly swayed him about and recovered a little slack. After a few short sweeps he doubled on the line and shot straight for the boat as an arrow from the bow.

"Double, and be hanged to you!" shouted John, as he shied the light shell to one side and swung it round so as to keep me facing the fish. "If you get under this boat it will be because this paddle breaks."

Failing in his attempt to run under us, he dove to the bottom. "Let him rest a moment," said John; recover your line; you'll need it all when he rises. He's big and ugly, and his next rush will be like lightning."

After I had stowed away some forty yards of line upon the reel, winding it on hard and evenly, so that it would render well, I began to feel of the fish. The first pressure elicited only a shake. At the next he described a circle, still keeping to the bottom, then came again to a stand-still. He acted ugly. I felt that, when the rush came it would try nerve and tackle alike. Enjoining John to watch the fish and favor me all he could, and by no means to let him pass under the boat, I gave a quick, sharp jerk. My arm was still in the air and the rod unstraightened, when I caught a gleam far down below me, and before I had time to wink the huge fellow parted the water almost within reach of my arm, and when high up in mid-air he shook himself, the crystal drops were flung into my very face. Perhaps I shall live long enough to forget the picture, as that trout for an instant hung in the air, his blue back and azure sides spotted with gold and agate, his fins edged with snowy white, his eyes protruding, gills distended, the leader hanging from his jaws, while a shower of pearly drops were shaken from his quivering sides. He fell; but while still in air the boat glided backward, and when he touched the water I was thirty feet away and ready for his rush. It came. And as he passed us, some forty feet off, he clove the water as a bolt from a cross-bow might cleave the air. Possibly for five minutes the frenzy lasted. Not a word was uttered. The whiz of the line through the water, the whir of the flying reel, and an occasional grunt from John as the fish doubled on the boat, were the only sounds to be heard When, suddenly, in one of his wildest flights, the terribly taxed rod, straightened itself out with a spring, the pressure ceased, the line slackened, and the fish again lay on the bottom. Wiping the sweat from my brow, I turned to John and said, "What do you think of that?"

"Mr. Murray," replied John, laying the paddle down and drawing the sleeve of his woolen shirt across his forehead beaded with perspiration, "Mr. Murray, that fish is ugly; if he should get the line over his back, he'd smash the rod like a pipe-stem!"

"He won't get it over his back," replied I. "Ready with your paddle; he's getting too much breath."

"But I say," said John, looking affectionately at the rod as he took up the paddle; "if I was in your place, and he did get the line over his shoulder, I would part my tackle before I smashed that rod."

"I won't do either, John;" and as I answered I gave a jerk, and the trout started again. But why repeat? Why tell of flights and rushes which followed? Twice did he break the surface a hundred feet away, flinging himself out like a black bass. Once did he partially get the leader over his back and dashed away like lightning; while John, anxious to save so true a rod from ruin, shouted to me, "Part the gut!" But who ever know a fisherman, when his blood is up, refuse a risk to save the game? I screamed to John to shoot the boat one side; and when the last foot of silk was given I advanced the butt. The heavy fish and pliant rod were pitted one against the other. Three days later, in another struggle, the old rod parted; but this time it triumphed. For a moment the quivering tip rattled upon the bars of this reel. The fish struggled and shook himself, but the tenacious fibres would not part. He ceased to battle, came panting to the surface, and rolled over upon his side. The boat shot toward him, and as it glided by John passed the landing-net beneath him, and the brave fighter lay upon the bottom board. His tail, across its base, measured five inches; and his length from tip to tip was seventeen inches and three quarters."—Murray's Adventures in the Wilderness.

The Coming Eclipse.

Prof. C. Abbe, Director of the Cincinnati Observatory, gives some particulars of the great eclipse of the sun, which will take place on the 7th of August next, and will be visible throughout the United States:

Beginning on the earth at sunrise on the 7th of August, at a point in Asia, north of China Proper, it passes northeast, and culminates at noon at Sitka, Alaska; then sweeps southeast near Omaha, over Lexington, Ky., and Beaufort, N. C., leaving the earth at sunset at a point in the Atlantic a little southeast of the latter city.

It is evident that if we stand within the central dark shadow and look upward at the sun, we shall find the luminary entirely covered by the moon and hidden from view for a few minutes during the middle of the eclipse. If we, however, stand within this central shadow, we shall behold the moon, at the maximum of the eclipse, and projecting on the sun and hiding only a portion of its disc; an appearance similar to that which precedes and succeeds the total obscuration, as seen by those situated on the central path.

In the eclipse of August, 1869, the central shadow will have a varying breadth of about 100 to 115 miles, and will extend 9,000 miles, passing from southwest to the northeast, and then bending to the southeast. The breadth of the penumbra within which there will be a partial eclipse, will, however, be about 9,000 miles, reaching from the equator, and Sandwich Islands and Japan, up to beyond the North Pole. In order that we may hope to observe, under favorable conditions, the more interesting phenomina of a solar eclipse, we must be upon the central line of the totality. For the eclipse of the approaching 7th of August, 1869, the central line will pass over Sitka, Alaska; and over Sioux City, Des Moines, and Burlington, in Iowa; over Macomb, and Springfield, in Illinois; New Albany, Indiana; Louisville and Lexington, in Kentucky; Arlington, Virginia; and Beaufort, North Carolina.

The Whiskey Fair.

The "Cynthiana Democrat," which claims to be the "Organ of the Bourbon Whisky trade," proposes a "Whisky Fair"—a month or so before the beginning of the next distilling season. And this, says the Democrat, is "a move in the right direction, in the right time, and at the right place."

If the fair is held, let there be premiums offered for the best (?) young drinkers, and the best (?) aged drinkers. Let the mothers of the boys be present—and, also, the haggard wives, and broken hearted daughters of the old topers. They will take a mournful interest in the contest. Let the judges be the bar-keepers, who have enticed the one class to their cups, and encouraged the other to perseverance in dissipation. When they have decided upon the successful candidate for dram drinking honors, let them, if they can, congratulate the weeping mother, and the pale and sorrowing wife, and the daughters in whose hearts hope has died.

Let the young fellow, with his blue ribbon flying, go reeling round the ring for the cheers of the bloated spectators, while the band plays "Johnny fill up the Bowl."

Then fill the successful old toper with whisky—until his eyes glare with lightning, with which he shocks his home and its shrinking hearts—until his fist is clenched and strikes, as it often does, those whom, of all others, he ought to protect—until his mouth pours fourth curses like a storm-cloud does thunder-claps—until every feature is aglow with the advertisements of the hell that burns in his breast, and when the accomplished beast is thus at the height of his debauch, with blue streamer flying, and the premium bottle of whiskey under his arm, let him stagger around the arena for the delectation of the crowd—while the band plays and the delighted spectators join in the chorus of the drinking song in Lucretia Borgia,

> "It is better to laugh than be sighing
> While old Time's moments are flying."

The spectators will be apt to see that there is poison in the cup.

Before the fair comes off send out the illustrated catalogue. We will suggest some designs. Paint a home, once a miniature paradise, rifled of its sweetnsss, and now the haunt of wretchedness; contrast the blooming bride, as she stood at the hymenial altar, with the wan and wasted woman, hugging to her heart a babe, that she may warm again the love that has been chilled by the cruelty of a perjured, drunken husband; paint an empty larder, a scanty wardrobe, and a fireless hearth; paint, if you can, the misery of that abused wife, as she trembles as she hears the unsteady steps of her approaching husband; open the door—see the affrighted woman crouching in the corner, and warding off the drunken blows, that else would fall on her child; at length paint death holding his awful court—the wife and child weltering in blood, and the besotted assassin swinging from the gallows of outraged justice. Give us the above in panoramic pictures—and the hiddcn meaning of the fair will be made more apparent, and very convincing that it is "a move in the right direction, in the right time, and at the right place."

Show the public these things at the same time that you show them the laughing graces of the ruby-beaded whisky, or else your proposed exhibition will not be a Whisky Fair.

We would further suggest that before the Fair closes, in order that its benefits may be made more apparent, that all the whisky on exhibition be gratuitously distributed for the enlivenment of the crowd—then let the whooping, swearing, fighting throng empty itself into the streets of the "Maiden City," and hold a night's orgies, and the next morning the people of Cynthiana will think that it is not "the right place" for the Whisky Fair.

Would the "Organ of the Whisky Trade" like to have a serenade from its friends that night?

Imagine his response—"Gentlemen: I depreciate the histinguished donor you have defered upon us, (hiccup) on this oc-oc-asion (Loud cries—intermingled with oaths—of "let us take a drink.") Fellow-citizens, We are *organ*ically affected as you seem to be, and we'll adjourn to the grocery, where we will sing,

> "Bring me, boy, a flowing bowl,
> Deep and spacious as the sea;
> Then shall every noble soul
> Drink and fathom it with me.
> While we revel in delight,
> E'er to part would be a sin
> And since care is put to flight,
> Drink and fill the bowl again."

The next morning the Organ will be "played out."—Kentucky Freemason.

Moneys Received for Masonic Trowel,

FROM APRIL 3D, TO APRIL 30TH, 1869, INCLUSIVE.

$1.25 each.—C. P. Austin, J H. Atwood, C. H. Bell, J. K. Bashforth, A. J. Cheney Jas. Cozad, J. L. Dewey, F. Edwards, H. N. Edwards, John Ferguson, Elijah Filley, Geo. L. Huntington, H. F. Holcomb, F. M. Linton, A. H. Lee, Jas. Montooth, A. G. Manahan, J. Punter, Geo. Russell, L. Rush, F. H. W. Rudland, J. S. Sweeney, G. K. Thompson, E. L. Wahl.

$2.50 each—Peter Bogue, M. S. Bowman, Thos. Humble, J. Howard, Wm. Keal, J. E. Pettibone, E. Reed, J. W. Riley, T E. Tortat.

$3.75 each—W. H. House, Wm. M. Towell.

$5.00 each—B. F. Church, J. L. Dewey.

$8.75 each—J. H. Bouve.

$10.00 each—Samuel Rawson, A. L. Virden, W. R. Walpole, J. W. Banker.

$1.00 each—T. W. Cochran, H. L. Currier, I. T. Dement, W. H. French, J. Keyes, La Harpe Lodge, J. Marvin, R. H. Mead, Jas. McKelvey, O. B. Richardson, S. O. Stillman, H. Tyrrell, Daniel Weston.

$2.00 each.—J. L. Cox, A. French, James Philp, E. S. Pope, Daniel Shears, Noyes Spicer, J. W. Whitehead.

$3.00 each.—W. B. Armstrong, W. H. Reid.

$4.00 each.—Louis Blohm, S. Crossett, J. M. Whitehead.

$6.00 each.—J. S Duncan, G. M. Smith.

$7.00 each.—A. F Kane, W. D Vawter.

$8.00 each.—B. Kersey.

Other Sums.—J. W. Aiken, $12.00; R. H. Blake, $1.50; S. Cochrane, $1.40; A. C. Hardin, 65c; Geo. Mason, $8.50; L. S. Sampson, $1.10; H. A. Turton, $1.15; C. M. Thayer, $1. 50; C. R. Thompson, $17.00; W. S. Vail, 50c.

R. ORENDORFF,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Business Solicited in the State and Federal Courts.

4v8–6m*

WANTED.—For a Grand Lodge Library, the Proceedings of 1840, 1841, 1842, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848, 1849, 1852, and 1853, Grand Lodge of Illinois, for which a fair price will be paid, in cash goods, or for TROWEL, if sent to us by first of April next.
H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

AGENTS WANTED
To Sell Dr. Wm. Smith's
BIBLE DICTIONARY,

CONTAINING over one thousand closely printed, double-column, octavo pages, from new electrotype plates, on good paper, and is appropriately illustrated with over two hundred engravings on Steel and Wood, and a series of fine authentic Maps.

This DICTIONARY embodies the results of the most recent study, research, and investigation of about sixty-five of the most eminent and advanced Biblical scholars now living. Clergymen of all denominations approve it, and regard it as the best work of the kind in the English language, and one which ought to be in the hands of every Bible reader in the land.

It is a great library in itself. The labor and learning of centuries are gathered in this one volume, to throw a clear, strong light upon every page of the inspired word.

AGENT'S WRITE—It is the easiest book to sell they ever offered. ONE SAYS: "I have taken 300 orders in one town and vicinity." ONE GENTLEMAN SAYS: "I have been connected with the Sabbath School FORTY-NINE YEARS, and know of no book that will aid the Teacher and Student so much as this." ONE AGENT REPORTS 55 ORDERS taken the first three days of his canvass. ANOTHER, 212 in TEN days. A lady writes: "I find the Dictionary a good book to deliver. Everybody is satisfied with it, and as it becomes known, more want it." For particulars, send for Circulars and testimonials. Address,

JONES, JUNKIN & CO.,
167 South Clark St., CHICAGO, ILL.,
Or NATIONAL PUBLISHING CO.,
Cincinnati, Ohio.
5v7–1t

FACTS FOR BUILDERS.

Every Carpenter, and those interested in Building, can save time and money by consulting our Practical Architectural Books. Descriptive catalogues sent free to any address.

A. J. BICKNELL & CO.,
Publishers, Springfield, Ill.
4v8–3t*

THE ILLINOIS STATE REGISTER.—Published at Springfield, Ill., by E. L. Merritt & Bro., is the Central Democratic paper of Illinois. Daily, per annum, $10.00; Daily, six months, $5.00; Weekly, yearly, $2.00. Money sent by Express or in Registered Letters at our risk. Address
6-6
E. L. MERRITT & BRO.

H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.,
25 SOUTH FIFTH ST.,
SPRINGFIELD, - - ILLINOIS,
Dealer in
Masonic Manuals of all Kinds.

MASONIC, HISTORICAL,
and
LITERARY WORKS.

DIPLOMAS,
for all
Branches of the Order.

BLANKS & BLANK BOOKS
For Every Possible Use in LODGES, CHAPTERS, COUNCILS,
and
COMMANDERIES.

ALL KINDS OF
OFFICIAL JEWELS,
OFFICIAL AND DRESS REGALIA,
FURNITURE, CHARTS,
and
PICTURES
FOR LODGES & CHAPTERS.

Knight Templar Equipments,
&c., &c., &c.

PRINTING & BINDING,
OF ALL KINDS,
DONE TO ORDER,
At as Low Rates,
AND IN AS NEAT STYLE,
as done by any
PUBLISHING HOUSE
IN THE WEST.

CATALOGUES,
Containing Prices and Descriptions, sent free, by mail, to any address.

STEREOTYPING.

I am prepared to do
STEREOTYPING
Of all kinds, at as low rates and as good style as it can be done in Chicago or St. Louis.

VIRGIL PRICE
MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Manufacturers of all kinds of
Masonic Materials, Swords,
BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.,
No. 144 GREENE STREET,
NEW YORK.

Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO
KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.

Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords.
1v8-1y

WESTERN UNION RAILROAD. Short and direct route to all points in Central Iowa, Central and Northern Wisconsin, and all parts of Minnesota. Trains on this road make close connection with trains on the Illinois Central Railroad at Freeport, and also with trains on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad at Clinton Junction and Racine Junction.

2v7
R. C. TATE, Superintendent.

GREAT PLATTE VALLEY ROUTE.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD!

Overland Mail, Express, and Telegraph Line,
OPEN FROM OMAHA TO BENTON, 595 MILES
from the
Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains.

On and after Sunday, July 26, 1868, the Union Pacific Railroad will run

Two Daily Passenger Trains

between Omaha and Benton, connecting at Omaha direct with the CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN R. W.
for
ALL PRINCIPAL EASTERN CITIES,
and with the
COUNCIL BLUFFS & ST. JOSEPH R. R.
FOR ALL POINTS SOUTH.
At Cheyenne, direct connections are made with Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Overland Mail Coaches, for Denver and Santa Fe!
and all points in
COLORADO AND NEW MEXICO;
And at Benton for Salt Lake and all points in
UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA,
AND CALIFORNIA.

PULLMAN'S PALACE SLEEPING COACHES
On Night Trains.
Good Eating-Houses along the Line.

PASSENGERS CROSSING THE PLAINS
by taking this road,
WILL SAVE 200 MILES STAGING
And 48 Hours Time.

C. D. WHITCOMB, Gen. Ticket Agt.
W. SNYDER, Gen. Supt.
S. H. H. CLARK, Gen. Freight Agt.
t12–v7

THE ILLINOIS JOURNAL.—PUBLISHED Daily and Weekly at Springfield, is the only Republican newspaper printed in the State Capital. It is the Official State Paper, and the Weekly edition penetrates every county. Subscription prices: Daily, $10.00 per year; Weekly, $2.00. Address,
THE JOURNAL COMPANY,
Springfield, Ill.
6-6

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, JUNE 15, 1869. NO. 6.

Poetry.

The Fountain of Youth.

A Dream of Ponce de Leon.

We copy the following magnificent poem from the Onward for June, 1869; it is only a fair specimen of the literary character of this fine magazine. There is an erroneous opinion among many of the people of this country that the Onward is published for boys; it is a magazine for young men and women. We wish that every young man in this country who loves our Republic and despises a monarchy would subscribe for the Onward.

Address "Captain Mayne Reid, Post Office, New York, box 19."

I.

A story of Ponce de Leon,
  A voyager, withered and old,
Who came to the sunny Antilles,
  In quest of a country of gold.
He was wafted past islands of spices,
  As bright as the Emerald seas,
Where all of the forests seemed singing,
  So thick were the birds on the trees;
The sea was as clear as the azure,
  And so deep and so pure was the sky,
That the jasper-walled city seemed shining
  Just out of the reach of the eye.
By day his light canvas he shifted,
  And rounded strange harbors and bars;
By night, on on the full tides he drifted,
  'Neath the low-hanging lamps of the stars.
Near the glimmering gates of the sunset,
  In the twilight empurpled and dim,
The sailors uplifted their voices,
  And sang to the Virgin a hymn.
"Thank the Lord!" said De Leon, the sailor,
  At the close of the rounded refrain;
"Thank the Lord, the Almighty who blesses
  The ocean-swept banner of Spain!
The shadowy world is behind us,
  The shining Cipango, before;
Each morning the sun rises brighter
  On ocean, and island, and shore.
And still shall our spirits grow lighter,
  As prospects more glowing unfold;
Then on, merry men! to Cipango,
  To the west, and the regions of gold!"

II.

There came to De Leon the sailor
  Some Indian sages, who told
Of a region so bright that the waters
  Were sprinkled with islands of gold.
And they added: "The leafy Bimini,
  A fair land of grottoes and bowers,
Is there; and a wonderful fountain
  Upsprings from its gardens of flowers.
That fountain gives life to the dying,
  And youth to the aged restores;
They flourish in beauty eternal,
  Who set but their foot on its shores!"
Then answered De Leon the sailor:
  "I am withered, and wrinkled, and old;
I would rather discover that fountain,
  Than a country of diamonds and gold."

III.

Away sailed De Leon the sailor:
  Away with a wonderful glee,
Till the birds were more rare in the azure,
  The dolphins more rare in the sea.
Away from the shady Bahamas,
  Over waters no sailor had seen,
Till again on his wondering vision,
  Rose clustering islands of green.
Still onward he sped till the breezes
  Were laden with odors, and lo!
A country embedded with flowers,
  A country with rivers aglow!
More bright than the sunny Antilles,
  More fair than the shady Azores.
"Thank the Lord!" said De Leon the sailor,
  As feasted his eye on its shores.
"We have come to a region, my brothers,
  More lovely than earth, of a truth;
And here is the life-giving fountain—
  The beautiful fountain of youth."

IV.

Then landed De Leon the sailor,
  Unfurled his old banner, and sung;
But he felt very wrinkled and withered,
  All around was so fresh and so young.
The palms ever-verdant were blooming,
  The blossoms e'en margined the seas;
O'er the streams of the forests, bright flowers
  Hung deep from the branches of trees.
"Praise the Lord!" sung De Leon the sailor;
  His heart was with rapture aflame;
And he said: "Be the name of this region
  By Florida given to fame.
'Tis a fair, a delectable country,
  More lovely than earth, of a truth;
I soon shall partake of the fountain—
  The beautiful fountain of youth!"

V.

But wandered De Leon the sailor
  In search of that fountain in vain;
No waters were there to restore him
  To freshness and beauty again.
And his anchor he lifted, and murmured,
  As the tears gathered fast in his eye,
"I must leave this fair land of the flowers,
  Go back o'er the waters—and die."
Then back by the dreary Tortugas,
  And back by the shady Azores,
He was borne on the storm-smitten waters
  To the calm of his own native shores.
And there he grew older and older—
  His footsteps enfeebled gave proof—
Still he thirsted in dreams for the fountain—
  The beautiful fountain of youth.

VI.

One day the old sailor lay dying
  On the shore of a tropical isle,
And his heart was rekindled with rapture,
  And his face lighted up with a smile.
He thought of the sunny Antilles,
  He thought of the shady Azores,
He thought of the dreamy Bahamas,
  He thought of sweet Florida's shores;
And when, in his mind, he passed over
  His wonderful travels of old,
He thought of the Heavenly country,
  Of the city of jasper and gold.
"Thank the Lord!" said De Leon the sailor,
  "Thank the Lord for the Light of the Truth!
I now am approaching that fountain—
  The beautiful fountain of youth!"

VII.

The cabin was silent. At twilight
  They heard the birds singing a psalm;
And the wind of the ocean came sighing
  Through orange groves fragrant with balm.
The sailor still lay on his pallet,
  'Neath the low hanging vines of the roof:
But his soul had gone forth to discover
  The beautiful FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH.

◆

To-Day and To-Morrow.

BY J. L. M'CREERY.

Awake, my soul! with eager zeal
  The daily task beginning;
For labor hath its pleasures real,
  And doubly worth the winning.
What though, with toil and care oppressed,
  The day seem long and dreary?
We should not know the joy of rest
  If we were never weary.
Then up! and banish sloth away,
  Nor care nor trouble borrow,
For patient, earnest toil To-day
  Wins triumph for To-morrow.

For God designed that man should gain
  His living by his labor;
And he far worse than lives in vain
  Who lives upon his neighbor.
Though lily hands and costly clothes
  Are often won by shirking,
Still "natures noblemen" are those
  Who earn their bread by working.
Then up! and banish sloth away,
  With labor brave and thorough;
For those too proud to work To-day,
  May beggars prove To-morrow.

What though the heedless crowd around
  May greet you with their laughter?
It proves that they have never found
  What we are seeking after;
The lofty joy, the pure delight,
  That lights the path of duty—
That makes the earth about us bright,
  And life a thing of beauty.
Then up! and banish sloth away,
  At work-bench or in furrow;
Let others laugh at us To-day—
  We'll laugh at them To-morrow.

This lesson Nature still instills,
  As well as Revelation—
That everything created, fills
  Some chasm in creation;
There's not a grass blade in the vale,
  Or flower that looks to heaven,
To which, could we but read the tale,
  Some use has not been given;
Then up! let us of nobler clay,
  From these a lesson borrow;
For sloth and idleness To-day
  Will bring regret To-morrow.

The meanest worm that crawls the dust,
  Before its life is ended,
Accomplishes the purpose just
  For which it was intended;
Think ye that man alone hath been Placed in the world to mar it?
Shall we live, and our fellow-men
  Be none the better for it?
No! let us lend a feeble ray
  To light the gloom of sorrow;
For we, who proffer aid To-day,
  May need the same To-morrow.

We each can make, though small and weak,
  The world a little brighter;
With every cheering word we speak,
  Somebody's heart is lighter;
And should misfortune be our share,
  With grief and pain attended,
Each pang with patience let us bear—
  We know 'twill soon be ended;
Though rough and thorny be our way,
  And paved with pain and sorrow—
Though we may sow in tears To-day,
  We'll reap in joy To-morrow!

—Iowa Temperance Standard.

◆

The Quip.

The merry world did, on a day,
  With his train bands and mates agree
To meet together where I lay,
  And all in sport to jeer at me.

First, beauty crept into a rose;
  Which, when I plucked not, "Sir," said she,
"Tell me, I pray, whose hands are those?"
  But thou shalt answer, Lord, for me.

Then money came; and, chinking still,
  "What tune is this, poor man?" Said he,
"I heard in music you had skill."
  But thou shalt answer, Lord, for me.

Then came brave glory puffing by,
  In silks that whistled, who but he!
He scarce allowed me half an eye:
  But thou shalt answer, Lord, for me.

Then came quick wit and conversation,
  And he would needs a comfort be;
And, to be short, make an oration:
  But thou shalt answer, Lord, for me.

Yet when the hour of thy design
  To answer these fine things shall come,
Speak not at large; say, I am thine:
  And then they have their answer home.

Herbert.

◆

Except thou desire to hasten thine end, take this for a general rule, that thou never add any artificial heat to thy body by Wine or Spice, until that time hath decayed thy natural heat; and the sooner thou beginnest to help Nature, the sooner she will forsake thee, and leave thee to trust altogether to Art.

Sir Walter Raleigh.

As I approve of a youth that has something of the old man in him, so I am no less pleased with an old man, that has something of the youth.—Cicero.

A native grace
Sat fair proportioned on her polished limbs,
Veiled in a simple robe, their best attire,
Beyond the pomp of dress, for loveliness
Needs not the foreign aid of ornament,
But is, when unadorned, adorned the most.

Thompson.

Communications.

For The Trowel.

Pleasant Occurrence.

Last evening a very pleasant occurrence took place in Temple Lodge No. 46, Peoria. A desire has long existed among the members of that lodge, to express, in some appropriate manner, their regard for their Secretary, Dr. N. S. Tucker, a faithful and well tried officer, who has had the keeping of their records for more than twenty years.

Some weeks since an arrangement was made with Mr. Wilson, to paint a portrait of the Doctor, that should be suspended in the lodge as a perpetual memorial of the esteem in which he is held by his brethren. After the usual routine of business had been transacted, Past Master John E. McDermott, of Temple Lodge, came forward and presented the portrait to the Fraternity. The following contains the substance of his remarks:

Worshipful Master: I have often found myself placed in a position where I felt the need of a qualification for an orator, or public speaker, but never have I felt that necessity more deeply and keenly than on this occasion. But as my education in that respect has been sadly neglected, I will simply say that it affords me the greatest pleasure to be the medium of presenting to the Masonic Fraternity this portrait of our faithful, esteemed, and respected Secretary. I present it with pleasure, because it is a merited tribute to a worthy officer, who, for many years, has faithfully and correctly performed all the duties of his arduous and responsible station. May it ever remind us that we should equally well and promptly perform those duties which are incumbent on us, in our several stations.

Bro. Tucker responded to the call of the brethren, as follows:

Brethren: I return you my most sincere thanks for the great honor you have bestowed upon me, in placing my portrait in the lodge among those who have been deemed worthy, of the living and the dead, whose faces adorn the lodge room. I trust that I may always so act, as never to make it necessary to turn it to the wall, or remove it from that eminence which you design it shall occupy.

After these ceremonies were performed, Mr. John Todhunter, an old Mason, who many months ago was severely hurt by a fall, and has been suffering from his wounds ever since, and some of the time apparently near the grave, in a most feeling manner addressed the brethren assembled, thanking them with his whole heart for the many evidences of fraternal regard which had been afforded him, since his affliction. The meeting was throughout one of unusual interest.

Transactions Examined.

ARKANSAS.

Grand Lodge.—Held at Little Rock, Nov. 16, 1868. M. W. Bro. E. H. English, Grand Master.

We have no apologies to make for transferring the following beautiful and suggestive passages from his address to these pages:

Much of the more interesting features of Masonry are legendary, transmitted to us through successive generations of Craftsmen, from the earlier ages of the world—from ages when there was no printing, when book making was rare, books were few, and men learned wisdom from the great Book of Nature.

Not long since a venerable Hebrew brother told me a story, which I had never heard before; and which he said he learned, when a boy, in the fatherland, from his aged uncle, who was a Mason, and who assured him that he had it in a very ancient parchment manuscript, which had never been printed. Pleased with the story, I said to him that I would tell it to the Grand Lodge some day, and let it be printed, as it was no secret. So I give it to you now for what it is worth. It is the story of Solomon, the Raven, and the Worm.

Solomon, the Most Wise, was sitting in a grove near his rural palace, observing a raven feeding her young. Whilst she was off in search of food, telling a servant to bring him a glass bowl, he placed it over her nest so as to cover the young birds. When she returned to the nest, the young ravens opened their mouths to receive the supplies which the mother was accustomed to bring them; and she, meeting with the transparent obstruction, fluttered about it for sometime in vain attempts to reach her imprisoned children. Vexed, she made repeated but ineffectual efforts to break the vessel with her beak. Despairing of success in this mode of attack, she lighted upon a limb, near by, and sat for sometime, seeming to meditate. Then leaping into the air, and spreading her black wings, she moved off with rapid flight in the direction of an island in the Mediteranean Sea. Our Grand Master, who had watched with interest all her movements, sat waiting for her return. Finally she came, bearing in her beak a large white worm; and placing it on the rim of the nest, near the edge of the bowl, it crawled over the vessel, and along its track the glass instantly cracked, as if cut by a diamond, parted, and fell to the ground!

The Masons are in the quarries preparing stones for the temple. They used the drill and the wedge, but the process of parting the stones by these simple implements was tedious. The idea flashed upon the mind of Solomon that, by the instinct of the raven, Providence had placed in his hands a wonderful, but more effective instrument. Taking the worm to the quarries, he placed it upon a great stone which the laborers had heaved out from the mountain; it crawled across it, and, to the amazement of the wise man, the stone opened along its path and tumbled apart. Thousands of stones were thus separated into suitable rough ashlers, to be finished by the chisels and the mallets of the craftsmen!

It is a prevailing opinion that if a man can neither read nor write, he is necessarily uneducated. But this does not follow. Adam never had a book, and yet he must have been a man of wonderful intelligence, to have given names to the infinite variety of objects which surrounded him—the names expressing too the peculiar nature of each object, as Josephus tells us, who insists that he spoke the Hebrew language.

I have often wondered how Methuselah, who lived nearly a thousand years, spent the long winter nights without the use of books. But he perhaps, like Abraham, was an astrologer, and employed much of his time watching the movements of the stars. He lived centuries enough to see the great comets go and return upon their wonderful flights. It is to the early watchers of the stars that the world is indebted for the discovery that the heavens are divided into constellations, and that the constellations resemble familiar objects.

The learned Maury, in his Physical Geography of the Seas, says that Job well understood, and expressed in a few simple lines, the aqueous system of the globe; the courses of the great winds; and the distribution of stars in the immense fields of space. Job said the north was empty, and so the Masons say the north is a place of darkness.

There are some mysteries, however, which neither the beasts of field or forest, the fowls of the air, the fishes of the sea, nor earth, with her ten thousand tongues, can solve. But of much of them as man need know, is unfolded by the Great Light which lies upon every Masonic altar; and whilst Masons are to be students of the Book of Nature, the Book of the Law is not to be neglected. There is a tendency in this age to follow the dim light of reason into forbidden paths, and build up theories by a system of inductive philosophy, which tends to shake the faith of man in the truth of the simple enunciations of the Bible. Far along these paths, which lead into a shoreless and unfathomable sea. Hugh Miller strided, and struggled, in his masterly effort to reconcile the simple Mosaic account of creation with a geological theory, until his brain was fevered, frenzied, and gave way; and he died just as he made the finishing strokes of his pen upon his great work, called the Testimony of Rocks. There are some mysteries which neither the Bible nor the rocks unfold to man; but there are mysteries enough within his reach to employ all the years allotted to him here. In that life beyond the grave, symbolized by the ever-blooming acacia, he may obtain more light upon the hidden mysteries.

The goose is usually employed as a symbol of simplicity. A silly man is called a goose. Yet the wild geese manifest so much wisdom, that they might, with propriety, have a place upon our carpets as well as the bee hive. They navigate the air, for thousands of miles, by day and by night, with unerring accuracy, without a compass; coming south on the approach of winter, to avoid the rigor of the season in the north, and returning in the spring, to raise their young in wild, rugged districts, unfrequented by man. The flocks usually fly in the form of a triangle, with the point forward, thus cleaving the air more easily than they would in a straight line, and enabling all the flankers to observe the movements of the leader. No Arkansas hunter ever caught a flock of geese feeding upon a sand bar, without one with his long neck erect, watching as a sentinel!

Some say that which we call wisdom, in the goose is but instinct! And what is instinct? Why not call it reason? Why not let the goose have a soul, and live again? Space is infinite, and the worlds are unlimited in number. Why not, then, let the goose have some green land, where he can crop his grass undisturbed by the gun of voracious man, and bathe in never-freezing rivers!

The bee-hive is a prominent symbol in the third degree. The bees are wise little craftsmen. They are skilled in mathematics, for the form of their cells, the hexagon, is a figure best adapted to compactness and solidity. They have a king and a queen, and in this they harmonize with the prevailing usage of man in all ages and countries.

It is not, however, in the form of government that Masons imitate the bees, for we keep the queens on the outside of the lodges, and have no kings in blue masonry. The form of our government is republican, and the Craftsmen have always elected the Grand Masters, Masters, and Wardens of the lodges. But we have no candidates in our elections, and no partisan races, hence we have no fuss and wars about the results.

The bee hive is placed upon our carpets as a symbol of industry; and the non-working Masons are our drones; and we appreciate them as little as the bees do the lazy members of their family, who are fond of eating, but reluctant to labor.

In the spring time, and through the summer, among the flowers and along the running brooks, how actively the bees toil in collecting materials to lay up food for the winter, when the flowers are blasted and the brooks are frozen. Let the slothful man profit by the example. The bees labor for food only; all else is supplied to them. But the Mason must toil for bread, for raiment, for shelter, and for KNOWLEDGE. He comes into the world naked, and destitute of all ideas; and some go out of it, in advanced age, but little improved; while others, with no greater natural endowments, but in the exercise of more industry, acquire vast stores of knowledge.

My brethren, you are the representative Masons of the State. Have the Craftsmen of your lodges, during the last twelve months, imitated the industry of the bee-hive, in the active pursuits of life, in the acquisition of useful knowledge, and in the doing of works of Masonic charity? How many hours have you labored, and how many have you wasted doing nothing? If one hour, it is gone forever. Time flies like the weaver's shuttle, and life flows like the sands of the hour-glass, and is soon gone. If we would accomplish much, we must labor while it is day, for the night cometh, when no man can work!

DECISIONS.

Though I have employed perhaps nearly one-fourth of my working hours, during the last twelve months, in corresponding with the subordinate lodges of this jurisdiction on questions of Masonic law and usage, yet my responses to the numerous questions propounded to me have been usually taken from the old constitutions, and the standard works on Masonic jurisprudence; and hence there are but few of my decisions that need be laid before you for revision.

A keeper of public money who is willfully a defaulter, is guilty not only of a violation of the civil law, but of gross immorality, and, if a Mason, may be charged and tried for such immorality. But the lodge should not try him until his defalcation has been legally ascertained by the civil authorities; and then, with the lodge, it is a question of morals.

Where a member of a chartered lodge signs a petition for a dispensation for a new lodge, and the dispensation is granted by the Grand Master, his membership in the chartered lodge is thereby suspended—placed in abeyance—he is quasi demitted. When the Grand Lodge grants a charter to the new lodge, his demission thereby becomes complete and absolute, and his membership is transferred to the new lodge; but if the Grand Lodge refuse a charter, and withdraw the dispensation, then his membership in the chartered lodge is revived; and his dues, which ceased to run on the granting of the dispensation, commence again on its withdrawal.

MASONIC HISTORY.

At your last communication, Bros. L. H. Roots, William Byers, and E. N. Hill, were appointed a committee, to which the Grand Master was added, to collect the materials, and prepare a history of Freemasonry in Arkansas.

Nearly forty years ago, when Arkansas was a wilderness, Masons coming with the tide of immigration, commenced building their temples in this territory, and increasing rapidly in numbers, strength, and usefulness, have been making materials for history. Most of the pioneer Masons have departed; some of them yet remain far advanced in age; and from them is to be obtained such facts connected with the early history of Masonry in the State, as are not to be gathered from the rolls and records of the grand and subordinate bodies. Such materials as depend for their preservation upon the lives and memories of these aged Craftsmen, should be collected as soon as possible; but it will require time, industry and perseverance to secure them. In collecting these materials the committee require the aid of active and intelligent local brethren; who should also examine with care the early records of their lodges, and take from them and forward to the committee, such facts as are worthy of a place in a history of Masonry. Will the representative men of the Order bear this in mind, and engage in this labor when they return home? To the younger Craftsmen, I may be permitted to say a word of admonition. If a history of Masonry is to be written, what do you desire to be said of you? Simply that you were a member or an officer of some lodge? If you would have a monumental page in history, you must do something worthy to be written, and of interest to be read by those who shall come after you. Acts of charity, and benevolence, the acquisition and diffusion of useful knowledge, and the building up of the social institutions of communities, are more worthy of commemoration by > the pen of the historian, and by monuments of brass and marble, than the deeds of those who command devastating armies, or manage the intrigues of political parties.

The Grand Secretary made a very full report, and accounted for $4,588.

The Committee on Charters and Dispensations make full report of all inaccuracies, errors, and informalities in returns.

The Grand Lodge decided that in cases of trials, none but the prosecutor and the accused, or his representative, should comment upon the testimony—that where a difficulty existed between a member and a candidate for advancement, the latter could be stopped until the difficulty was settled.

A past Grand Masters jewel was voted to Bro. English, worth $250.

St. John's College is flourishing, and is favorably regarded by the citizens of Arkansas.

E. H. English was elected Grand Master; John Hill, S. G. Warden; M. W. Locke, J. G. Warden; W. D. Blocher, Little Rock, G. Secretary; R. L. Dodge, G. Treas.; S. W. Williams, G. Lecturer; David Nichols, G. Orator.

Logan H. Roots was appointed S. G. D.; H. McCallum, J. G. D.; Rev. T. R. Welch, G. Chap.; G. McGowan, G. Marshal; Chas. Kantorowitz, G. Pur.; F. J. Cameron, G. S. B.; C. W. Belknap, I. C. Hicks, G. Stewards; James Tunnah, G. Tyler.

The use of Masonic emblems upon signs, or in advertisements, as a means of inducing business, was condemned and forbidden.

Bro. C. B. Moore prepared the report on correspondence. In speaking of Illinois, he alludes to the meeting of 1868. The proceedings noticed, as should be, are those of 1867. The address of Grand Master Gorin was highly commended and several extracts were taken from it. One hundred and eighty-four lodges return 7,676 members; average, 42. But two lodges have over one hundred members.

Grand Chapter.—Held at Little Rock, Nov. 12, Luke E. Barber, G. H. P. He says but little about matters at St. Louis, but that little expresses much. His address is solid and substantial, but lacks the vim and variety of the polished and learned English. The Mark degree was conferred by Comp. English, as an exemplification of work. The other degrees were subsequently conferred by the same companion.

Elections and Appointments.—Luke E. Barber, G. H. P.; E. N. Hill, Deputy; E. R. Du Val, G. K.; G. A. Dannelly, G. S.; W. D. Blocher, Little Rock, G. Sec.; Loui George, G. Treas.; Rev. P. G. Robert, G. Chap.; G. McGowan, G. M.; S. B. Fesmire, G. C. H.; C. W. Millard, G. P. S.; W. K. Dobbins, G. R. A. C.; C. R. Barham, J. F. Boseman, W. E. Mills, G. M. Veils; James Tunnah, G. Tyler.

Decided, that where a member of a chapter dies in a condition of lodge non-affiliation, that he chapter should bury him agreeably to its own ritual.

Comp. English, on behalf of the Grand Chapter, presented the Grand High Priest a Past Grand High Priest's jewel. After an elegant presentation address by Comp. English, the G. H. P. responded; the closing part we transcribe:

> The names of the sons of Jacob, representing the twelve tribes of Israel, were engraved upon the breast-plate of Judgment, which was worn by the High Priest on his heart, when he entered the Holiest, as a memorial of the people before the Lord. These may well be considered as symbols of this Grand Chapter; and I will ever wear them on my heart as a memorial of the honor you have conferred upon me, the remembrance of which will, I assure you, fade only with my life. The symbol of eternity, and that immortality reserved for us all, encircling the emblem of the resurrection, to which you, sir, have so eloquently alluded, are here: but the Urim and Thummim are not. May the light, and the purity, and integrity of which they have been supposed to have been emblems, and which are fitly symbolized in the triple-triangle, ever be yours, my companions, and mine; and may our names be found engraved in characters of living light on His breast-plate of Judgment and of Life, when he shall make up His jewels.

The Treasurer accounted for $2,438.94; credits, $1,891.50; balance, $547.44. Samuel W. Williams presented the correspondence report.

Sitting where we can overlook our garden, and where much work needs to be done, we have "let all holts go," until we finish up Comp. Williams, and if we want to make one extract, we do twenty; so we omit them all.

FLORIDA.

Grand Chapter—Met at Tallahassee, Jan. 13, 1869. William Morrill, G. H. P. The transactions require no comment, being entirely local. James Ellenwood was elected G. H. P.; William Morrill, Deputy; Charles Stager, G. K.; M. M. T. Hutchinson, G. S.; T. P. Tatum, G. Tr.; Hugh A. Corley, Tallahassee, Grand Secretary; William A. McLean, G. Chaplain. Grand Treasurer's debit, $682; balance over credits, $243.

Thirteen chapters made returns; membership, 510; average, 39.

Grand Council.—Met at Tallahassee, Jan. 14. William Morrill, G. M.

The proceedings of Illinois receive a handsome notice from the Committee on Correspondence.

William Morrill was elected Grand Master; Edward Bradford, Jr., Deputy; Jesse T. Bernard, D. P. G. M.; J. A. Edmundson, P. G. M.; T. P. Tatum, Grand Treasurer; Hugh A. Corley, Tallahassee, Grand Recorder; Rev. James A. Harrold, Grand Chaplain; John L. Taylor, G. M. C.; William H. Nelson, G. C. G.; George Damon, G. C.; Edward M. West, G. S.

No published statistics, and but four councils represented.

IOWA.

Grand Chapter.—Meeting Oct. 16, 1868. J. W. Satterthwaite, Grand King, presiding.

The G. H. P., H. H. Hemenway, not being able to be present, forwarded his address, which was read.

Thirty-three chapters were represented.

The G. H. P. reported six dispensations granted for new chapters; also, several dispensations for other purposes, together with a complete account of his visitations and official acts.

The G. Treasurer's debits showed $3,344.93; balance over credits, $689.95.

Substitutes were forbidden. Pitkin C. Wright, of DeWitt, was elected G. H. P.; C. S. Rollin, Decorah, G. K.; Cole Noel, Adel, G. S.; O. P. Waters, Muscatine, G. Tr.; W. B. Langridge, Muscatine, G. Secretary.

The next meeting will be held at Mt. Pleasant, Oct. 20. J. W. Satterthwaite was appointed D. G. H. P.; J. A. Baderick, Grand Chaplain; S. H. Packard, G. C. H.; G. W. Cook, G. P. S.; E. A. Guilbert, G. O.; G. R. Foster, G. R. A. C.; J. N. McClanahan, Benj. Crabb, L. I. Coulter, Masters of Veils; Theodore Schreiner, Grand Tyler.

The following report, presented by M. E. Comp. Leffingwell, was unanimously adopted:

> In relation to the power, duties, and prerogatives of the Deputy Grand High Priest, in the absence of the Grand High Priest, your committee are firmly of the opinion that all the powers possessed by the Grand High Priest must of necessity, in case of his absence, fall upon the Deputy, for this among other reasons: The Priesthood was alone confined to the tribe of Levi, and no one not of that tribe was permitted to aspire to or assume the duties and responsibilities of the High Priesthood under any pretence whatever. Not even the king, under the Mosaic law, although clothed with absolute power over his subjects, was allowed to meddle with the duties of the Priesthood, or even to touch the vestments thereof, without incurring the displeasure of the Almighty. Even the ark of the covenant was not allowed to be borne or touched by any except by those of the tribe of Levi, and Uzzah, for his temerity in putting forth his hand to steady the ark, was struck dead, and Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, for their presumption in assuming the prerogatives of the priestly office, met with a similar fate. With these views, your committee believe that the Deputy Grand High Priest, being an appointment from the Grand Council for a specific object, and not the King, should preside in the absence of the Grand High Priest.

A gold High Priest's jewel was voted to Comp. Hemenway, for his faithful and meretorious services; a proper tribute.

Forty-four chapters report 1,688 members; average, 38.

M. E. Comp. Horace Tuttle still presides over the Council of High Priests.

LOUISIANA.

Grand Chapter.—Held at New Orleans, Feb. 9, 1869. Samuel M. Todd, G. H. P.

In his address, the G. H. P. alludes in complimentary terms to the transactions at St. Louis, and although the delegate from Louisiana voted against the admission of the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia, still, they advise Maryland to accede to the act and abide the decision.

The Grand Treasurer accounted for $2,098.60; balance remaining over credits, $515.20.

Joseph P. Horner presented the report on correspondence.

The following officers were elected and appointed: Samuel M. Todd, G. H. P.; S. G. Parsons, Deputy; R. G. Sterling, G. K.; Hugh Breen, G. S; H. R. Swasey, G. Treas.; J. C. Batchelor, G. Secretary; Rev. T. B. Lawson, G. Chaplain; J. P. Hornor, G. C. H.; Eugene Tisdale, G. P. S.; E. Hamburger, G. R. A. C.; R. Girard, W. F. Haifleigh, R. S. Burk, Masters of Veils; R. S. Burk, G. Tyler.

All correspondence and fraternal relations with the Grand Orient of France were discontinued, and recognition forbidden to any Mason in that jurisdiction.

Twenty-four chapters return 1,400 members; average, 58. Three chapters in New Orleans have 516 members.

MISSOURI.

Grand Chapter.—Held at St. Louis, Oct. 7, 1868. Martin Collins, G. H. P. We take the following extracts from his eloquent address:

> I take pleasure in welcoming the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Missouri to Freemasons' Hall, a new temple which has sprung up, as if by magic, during your absence. After a long struggle with doubt and misgiving, the builders triumphed over all obstacles, and we now assemble in a noble edifice, the result of their faith and untiring energy. It is an enterprise entirely worthy of the enlightened spirit of Masonry in Missouri, and a consummation long hoped for and long needed.
>
> I lately had the pleasure of receiving, in the name of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Missouri, the General Grand Chapter of the United States, which met in this hall in its triennial convocation on the 15th ult. These most excellent companions from abroad were welcomed in the true Masonic spirit, and they responded with great cordiality to our hospitalities. A banquet was given, under the auspices of the Grand Chapter of Missouri, to the General Grand Chapter, at which many of the distinguished Masons of the country were present by invitation; and the representatives of every branch of Masonry, from every section of the United States, met together on that occasion and exemplified "How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." There was good cheer and good fellowship, and the cohesive power of our Brotherhood was beautifully illustrated by the perfect harmony which prevailed. This was the first social re-union to which our new Masonic building was dedicated, and for its sumptuous character and complete success I am greatly indebted to your efforts, and the assistance of the various chapters throughout the State. I only regret that all the members of this Grand Chapter could not participate with us on that occasion.

During the past month, the brotherhood of St. Louis witnessed what may be termed a national assembly of Masons, embracing representatives from every State in the Union. The gathering together of the Fraternity from all sections of our great country was a joyful sight to us. The effect was simply grand. The numbers were overflowing. This was cheering; but it was not all. The true Masonic spirit was there, pervading every heart, and dictating every thought and act. This was noble, and demonstrated that we were indeed a powerful organization, an harmonious brotherhood, one people in spirit and in truth.

I would recommend as a means of preserving the bonds of fraternal union and companionship living and bright all over this wide land of ours, the judicious appointment of representatives of this grand body to all grand chapters with which we are in Masonic communion. These would constitute links of a more intimate fellowship, whose influence would be palpably felt, both by ourselves and the whole membership of other jurisdictions where we may be so represented. The ties of a pure, unselfish brotherhood can not be too closely drawn, or too jealously guarded.

Elections and Appointments.—Orren Root, Jr., G. H. P.; R. E. Anderson, Deputy; Lewis F. Weimer, G. K.; S. W. Mitchell, G. S.; J. D. Daggett, G. Treas.; George F. Gouley, St. Louis, G. Sec.; Rev. J. D. Vincil, G. Chaplain; A. M. Dockery, G. C. H.; R. H. Huzza, G. R. A. C.; John Geekie, G. Guard.

The G. Treasurer reported debts $6,840.86; balance over credits, $3,423.66.

The Grand Secretary presented the report on correspondence. It is very unlike his report in Grand Lodge, and reminds of a "little story:"

A good lady had a favorite preacher at dinner, which was good and plentiful, but agreeably to the fashion commenced making excuses for want of variety and proper preparation. The preacher listened until it seemed to be necessary to say something. "Why, my dear sister," said he, "I'm sure it is good enough, what there is of it;" perceiving that it didn't sound right, he mended the matter greatly by saying, "and there is enough of it, such as it is."

Thirty-nine chapters reported 2,014 members; average, 52. The next meeting will be held in St. Louis, Wednesday, Oct. 6.

Grand Commandery.—Held at St. Louis, Oct. 5. George Frank Gouley, Grand Commander. The most of his address is devoted to denunciation of the Supreme Council Scottish Rite of the Southern Jurisdiction. The time will come when his remembrance of his treachery and perfidy to that body will cause the most poignant grief and keen anguish.

Elections and Appointments.—James F. Aglar, G. Com.; John D. Vincil, Deputy; James Carr, G. G.; D. P. Wallingford, G. C. G.; Rev. W. M. Rush, G. Prelate; W. N. Loker, G. Treas.; Geo. Frank Gouley, St. Louis, G. Rec.; P. B. Groat, S. G. W.; Washington Jones, J. G. W.; Wm. Bosbyshell, G. S. B.; F. H. Lewis, G. St. B.; W. H. Stone, G. Warder; John Geekie, G. Sentinel.

Sir Knight Aglar is an accomplished and graceful commander, and is well skilled in tactics, evolutions, and drill. Balance in treasury, $601.67.

The report on correspondence is very short.

Ten commanderies report 413 members; average, 41. In the notice of Sir Josiah Hunt, his rank is stated as Past Grand Generallisimo. We think he ought to have his proper rank, that of Past Grand Commander of Illinois. We know of no rule that should prevent this, and we ask if true knightly courtesy does not require it?

MINNESOTA.

Grand Chapter—Held at St. Paul. Luther Dearborn, G. H. P. His address was an able one. What is said of the meetings at St. Louis, has been substantially repeated before.

After deducting all credits, the Treasury showed a balance of $855.05. The Grand Chapter has suffered the loss of its furniture, clothing, and library, by fire. The Grand Secretary acknowledges the receipt of documents and printed matter, to aid in recuperating the library, from Iowa, California, Louisiana, Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama, Canada, Mississippi, Missouri, and Illinois.

Elections and Appointments.—Moses W. Getchell, G. H. P.; E. D. B. Porter, Deputy; G. W. Merrill, G. K.; E. A. Groff, G. S.; G. L. Otis, G. Treas.; W. S. Combs, St. Paul, G. Sec.; Rev. C. G. Bowdish, G. Chap.; H. A. Billings, G. C. H.; W. H. Grant, G. P. S.; S. R. Merril, G. R. A. C.; C. J. Paddock, C. G. Ayres, S. J. Prentiss, G. M. of Veils; A. Richardson, G. Sent.

Past Grand High Priest Pierson presented the report on correspondence. It is such a piece of work as might be expected from him. He knows how, and all reports from his pen are worth reading, and, what is more, are complete and valuable. His notice of Illinois is very full, and he takes a whack or two at us. He says we do not act as well as we write. After looking over the report, we find considerable slashing that we did not look for. He makes Iowa appear very naughty. It will be remembered that Iowa withdrew because the G. G. Chapter had surrendered a portion of its powers. Comp. Pierson says that Iowa contributed four votes to do that thing. This looks very much like taking advantage of one's own wrong. Under Wisconsin, MEMPHIS gets some. He says it amounts to putting your thumb to your nose and ungracefully wagging your fingers. In that talk, he says it was an Illinois Justice of the Peace who said "there was no law against making a fool of himself." That is true enough, but it was no less a man than Gov. McMurtry. A certain ex-member of Congress will not forget it so long as he lives.

NEVADA.

Grand Lodge.—Held at Virginia, Sept. 15, John C. Currie, presiding, We can find no better matter for our brethren than the following extracts:

> We meet with unbroken ranks; the dread Archer—Death—whose shafts our brethren in other jurisdictions have been called upon to deplore, has not, during the year, visited this Grand Lodge. I have to congratulate you, also, upon the fact, that although our numbers have increased slowly, yet the material worked into the building has been of excellent quality. The brethren have made a judicious use of that potent safeguard, the black-ball, and unworthy blocks have been, with a firm hand, thrown over among the rubbish.
>
> I desire to say a few words touching the propriety, or rather impropriety, of Masonic testimonials; a custom which, by its universal character, belongs to this age and country, and which I feel called upon to condemn. It creates a suspicion that there is some hidden reason for it. Its gushing spontaneousness is an empty pretense, and the surprised recipient, responding to the unexpected favor, either has the manuscript speech in his pocket, or a well-conned speech flows from his lips, declaring his inability to express the tumultuous emotions of his appreciating heart. I have frequently observed that the testimonial tide sets toward those who are in office or who have patronage to dispense. Workmen do not combine to present a token of esteem to a fellow for his excellent performance, although he may be the most deserving man in the world; may have done that which gives credit to, or confers a great benefit on his class. No one thinks, in such a case, of a testimonial, especially if he have the modesty accompanying true merit. There ought not to be in Masonry any of this pandering to the corrupting sentiment which thus absorbs what is the due of the widow and orphan and distressed worthy brother. I once knew of a testimonial, much talked of in Masonic circles, where the recipient was himself a large subscriber to the token. Other instances there are where the token was borrowed or hired for the occasion. Let these things never occur among us. Let your truly worthy brothers who merit "testimonials" decline them, and thus save the credit of our Fraternity, and assist in promoting the purity and usefulness of our honored Institution.

The Treasurer's debit is $1,904.71; balance after credits, $944.29. Robert H. Taylor presented a splendid report on correspondence. Three pages are devoted to Illinois, and several extracts are given. The Grand Lodge of Idaho, was recognized and welcomed.

Elections and Appointments.—George W. Hopkins, G. M.; R. T. Mullard, Deputy; George Robinson, S. G. Warden; David Cohn, J. G. Warden; S. H. Robinson, G. Treas.; Wm. A. M. VanBokkelen, Virginia, G. Sec.; Rev. Cornelius Yager, G. Chaplain; R. H. Taylor, G. Orator; Jas. Inch, G. Marshal; Michael Fitzgerald, G. St. B.; Adolph Waitz, G. Sw. B.; C. F. Brant, G. Bible B.; Chas. McDuffie, S. G. D.; Wm. A. Walter, J. G. D.; Robert Robinson, H. L. Fish, G. Steward; James Locher, G. Pur.; E. S. Kincaid, G. Tyler. Twelve lodges return 921 members; average, 77.

Virginia Lodge No. 3, (formerly 162, California) has 153 members; Silver Star No. 5, formerly 165, California) has 127, and Escurial (formerly 171) has 146 members.

NEW JERSEY.

Grand Lodge.—Held at Trenton, Jan. 20. Henry R. Cannon, G. M. His address is an excellent paper, relating in the main to the business of the year.

Cash accounted for, $6,949.95; credits, $4,943; balance, 2,006.95.

Elections and Appointments.—Henry R. Cannon, G. M.; Robert Rusling, Deputy; W. E. Pine, S. G. Warden; A. R. Thockmorton, J. G. Warden; W. R. Clapps, G. Treas.; Joseph H. Hough, Trenton, G. Sec.; H. E. Phelps, Deputy; Rev. H. Vehslage, G. Chap.; A. A. Ward, S. G. D., J. W. Bentley, J. G. D.; J. W. Allen, G. M.; J. L. De LaCour, A. N. Norton, G. Stewards; S. S. Stiles, G. S. B.; G. H. Pancoast, G. Pur.; A. Howell, G. Tyler.

The Grand Secretary presented a very full and thorough report on correspondence. Although points are quite strongly put, and the statement too far-fetched for judicious practice, still there is much in the following extract which demands consideration:

> There is a very prevalent, and, as we think, a very erroneous idea, that Masonry requires from its votaries, moral perfection. There is no warrant in the history, the traditions, or the ritual of the Craft, for such an assumption. On the contrary, the Institution of Masonry recognizes the frailty of human nature, and the necessity of fraternal co-operation and assistance to keep the weak and erring in the straight path. When a Master Mason, in a moment of weakness, excitement, or temptation, has fallen from his high estate, it is too often the case that his "unco-righteous" brother, who may have violated, in a less obtrusive manner, the spirit of his obligation twenty times, where the offender has violated its letter once, will immediately sit down and prepare charges. In so doing, he is frequently guilty of a flagrant violation of his own vow. He forgets that, under such circumstances, his first duty is to support a falling brother, and whisper good counsel in his ear. Too much care can not be taken in the examination of the worthiness of a candidate before his admission. A lodge accepts a member much like a man does his wife, "for better, or for worse." We, by no means, intend to be understood by this remark, as intimating that a lodge has not the power, and that it is not often its duty, to exercise its power of discipline to its fullest extent. But we do mean to say, that the relation existing between Mason and Mason is such, that it should not be severed for slight reasons, and not until the utmost resources of charity have been exhausted. We repudiate the idea entertained by some, that the only duty which a lodge owes to an erring brother, is the duty of suspension or expulsion.
>
> "Strike a man when he's down, again and again!
> By the fist of thy father, I blush for thee, Ben!"

Ninety-six lodges return 7,729 members; average, nearly 81.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

United States.—Grand Lodge U. S. held at

Baltimore, Sept. 21. James P. Sanders, Grand Sire, presiding. The Grand Lodges and Grand Encampments of Alabama, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, District of Columbia, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, Mississippi, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin; the Grand Lodges of Arkansas, California, Florida, Minnesota, North Carolina, Nebraska, Ontario, Oregon, Texas, Vermont, and the G. E. of S. C. were represented.

The amount of revenue collected for year ending September 1, was $18,373.02, besides $2,132.00 for Southern Relief Fund. The sum of $18,373.02 was derived from sales of Rebekah, Charge, Degree, Encampment, Installation, Institution, Grand Lodge, and Grand Encampment books, digests, revised journals, cards, odes, diplomas, tracts, and forms for degree lodges sold. The remainder is paid by the grand lodges and grand encampments. A subsequent supplementary statement increased the last named sum to $29,630.86.

The G. Treasurer accounted for $50,785.17. Disbursements, $31,684.35, leaving a balance of $19,100.82. From this sum was subsequently taken the sum of $15,144.70 for milage and per diem, leaving a real balance of $3,956.12.

E. D. Farnsworth, of Tennessee, was elected Grand Sire; F. D. Stuart of District of Columbia, Deputy; and James L. Ridgeley, of Maryland, Grand Secretary.

Illinois Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F.—Held at Alton, Oct. 13. J. F. Alexander, Grand Master.

The report of Grand Secretary Willard, shows 16,403 additions, 14,407 losses; net gain, 1,996. Paid by the lodges for relief, education, and burials, $19,276.65.

The report of the Grand Treasurer shows, balance last year, $6,922.29; received from Grand Secretary, $12,977.35; Total revenue, $19,899.64; credits, $9,926.13; balance $9,973.51.

Elections and Appointments.—Dr. J. Ward Ellis, Chicago, Grand Master; T. W. Floyd, Deputy; T. B. Needles, G. W.; Samuel Willard, Springfield, G. Sec.; A. S. Barry, G. Treas.; H. S. Herr, J. F. Alexander, G. Reps.; Wm. Edwards, G. Chap.; R. K. Dewey, G. M.; J. D. New, G. C.; E. Cleghorn, G. G.; C. W. Schirmer, G. H.

We thank G. Sec. Willard for copies of reports.

New Hall in London.

The London Freemason's Magazine brings an account of the inauguration of the new Masonic hall and building in London. The editor says:

On Wednesday last the great event which has for so long a period occupied the attention of the entire Masonic Craft of Great Britian, was celebrated in a manner commensurate with the interest which has been manifested in reference to it. The large hall was completely filled by members of the Craft from all parts of the kingdom, and the brilliancy of the scene is without a parallel in the history of Masonic proceedings. The enrichments of the great hall, from henceforth destined to be devoted exclusively to the celebration of Masonic rites, must be described on some future occasion, but for the present it may suffice to say that the entire fittings are of the most gorgeous character, and it reflects the highest credit upon the committee, by whom they have been carried to completion. We can not refrain, however, from noticing now the splendid addition made to the Grand Lodge of those magnificent chairs formerly used by the Earl of Moira, and his predecessors, which were for some years laid aside, but have now been redecorated, and were used for the first time on this occasion.

At the banquet, after the usual toasts to the Royal family, the Grand Master, the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, was toasted with great enthusiasm, and he responded eloquently as follows:

Brethren, I will ask you to afford me for a few minutes, by your silence, an opportunity of expressing my feelings on this occasion. I can assure you that I find it very difficult to do so, for the kindness with which I have been received this day, not only compensates me for my trouble and anxiety for the last twenty-five years I have been Grand Master, but it renders it most difficult to express my gratitude for the kind support you have given me during that long period. I may say in reference to the admirable speech delivered by Bro. Havers in the Temple, when he complimented me that an honor had been conferred upon Freemasonry by my having served so long as Grand Master, but I consider that Freemasonry has conferred a great honor on me, in electing me for twenty-five times as Grand Master. I can assure you, brethren, that I never conceived that I conferred an honor upon Freemasonry, but I do conceive that Freemasonry has done me a high and unmerited honor in electing me so often as Grand Master, and I can assure you I feel, in the inmost recesses of my heart, that I can never do sufficient to repay the good opinion you have formed of me. If I could have done ten times as much, it would be more than I had a right to do. I wish I could have done more; but, as far as my talents and labor have enabled me, I have done what I believe to be the best. I assure you that I feel proud of this day; I feel proud of the compliment you have paid me in inviting me to preside at the inauguration of this building at the end of 25 years, and after what has been accomplished for Free masonry. I am fully aware that very little merit is due me for what has taken place, except that I have done all in my power to build a temple adequate to the wants of Freemasonry, and separate Freemasonry from the influences of the tavern. By the efforts of the building committee, and the good sense of the Grand Lodge, this great act has been accomplished, and I trust for the benefit of Freemasonry in ages to come. I shall not live to see it, but I hope my name may go down with what has been done, and I shall bear with me to the grave, the recollection that for 25 years I have presided over the great Craft of English Freemasons; and I have great pleasure in drinking success to this building and all concerned with it.

The Grand Master said:—Brethren, it is now my pleasing duty to propose a toast, which I am sure needs no recommendation of mine. The toast to which I invite your attention is "The Health of the Grand Masters of Scotland and Ireland." That is a toast that is given on every occasion of our great meetings, but it is not then given as now when we are not only honored by the presence of the Grand Master of Scotland in person, but we are also honored by the presence of the Deputy Grand Master of Ireland. If it had been possible, we should have been honored by the presence of the Grand Master of Ireland, but I have received a communication from him, stating that in consequence of his Masonic duties in Ireland it would prevent him from coming over, as he did us the honor of attending on the occasion of laying the foundation stone. With regard to the Grand Master of Scotland, I need not say one word, as he is well known to the greater part of those present, as one who for so long occupied the post of Deputy Grand Master, and I am sure he is worthy of the great acclamations, you will amply and cordially bestow upon him. As to Sir Edward Burroughs, the Deputy Grand Master of Ireland, he has done us the honor to come from Ireland to attend on this occasion in the name of the Grand Master of Ireland.

◆

Romanism and Masonry.--Now and Then.

The Abbe de Segur, one of the dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church, at Amiens, France, having promulgated a document in denunciation of Freemasonry, as antagonistic to church communion, M. Houssaix, by the way of rejoinder, publishes some very curious historical documents, exhibiting the good estimation in which, a century ago, the priests of Amiens held the Fraternity, in common with other good Catholics. In the first place, he quotes from the official narrative of the commissioners appointed on April 24, 1774, to install the lodge at Guise, in that district: "We arrived at the Orient of Guise at ten in the morning, and alighted, in accordance with a gracious invitation extended to us, at the Convent of the Minime Fathers, whose Superior received us with a hearty welcome. He made known to us, by words and signs, the fact of his being a Mason, and we subsequently recognized him as the Venerable (Master) of the aforesaid lodge at Guise." Among the charter members of the new lodge appears the name of Charles Francois Cavarines (Superior of the Minime Monks), W. M.; Father Loth (Minime Friar), Orator; Louis Descaroin (Minime Friar), Father Menechet (Canon of Ovigny). Father Loth, the Orator of the lodge, celebrated the installation with an eloquent address, during the course of which he said: "Such is the constitutional spirit of Masonry, its temple is the emblem of wisdom, of which discretion is the base, charity the crowning stone, liberty the device, equality its support, into which the spirit of domination has never entered, and into which no such pretensions can be admitted. May the spirit which animates me influence the heart of every Mason to extend and propagate the glory and benefit of Freemasonry."

Father Loth was no ordinary Monk, but a respected and celebrated preacher.

Dispatched by his superiors, in 1776, to Paris, to assume charge of the Convent of the Place Royale, his Masonic brethren accredited him as representative of the Lodge of Guise to the Grand Orient, where, being a zealous Mason, he faithfully discharged his duties. His celebrity, as a preacher, caused him to be sent to Brussels, to officiate during the season of Lent. He excuses his departure to the Grand Orient in a letter, which evidences as well his respect for his Masonic as for his ecclesiastical superiors.

The letter is dated "in the 12th month of the year of True Light, 5775," rather a remarkable confession for a Roman Catholic pastor, and says: "My position and civil engagements call me to Brussels, there to preach, during Lent, at the court of Prince Charles; my position and my Masonic engagements demand that I should not quit the Orient of Paris without making you aware of the fact, begging of you, most illustrious brethren, to regard the motives for my absence, without diminishing, in any degree, the zeal and fervor which I ever take glory in showing the Royal Art, nor the fraternal regards for those with whom I had the good fortune to be, and the honors which are due to you."

Contrary to usual custom, the Grand Master of France, the Duke of Chartres (Louis Philipe's father), considered this letter, from a preacher of Loth's reputation, worthy of especial response, which was composed by an equally famous man, De Lalande, the mathematician, who replied to the fashionable clergyman as follows: "We would experience poignant regret at your absence, during Lent, had you not forewarned us that you go, through the sweetness of your eloquence, to re-awaken and vivify faith and evangelical light in the heart of a great prince and his court. It belongs only to a pure orator, zealous, and of the first order, to fulfill so honorable a mission. Hence the selection of you, for this holy task, announces, sufficiently, your worth and our temporary loss, in not having you among us to enlighten our works. You go forth, the same as in our Orient, to labor for the glory of the Great Architect of the Universe."

The authenticity of these documents is thoroughly verified, and their reproduction, at this date, may serve to enlighten ignorant and fanatical zealots, declaring Masonry incompatible with true religion, as to the estimation in which our Fraternity has been, and still is, held by the intelligent and reputable professors of pure Christianity. The correspondence, above given, shows that a man of Father Loth's talents and celebrity, faithful and able to discharge his clerical functions, was far above the narrow bigotry which appears to actuate preachers of a lower degree, both Romanists and dissenters.—Progress.

Joseph Hamilton Daviess.

The county of Jo Daviess, in the northwest corner of Illinois, was named in honor of the gallant hero of Tippecanoe, and the name Jo Daviess Lodge No. 278, at Warren, in that county commemorates his Masonic standing, as given in the following brilliant sketch from the pen of Grand Master Deming, of Indiana, in 1851:

Among the most distinguished on the roll of illustrious men of Kentucky, of the first generation, was Joseph Hamilton Daviess, who was born in Bedford county, Virginia, March 4th, 1774, and gloriously fell on the 7th of November, 1811, in the battle of Tippecanoe, at the head of his battalion of Kentucky volunteers, in a gallant charge made at his own solicitation as a forlorn hope. His father Joseph, and his mother Jean, were both natives of Virginia, the father of Irish, the mother of Scotch descent. Poor, honest, and enterprising, they emigrated to the wilds of Kentucky in the memorable year 1779, and cast their lot with that adventurous band of pioneers, who, with the rifle, the axe and the Bible, redeemed and civilized that noble State. As soon as individual habitations could be secured, they settled about two miles from the site of Danville, near Harrod's Station, and opened a farm, where their ashes now repose.

The mother taught the son the rudiments of an English education until 1785, when, for about two years, he enjoyed the advantages of scholastic instruction under a Mr. Worley, at whose grammar school he improved his English and learned the elements of Latin, after which he was taught Greek, first by Dr. Brooks, and finally by Dr. Culbertson, and thus in 1807 he finished his frontier education. At all these schools he was generally first in his class, and his attainments, though limited and immature, were considered for that day ample and even rare. Inheriting the combined characteristics of his Irish father and his Scotch mother, he soon developed the sunny-heartedness, sensibility, and eloquence of Ireland, and the long-sightedness, equanimity, and firmness of Scotland. He was famous even at school for his placid benevolence, calm and fearless courage, [illegible] for grave, powerful, and majestic declamation. Before he was nineteen years old he went with a band of volunteers in the autumn of 1792 on a military expedition across the Ohio river, under the command of Major John Adair; attacked at night in their encampment near Fort St. Clair, by an overwhelming savage force, fifteen of that little army were killed, and about two hundred of the horses were captured and taken within the Indian lines. Young Daviess, seeing his horse tied to a tree, determined to take it at all hazards, and reckless of danger, and deaf to the remonstrances of his comrades, who looked on the enterprise as hopeless and suicidal, he ran alone to his horse, untied it, and carried in triumph to the fort unhurt, amid a hailstorm of bullets from the Indians. Returning home about the close of that year, he devoted a portion of that year, 1793, to miscellaneous reading, and to a revision of his Latin and Greek, and then he commenced the study of law under the tutelage of George Nicholas, who resided on a farm near his father's, and who was at that time the most eminent jurist in Kentucky.

Here he was appointed in the same study with John Pope, Felix Grundy, Jobe Blidrox, Isham Talbott and others, who have illustrated the annals of the West, exalted its jurisprudence, and adorned its forums, its legislative halls, and the national councils. In that host of young Kentucky's elite, Daviess, though not equal to all in every quality, was, all in all, the Ajax Telamon of that classic band. So impressed was his preceptor with his high destiny, that he predicted that Jo Daviess would be a name of renown, and dying in 1799, made his favorite pupil his executor. In June, 1795, Daviess was licensed to practice law. He was admitted to the appellate bar in August of the same year, and in his first case succeeded against his tutor, who was opposing counsel. He first settled in Danville, and practiced in the District Court there, and also at Lexington and Bardstown, to which places he often traveled on foot for the benefit of exercise, and for the gratification of his characteristic taste for undisturbed observation and intense rumination in rural solitude.

In 1862 he removed to Frankfort to practice in the Appelate and Federal Courts, and was associate United States Attorney for the State of Kentucky. In 1801 he argued with great eclat the celebrated case of Wilson vs. Mason, in the Supreme Court of the United States, and it has been said he was the first lawyer from this side the Alleghany who appeared before that august tribunal. In 1806 he indicted Aaron Burr for treason in the Federal Court of Kentucky. Shortly after which he removed to the Yellow Banks on the Ohio River, in the present county of Daviess, where he owned a real estate which he named Cornland, and to the improvement and cultivation of which he devoted himself until 1808, when he settled in Lexington, and resumed the practice of his profession with brilliant prospects of fortune and fame. With Clay, Hughs, Pope, Bledsoe, and Barry, for competitors, he soon obtained a full and lucrative practice, and was distinguished for forensic propriety and power.

In the year 1803, while he resided in Frankfort, he married Ann Marshall, youngest sister of John Marshall, then Chief Justice of the United States. He was living with her elder sister, Mrs. Humphrey Marshall, near the capital of Kentucky. She bore him no issue, and survived him several years. He became a member of the Masonic fraternity by joining Lexington Lodge No. 1, on the 6th of April 1802, and was elected Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, on August 30, 1811. Having devoted much of his professional interludes to the study of history and science of war, and having a passion for military life, he joined the army of Gen. Harrison, on the Wabash, in the autumn of the year 1811, and commanded as Major, though he had the title of Colonel, in the memorable night battle of Tippecanoe, when in a desperate charge on a large number of Indians, firing from an ambuscade, he fell mortally wounded in the body about 5 o'clock in the morning of the 7th of November, 1811, and expired without a struggle or groan about 12 o'clock the succeeding night, deeply and universally lamented. Though conscious that his wound was fatal and that he must soon die on the battle-field, he retained his self-possession, and placidly to the last calmly and instinctively conversing with his weeping friends. He was buried with the honors of war on the field he had consecrated with his blood, and there his ashes still sleep in solitude and peace. Although not quite thirty-eight years old when he died, Col. Daviess had established a high character for talents and chivalry, and his memory is yet cherished as an element of the fame of Kentucky. His is not only a historic but a household name. In person, when well dressed, his friends thought him an Apollo—his stature was five feet ten inches, weight one hundred and eighty pounds, form muscular and symmetrical, port erect and majestic, complexion fair, eyes blue, forehead and face altogether remarkably handsome and benign. In dress he was often negligent, and sometimes in his costume eccentric. His temper was mild and amiable. His manners simple, affable, and dignified. His habits were studious and moral. His style of conversation was fluent and copious, often brilliant, sometimes innocently witty and sportive; his voice was full, sonorous and sweet; his articulation distinct; his enunciation deliberate and emphatic, and his slight Irish accent made his elocution peculiarly attractive. Though his mind was well cultivated, he was not distinguished for literary taste or attainments. The gods and not the muses were his favorite companions. Ulysses rather than Macenas was his model. He was not a minute or technical lawyer, and was far from being expert in the preparation of pleadings at the bar. In ordinary cases his arguments were not marked with anything peculiar, but in a great cause involving large interests or important principles he was always interesting, and many times sublime, powerful, and overwhelming. In politics he was of the Federal party, and as the opponents of that party were in power in Kentucky he was never in the State or national councils. Alex. Hamilton was his beau ideal of a statesman.

Had he survived he would have undoubtedly been conspicuous in the war of 1812, and would probably have been one of our most illustrious captains. The premature death of such a man at such a time was felt as a national calamity. He was cut off in his ascent before his name had risen to its culminating splendor. He fell just as he could have wished, in his country's cause, and on the field of his glory. With his own hands he built a fair and enduring monument for himself, which will stand unimpaired by time, when the marble emotypes of mock greatness have crumbled into dust. A novus homo without ancestral fortune or fame, he had, by his own talents and deeds, added to his country's renown, exalted his lineage, and made his family and its name honorable and historic.

Such, brethren is the testimony to the virtues of the Grand Master of Kentucky, from one who knew him well.

Working Masons.

By Crux.

It can not fail to have occurred to many reflecting brethren, that there are no Masonic honors or rewards attached to really working Masons. Under this term we include those who have worked "sections" at various reunions of the members of the Fraternity, sometimes for several years in succession in the presence of a large assemblage of the brethren. We exclude under the phrase of Masonic honor or rewards, the P. M.'s jewel, for two distinct reasons. In the first place, a capability of merely performing the routine duties of a lodge constitute but a very insignificant portion of the real secrets and mysteries of our Art. Secondly the presentation of this jewel is, in the majority of instances, a pure farce, a complete mockery of real merit. It is in fact, impossible to bestow it according with the principles of the Craft, without giving rise to invidious comparisons. It is given indiscriminately to the good and the bad, and it is no wonder that it is an honor which has ceased to impart any distinction. If a master performs his duty in such a manner as to signally deserve the admiration of the members of his lodge, it is very easy for them to mark their sense of his valuable services, but to make a practice of voting a P. M. jewel to every master who fills the chair, is a custom that we should be glad to see abolished. There is scarcely any society or community of men, upon a scale of magnitude not to be compared with that of our Order, who has not rewards for any of its members, who choose to obtain them by actual down right working, for which purpose alone they are intended, and by which means alone they can be gained. The nature of the honor is of little consequence. In some societies they take the form of books, in others of medals, in others again of the current coin of the realm; but in whatever shape it may be presented to the deserving member, it is the honor that is prized, the distinction conferred by its bestowal, that is esteemed, and not the intrinsic value it may possess. It may be as costly as the celebrated Earl of Moira's jewel; it may be as intrinsically valueless as Horace's "Doctarum edcræ præmia frontium," but in either case it is equally dear to those who "prize honor and virtue above the external advantages of rank and fortune." Is it true then that Masonry has no rewards to bestow upon her faithful sons? no honor to confer upon those who exercise their talents and abilities in her behalf, and to bring to her service and assistance what no money can purchase? Can it be said of Masonic jewels of honor as Juvenal said of Ancient Rome, "omnia venalia sunt?" Are all, all her rewards, only attainable through the aureum medium? If so, then is she far behind the age, and of all institutions the only one that can offer no inducement to her poorer children to distinguish themselves in her cause. It must not be understood that we are advocating the claim of sheer ability and intellectual advantages, which are as unequally conferred by the Great Architect of the Universe as wealth and poverty, to the exclusion of the just claims of money and interest. On the contrary, we maintain that in every instance money and interest should always possess their legitimate influence, but we also maintain that they should not be the only avenues available for distinction or preferment. There should be one order of merit, one distinction, to which every brother might look forward to possessing, and which would require nothing more from him than the devotion of a certain amount of his time, and the "exercise of those talents wherewith God has blessed him." We have no hesitation in asserting that it is owing to this total absence of all recognition of Masonic working, that so few are to be found to take any active share in it. A brother who has worked publicly every section in the three degrees or a portion of them, is surely deserving of as much distinction as one who acts as a simple steward upon any occasion, and who pays indirectly for the decoration he receives.

No one in the world works in any cause without some motive for his exertions, and what nobler or purer stimulus, what more honorable spur can a Mason wish for, than that of having the recognized approbation of the whole Craft at large. This however can not be meted out satisfactorily to him by a mere proposal of his health, by the passing of an eulogy upon his services, or by the cordial applause of an attentive audience. Such ephemeral approval is but a poor reward for the undertaking and execution of a task, that not one brother in a thousand contemplates. It is rarely borne in mind what the meaning of a "section" is. The majority of the brethren know little or nothing about them. The "sections" are the key to the whole of the lodge working, and if a Mason were to be properly educated, he ought to be thoroughly acquainted with all the "sections" before he was installed in the chair. To know the ritual, without knowing anything about the "sections" is like repeating by rote a problem of Euclid without comprehending a single word of the demonstration. Viewed in this light, what a piece of irony the device in a P. M.'s jewel must prove in many instances! What a bitter satire upon the Masonic career of its possessors! We have known cases in which we were literally astonished, that the recipient could have had the conscience to accept the gift, or upon reflection to arrive at any other conclusion than that the lodge was laughing at him, when the presenter of it commented upon "his admirable working." Highly as we prize all Masonic honors and rewards, we confess that we should prize "the Working Jewel" above them all, and it is our firm belief that the creation of such an "order of merit" would do more to advance the educational standard of the members and promote a knowledge of the real principles of our Institution among the Fraternity, and in which it must be admitted, they are lamentably deficient, than the striking of a whole host of jewels for special occasions. The devoting of a person's time, and the exercise of his talents, is equally valuable as the expenditure of so much money. Masonry requires the aid of both money and brains, and its rewards should not be restricted solely to the donors of the former. This is a subject which we are certain must have frequently suggested itself to the minds of those who have the rule and maintenance of our Order in their hands. Were a "Working Jewel" once created, Masons would possess at least one honor, one distinction, of which it might be truly affirmed, "It can not be bought with gold, neither can much silver purchase it."—Freemasons' Magazine and Mirror.

◆

FREEMASONRY IN PORTUGAL.

The Grande Oriente Lusitano.

BY DNALXO.

A brief sketch of the present position of Freemasonry in Portugal, may be of interest to our readers, and will enable them to watch the future progress of the Order, in a country where its members have so long been proscribed.

Portugal acquired an unenviable notoriety in the last century, consequent on the cruel proceedings of the inquisition at Lisbon, during the great persecutions of Masons which followed the bulls of Clement XII. and Benedict XIV.; but all is now changed, Freemasonry being openly professed among the Portugese, who enjoy a religious, political, and social freedom, which strikingty contrasts with the state of their near neighbors, the Spaniards. The Grande Oriente Lusitano, the head of all the regular lodges of Portugal and its dependencies, was constituted in 1805, under the auspices of the Grand Orient of France.

At present there are fifteen lodges under its jurisdiction, which are distributed as follows: 6 in the city of Lisbon, 6 in the city of Oporto, 2 in Spain (1 at Seville, 1 at Cadiz), 1 at Augra do Heroismo, Fayal.

These lodges are strong in numbers, each averaging from 100 to 150 active members, and we must take into consideration the constitutions of the Grand Orient which prohibit brethren being subscribing members of more than one lodge at a time.

The names of the lodges in Lisbon are characteristic of the institution, they are as follows:

Cosmopolite.—Cosmopolitan.
Tolerancia.—Toleration.
Triumpho Moral.—Triumph of Morality.
Uniao Liberal.—Free Union.
Uniao Fraternal.—Fraternal Union.
Esperanga.—Hope.

The remaining lodges are also named in the same appropriate manner.

During the last ten years, Freemasonry has steadily gained strength in Portugal, and its present position is very satisfactory, both on account of the rapid increase in the number of initiations, and of the stamp of men, who thus gain admission into the Craft.

The lodges have been hitherto restricted to the principal cities, with a view to the consolidation of the Order, prior to its dissemination in localities where the old leaven of intolerance has not yet lost its influence.

Taking into consideration the virulent persecution and strenuous opposition with which Masonry has hitherto had to contend in Portugal, it is in the highest degree gratifying to find the Order established on its present basis, and we think the Grand Orient has done wisely in preferring to wait quietly till the Order was firmly established in the great centres of commerce, where it would be materially assisted by intercourse with other nations, rather than to have pushed into the unfriendly interior with badly organized supports in the rear; now the administration of the Grand Orient is so perfectly organized, we may confidently hope for great things.

The Grand Orient of Lusitano is composed of the following grand officers, and of the remaining Masters and delegates of the subordinate lodges.

Grande Mestre.—Grand Master.
Grande Conservatorio.—Grand Conservator.
Primiero Grande Vigilante.—Senior Grand Warden.
Seconde Grande Vigilante.—Junior Grand Warden.
Grande Orador.—Grand Orator.
Grande Secretario.—Grand Secretary.
Primiero Grande Experto.—Senior Grand Deacon.
Secondo Grande Experto.—Junior Grand Deacon.
Grande Thesoureiro.—Grand Treasurer.
Grande Archivisto Chanceleiro.—Grand Registrar and Chancellor.
Grande Mestre de Cerimonias.—Grand Master of Ceremonies.
Grande Architecto Decoratore.—Grand Superintendent of Works.
Grande Solicitor Geralda Ordem.—Grand Solicitor General.
Guarda Interior.

The Grand Master is elected every third year by universal suffrage.

He must be a Portugese distinguished by his talents, his love of Masonry, and his services to the Craft. He is obliged to reside at Lisbon, the seat of the Order, during his term of office.

The present Grand Master of Portugal is the Conde de Paraty.

The other grand officers are elected annually by the members of the Grand Orient, from amongst their own number.

The Masters and delegates of all subordinate lodges are members of the Grand Orient, each lodge being entitled to send one delegate for every twenty members.

By the Constitutions of the Masonic Order of Lusitano, every office, grand or subordinate is elective, a plan which seems a great improvement on the system of appointment by patronage. The offices of Grand Master, Warden, Deacon, Treasurer, Registrar, Superintendent of Works, Master of Ceremonies, and Inner Guard, fully explain their own character.

The duties of the Grand Conservator correspond somewhat with those of our Deputy Grand Master; he is the ex-officio president of the Grand Commissao Permanente, he has also to inspect the lodges and chapters of the Order, assimilate their mode of working, and enforce regularity in their communications with the Grand Orient.

The Grand Orator is an officer unknown in English Masonry, but here his duties are very important, he is the guardian of the constitutions and of the statutes and general laws of the Order, and must protest against any infraction thereof.

Any points of Masonic law that may arise in the debates of the Grand Orient are referred for his decision; numerous other duties are attached to this office.

The Grand Orient holds two regular meetings a month, but in cases of extraordinary necessity, the Grand Master, with the consent of the Grand Commissao Permanente, may call an emergency meeting.

The duties of the Grand Orient are carried on by three committees or councils, viz: the Grande Commissao Permanente, the Commissao de Fazenda, and the Commissao de Justicia.

The Grand Permanent Council is composed of three members elected by the Grand Orient; it meets whenever there may be any business for transaction.

This council is charged with the preparation and submission to the Grand Orient of any laws that may be requisite for the good of the Order, the correspondence with foreign orients, and various other executive duties.

The Grande Commissao de Fazenda, or Council of Funds, has the direction of the funds of the Order, it is responsible for the proper performance of the Grand Treasurer's duties, and is charged with the audit of his accounts.

The Grande Commisao de Justicia, or Council of Justice, examines all petitions and complaints, prepares reports thereon, and submits them to the Grand Orient for its decision; it consists of five members elected by ballot, and is in fact the Grand Jury of the Order.

These three councils are combined in our Board of General Purposes, which solely performs the duties that are here divided into three sections.

The following is the caption of all documents of the Grand and subordinate lodges.

A.G.L.·.do.Sup.·.Arch.o.do.Un.·.
S.·.F.·.U.·.
To the Glory of the Great Architect of the Universe.
Health, Strength, Unity.

To prevent any misinterpretation of its designs, the Grand Orient makes the following declaration in the first article of its constitutions.

ARTICLE I.—The Lusitanian Order of Masons is an association of free men, essentially philanthropic, philosophical, and progressive, having for its objects the pursuit of truth, the study of universal morality, the arts and sciences, and the exercise of benevolence.

"The Order holds the doctrines of belief in the existence of a God, the immortality of the soul, and the brotherhood of man.

"It considers liberty of conscience as the inalienable right of every man, and excludes no persons for the peculiarity of their creeds."

The rite of Portugal corresponds to that of France in the number and arrangement of grades, as will be seen by the second article of its constitutions.

ARTICLE II.—"The Grand Oriente of Lusitana recognizes the three symbolic degrees, Aprendice.—Apprentice.

Companhuo.—Fellow Craft.
Mestra.—Master.

"And the four sublime degrees,

Eleita Secrete.—Elect.
Grand Eleita Escosez.—Scotch Master.
Cuvaleiro d'Oriente.—Knight of the East.
Cuvaleiro Rosa Cruz.—Rose Croix.

It permits no other degrees to be worked in the lodges under its jurisdiction."

The symbolic degrees are worked by lodges, the sublime degrees by chapters, but we must reserve the consideration of their mode of working and organization for a future paper.

◆

THE MASONIC TROWEL, for May, is at hand. It contains a portrait and biographical sketch of Sir Knight Vincent L. Hurlbut, decisions by the Grand Master, editorials, and a variety of Masonic information. $1.25 per annum. H. G. Reynolds, Jr., publisher, Springfield.—Woodstock Sentinel.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Editor,
IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY
H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

One copy, one year..$1 25

All communications should be addressed to H. G. Reynolds, or The Masonic Trowel, Springfield, Ill.

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for The Trowel.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

Notice.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., JUNE 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

Mercenary and Malicious Rejections.

Among six hundred lodges, rejections are inevitable. Several years since, a Master of much experience and observation, remarked in conversation that he with others had aided several times in removing objections to rejected candidates whose friends were grieved, and where upon the surface no reasonable objections could well be made. But, in every instance, he had occasion to regret his action, and really wished that no one of them had been initiated. As a rule, when admitted, they had gained their end, and were either a reproach, or were indifferent or officious. In addition to that, good brethren who felt it their duty to reject for reasons satisfactory to themselves, but who would not deny their vote, and could not stand the pressure of solicitation, were discontented, had suffered in loss of self-respect, and ceased attendance on lodge. In nine cases out of ten, rejections are right, and there are ten men wrongfully initiated where there is one wrongfully rejected. Every Grand Master over such a jurisdiction as this, has painful and constant evidence that such is the case. It is also true, that rejections do occur where the motive is good, but where the information is false or the impression wrong. We can quote a case precisely in point. We will use the name of John Smith for our purpose. He petitioned for initiation. A railroad conductor was present when the petition was referred. He knew a John Smith, who had been rejected in a lodge at the other end of the road. He inquired, and upon being certain, gave his information to a member, who happened to step in while the ballot was being cast, and gave his vote in the negative. The whole lodge were surprised, but the Master was watchful and wary. The report of the committee had been full, and the candidate was well known. The report was read again, and it appeared that the John Smith who was the petitioner had always lived right there and was above suspicion. The next ballot was clear. This was a misapprehension as to identity, and one of the many cases where a misapprehension is acted upon with a good motive, and which can be removed if the Master is wise, and the brethren will be patient and good natured. The information in this case was right as to the wrong John Smith; hence the misapprehension.

But there are several classes of rejection that are wrong and mischievous; for some there may be no present remedy; for others there is a remedy which should be neither slow nor uncertain.

1. From motives of malice.—Rejections for malicious reasons are many. Some are based on personal enmity, and sometimes justifiable, and are sometimes wrong. Masonry, while just, is cautious and discreet. She allows no blabbing nor prying. Evidently, therefore, she does not meddle with personal differences between her initiates and the profane, and, as a logical consequence, these differences can not be considered or enquired into in an application for initiation, and improper rejections of this sort are difficult to reach, unless the rejector has voluntarily disclosed his reason, and even then, such cases are to be handled with caution.

Some rejections grow out of unfriendly relations with one or more brethren in the lodge. Malice is gratified by rejecting their relatives or friends. No matter whether the unfriendliness be the fault of the rejector or not, such an act is intense meanness and injustice—is a blow at an innocent party to reach a third, and is wholly without excuse, and a voluntary avowal of it should subject the offender to expulsion. Another malicious motive for rejection, is caused by rejection of friends, personal disappointment, ungratified ambition, or a general discontent which vents itself in opposition to the lodge. In such cases it takes the form of wholesale rejections, and regards neither friendship, character, nor condition. This is absolute treason. The man who can do such an act, would sacrifice his country, his friends, and his kindred upon sufficient provocation, upon the altar of his malice, and should be dealt with as relentlessly as Judas Iscariot or Benedict Arnold. In nearly all instances of this character, the mind instinctively fastens itself upon the guilty person, and in a large majority of cases, the rejector, confident in his security, will proclaim, in some form, what he has done. He may do it by threats, open or concealed beforehand; by open exultation when the deed is done, or by subsequent admissions. In all such cases let the Master act wisely, see that his brethren are discreet, and wait patiently for the result. It will come, unless prevented by improper action among the members of the lodge.

2. From mercenary motives.—Rejections for business or political reasons are too common; they are troublesome things to bear, and, under the influence of resentment or irritation, strongly tempt reprisal; reflection dissipates this, and justice generally prevails. Rejections for business or political reasons had better be let alone.

3. Rejections for religious reasons.—We have separated this class from those of a business or political character because they are not mercenary in fact, but are based upon fanatical or immoral reasons. Fanatical, where a rejection occurs from a difference in denominational or religious views; immoral, where the rejection is intended to prevent an admission of one who would discountenance any vices or immoralities to which any member or members of the lodge might be wedded, or whose presence would be a constant evidence of their unworthiness.

It is self-evident that cases of this class are dangerous to touch. They are best cured by silence and time.

Rejections for mercenary, fanatical, or immoral reasons, are mostly confined to individual cases, and affect a lodge incidentally. The same is true of malicious rejections for personal reasons. As a rule, they had better be let alone. But where the malice directs itself against the lodge, self-preservation becomes an imperative law.

But let every W. Master and every brother remember that no provocation can justify or tolerate any departure from the law. No lodge can be benefited, but must be harmed, while Masonry will be injured, by any violations or evasions of the provisions of the Masonic code. In case of a rejection, no one has a right to proclaim his vote either way; no one has a right to inquire, and whatever is revealed should be voluntary, otherwise the revelation is surreptitious, or obtained by solicitation, and both the solicitor and the revealer, or neither, are subject to the discipline of the lodge.

Sorry Ways.

If there is any feeling of which a Freemason ought to feel ashamed, it is jealousy of brethren engaged in the same or similar work. For one Master to be apprehensive lest another Master should have more consideration than he has, or his lodge have greater weight or influence—for the editor of one paper to be jealous of the reputation and influence of another paper, and to feel that it is an obstacle in the way of his own prosperity and success—and for the victims of such jealousy to endeavor to help their own interests, reputation, and influence, by disparaging the credit of their supposed rivals, is discreditable business. It may be said to be according to the French proverb "worse than a crime—a blunder." You are a Master, or a High Priest, or may be in some other important station, and you think yourself respectable and not inefficient in your station, and you allow the same to be true of your neighbor in the same position. But you don't see that he is so superior a man as to have an honest and fair claim to so much more respect and regard than you have. He receives so many invitations to preside or work or speak, that you think he takes too much on himself. But there is your mistake. He did not take these things on himself. If wishing for them would secure them, you would have had them—and have been envied for it by some one else. Such things are rarely obtained—they come; and they come to this man in particular because there is something in what he does, or in the way he does it, that brethren are pleased with, and that gives them a high opinion of him. What you do may be intrinsically more valuable, but your opinion on that point does not settle the question of influence over others. Honor to him is no wrong to you, and it is weakness in you to think so. To try to diminish his influence, or weaken him in the confidence of his brethren, is not only weak, but wicked. The society you represent is important—all Masonic societies are—and you may think yours second to none. But in your view another society seems to regard itself also, as of unrivaled importance, and in your apprehension, others seem to think so too. And while you feel a brotherly interest in it, and hope it will prosper, you sometimes think, after all, that its prosperity hinders yours. You at least speak as if you thought so. Do you think you will get men's support by complaining of them for supporting another good work? If you could induce them to do less in that direction, would it add to your influence, aid your society, or benefit its treasury?

The truth is that the prosperity of one Masonic society or paper, generally implies the prosperity of others. The support, the influence, the gain of one is not the others' loss. A good word spoken for either is no disparagement to others. It does not harm The Trowel to have another Masonic paper commended, and we should be very sorry to yield to the temptation to think so. It is no loss to one lodge or chapter, that another is gaining favor. In all such cases, it is commonly true that the common cause is prospering, and that all parties to it share in the impulse. And if one gets further advanced than others, that advance will finally bear fruit to their benefit also.

In this world there is more that needs to be done than all of us are doing—more than our best endeavors are likely to accomplish. Every good man should strengthen every other good man. There may be competition as to who shall do the most, but there is room for more when all is done. There is a plenteous harvest to be reaped from good deeds and fraternal acts, and instead of Masters, High Priests, lodges, chapters, societies, and papers rubbing elbows and becoming afraid of being crowded, they are rather called upon to lend each other a helping hand.

Union and Central Pacific Railway.

Those stupendous enterprises, the Union Pacific, starting from Omaha, and the Central Pacific, starting from Sacramento, were united on the 10th of May last, and thus a work of indomitable enterprise, progressive and American, in its spirit and success stands unrivaled. In 1830, Massachusetts had a railroad sixteen miles long; Baltimore another, twelve miles, while the longest was from Albany to Schenectady. These were all. The system, with the locomotives, came from England, and we presume that she improved simply upon the old Egyptian practice, as the Americans certainly have upon the English. Forty thousand miles of railway in every part of our inhabited Union, mark our progress and indicate our future. The first passenger by all rail arrived from Sacramento in Chicago, on the 13th of May. The ceremonies of the occasion, the silver tipped tie, the golden spike and hammer, the Governor and other celebrities, have already been paraded before our readers in all the dailies and weeklies in the land.

A large portion of the country traversed by this road is known as the Western Plains or American Desert, and has but little water or timber, and is subject to drouth. Yet with proper or scientific modes of culture, it can nearly all be reduced to cultivation. Irrigation will be a prominent feature.

The indications are already strong that this road is only the initial movement of a grand railway system in North America. Let it go on.

A Veteran Brother

Writes us as follows: "I believe that I have wrought my regular hours and served the Craft about forty years. I can well remember the time when the Order was persecuted throughout the length and breadth of the land; the time when worse than a Spanish inquisition was sanctioned by high authority, no less than the legislature of Pennsylvania. But 'truth is mighty, and it will prevail. Many a time have I met in lodges where scarce a quorum could be got together, but I have lived to see the day that the Order flourishes as the green bay tree, and until I am called hence by the Grand Master of the Universe, I expect to be always ready and willing to do my duty to the Craft, even if it should be from nine at night till low twelve. I remain, most respectfully yours, in the bonds of friendship, love, and truth. D. W. Ginnis."

Indian Troubles.

The recent massacres on the Republican and Solomon, include several prominent citizens along the Blue, among whom is an old citizen, Mr. Burke, one of the oldest settlers in Northern Kansas. In several of their raids, the Indians were dressed in silk, and wore Quaker hats. We have had but one opinion in regard to the whole matter since we read the argument of John Quincy Adams, and that is, that those who cultivate the soil are entitled to occupy it, and that what is the law for one should be the law for all, and that the laws of civilization require that the savage condition should cease to exist.

Festivals.

The festival of St. John the Baptist, is to be celebrated at Mount Sterling (June 24), and R. W. Bro. Joseph Robbins, of Quincy, is to deliver the oration.

The lodges in Hancock county anticipate a good time at Dallas City. Large preparations are being made.

Dr. Hammond informs us by letter that the Fraternity will have a pic-nic at Macomb.

The lodges in Fulton, Cass, Schuyler, Mason, Peoria, and Knox, are expected to congregate in large numbers at Lewistown. We expect to be present. Immense preparations are being made.

German Literature.

Germans and others, desiring German, American, French, or English periodicals, in the departments of Medical Science and Pharmacy, Natural Science, Chemistry, Technology, Geography, Mathematics, Astronomy, Architecture, Engineering, Navigation, and Mining, and books to aid in the study of German, will do well to send to E. Steiger, 17 North William Street, New York, for his printed list, which gives the price of each periodical or book.

Also send for his Monthly Record of German Literature, containing a large list of books and prices and much valuable information.

Narrow Escape.

Comp. J. A. Combs, a member of Vandalia Chapter had a very narrow escape a few days since near Mulberry Grove. He was thrown from his horse, and in his fall his right arm was broken in three places, and his body sorely bruised and sprained. He is recovering.

Paper Warehouse.

Persons visiting St. Louis in quest of good paper, will do well to visit the immense paper warehouse of Messrs. Johnson & Sawyer, 316 and 318 North Third street, and examine their varied and extensive stock.

July Trowel.

Owing to the necessity of completing a publication just ready for press, the patrons of The Trowel may not look for the July number before the 20th of that month.

On the Rampage.

President Blanchard, of Wheaton, is again endeavoring to distinguish himself by his renewed assaults on Masonry. In 1850 he broke forth against such as should presume to assemble in a lodge under his nose, in a manner not unworthy of the Cardinal Archbishop in the "Jackdaw of Rheims:"

"He cursed him at board, he cursed him in bed;
From the sole of his foot to the crown of his head.
He cursed him in sleeping, that every night
He should dream of the devil and wake in a fright;
He cursed him in eating, he cursed him in drinking;
He cursed him in coughing, in sneezing, in winking;
He cursed him in sitting, in standing, in lying;
He cursed him in walking, in riding, in flying;
He cursed him in living, he cursed him in dying!
Never was heard such a terrible curse!
But what gave rise to no little surprise,
Nobody seemed one penny the worse!"

This is the 19th century, the age when reason has taken the place of gross superstition. Yet here we have a man, who, from his position, is presumed to have some education, holding himself up in nonsensical tirade, to the scandal of religion and the laughter of its enemies. Why does not the president bid his group of fanatics to forego all dealings with Freemasons? If their moral system is bad, it is an inevitable conclusion that their commercial dealings are bad also. While we pity the servile ravings of Oberlin as the vituperation of a poor old man, contempt is all we have for the Wheaton Pope, for ignorance and falsehood merit nothing less.

NAGE.

New York.

At the recent session of the Grand Lodge, the following brethren were unanimously re-elected: Grand Master, James Gibson; Deputy, John H. Anthon; S. G. W., Christopher G. Fox; J. G. W., E. L. Judson; G. Treas., John W. Simons, G. Sec., J. M. Austin.

A resolution of non-intercourse with the French Orient was adopted, to continue in force until recognition of the spurious Council in New Orleans shall cease.

Numbers

3 and 9, Vol. 2, Trowel, wanted for a subscriber in California. We will pay twenty-five cents for each number.

Books, Libraries, Etc.

Let all who want books, new or old, libraries, or late news, send to the "Western News Company," 121 and 123 State street, Chicago, for the "Western Bookseller," "Catalogue of Library Series," and "the Trade List of Seypoldt & Holt."

The Youth's Companion is an eight page weekly paper published by Perry, Mason & Co., No. 151 Washington St., Boston, Mass. Price, $1.50 per annum. It is a lively, interesting journal; and we recommend it to our youthful readers.

Change of Agent for Trowel in New Orleans.

Bro. Geo. L. Cross writes us that he has left New Orleans, and that Bro. J. B. D. Baxter, at the Vicksburg Cotton Press, will act as our Agent for Trowel. We hope that our brethren in that city will extend their patronage to Bro. Baxter as liberally as they have done to Bro. Cross.

Sundry disaffected persons in want of office, and so-called ministers of the Gospel, are now holding an anti-masonic pow-wow in Chicago. We will report their proceedings if they are worth publishing.

Magazines and Exchanges.

The May number of The American Builder and Journal of Art, published in Chicago, by Charles D. Lakey, contains a variety of interesting matter pertaining to the building arts, and presents a creditable appearance in its full-page illustrations of the First National Bank Buildings, Potter Palmer's Block, and the new Tribune Building. The more noteworthy articles are, "Architecture and Landscape Gardening," "Mortar," "Domestic Economy of Architecture," "The Preservation of Timber," with able editorials on "Real Estate," "Worthless Wooden Pavements," and the "Raid on Western Railways." The design for a country villa, with specifications, is valuable. The Builder is emphatically a builder's paper, and is worth its price, $3 per annum.

The Farmers's Friend.—No. 3, Vol. 2 is at hand. A beautiful design for a country residence by G. P. Randall, is on the first page. It is devoted mainly to agriculture, but has good architectural, gardening, and miscellaneous articles. Harvesters, reapers, and mowers receive a good deal of attention.

The American Entomologist for May is full of valuable matter to every fruit grower. If we were a farmer, fruit-raiser, gardener, or horticulturalist, we would not be without it, for we should have a desire to know our friends as well as our enemies in the insect world.

The Practical Painter, containing valuable articles and important advertisements, is published at 37 Park Row, New York, by Willis, McDonald & Co., at 50 cents a year.

Colman's Rural World, now in its 22d volume, is a valuable work for farmers anywhere, but especially in Missouri, Southern Illinois, and Kansas. Published weekly at 612 North 5th St., by Norman J. Colman, at $2 a year.

Peters' Musical Monthly for May is at hand, and well sustains the proud title it bears—"The Prince of Musical Monthlies," for if there is any one periodical adapted to suit the wants of all lovers of music, professional or amateur, it is certainly this Magazine.

The May number comes to us overflowing with choice new music. There are four new songs, by Hays, Thomas, Danks, and Eaton; three piano pieces, and six pages of quartette music; also, a dozen or more pages of biographical sketches and reviews of new music. Being largely engaged in the publication of sheet music, Mr. Peters has always a fresh stock from which to make his selections, and seems nothing loth to draw from his resources to make the Monthly what it should be. Besides the musical sketches and reviews of new music, each number contains no less than thirty full-sized pages of new music, by the best writers in the country. This valuable magazine is published by J. L. Peters, 198 Broadway, New York, (P. O. Box 5,429.)

The Little Corporal.—Grace Greenwood has sold her "Little Pilgrim" to Alfred L. Sewell & Co., publishers of "The Little Corporal," of Chicago. The Pilgrim has been published as a children's magazine for over fifteen years, and has been a popular juvenile, but will now stop "pilgrimaging" on his own account, and hereafter be an "aide" to the conquering Western Napoleon, The Little Corporal, the well deserved circulation of which was even before this addition larger than that of any other juvenile magazine in the world. Grace Greenwood still writes for it. The July number begins a new volume, and we advise our friends to send on to the publishers, at once, one dollar, which is the price for one year, and give their children this unique, original magazine, which has no superior anywhere. Those who subscribe during June, will receive the June number extra.

The Western Monthly for June surpasses any of its predecessors. An elegant engraving of the strongly outlined face of Ex Lt. Governor Bross, faces the title page. The Governor is a member of Cleveland Lodge No. 211, and one of the live institutions of Chicago. A biographical sketch of him, is the leading article. It is warmly and rather overdrawn, but not much more so than such articles usually are. It is an excellent article, however, and its subject is a most worthy gentleman. The Monthly, like most magazines, has a political side, but is independent and fearless as its article on the "Beauties of Protection," clearly evinces.

"The Secret of Power" by Agnes Leonard Scanland is a readable article, and "Ramblings in the Orient" is decidedly good. The Monthly is growing, and is as welcome to us as any other magazine.

Cotemporaries.

The Boston Monthly has not come to hand for March, April, May, or June.

The Freemason's Magazine for May has a leader upon the difficulties in Nova Scotia, followed by excellent articles entitled The Pope and Freemasonry—Uniformity of the Work in Michigan—The Children, poetry, by Charles Dickens—Scotch Masonry in Nova Scotia—Romanism and Masonry—Ancient Operative Lodges—A. & A. Rite in Illinois, and Masonic Chit-Chat, something after the style of our items. Our young editors, guided too much by cynics and Bohemians, are given to sneering at this magazine which commanded respect when courage cost something, and when it was dangerous to be an avowed Freemason. It was never better than now, and none are its superior. In the April TROWEL, we alluded to Col. Cyrus Johnston; in his house we saw the Masonic Mirror, published by C. W. Moore, in Anti-Masonic times.

The Keystone, May 8, has another Holy Land article in commentary and statistical manner. The piquancy of these articles consists in a graphic style and a re-arrangement of old articles, with running comments disclosing humor, testiness, and sourness in intercourse with the people.

We have read articles on the same subject from the same pen, in six or seven papers, and are of the opinion that not an important fact is developed but what may be found in several books, and which are authentic from the pens of actual and truthful explorers. Still, they are racy, readable and dished up attractively. The leading editorial in relation to the Worshipful Master, is an excellent article. The proceedings of our Grand Lodge are so noticed as to show little to our advantage. We hope our Pennsylvania brethren will not so regard our article in regard to them in the May TROWEL.

The Masonic Record of Nashville for May, starts out with an article entitled "Negro Lodges," and is followed by an excellent story, showing why Mrs. Herbert loved Masonry; the other important articles are Historical Memoranda of Cumberland Lodge No. 8, Nashville—Tidings from the Craft—Gems and Jewels—The Czar and the Skeptic—Masonic Law—Jewish Captivity—New Books—A Beautiful Story—Notes of the Month. It is a valuable literary as well as Masonic journal.

The Indiana Masonic Home Advocate, published monthly at Indianapolis, by F. M. Blair, P. G. M., comes regularly. The May number has a supplement, and contains a valuable biographical and historical sketch by E. Deming, dated May 11, 1851, at which time he was Grand Master. The same is enlarged by the addition of several names who have become distinguished since that time. The notice of Joe Daviess, Past Grand Masters Downey, Hacker, and Hazelrigg will be transferred as occasion may warrant, to the columns of THE TROWEL.

The Masonic Record of Western India for April has come. It is filled with valuable local news. A new lodge is being established at Egutpoora, and a Masonic library and reading room has been established at Nagpore. Matters look more flattering in Bengal, and Bro. Hoff having returned from England, it is hoped that the Indian Freemason's Friend may be started again. An association has been formed in Bengal, to educate the children of indigent Freemasons.

The Mystic Star, for May is at hand. It is now published by Rev. John S. Hanna, and Rev. James Billings. Its leader is a contribution by Bro. W. V. Morrison, criticising the constitution of the Grand Lodge of Michigan in regard to the mode of electing non-affiliates to membership. The points are well stated, but the tendency of the article is decidedly inflamatory. William Rounsville contributes an able article in regard to objections to secret societies, followed by another article in regard to order, courtesy, and equality. Several selections, notices, &c., bring us to the Bourbons of of Spain, by J. S. C. Abbott. It seems that Maryland and District of Columbia is to be overhauled. Bro. Hanna advocates wearing Masonic emblems, and the number closes with an article devoted to Spring-time and Constant Youth.

The Masonic Review for March is a gem. It is enough at this time to say, that in its editorials, tidings, contributions and selections, either or all, it is fully equal to any former number of that excellent magazine.

THE MASON'S HOME BOOK.—Years ago Bro. Leon Hyneman, of Philadelphia, published the Mirror and Keystone. For some reason, it ceased. Bro. Hyneman has been since gathering material, and he now appears in magazine form, monthly, 44 pages, $3.00 per annum, with the above title. His address "To the Craft Universal" is well written, but to our mind, develops a purpose not expressed. The first number commences with a republication of Oliver's Antiquities. We shall watch its progress with no little interest.

The Progress is published weekly, by the Progress Publishing Company at 296 Pearl street, New York, at $2 per annum. It has Masonic, temperance, and literary departments.

The Voice of Masonry for May has another Holy Land article; followed by an editorial "Knowledge is Power, or What is Masonry?" An address before Princeton Lodge, the proceedings of the Council of Deliberation, editorials, news, and items compose the balance of the make up.

Tidings.

Items.

The manufacture of beet-sugar promises to become an important branch of industry in Wisconsin.

Illinois has 36,000,000 acres, of which 21,000,000 are in some condition of improvement, while only 10,000,000 are in actual cultivation. Full one half of her produce goes abroad, showing the ability, with ordinary cultivation, to sustain fourteen millions of people. It can sustain double that number.

President Grant was forty-seven years old on the 27th of April.

The population of New York city is stated at 1,118,769.

Copper and new beds of coal have been discovered in Virginia.

Oregon is expected to add thirty-three per cent. to her grain crop of last year.

The human heart is made for love as the household hearth for fire, and for truth as the household lamp for light.

It is the little troubles that wear out the spirits.

A Colorado Love-Letter.—"Laven years is rather long to cort a gal, but I'll have you yet, Cate."

The U. S. Senate has sixty-six Senators, forty-five of whom are lawyers; the House of Representatives has 183 members, one hundred and nineteen of whom are lawyers; or, one hundred and sixty-four lawyers against eighty four in both Houses of Congress, nearly two to one! It is time to change this.

Missouri has 1,450 miles of railroad in actual operation.

Kansas, with 400,000 population, has in use over six hundred miles of railroad.

John Dixon, Esq., now eighty-five years old, settled at Dixon thirty-nine years ago, and was long the proprietor of Dixon's ferry. The Mayor and a large number of ladies and gentlemen recently "surprised" the old veteran, and left a substantial token of respect in the shape of $314 in greenbacks.

There are one hundred and fifty rare works upon Freemasonry in the British Museum, mostly unknown to the Craft.

The President has appointed the real "Nasby" Postmaster at Toledo. Will whisky rise now?

S. P. Brainard, formerly of Cambridge, is now at Waterloo, Iowa, where he attends to law and land business.

Artemas Ward said that the man who wrote "I'm saddest when I sing," was a fool to sing much.

It is a poor exchange from which we can glean no item.

What will now be the color of our dispatches from England?—Motley.

The Parliament House in London cost $15,000,000

Flattery sits in the parlor, while candor is kicked out of door.

In Greece, between 1830 and 1866, the number of schools increased from 110 to 1,308.

The Chicago Tribune Company moved into their new building, corner Madison and Dearborn streets, April 29. The new establishment is said to be in all its appointments, the most complete in the United States.

If any one wishes rare books, new or old, they will do well to address the Western News Company, 121 and 123 State street, Chicago.

Gen. J. C. Webber, late Secretary Board of State House Commissioners, preferred charges lately against them, and sundry of them were examined by the Governor, and dismissed.

"Jenny," said a Scotch minister, stooping from his pulpit, "have ye got a peen about ye? "Yes, Minister." "Then stick it into that sleeping brute of a man o' yours by your side."

Bismarck's wife acts as his private Secretary.

Carpets are bought by the yard and worn by the foot.

Noah Webster's heirs get $25,000 annually from the sale of his works.

There are now 75,000 invalid pensioners, and 92,000 widows and orphans on the national pension roll.

The "one thousand mile tree" is said to be the only pine tree between Omaha and Salt Lake.

The French Mint is coining gold twenty-five franc pieces, termed "Emperors."

"Time, patience, and perseverance" are the three great masters of the world.

Brethren Shugart and Lininger, dealers in agricultural implements at Council Bluffs, Iowa, send us the first number of their advertising paper. Motto, "Live and let live." Clever, sharp, and cute.

Desire is a tree in leaf, hope is a tree in flower, and enjoyment is a tree in fruit.

Decatur and E. St. Louis R. R.—Warren Colburn, New York, Pres.; Charles H. Pierce, New York, Treasurer and Transfer Agent; W. B. Corneau, Springfield, Secretary and Asst. Treasurer; Wm. S. Lincoln, Chief Engineer; A. Boody, Isaac H. Knox, and George Cecil, Executive Committee; A. Boody, A. M. White, W. C. Shirley, H. M. Vandeveer, Isaac H. Knox, W. I. Schenck, R. W. O'Bannon, E. R. Sparks, George Cecil, J. N. Drummond, Warren Colburn, and E. O. Smith, Directors.

Seventeen cotton factories are to be built in Mississippi this season.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers numbers over six thousand members.

> Immodest words admit of no defense,
> For want of decency is want of sense.—Pope.

Some portions of France and Italy, and nearly all of Spain are destitute of forests.

Two millions of acres of land in Iowa are unsold.

One hundred and twenty millions of dollars are spent annually in China in idolatrous worship.

Daniel Bakewell, aged 111, a Revolutionary pensioner, died recently in New York.

Iowa has on hand $284,880; taxes due $650,500; war claims against the United States $389,848; total $1,324,218; indebtedness entire, less than $300,0000.

Iowa had 42,000 people in 1840; now more than 1,000,000 with 1,500 miles of railroad.

A thousand probabilities do not make one truth.

Maine—Grand Lodge.—John H. Lynde, Bangor, Grand Master. Grand Chapter.—Joseph P. Gill, Lewiston, G. H. P. Grand Council.—Gorden R. Garden, Grand Master, Ira Berry, Portland, Grand Secretary of all three.

An Englishman is about to start a weekly paper in Jerusalem.

Ingersoll, Canada, has a Freemason—Charles McKewn—who was initiated in 1776. He is 122 years old.

It is said that there are 50 German Daily newspapers in the United States.

Seven judges of the Mexican Supreme Court have been indi[illegible] for corruption.

A St. Louis physician estimates that two-fifths of the men in the United States use no ardent spirits. Hope so. Wish it were five-fifths.

South Carolina declines State aid to railroads.

Cœur De Leon Sov. Chap. Rose Croix, Chicago, J. Ward Ellis, Master; G. W. Barnard, S. W.; H. F. Holcomb, J. W.; J. C. W. Bailey, Grand Orator; W. F. Adams, M. of Cer.; T. H. Seymour, G. Tr.; D. W. Clark, Jr., G. Sec.; Geo. W. Kincaid, G. of T.; John P. Ferns, G. Sentinel.

Queen Esther Chapter No. 2, Eastern Star. Elgin. Geo. Hunter, W. P.; Mary A. Fairchild, W. M.; Sarah A. Marshall, A. M.; M. N. Frederick, Treas.; F. H. Mosely, Sec.; Addie W. Frederick, Conductress; Mary E. Marshall, Asst.; Eliza S. Batchelor, Warder; E. F. Roberts, Sent.; Bessie C. Mosely, Adah; Addie E. Spaulding, Ruth; Cordelia M. Sherman, Esther; Salinda M. Baker, Martha; Sarah E. Wilcox, Electa.

The corporators of the Belvidere and Ottawa railroad have organized and intend to push the enterprise rapidly to completion.

The railroad from Lewistown west is now completed to Rushville.

The railroad from Peoria, via Pekin, Havana, Bath, Chandlerville, and Virginia, to Jacksonville, is expected to be open the entire distance by the 20th of this month.

Advancement of Candidates.

Nothing can be more certain than that the proper qualifications of a candidate for admission into the mysteries of Freemasonry, and the necessary proficiency of a Mason who seeks advancement to a higher degree, are the two great bulwarks which are to protect the purity and integrity of our Institution. Indeed, we know not which is the most hurtful, to admit an applicant who is unworthy, or to promote a candidate who is ignorant of his first lessons. The one affects the external, the other the internal character of the Society. The one brings discredit upon the Craft among the profane, who in too many instances, from ignorance of Masonic principles, regard us, too often, with suspicion and dislike; the other introduces ignorance and incapacity into our ranks, and dishonors the science of Masonry in our own eyes. The one covers our walls with imperfect and worthless stones, which mar the outward beauty and impair the strength of our Temple; the other fills our interior apartments with confusion and disorder, and leaves the edifice, though externally strong, both inefficient and inappropriate for its destined uses. But, to the candidate himself, a too rapid advancement is often attended with the most disastrous effects. As in geometry, so in Masonry, there is no "royal road" to perfection. A knowledge of its principles and its science, and consequently an acquaintance with its beauties, can only be acquired by long and dilligent study. To the careless observer, it seldom offers, at a hasty glance, much to attract his attention or to secure his interest. The gold must be deprived, by careful manipulation, of the dark and worthless ore which surrounds and envelopes it, before its metallic lustre and value can be seen and appreciated. If that be done, all will be right.

Trim Your Wicks.

As coal oil fluid is killing its victims constantly, anything which will avert the danger should be made known. An exchange sensibly remarks:

The explosion is caused by neglecting to cut off the charred portion of the wick after the lamp is filled. Observation will show that in a few days use, the wick becomes charcoal in its composition for an inch below the top of the tube containing it, and after the lamp has burned a short time, the heated tube fires all the charred portion of the wick inside, and that sets the oil on fire below. This may be prevented by cutting off a sufficient portion of the charred wick each day after using the lamp.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—Isa. 8, 20.

DECISIONS BY THE GRAND MASTER.

49.—In the United States each grand lodge is sovereign within its own defined territorial limits, and is the sole source of power. The Grand Lodge of Illinois exercises inherently, exclusive jurisdiction in all Masonic matters, executive, legislative, and judicial, within the limits of the State, and in her sovereign capacity has control over every resident Mason, non-affiliated, or affiliated here or elsewhere, and through her proper subordinates, has jurisdiction over all offenses committed by Masons against individuals, morals, or Masonry, and can try and expel the offender, or otherwise deal with him as may seem proper and just.

50.—Where a member of a lodge in another jurisdiction, becomes a resident of Illinois, and afterwards becomes amenable to Masonic discipline, the oldest lodge in the city, town, or place where he may reside, will receive the charges, and proceed with the trial in all respects as required by the By-Laws of the Grand Lodge of Illinois.

Upon the request of either party, and the consent of both, with the consent of the Grand Lodge, or Grand Master in vacation, if deemed advisable by the lodge having local jurisdiction, after the charges are preferred, the case may be sent to the lodge of which the accused is a member for hearing and judgment.

51.—Rejection for affiliation does not affect the general standing of the rejected brother; he may petition any other lodge, or visit wherever his visits may be acceptable.

52.—In trials, the Master fixes the time and place of trial; the testimony taken by committee is preparatory to trial; at the trial, the case is to proceed to conclusion before the same triers, including sentence of expulsion, suspension, or reprimand.

53.—The objection of a member of a lodge to the admission of a visitor, with or without reasons, or with good or trivial reasons is absolute, unconditional, and imperative, and in all cases it must be presumed that his reason is sufficient for him, and must be respected by the Master and the lodge.

54.—No officer of a lodge is justifiable in assuming any of the functions of the W. M. when he is present. If the W. M. is mistaken in his rulings, transcends his authority, or renders himself amenable to discipline, the remedy is by appeal to, or charges preferred in Grand Lodge, or for the time being to the Grand Master.

55.—A motion to test the sense of a lodge in regard to objection to the admission of a visitor is out of order, and if entertained, is an invasion of the rights of a member, and a grave misdemeanor.

Impostors.

Cornucopia Lodge, No. 563, F. & A. M.,
Flushing, N. Y., May 15th, 1869.

The members of the Masonic Fraternity are hereby cautioned against extending any relief to a person calling himself John Ely, alias Dr. Hunter, alias Dr. George Levi, alias George Washington Remmington; but whose real name is George Levison. He visted this place at the time of our last communication, and represented himself under the latter name.

He claims to hail from Washington Lodge No. 5, Charleston, S. C., to have had property, lost all during the war, refused a position as Colonel in the Southern army, being a Union man, joined the Union army and has been in Libby Prison.

He sometimes represents himself as a minister and sometimes as a physician. Is a man of genteel appearance, large and well proportioned, 55 to 60 years of age, 5 feet 10 inches in height, mixed gray hair, prominent features, a good talker, and tells his story in a very touching manner, and concludes in the lodge-room with a Masonic Sign.

The Masonic Board of Relief of Troy cautioned the Craft against him a few months ago.

He is an impostor of the first water, and should be dealt with accordingly.

Joseph L. Frame, Jr., W. M.
W. H. D. Nimmo, Sec'y.
Sov. Gr. Com.

Office of Secretary of Winona
Lodge, No. 18, F. & A. M.
Winona, April 10, 1869.

H. G. Reynolds & Son, Springfield, Ill.:

Gentlemen:—An impostor calling himself an Italian refugee and served under Garibaldi, having a good knowledge of Masonry, has been imposing upon the Craft in this State. He is a small man, black eyes and hair—a little stooped—health not good—speaks English badly—calls himself Omelia Damanchance. Left here we think for St. Louis, a few days since, with property not his own, that was intrusted to him, to aid him by its sale.

Fraternally,
John Keyes.

Caution.

Office of the M. P. S. G. C. of the Supreme Council A. A. S. Rite.
Portland, Maine, May 24, 1869.

I am informed that one Daniel Rollin is preambulating the States of Pennsylvania and Vermont offering to confer the degrees and to establish the bodies of the Ancient Accepted Rite in those States, claiming to have full and legitimate authority for so doing.

This is to inform the Craft that he has no such authority and that no work of his will be recognized by any regular Mason of that rite in the World.

The person, from whom he is said to claim immediate authority, was long ago expelled from all the rights &c. of a Scottish Mason, that he ever had: and I believe that the sole object of all concerned with him is to obtain the money of the unsuspecting.

Josiah H. Drummond, 33°,

Valley of New York, March 20, 1869.

To all Masons to whom these presents shall come, Greeting:

The following resolutions having been adopted, all Masons of the Ancient and Primitive Rite are hereby ordered to abide by the same.

To the Ill. Sov. Grand Master, Officers, and Members of the Sov. Sanc. of the Ancient and Primitive Rite of Memphis in and for the Continent of America.

The committee appointed to take into consideration the matter of grievance in relation to the jurisdiction of Louisiana, beg to report that, after careful consideration of the subject matter, your committee unanimously present the following preamble and resolutions for adoption: That,

Whereas, A decree emanating from the Grand Orient of France, dated the fifth day of November, 1868, in which is recognized and acknowledged a body of spurious Masons located in the State of Louisiana, styled the "Supreme Council of the A. & A. S. Rite, in and for the Sovereign State of Louisiana." That,

Whereas, Said spurious body has, from time to time, clandestinely granted charters for lodges in said jurisdiction of Louisiana, thereby invading the rights and authority of the M. W. Grand Lodge of that State. That,

Whereas, The Ancient and Primitive Rite of Memphis has, by its toleration, extended into nearly every State and Territory on this continent, and in the said jurisciction of Louisiana there now exists four bodies of our rite, who claim protection of this Sovereign Body, And,

Whereas, The Rite of Memphis has always acknowledged the supremacy of the State Grand Lodges over the symbolic or first three degrees of a blue lodge, and engrafted the same into its constitution by the following section, viz.:

"Whereas, The Rite of Memphis, on the Continent of America, considers the blue lodge the foundation and fundamental basis of the beloved institution, to which the Masonic allegiance of all its members are due, and from which there can be no deviation; therefore, no Mason can be allowed to join the Ancient and Primitive Rite of Memphis unless he is a member of a lodge in good standing, working under a Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons." And

Whereas, The officers and brethren of the A. & P. Rite deprecate the interference of any foreign body with the vested rights of established Masonic Grand Bodies in America. Be it, therefore,

Resolved, That we, the Sovereign Sanctuary of the Ancient and Primitive Rite of Memphis, in and for the continent of America, in council assembled, do hereby unanimously indorse the action of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, as embodied in resolutions, adopted February 13, 1869. Be it further

Resolved, That until such time as the Grand Orient of France shall have revoked its action as decreed November 5th, 1868, all fraternal intercourse with that grand body be, and the same is hereby suspended.

Respectfully submitted, with fraternal salutations.

Andrew M. Underhill,
John Hanna,
M. G. de J. Bonell,
Benjamin S. Hill,
John T. Martin.
Committee.

Accepted and approved in our Asylum, this 20th day of March, 1869, E. V.

Harry J. Seymour, 33°,
T. Ill. Sov. Grand Master General.

Anti-Masonic Action.

Several assemblies of religious bodies have lately taken ground against Masonry, upon the ostensible ground that it is composed of secret societies. If secrecy be the principle aimed at, it is a little singular that the Good Templars, Sons of Temperance, and other similar organizations were not mentioned.

The resolves of a synod here and there against Masonry are about as effective toward shaking it as would be the hurling of putty pellets against the rock of Gibraltar, with the expectation of battering down the everlasting structure. As the fly on the horn of the ox did not disturb the latter, so will not the hostile action of a little sect, here and there, discomfort an organization whose limits are those of the whole world.

During the late war, Masonry did more to ameliorate the horrors of imprisonment, and to mitigate the atrocities of battle, than any agency else. To the remark that "I am a Baptist," or "I am a Methodist," the reply was, invariably: "That's played out." The announcement of Masonic rights, on the contrary, was never disregarded.

We think that these gentlemen who are denouncing Masonry should not fail to notice that, whereas, nearly or quite every Protestant sect was disrupted before or during the war, Masonry remained, then as now, indivisible. In this element of fraternal regard which no war can shake, no convulsion disrupt, and in which no principle of discord can gain a foothold, the puny and discordant sectaries who are now warring against Masonry can find something worthy of imitation. Masonry never quarrels; never arms brother against brother; never burned or crucified an opponent; never bellows politics from its altar; never distributes tracts where bread is needed; never martials nation against nation. Can that Christianly organization of which these hostile little synods are members, say as much? Are there any Latimers, or Cranmers, or Mary Stuarts in its history? Did it ever hang, burn, or imprison anybody because of a difference of opinion? Is there any blood upon the pages of its history? Does it meddle with politics? Did it thank God for the removal of Lincoln, as did a Protestant, orthodox clergyman of this city?

The record of Masonry will compare favorably with that of any other organization. Its history is one of peace. Its flag is white. Its mission is charity. It teaches the beauty of fraternal love, and its effort is to quiet the warring elements in humanity, and to induce the clasping of hands by enemies. It is the oil which calms the troubled and stormy waters of existence. When some of these aggressive little synods can show as good a record, then will the world be prepared to admit their right to criticise. Meanwhile, let the casting of the first stone be withheld until some one without sin can be found to undertake it.—Chicago Times, June 5th.

◆

"Them soldiers must be an awful dishonest set," said an old lady, "for not a night seems to pass that some sentry is not relieved of his watch."

Identity of Holy Places in Jerusalem.

At the commencement of the troubles in Judea, during the reign of Vespasian, A. D. 79, the Christians of Jerusalem withdrew to Pella, and as soon as their metropolis was demolished they returned to dwell among its ruins. In the space of a few months they could not have forgotten the position of their sanctuaries, which, generally speaking, being situated outside the walls, could not have suffered so much from the siege as the more lofty edifices within. That the holy places were known to all men in the time of Adrian, A. D. 130, is demonstrated by an undeniable fact. The emperor, when he rebuilt the city, erected a statue of Venus on Mount Calvary, and another of Jupiter on the sacred sepulchre. The grotto of Bethlehem was given up to the rites of Adonis; the jealousy of the idolators thus publishing, by their abominable profanations, the sublime doctrines of the Cross, which it was their object to conceal or calumniate.

But Adrian, although actuated by an ardent zeal in behalf of his own deities, did not persecute the Christians at large. His resentment seems to have been confined to the Nazarenes in Jerusalem, whom he could not help regarding as a portion of the Jewish nation—the irreconcilable enemies of Rome. We accordingly perceive, that he had no sooner dispersed the Church of the Circumcision established in the holy city, than he permitted within its walls the formation of a Christian community, composed of Gentile converts, whose political principles, he imagined, were less inimical to the sovereignty of the empire. At the same time he wrote to the governors of his Asiatic provinces, instructing them not to molest the believers in Christ, merely on account of their creed, but to reserve all punishment for crimes committed against the laws and the public tranquility. It has therefore been very generally admitted, that during this period of repose, and even down to the reign of Dioclesian, A. D. 284, the faithful at Jerusalem, now called Ælia, celebrated the mysteries of their religion in public, and consequently had altars consecrated to their worship. If, indeed, they were not allowed the possession of Calvary, the Holy Sepulchre, and of Bethelehem, where they might solemnize their sacred rites, it is not to be imagined that the memory of these holy sanctuaries could be effaced from their affectionate recollection. The very idols served to mark the places where the Christian redemption was begun and completed. Nay, the pagans themselves cherished the expectation that the temple of Venus, erected on the summit of Calvary, would not prevent the Christians from visiting that holy mount; rejoicing in the idea, as the historian Sozomen expresses it, that the Nazarenes, when they repaired to Golgotha to pray, would appear to the public eye to be offering up their adoration to the daughter of Jupiter. This is a striking proof that a perfect knowledge of the sacred places was retained by the church of Jerusalem in the middle of the second century. At a somewhat later period, when exposed to persecution, if they were not allowed to build their altars at the Sepulchre, or proceed without apprehension to the scene of the Nativity, they enjoyed at least the consolation of keeping alive the remembrance of the great events connected with these interesting monuments of their faith; anticipating, at the same time, the approaching ruin of that proud superstition by which they had been so long oppressed. The conversion of Constantine, A. D. 319, gave a new vigor to these local reminiscences of the evangelical history. That celebrated ruler wrote to Macarius, Bishop of Jerusalem, to cover the tomb of Jesus Christ with a magnificent church; while his mother, the Empress Helena, repaired in person to Palestine, in order to give a proper efficacy to the zeal which animated the throne, and to assist in searching for the venerable remains of the first age of the Gospel. To this illustrious female is ascribed the glory of restoring to religion some of its most valued memorials. Not satisfied with the splendid temple erected at the Holy Sepulchre, she ordered two similar edifices to be reared under her own auspices; one over the manger of the Messiah at Bethlehem, and the other on the Mount of Olives, to commemorate His ascension into heaven. Chapels, altars, and houses of prayer gradually marked all the places consecrated by the acts of the Son of Man; the oral traditions were forthwith committed to writing, and thereby secured forever from the treachery of individual recollection.

These considerations give great probability to the conjectures of those pious persons who, in the fourth century of our era, assisted the mother of Constantine in fixing the locality of holy scenes. From that period down to the present day, the devotion of the Christian and the avarice of the Mohammedan have sufficiently secured the remembrance both of the places and of the events with which they are associated. But no length of time can wear out the impression of deep reverence and respect which are excited by an actual examination of those interesting spots that witnessed the stupendous occurences recorded in the inspired volume. Or, if there be in existence any cause which could effectually counteract such natural and laudable feelings, it is the excessive minuteness of detail and fanciful description usually found to accompany the exhibition of sacred relics.

But such abuses, the fruit of many ages of credulity and ignorance, do not materially diminish the force of the impression produced by scenes which no art can change, and hardly any description can disguise. The hills still stand round about Jerusalem, as they stood in the days of David and Solomon. The dews fall on Hermon, the cedars grow on Libanus, and Kishon, that ancient river, draws its stream from Tabor as in the days of old. The Sea of Galilee still presents the same natural accompaniments, the fig-tree springs up by the wayside, the sycamore spreads its branches, and the vines and olives still climb the sides of the mountains. The desolation which covered the Cities of the Plain is not less striking at the present hour than when Moses with an inspired pen recorded the judgment of God; the swellings of Jordan are not less regular in their rise than when the Hebrews first approached its banks; and he who goes down from Jerusalem to Jericho still incurs the greatest hazard of falling among thieves. There is, in fact, in the scenery and manners of Palestine, a perpetuity that accords well with the everlasting import of its historical records, and which enables us to identify with readiness the local imagery of every great transaction.

From the (London) F. M. Mag.

Numbers.

By Anthony Oneal Haye.

The following is a brief account of Numbers, which readers can work out more fully for themselves in connection with Masonry:

The mystical meaning and divine virtue of numbers formed an important part of the philosophy of Pythagoras, and from him have been transmitted to the Masonic system of symbolism. Pythagoras, doubtless, brought his doctrines on this subject from Egypt, in which country he long resided, and with whose wisdom he was deeply imbued. In numbers, Pythagoras saw the principle of all things; he believed that the creation of the world was produced by their harmonious combination, and that they existed before the world. According to the doctrines of this sage, numbers are of two kinds, intellectual and scientific. Intellectual number has always existed in the divine mind; it is the base of universal order, and the link which binds all things. Scientific number is the generative cause of multiplicity, which proceeds from and is the result of unity. Scientific numbers are equal or odd. Equal numbers are said to be female, and odd ones male; because even numbers admit of division or generation, which odd ones do not. Odd numbers, however, are the most perfect. To each number, Pythagoras ascribed a peculiar character.

One—the Monad—represented the central fire, or God, without beginning and without end, the point within the circle. It also denoted love, concord, piety, and friendship, because it is indivisible. It was the symbol of identity, equality, existence, and universal preservation and harmony. To this number all ancient mythologies ascribed peculiar virtues. Two was unlucky; and as one denoted light and the good principle, or God, two denoted darkness and the evil principle. Hence it was that the Romans dedicated the second month of the year to Pluto, the god of hell, and the second day of that month to the manes of the dead. As one represented the right hand, so did two the left.

Three referred to harmony, friendship, peace, concord, and temperance, and was so highly esteemed among the Pythagoreans, that they called it "perfect harmony." It is one of the sacred numbers of Freemasonry. Three was considered among all the pagan nations as the chief of the mystical numbers, because, as Aristotle remarks, it contains within itself a beginning, a middle, and an end. Hence we find it designating some of the attributes of almost all the gods. The thunder bolt of Jove was three-forked; the sceptre of Neptune was a trident; Cerberus, the dog of Pluto, was three-headed; there were three Fates and three Furies; the sun had three names, Apollo, Sol, and Liber; the moon had three also, Diana, Luna, and Hecate. In all incantations, three was a favorite number, and hence the poet says,—"Numero Deus impari gaudet." A triple cord was used, each cord of three different colors, white, red, and black; and a small image of the subject of the charm was carried thrice round the altar, as we see in Virgil's eighth eclogue:

> "Terna tibi hæc primum triplici diversa colore
> Licia circumdo, terque hæc altaria circum
> Effigiem duco."

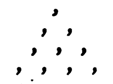
The Druids paid no less respect to this sacred number. Throughout their whole system a reference is constantly made to its influence; and so far did their veneration for it extend, that even their sacred poetry was composed in triads. In all the mysteries from Egypt to Scandinavia, we find a sacred regard for the number three. In the rites of Mithras, the Empyrean was said to be supported by three intelligences—Ormuzd, Mithra, and Mithras. In the rites of Hindostan, there was the trinity of Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva. It was, in short, a general character of the mysteries to have three principal officers and three grades of initiation. In Freemasonry, the number three is the most important and universal in its application of all the mystic numbers. Thus we find it pervading the whole Ritual. There are three degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry—three principal officers of a lodge—three supports—three ornaments—three greater and three lesser lights—three movable and three immovable jewels—three principal tenets—three rounds of Jacob's ladder—three working tools of a F. C.—three principal orders of architecture—three important human senses—three ancient Grand Masters—three recreant F. C.; and, indeed, the instances exceed the imits of our space to enumerate them, one stood for life, two for death, three for eternity.

Four was a divine number. It referred to the Deity, and among the ancients, many nations besides the Hebrews, give to God a name of four letters. The Assyrians called him Adad; the Egyptians, Amum; the Persians, Syre; the Greeks, Theos (the th forming one letter); and the Latins, Deus. This, which was the Tetragrammaton of the Hebrews, the Pythagoreans called Tetractys, and this they considered a most solemn oath. The Tetractys (Greek, Tetractus-four) was expressed by ten jods disposed in the form of a triangle, each side containing four, as in the annexed figure.



Tetractys.

This they explained as follows: The one point represents the Monad, or active principle. The two points, Duad, or passive principle. The three, the Triad, or world arising from their union. The four, the Quarternary, or the liberal sciences. On this figure the oath was propounded to the aspirant in the esoteric school of Pythagoras. Iamblichus gives this oath in his life of Pythagoras, of which the following is a translation:

> "By that pure quadrilateral name on high,
> Nature's eternal fountain and supply,
> The parent of all living souls that be,—
> By it, with faithful oath, I swear to thee."

Pythagoras undoubtedly borrowed the Tetractys from the Tetragrammaton (the incommunicable name of God) of the Jews, when he visited Babylon, and was instructed in the Hebrew mysteries by Ezekiel.

Miscellaneous Reading.

Proverbs.

A proverb has been well defined to be "the wit of one man and the wisdom of many"—the concentration of the common sense and experience of many into some happy, pithy expression. The study of these quaint condensed sayings has ever been a favorite one with literary men. Cervantes makes Sancho Panza's conversation a whole string of them, as in our day Dickens has freely put them into the mouth of the inimitable Sam Weller: while learned and grave divines have found in these sparkling scintillations a pleasant relief from more serious occupations. A recent lecture by the author of a popular work on the Life and Epistles of St. Paul presents an interesting collection of these wity aphorisms. Complete proverbial sentences are either exhortive, such as "Make hay while the sun shines;" "Think of ease, but work on;" "Pull down thy hat on the windy side;" or the Spanish one of "Dine with thy aunt, but not every day;" or indicative, such as "Half a loaf is better than no bread;" "Where the hedge is lowest, most people go over;" or, as poor Richard says, "Silks and satins put out the kitchen fire." Poetry has always had a tendency to run into rhyme and alliteration, and it is so with proverbs. We say, "Time and tide wait for no man;" but the true form is, "Time and tide for no man abide." Sometimes the form is merely alliterative, as "Ever drunk, ever dry;" "Wilful waste makes woful want;" or as the Scotch say, "No swat no sweet." More often they assume the shape of absolute rhyme, such as "There is many a slip between the cup and lip;" "Well begun, half done;" "April wet, good wheat;" "Who goes borrowing, goes a sorrowing." These oriental examples further illustrate this:

"God's mills turn slow
But they grind woe."

"In the widow's house
There is no fat mouse."

"Who sues a mite
Will catch a bite."

"When the sun flies
The shadow dies."

"Who doeth the raven for a guide invite,
Must marvel not on carcasses to light."

"Should you a cistern with rosewater fill,
A dead dog dropped in it would defile it still."

A good proverb soon spreads, and possesses wonderful vitality. "Building a golden bridge for a flying enemy" is older than Herodotus, and "Look not at a gift horse in the mouth" is found in mediæval history and among Armenian proverbs. Proverbs are still being made. "Don't shiver for last year's snow," and "Some people seem to be starched before they are washed," are recent [illegible]. The same truth is often expressed differently by different nations. In Friesland they say, "Don't sell your herrings before you catch them; "we say, "Don't buy a pig in a poke; while in the tropics it takes the form of "No man buys yams while they are yet in the ground." We often give point to our advice by saying, "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," while on the banks of the Nile, where cranes are abundant, the people say, "A thousand cranes in the air are not equal to one sparrow in the fist." Every oak was once an acorn," is in Africa "The great calabash tree had a seed for its mother· "First build your house and then think of your furniture;" "A man envies every other man except his son and his pupil;" "At the doors of taverns friends are plenty: at the doors of the prison they are all gone;" "Throw plenty of mud, some of it is sure to stick," are Hebrew proverbs expressive of sagacity. The French are fond of epigrammatic sayings. The adage "One swallow does not make a summer," they render "One flower does not make a garland." A characteristic of their proverbs is the frequent mention of wolves. Thus: "Talk of the wolf and you will see his tail;" equivalent to "Talk of the devil and he will appear." "It is a silly sheep that makes the wolf her confessor;" "While the dogs growled at each other, the wolf devoured the sheep." These are German examples: "Little and often make a heap in time;" "Handsome apples are sometimes sour;" "It is easier to blame than to do better;" "Take the world as it is, not as it ought to be;" "Our neighbors' children are always the worst;" "Forgive thyself nothing and others much;" "The sun-dial only counts the bright hours;" "He who blackens others does not whiten himself;" "To change and to do better are two different things;" "Revenge converts a little right into a great wrong;" "Charity gives itself rich, but covetousness hoards itself poor."

Spain is rich in proverbs. One of them runs, "By the road of by-and-by one arrives at the town of Never." There is much richness and beauty in the Italian proverbs, as "Time and patience change the mulberry leaf into satin;" but many others alluding to vengeance are terribly significant. The proverbs of Africa partake largely of the physical aspect and moral characteristics of the country. We say of a lucky person, "He was born with a silver spoon in his mouth." On the Nile it is, "Throw him into the river and he will come up with a fish in his mouth;" "A small datestone is large enough to prop up a large water-jar;" "The corn passes from hand to hand, but it comes to the mill at last;" "What can I think of thy good qualities, O onion! since every bite draws tears?" "The beetle is a beauty in the eyes of its mother;" "Say 'good morning' to the bean-seller, not to the druggist," meaning that it is better to be poor and well than rich and ill;" "A husband between two parrots is like a head beaten with two sticks;" "The camel has his own opinion, and the camel driver has his," are all African.

The Egyptian says; "When crows are the guides of a people, they lead the carcass to the dogs;" "The merit belongs to the beginner, should his successor do even better." Turning to the western negroes, we find: "The sun is the king of torches;" "If nothing touches the palm leaves, they do not rustle;" "No one gives a cat to a hyena to keep;" "The leopard is absent, so they play with her cubs;" "The parasite has no root;" "Two crocodiles can not live in one hole;" "Do not curse the crocodile's mother before you cross the river;" "Human blood is heavy: the man that has shed it can not run away;" "The frog enjoys itself in water, but not in hot water;" "The razor can not shave itself;" "Were it not for fingers, the hand would be a spoon." The Welsh have: "If thou wouldst have praise, die;" "By the side of sickness, health becomes sweet;" "He is not altogether bad who maketh another better;" "No man is good unless others are made better by him:" "If every fool wore a crown, we should all be kings." Ireland is not rich in proverbs, but this one is characteristic: "Don't throw out your dirty water till you have got in your clane." Many proverbs are strictly local, as of a lazy man, "He is as idle as Loudon's dog, that leaned against the wall to bark;" or of one with no taste for music, "He is like Mat Davies' bull, that tossed the fiddler into the tree." In classical writings there is an abundance of proverbs having reference to fowls and eggs. Juvenal speaks of a fortunate man as a white hen's chicken, and of an unfortunate man as having been hatched from unlucky eggs. There is a saying that "a white egg may come from a black chicken." The French lay it down that "It is a sorry house in which the cock is silent and the hen crows." In Egypt the people give this advice: "Don't say good morning to the cock," meaning that it has been up early enough without your salutation. Every trade has its proverbs. A carpenter who had been eating an immense quantity of walnuts, his plate being loaded with shells, said, "You see, sir, a workman is known by his chips." And again, "You must use the rasp before you turn to the sandpaper." "It's no use fishing till you have baited your hook," is good advice for a fisherman. These are sparks from the smith's shop: "Some men are born hammers and others are born anvils;" "If the hammer strikes hard the anvil lasts the longest;" "Once he was a hammer, and now he is an anvil;" "It doesn't follow that because your face is black that therefore you are a smith;" "The sword has forgotten the smith that forged it."

Of cats, mice, and monkeys we find: "The cat broke the china;" "All cats are gray at night;" "Don't trust the cat with the keys of the pigeon-house;" "The more you stroke the cat the more she sets up her tail;" "The mewing cat is never a good mouser;" "When the cat dies the mice rejoice;" "When the cat's away the mice 'll play." The Egyptians have a proberb, "Mousey, take this letter to the cat, and here are two pounds of sugar for you;" but the mouse replies, "The pay is good enough, but I don't like the business." Familiar allusions are made to the cat's paw. It was the monkey that made use of the cat's paw for taking the chestnuts out of the fire. "Dress a monkey in silk, and she is a monkey still;" "The higher a monkey climbs the more he shows his tail." The kitchen is prolific in homely aphorism: "A fat chicken makes a lean will;" "The proof of the pudding is in the eating:" "Don't cry over spilt milk;" "Too many cooks spoil the broth;" "The pot called the pan blackamoor." The Italians say: "We don't care for sauce as long as there is fish in the kettle;" "What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." An odd turn is sometimes given to proverbs. For instance: "The earliest bird catches the worm." This was said to a lazy lad who replied, "The more fool the worm, for getting up so soon." "Take care of the sense, the sound will take care of itself," might be instructive to those who want to make display in their speeches. Many of the most current forms are very expressive:" "Hell is paved with good intentions;" "Pull up the stones, you sluggards, and break the devil's head with them;" "You can not make a silk purse out of a sow's ear;" "It is useless stretching the grasshopper's legs." "It is ill taking the breeks off a Highlander;" "There is as good fish in the sea as ever came out of it;" "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good;" "It's a long lane that has no turning;" "Drop by drop fills the bucket;" "Every cloud has a silver lining;" "The man in boots does not know the man in shoes." Occasionally proverbs are to be reprobated, as, "Take care of number one;" "Every man must sow his wild oats;" "In for a penny in for a pound;" "As well be hung for a sheep as a lamb," etc.; but on the whole their influence and teaching are good. No country is richer than our own in these witty and trenchant epigrammatic sayings, but they have not yet received that attention which has been bestowed upon the proverbs of other nations.—Round Table.

◆

The Constelation in a Fog.

"But, Harry," interrupted I, "spin us one of your man-o'-war yarns."

"I am afraid they are all spun to oakum, but (give us a chaw—thankee, Jack), howsomedever," said he, "I suppose some of you have seen these islands, St. Paul's and Amsterdam." "Oh, yes, yes," cried one or two. "Well, it don't make much odds if you haven't," continued he, "but the last time I saw them was in the frigate Constellation, bound to China, and we had what the officers called a 'tween-two position of providence there."

"I guess you mean an inter position," said I.

"Well, you might be right, I reckon," replied he, "but I know it meant it was pretty near a case with us, as I'll tell you; we were somewhere about these latitudes, and the fog was so thick, you might almost hang your hat on it; 'twas the third day we had no sun, and we were bowling along about five knots an hour with a light breeze and a smooth sea, steering of course, by dead reckoning, by which one of the midshipmates told me we were fifty miles off St. Paul's. The log was hove every hour, and the board marked quite regular; but, nevertheless, I knew there was a screw loose somewhere, for I had the gravy-eyed trick (from four to six) that morning at the wheel, and I seed something that scared me, and that ain't done so dreadful easy, I tell you. One bell had just struck (half-past four), and the first faint symptoms of daylight were appearing. Our first leftenant was leaning dozing against the mizen-rigging, and everything still and quiet. 'I say, Harry, just look there!' cried Bill Jones, the quartermaster at the conn, catching me by the arm. I did. There was another Constellation booming along at a rate o' knots, with royals set; but what paulled my capstan was, that she was bottom up, and sailing a darned sight faster than we was. We watched it for five minutes, and it gradually faded away."

"By gracious! I can't suck that in," interrupted one of the green hands.

"Look here!" said Harry turning round to him, not a little riled—"get somebody to learn you the big-gun exercise, and remember the first command."

"What is it?" said he.

"Silence! you gawgaw!" replied Harry, and renewing his quid, he continued his yarn as follows: "Bill Jones and I agreed to keep it dark, and not to let on a word to anybody. However, I was sure it warn't no sign of good weather, anyhow. We got our forenoon below all right, and in the afternoon 'twas our watch on deck. I was sitting in the waist, grafting a block-strap, and quietly humming the Star Spangled Banner to myself, when Jem Bowline, one of the fore-top-men, who was 'making a sloop' of her 'dodging' round the 'fore-mast,' bellows out, 'land ho! land right ahead,' and sure enough the fog hauled up, just like the gauze of a fairy bower in a play, only not quite so pleasant, and showed us St. Paul's high and barren, standing out as clear and bold as if there was no such thing as fog in creation, and right under our bowsprit too. 'Man the lee braces—down with the helm, sir,' roars Commodore Barnes through his trumpet. As the frigate luffed to the breeze the fog settled down again over the island, and as I watched the mist closing over it, ten minutes more, thinks I, and the saucy Constellation would have been nothing but an 'eternal smash.' It came on to rain too, and blew a screamer, and 'twas 'all hands' all night, taking in sail and working ship through the channel betwixt the islands; and if that a'nt a 'tween-two-position, I hope to hollor. It blew a stead gale for two solid weeks, and we showed not a rag more than a close-reef'd top-sail to it, which Bill and I chalked down to the Flyingship."

The Pearl.

BY JENNIE WREN.

One afternoon, Daisy was eating some oysters, when suddenly a pert oyster jumped out of the plate, and, landing on the spoon, began to speak.

"You little cannibal," said he; "do you know what you are eating? You are worse than the heathen in the Sandwich Islands, who live upon missionaries."

"But you are not a missionary," replied Daisy. "You are not a man, and you don't preach."

"Yes, I am a missionary; for I am always preaching. My whole life is a sermon, and, if I am not a man, I am very much like one."

"What a fib," interrupted Daisy. "You are nothing but a little soft gray thing, not worth listening to; and I am just going to eat you right up as fast as I can."

"Stop, stop!" sighed the oyster; "I came from Yankeeland, and I must ask one question before I die. What is a man?"

"A man—why, a man is papa," said the hesitating Daisy.

"Yes; and papa is a being with a heart, and lungs, and liver, and stomach. And so am I."

"Dear me, dear me, what an impudent creature! Show me your lungs, and heart, and liver, and stomach, if you wish me to believe you." So the little oyster made a martyr of himself and dropped all into pieces on the spoon, in order to satisfy Daisy's curiosity.

A little black piece said: "I am the liver; the stomach is hidden in me."

And a fan-shaped piece said; "I am the heart, and take the blood from the lungs."

"But I don't see any lungs," said Daisy, perfectly bewildered by this unexpected lesson in physiology.

"The lungs are those thin, finely-streaked plates which make a fringe at the very edge of my shell."

"Very well, Messrs. Lungs, and Heart, and Stomach, and Liver, come right into my mouth, and let me see how you taste!"

"Oh! wait! wait!" squealed the oyster, in a faint, frightened voice. "I want to tell you something else. I make pearls. I made that large one you admire so much in mamma's necklace."

"Impossible!" said Daisy. "How can you make pearls without any hands?

"Oh! I just take a jelly that comes from my skin, and feed it with sunbeams; and when the jelly has had plenty of sunbeams it grows into a pearl. If you don't believe me, look at mamma's necklace, and you can see the sunbeams glancing and gleaming, beautiful prisoned rainbows of color. It is the easiest thing in the world to make pearl, if you only know how. I have made so much that I didn't know what to do with it, until finally I pearled my house all over inside. That proved to be a very brilliant proceeding, for I have never been in darkness since; even when I shut up for the night, the prisoned sunbeams gleam in a faint way, making the most lovely twilight."

"You dear little artist," said Daisy; "if you really made my favorite pearl, you are too smart to live—you are good enough to eat." And so saying, she tossed the oyster into her pretty mouth, and smashed it all to pieces with her shining teeth.

Hobbies.

Too much hobby-riding belittles the mind, distorts the truth, and cripples influence. All our faculties were made for use. He who goes through life using one faculty, hops on one foot, instead of taking the the strong, smooth gait of a healthy walker. He who, finding within him powers of satire, gives himself up to that, might as well turn into a wasp and go to stinging the bare feet of children. He who is neglectful of all but his imaginative faculty becomes a butterfly flitting idly about till the first "black frost" of criticism kills it. He who devotes himself to fun-making will find the better parts of his soul decaying, and his temporary attractiveness will be found to be the phosphorescence of rotten wood. He who disports himself in nothing but dialectics and mathematics, will get badly hooked by the horns of dilemma, and after a while turn into trapezoids and paralelograms.

When God has given us so many faculties to use, why use only one of them? With fifty white palfreys to ride why go tilting a hobby? He who yields to this propensity never sees the whole of anything. There is no sin in all the earth but slavery, or intemperance, or municipal dishonesty. All the sicknesses would be healed if they would take our medicine. If Ullysses gets into the White House we shall have the millennium. The nations are safe as soon as we can bring to an end the expectorations of tobacco juice. All that we can see of anything is between the leather pricked-up ears of our hobby. This frantic urging on of our pet notion will come to naught. Our prancing charger will sink down with lathered flanks, and we be passed on the road by some Scotch Presbyterian, astride a plain draft horse that has been pasturing in the field next to the kirk, jogging along at an easy pace, knowing it has been elected that he is to reach the kingdom.

Brethren! let us take a palm-leaf and cool off! Let your hobby rest. If it will not otherwise stop, tie it for a few days to the whitewashed stump of modern conservatism. Do not hurry things too much. If this world should be saved next week, it would spoil some of our professions. Do not let us do up things too quick. This world is too big a ship for us to guide. I know from the way she swings from larboard to starboard that there is a strong hand at the helm. Be patient. God's clock strikes but once or twice in a thousand years; but the wheels all the while keep turning. Over the caravansarie of Bethlehem, with silver tongue, it struck one. Over the University of Erfurt, Luther heard it strike nine. In the rockings of the present century it has sounded eleven. Thank God! It will strike twelve!—Rev. De Witt Talmadge.

How the Weasel Became Honest.

A Talmudical Tale.

"What induces theft and creates thieving?" a schoolmaster once asked his scholars.

One answered "Hunger;" another "Extravagance;" another "Envy;" but one little fellow, wiser than the rest, replied, "Receivers."

"Well answered, my little man," said the master. "Now I'll tell you a tale out of the Midrash. You know that King Solomon says: 'Whosoever is partner with a thief, hateth his own soul,' which means—he who derives gain from a thief by helping him to realize the profit of the thief, is thoroughly dishonest himself, and of the two is the more culpable.

"Now, the Midrash illustrates this proverb in this fashion. A powerful and wise Prince made a law that the receiver of stolen property should be hanged, and the thief go free. This caused great discontent among the people who lived like gentlemen, among others who associated with them and attended their fine parties, and likewise among some who had sufficient sense to understand the true intention of the Prince.

"The Prince, anxious to teach the people the wisdom of his edict, ordered all his discontented subjects to meet him in a large field, which he had prepared for the occasion.

"Now, the day before they met, he had the ground pierced with a number of holes. The malcontents assembled, and the Prince ordered some large pieces of meat to be strewn all over the ground, and a few weasels to be let loose. In a very short time the weasels disappeared down the holes with the meat, and the field was empty.

"On the morrow, the Prince again assembled he malcontents, and spread the dainty morsels of meat, and again let loose the thievish weasels; but he had taken the precaution to have every hole and nook stopped up. So when the weasels pounced on the meat, and ran with it to the little dens, where they had before disposed of the proceeds of their theft, they found the holes closed against them; so they dropped their spoil—and—I don't know from the Midrash whether they became honest of their own accord, but in any case their game was stopped.

"One thing is certain. For a long time theft ceased in the kingdom of the wise Prince, for the receivers met with the treatment they richly deserved."

So the little boy was right who answered, 'Receivers make the thief.' 'No holes and even weasels will become honest.'

A Frame Building Twenty-two Miles in Length.

"Persons who pass hastily over the Union Pacific railroad hardly ever give a thought to the immense amount of work which has been performed by the company. From Sacramento to the present terminus of the road, at Elko, the trains are once more running regularly. The immense amount of money expended in cutting through mountains, opening tunnels, grading the road and laying the track, can with difficulty be realized by those not familiar with the business. Not the least of the problems to be solved was that of protecting the track from the heavy falls of snow which were to be anticipated during the winter months. To obviate this difficulty as far as possible, the company determined to erect a series of sheds, or rather one building, which should protect the road over the snow line. Accordingly, they have erected a building which is doubtless the largest in the world. It is twenty-two miles in length, sixteen feet in width, and sixteen feet in height, not including the pitch of the roof. It is put up in the most substantial manner, all the timbers used being of the best quality to be obtained. The sides are inclosed, and were it not for the fact that daylight penetrates through the interstices between the boards, the whole affair would be very like a huge tunnel. The building is braced together in the most peculiar manner, and is, in addition, firmly bolted to the rocks wherever the road nears the face of a cliff. Where snow slides are to be feared, an extension of the roof has been carried to the cliffs, so that falling masses shall pass over the building and lodge on the other side. In many places where side tracks are located, the building is wider than the figures given above. More than 40,000,000 feet of lumber have been used in its construction. It covers an area of more than 1,800,000 square feet, or nearly forty-four acres. One of the best proofs of the stability of the structure is in the fact that, with the exception of a few miles which had not been really completed, it thoroughly answered the purpose for which it was designed during the recent severe storm, in which it was subjected to the most severe tests."—Alta-California, Feb. 26.

Married.

In Chatham, Ill., May 14, by Rev. Bro. A. Gross, Mr. JOHN FANCHER, late of Essex, N. Y., and Miss PUSS L. GROSS, daughter of the officiating clergyman, and sister of the Bros. Gross, law-partners and publishers in this city.

Moneys Received for Masonic Trowel,

FROM MAY 1ST, TO JUNE 9TH, 1869, INCLUSIVE.

$1.25 each.—Agens & Co., R. F. Bower, R. H. Cotney, H. W. Chase, John H. Clickner, G. B. Cornell, J. Dresser, T. Elmore, M. E. Ferguson, J. B. Francis, S. L. Grove, S. R. Gray, John Gardner, J. C. Hammond, R. Hoxsey, J. W. Harrington, W. H. Horton, S. V. Jones, Morris Kohn, Chas. B. Kimball, J. B. Liston, Benj. McElroy, E. S. Niccolls, G. P. Randall, J. T. Reynolds, Robert Sharp, Jos. Soper, D. A. Starrett, C. W. Stearns, Peter Teal, J. Weisbach.

$1.00 each.—P. Burns, W. E. Ginther, S. D. Jaynes, S. B. Knapp, Geo. W. Linn, H. M. Orahood, P. B. Pillow, J. J. Rider, G. Short.

$2.00 each.—Erastus Gassaway, F. Hudson, E. Kirkbride, Henry Robertson, Fred. Stine.

$3.00 each.—J. L. Dewey, C. S. Ford, John L. Green, David Gill.

$4.00 each.—R. J. Allmond, O. N. Whitford.

$5.00 each.—N. D. Larner, Silas Sears.

Other Sums.—J. Assman, 60c; James Boles, $1.10; J. H. Batterton, $6.25; G. W. Brockhaus, $16.00; Cyrus & Gay, 90c; C. D. Coon, $6 25; A. G. Fitch, $1.15; R. B. Gibbs, $1.10; James Kelley, $3.75; E. T. Morley, $1.07; L. L. Shattuck, $2.30; J. F. Williams, $4.25; J. W. Whiteside, $3.85.

R. ORENDORFF,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Business Solicited in the State and Federal Courts.

4v8–6m*

FACTS FOR BUILDERS.

Every Carpenter, and those interested in Building, can save time and money by consulting our Practical Architectural Books. Descriptive catalogues sent free to any address.

A. J. BICKNELL & CO.,
Publishers, Springfield, Ill.

4v8–3t*

The Latest Sensation

The question

"Where shall I Buy Pianos and Organs?"

ANSWERED.

IF you want to buy the most beautiful in style and finish; the sweetest and purest toned; the most durable and in every way the Best Instruments, then buy of

A. BOWER,

SOLE AGENT IN ILLINOIS FOR

SMITH'S AMERICAN PIANOS,

IN EIGHT STYLES,

New and beautiful, indorsed by the best men of the nation.

CARPENTER & COLEMAN'S

CELEBRATED & UNEQUALED ORGANS,

In 31 Styles, and Melodeons in 25 Styles.

Good Agents wanted. Send for terms and price-lists. Address all letters to

A. BOWER, Brimfield, Ill.

N. B.—One-tenth of the net profits given to the Sunday-School cause. 6v8-3t.

AGENTS WANTED!

To sell the best executed and most popular Engraving ever published in this country, entitled

"ON THE MARCH TO THE SEA,"

Illustrating Gen. Sherman's Grand March.

The Engraving is highly commended by

Gen. Sherman; Gen. Schofield, late Secretary of War; Gen. Logan; Gen. Kilpatrick; President of the Americen Bank Note Co.; President of the Continental Bank Note Co.; President of the U. S. Bank Note Co., and other Bank Note Engravers; also by Mr. Huntingdon, President of the Academy of Design, New York, and others too numerous to mention.

N. B.—Freights on prints is only one-tenth part of what it is on books per $100 in value.

Call on or address,

L. STEBBINS, Hartford, Conn.

TESTIMONIALS.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 17, 1868.

L. Stebbins, Hartford, Conn.:

I have just seen the picture, an engraving exhibiting a scene "On the March to the Sea,"—the destruction of the railroad, burning of a storehouse, bridge, &c.—the whole making a very spirited foreground, and a good background.

The execution is certainly very fine, and the figures characteristic. Yours, &c.,

W. T. SHERMAN.

6v8-1t

H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.,

25 SOUTH FIFTH ST.,

SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS,

Dealer in

Masonic Manuals of all Kinds.

MASONIC, HISTORICAL,

and

LITERARY WORKS.

DIPLOMAS,

for all

Branches of the Order.

BLANKS & BLANK BOOKS

For Every Possible Use in

LODGES, CHAPTERS, COUNCILS,

and

COMMANDERIES.

ALL KINDS OF

OFFICIAL JEWELS,

OFFICIAL AND DRESS REGALIA,

FURNITURE, CHARTS,

and

PICTURES

FOR LODGES & CHAPTERS.

Knight Templar Equipments,

&c., &c., &c.

PRINTING & BINDING,

OF ALL KINDS,

DONE TO ORDER,

At as Low Rates,

AND IN AS NEAT STYLE,

as done by any

PUBLISHING HOUSE

IN THE WEST.

CATALOGUES,

Containing Prices and Descriptions, sent free, by mail, to any address.

STEREOTYPING.

I am prepared to do

STEREOTYPING

Of all kinds, at as low rates and as good style as it can be done in Chicago or St. Louis.

VIRGIL PRICE

MANUFACTURING COMPANY,

Manufacturers of all kinds of

Masonic Materials, Swords,

BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.,

No. 144 GREENE STREET,

NEW YORK.

Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.

Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords. 1v8-1y

WESTERN UNION RAILROAD. Short and direct route to all points in Central Iowa, Central and Northern Wisconsin, and all parts of Minnesota. Trains on this road make close connection with trains on the Illinois Central Railroad at Freeport, and also with trains on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad at Clinton Junction and Racine Junction.

2v7 R. C. TATE, Superintendent.

GREAT PLATTE VALLEY ROUTE.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD!

Overland Mail, Express, and Telegraph Line,

OPEN FROM OMAHA TO BENTON, 595 MILES from the

Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains.

On and after Sunday, July 26, 1868, the Union Pacific Railroad will run

Two Daily Passenger Trains

between Omaha and Benton, connecting at Omaha direct with the CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN R. W.

for

ALL PRINCIPAL EASTERN CITIES,

and with the

COUNCIL BLUFFS & ST. JOSEPH R. R.

FOR ALL POINTS SOUTH.

At Cheyenne, direct connnections are made with Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Overland Mail Coaches, for

Denver and Santa Fe!

and all points in

COLORADO AND NEW MEXICO;

And at Benton for Salt Lake and all points in

UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA,

AND CALIFORNIA.

PULLMAN'S PALACE SLEEPING COACHES
On Night Trains.

Good Eating-Houses along the Line.

PASSENGERS CROSSING THE PLAINS

by taking this road,

WILL SAVE 200 MILES STAGING

And 48 Hours Time.

C. D. WHITCOMB, Gen. Ticket Agt.
W. SNYDER, Gen. Supt.
t12–v7 S. H. H. CLARK, Gen. Freight Agt.

THE ILLINOIS JOURNAL.—PUBLISHED Daily and Weekly at Springfield, is the only Republican newspaper printed in the State Capital. It is the Official State Paper, and the Weekly edition penetrates every county. Subscription prices: Daily, $10.00 per year; Weekly, $2.00. Address,

THE JOURNAL COMPANY,
Springfield, Ill.

6-6

THE ILLINOIS STATE REGISTER.—Published at Springfield, Ill., by E. L. Merritt & Bro., is the Central Democratic paper of Illinois. Daily, per annum, $10.00; Daily, six months, $5.00; Weekly, yearly, $2.00. Money sent by Express or in Registered Letters at our risk. Address

6-6 E. L. MERRITT & BRO.

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, JULY 15, 1869. NO. 7.

Poetry.

To My Mother.

The last tear that I shed was the warm one that fell,
As I kissed thee, dear mother, and bade thee farewell;
When I saw the deep anguish impressed on thy face,
And felt for the last time a mother's embrace,
And heard thy choked accents, impassioned and wild,
"God bless thee, forever, God bless thee, my child!"

I thought of my boyhood, thy kindness to me,
When, youngest and dearest, I sat on thy knee;
Of thy praises when right, and thy chidings when wrong,
While wayward with passions ungrieving and strong;
Of thy love to me ever so fondly expressed,
As I grew up to manhood, unconscious how blessed.

I thought of thy counsels, unheeded and spurned,
As mirth had enlivened, or anger had burned;
And how when by sickness, all helpless I lay,
Thou did'st nurse me and soothe me, by night and by day;
How much I had been, both thy sorrow and joy,
And my feelings o'erflowed and I wept like a boy.

Years, years of endurance have vanished, and now
There is pain in my heart, there is care on my brow;
The visions of hope and of fancy are gone,
And careful I tread now life's pathway alone—
Alone, aye alone, though kind ones there be,
There are none here to love me, to love me like thee

◆

Divine Order.

'Tis first the true, and then the beautiful,
  Not first the beautiful and then the true;
First the wild moor, with rock and reed and pool,
  Then the gay garden rich in scent and hue.

'Tis first the good and then the beautiful,
  Not first the beautiful, and then the good;
First the rough seed, sown in the rougher soil,
  Then the flower blossoms on the branching wood.

Not first the glad and then the sorrowful,
  But first the sorrowful and then the glad;
Tears for a day—for earth of tears is full—
  Then we forget that we were ever sad.

Not first the bright and after that the dark,
  But first the dark, and after that the bright;
First the thick cloud and then the rainbow's arc,
  First the dark grave, then resurrection light.

'Tis first the night—stern night of storm and war,
  Long nights of heavy clouds and veiled skies—
Then the far sparkle of the morning star
  That bids the saints awake, and dawn arise.

Mrs. Hemnas.

◆

A mighty lion, lord of all the wood,
Having his hunger thoroughly satisfied
With prey of beasts, and spoil of living blood,
Safe in his deadless den him sought to hide;
His sternness was his praise, his strength his pride,
And all his glory in his cruel claws.
I saw a wasp that fiercely him defied,
And bade him battle, even to his jaws;
Sore he him stung, that it the blood forth draws,
And his proud heart is filled with fretting ire:
In vein he threats his teeth, his tail, his paws,
And from his bloody eyes doth sparkle fire;
That dead himself he wisheth to despite.
So weakest may annoy the most of might!

◆

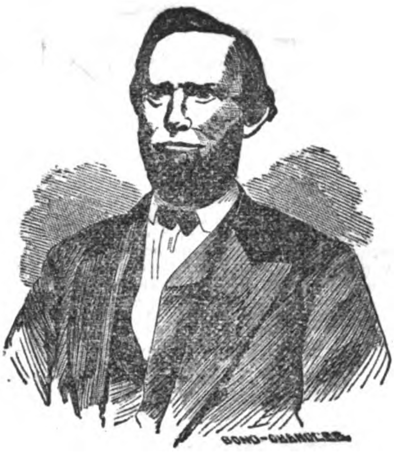
My mother!—manhood's anxious brow
And sterner cares have long been mine.
Yet turn I to thee fondly now,
As when upon thy bosom's shrine,
My infant griefs were gently hushed to rest
And thy low-whispered prayers my slumbers blest.

Bethune.

The sedentary stretch their lazy length
When custom bids, but no refreshment find,—
For none they need; the languid eye, the cheek
Deserted of its bloom, the flaccid, shrunk,
And withered muscle, and the vapid soul,
Reproach their owner with that love of Rest
To which he forfeits e'en the rest he loves.

Cowper.

Biographical Sketch.



Daniel G. Burr.

Laban Burr was born in Hingham, Mass., Feb. 5th, 1773. His first wife, Prudence Prentice, was born in Winchenden, Mass., Oct. 7, 1779, and they were married in 1798. From this marriage came two sons and four daughters—one son and one daughter still survive. The son, Samuel P., is a Methodist preacher, and has a cabinet shop and farm in Kankakee Co. The mother died in Langdon, N. H., Nov. 15, 1809.

The father was made a Mason in Olive Branch Lodge, in Charleston, Mass., in 1801, and was raised in Social Lodge, in Ashby, in 1802, and exalted to the degree of Royal Arch, in Washington Chapter, in Chester Co., Vt., August 21, 1818.

The second wife, Betsey Gould, was born in Petersham, Mass., May 22, 1786, and was married to Laban Burr in 1813, and is still living in Paris, and is 83 years of age. From this marriage came five daughters and one son, all surviving but one.

The father was of Scottish and Presbyterian descent; he settled in Edgar Co., in 1818, and died Sept. 11, 1824, at the age of 51, honored and lamented by all who knew him.

The mother is of English descent, was one of the few who formed the first Presbyterian church in Edgar Co., and is still a member.

The subject of this sketch, R. W. Bro. Daniel G. Burr, was born in Paris, April 14, 1821, and was less than three years old at his father's decease. At the age of 14, he commenced life for himself, and learned the trade of a mason, and procured his education by his own exertions. Enterprising and ambitious, he commenced the study of law, but at the commencement of the Mexican war, he enlisted in Col. Edward D. Baker's 4th Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, under Capt. McConkey, and was Orderly Sergeant. He served until the regiment disbanded, and fought in all the battles in which regiment was engaged, and was with Maj. Harris in several desperate hand to hand assaults upon Mexican batteries and works.

He has since been Post Master, and has seen much service in town, county and revenue offices; was copyist of the last General Assembly under the old constitution; took the census in 1860 and 1865, and until just now, has been serving as Assistant U. S. Assessor.

While on his way from Paris to attend upon the Legislature in Dec. 1846, he tarried in Charleston, and received the first three degrees in Charleston Lodge No. 35, at the hands of Bro. Mills, who was then one of the noted working Masters in this State.

At the session of the Legislature that winter, we were a correspondent of a St. Louis paper, and had a good deal of leisure time. That leisure was mainly spent in lecturing with Bro. Burr, and an intimacy grew out of it, that has been kept up until now.

A dispensation was granted Prairie Lodge in 1849, of which Bro. Burr was the first Junior Warden. A charter was granted at Shawneetown in 1850. In 1851 he was elected Secretary, and filled the station for three years.

In 1858 he was elected Secretary, and continued in that station until Dec. 1861, when he was elected Master, and has continued to serve in that station until the present time. The lodge is now in a good financial condition, harmony and confidence prevail, and the lodge stands a peer in Grand Lodge.

Bro. Burr is an excellent and impressive workman, has served several years as Grand Lecturer and is now one of the Inspectors of the Work.

The Chapter degrees were conferred upon him in Springfield Chapter No. 1, and he became a member of Edgar Chapter in 1857, and was immediately appointed R. A. Capt., and was re-appointed in 1858. In 1852 he was elected Secretary, and held that station for five years.

The degrees of Royal and Select Master were conferred upon him in Springfield, and when a dispensation was granted to form Young Council at Paris, he was named first Principal Conductor of the Work, and filled that place until 1864, when he was elected Grand Master, and re-elected in 1865, and was again elected last December.

In 1865 the Grand Council elected him Grand Principal Conductor, Deputy in 1866, and Grand Puissant in 1867. He received the orders of Knighthood in Elwood Commandery No. 6, in Oct. 1867.

Bro. Burr is emphatically a business man. He is never in a hurry, nor unemployed. Memorizing is a severe labor, but once in the memory, there it stays. In character, reputation and habits, he is without a stain, and is a good son, a true friend, and an honest man.

St. John's at Lewistown.

In pursuance of an invitation from Lewistown Lodge No. 104, A. F. and A. M., we started from home Tuesday, June 22, and arrived the following day, where we found Ross' Building nearly finished. It is a plain, neat, and massive structure, in the third story of which is the new Masonic Hall.

A contract had been made for the dinner, but at a late day it was found that suitable rooms could not be procured, and the ladies of Lewistown, headed by Mrs. Lewis W. Ross, and Mrs. H. L. Bryant, took hold of the matter with a will, wisdom, and courage that meant success, and seconded by the hands of the Masons, a dinner and supper was prepared complete in quantity, quality, and variety, and elegant in preparation.

On the following day delegations arrived from Canton, Vermont, Farmington, Fairview, Avon, Astoria, Ipava, and Cuba, in Fulton Co.; La Harpe, Hancock Co.; Monmouth and Roseville, Warren Co.; Galesburg, Knoxville, Maquon, and Yates City, Knox Co.; Elmwood, Timber, and Kingston Mines, Peoria Co.; Bath and Havana, Mason Co.; and from Peoria City, accompanied by a large number of Templars in full dress, under the command of Sir Wm. Rounseville, E. C. The number of Freemasons present was about five hundred.

At 12 o'clock, M., the new hall was dedicated in the presence of about five hundred Masons, Bro. E. M. M. Clarke, officiating as Deputy, S. Corning Judd as S. G. Warden, A. H. Swain as J. G. Warden, and Rev. Bro. Morey as G. Chaplain. After, the dedication dinner was served to full one thousand in the first story of the same building, and was managed entirely by the ladies.

At 2 o'clock the procession was formed and proceeded to Dr. Piersoll's grove, where several pieces of music were given by the bands present. Prayer was offered by Rev. Bro. Morey, and the address was delivered by ourself. Full one thousand citizens and ladies were present, besides the Fraternity. After the address, the officers elect of Lewistown Lodge were installed by R. W. Bro. Rounseville, assisted by R. W. Bro. S. Stevens, as Marshal.

It may be proper here to allude briefly to the history of Masonry at Lewistown. The town was laid out by Ossian M. Ross, and named for his son, Lewis W., whose third term in Congress has just closed.

As early as 1823 or 4, a lodge was started, of which O. M. Ross, — McNeal, and several others whose names we heard, but do not remember, were members. It went down in the anti-Masonic crash of 1827. In January, 1850, William Kellogg was elected Judge, and we State's Attorney. We were thoroughly proficient then in nine degrees. We taught the Masons from all parts of the county, and the following spring we drafted their petition and they received a dispensation. Hon. L. W. Ross and Gen. L. F. Ross were among the early initiates and early Masters. Judge Kellogg was their brother-in-law, and during court we used to see the lads of the three families together on the street, or in the court-room. The General now lives at Avon, and the Judge at Peoria. The latter is not a Mason.

Nineteen years pass over our heads, and we return to find John W. Ross and William Kellogg, Jr., Masons, both grandsons of Ossian M. Ross; and John W., son of Lewis W., a member of the Legislature, District D. G. M., and Master re-elect. He is emphatically a noble young man, beloved, the eldest of a large family of brothers, sisters, and cousins, full of genius, fire, and eloquence, and his heritage is not merely wealth and talent, but that of culture also, for few sons have such a mother. After the installation, the lodge-room was the scene of an enchanting festival, while on the first and second floor, manly and beautiful forms tripped gaily to the sound of merry music. We desire to return grateful thanks to M. E. Comp. E. M. M. Clarke, former Grand High Priest, for many attentions, and to his estimable lady, and to Judge and Mrs. Judge Bryant, Mr. and Mrs. Ross and son, for many courtesies and attentions.

After the installation, a committee was appointed to request a copy of the address for publication. The correspondence and address follow below:

To the Most Worshipful Grand Master of Masons of Illinois:

The undersigned, a committee appointed at a convention of Masons, assembled on the festival of St. John the Baptist, on this date, for the purpose, respectfully solicit a copy of your able, interesting, instructive, and convincing address, delivered to day, for publication. Permit us to add our individual and personal acknowledgments of its value, and to hope that you will accede to the wishes of the convention unanimously expressed.

Yours fraternally,
Wm. Rounseville. Peoria,
Isaac Underhill, do.
S. Corning Judd, Lewistown,
A. H. Swain, Monmouth,
S. Y. Thornton, Canton,
Committee.

Lewistown, June 24, 1869.

Lewistown, Ill., June 24, 1869.

R. W. Bro. Rounseville and others, committee:

Dear Brethren:—In compliance with your complimentary request, I place my address, delivered to-day, hastily prepared and not re-written, with all its imperfections, at your disposal.

Fraternally yours,
H. G. Reynolds.

ADDRESS

Delivered by the Grand Master at Lewistown, June 24, A. L. 5869.

Brethren of the Masonic Fraternity, Ladies and Gentlemen:

The Freemasons of this and other cities and towns, have met to celebrate the natal day of the Forerunner, who among Christian Masons is called a patron saint—John the Baptist. To him, with St. John the Evangelist, Masons in Christian countries dedicate their lodges. Christians, in tracing back their religious history, have certain landmarks in time, most conspicuous of which are the return of the Jews from Babylon and the rebuilding of the Temple—the Jewish captivity—the erection of the first Temple—the journey through the wilderness to Palestine—the history of Abraham—the dispersion at Babel—the great flood, and the creation and fall of man.

So Masons in Christian countries have their landmarks in the past also; commencing practically with the first Temple, when lodges or assemblies of builders were dedicated to King Solomon, who is said to be our first Grand Master; next, with the second Temple, when lodges were dedicated to Zerubbabel; and third, the Christian era, when commenced the dedication of lodges to St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist.

The rugged and indomitable John the Baptist, whose birth was a miracle, was of the priestly order, and himself a prophet. His youth was spent in the sparsely settled and hilly regions of Judea, and as he was attached to the Essenes, his habits were austere, studies constant, and amid the solitudes of nature, and the teachings of his sect, he mastered the prophecies, gathered up the history of the past, and, inspired of God, he stood like a lone sentinel upon the cloud-capped mountain peak of time, waiting for the coming. Behold him! clothed in the raiment of poverty, feeding upon locusts and wild honey, heedless of storm, regardless of the desert heat, he finds himself the apex of an eventful and eternal history, and the crowning summit of a host of leaders, seers, and poets, of prophets, priests, and kings! From this lofty eminence he overlooks the country of the Euphrates, and glances over events from the creation of man until the re-peopling of the world from the ark! Turning to the Nile, he watches the chosen people of God escaping from bondage and entering upon the promised land! Ruled by judges, governed by kings, taught by prophets, rent in twain, carried away captive, returning only a remnant, he looks upon the plains beneath and around him, to find them enslaved and writhing under a merciless heathen despotism.

Pagan gods are worshiped, and idolatrous tetrarchs, governors, centurions, and soldiers rule in the cities and villages, in the hills and plains of Palestina! God's Holy Altars are overthrown! His Temple is profaned! He no longer speaks by the Urim and the Thummim! The High Priest clad in holy vestments no longer enters the Holy of Holies once in each year, to offer up sacrifice for his own sins and those of the people! The national history of the Hebrews is about to close, and with a wail of anguish over the bitter memories of the past, John turns his face away and looks upon the future, and sees the prophecies fulfilled. He descries before him, one who is to be King of Kings, in whom all the people of the earth are to be one, and to whom all the nations of the earth are to flow.

Clad in the steeled garments of a resolute will, an iron frame, unsullied piety, quenchless love, an unconquerable faith, and a dignity of person and deportment which always accompany strength and wisdom, the Holy Man descended from his lonely height, and entered upon his work. Mark him! No sacrifice, no ablution, no penance is demanded. Tersely and imperatively he commands the people "to repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." To "prepare the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight." He denounced the Pharisees and Sadducees as a "generation of vipers." He taught retributive justice, when he told his multitude of hearers that "every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit shall be hewn down and cast into the fire." He taught honesty to the publicans when he enjoined them to exact no more than was appointed them. He taught mercy, truth, and contentment to the soldiers when he bade them "Do violence to no man, to accuse none falsely and to be content with their wages." For his fidelity to God, and his faithfulness to King Herod, he was cruelly beheaded, and with him closed the whole line of Jewish prophets forever.

And as St. John the Baptist came forth from the winter of his desert abode, and from the cheerless night of Jewish desolation, to enter upon the spring and summer of a new dispensation, so we, as Free and Accepted Masons, after the lapse of a long and cheerless winter, come forth in this spring-time of joy, and as we are entering upon the summer of gladness and beauty, to celebrate with fraternal grip, words of cheer, music, march, and procession, songs of gladness, voice of thanksgiving, feasts of love, and innocent mirth, the anniversary of our glorious patron Saint.

As St. John the Baptist was the forerunner, so St. John the Evangelist was the finisher. His natal day is December 27th. Then our lodges generally close up the business of the year, elect and install new officers, and enter upon the business of a new term. The presence of winter compels all feasts and celebrations to be within doors; how unlike this glorious season, so consonant with harmony, joy, and love. It is customary on occasions similar to this, to enter at some length upon a defence of Freemasonry, upon an examination of objections, to clear away misapprehensions, to elucidate its principles, to compare Masonry with other societies, and to speak in a great variety of ways of its value, its age, its patrons, its good deeds, and its moral power. It might be expected that your speaker should enter upon some of these themes. I know something of the Craftsmen of Fulton and adjoining counties. I have read several addresses delivered by Masters and Orators in your lodges. I shall not presume to say, much less to think, that I can improve upon their work. I have a few words, more for those who are not Masons, than for those who are. And as I design to say something important and useful in a plain and practical way, I must, in advance, solicit a patient and uninterrupted hearing from non-Masons, including ladies especially, until I conclude what may seem to be an unprofitable discourse. I propose now to show what Masonry is not.

1. Masonry is not a religious institution in any ordinary ecclesiastical, theological, denominational, or sectarian sense. Masons, as such, do not organize churches or endow them; do not build church edifices, call ministers, nor educate them.

Masonic societies do not discuss in their lodge rooms any religious subjects about which Masons are liable to disagree. There is scarcely a lodge represented here, which lacks members of from four to ten different denominations of Christians, perhaps some Hebrews, and some with no defined theological notions whatever. These men never discuss the themes of falling from grace, unconditional election, universal salvation, different modes of baptism, close communion, free will, church government, or any other question upon which men seriously divide. True and actual toleration in honest differences exists nowhere so fully as among Masons, and the more intelligent they are, the more tolerant they become. Take a lodge night. Sit where you can see the members as they quietly gather. Two brethren, one a farmer and a Methodist, the other a physician and a Presbyterian, come along in cozy and friendly conversation, and pass in together. Soon along come two attorneys, one a Baptist, and the other a Lutheran, and of opposite politics; do you hear anything about their differences? Not a word; and as they quietly gather, stay an hour or two, and as peacefully return to their homes. Wait until Sunday. Where do you see those brethren? If attending church at all, each one attends his own. Then it is not for the promotion of the interests of any sect or party in religion that these men are banded together. Why then, you ask, do they have prayers, religious services, and for what reason do they enforce moral ideas by means of emblems and symbols. Perhaps we will try to tell you by and by.

2. Masonry is not a political system. It supports no political party, but it has members in all. Masons are, as a body, intelligent, and reasonably fair-minded men. I venture the assertion, that no body of citizens, religious, social, literary, political, or otherwise, can be found that vote so uniformly to sustain their political sentiments as Masons do. And why? Because, in the practice of toleration, which brings reflection, they have found it impossible for thinking, reasoning men to agree, and yet, they find they can live together on terms of perfect amity and concord, and disagree.

3. Masonry is not the State. Masons differ as much as other people in regard to matters of public policy and the general welfare. It is no singular matter for the executive and legislative department of our state or national governments, with prominent Masons in both, to be in conflict with each other. Masons upon the bench are as likely to disagree in the construction of a statute or the interpretation of the common law, as other men. Masons in the legislature vote and act in all matters of political differences, public policy, or the enactment of laws, without any reference to each others' opinion. Whoever does not see this with one eye shut, has no use for the other. You will find the same to be true in all your county boards, aud in every matter of public concern. The people elect more Masons to positions of public trust, in proportion, than are placed in office by the appointing power, even whore the appointing officer is himself a Mason. The people select whom they choose; appointing officers do not care to bring odium upon themselves.

4. Masonry is neither a commercial, monetary, or mechanical institution. It leaves business men to regulate commercial affairs, financiers to manage the currency and matters of loans, debts, bonds, mortgages, and interest. Rules are instituted between employers and employed, and the latter often make the rules and enforce them. Masonry is no longer an operative, but purely a speculative system.

5. There is a common idea, that lodges of Masons, and other Masonic bodies, are by some secret law, organized forms of benevolence, relief, and charity. There is no greater mistake. Lodges are benevolent, charitable, or relief societies, just as they choose to make themselves so, either by their own enactments, or whenever they may so elect. There is no law of Masonry which compels a Masonic lodge to contribute one dollar to support an orphan, a widow, or even a brother, and whenever a lodge makes such laws, or gives from its funds, it is with real charitable intent, or for the purpose of equalizing contributions and assistance among the brethren. Organized forms in Masonry are in no sense beneficiary, by virtue of any general law. A prominent, and one of the principal features in Odd-Fellowship, and various other benevolent, reformatory, and industrial societies, is the beneficiary principle, enacted into the constitutions of the parent or principal societies, and everywhere scrupulously regarded.

Individual contributions in these societies are rare, and are never resorted to except in great emergencies, or when the funds are exhausted. I do not draw this distinction by way of depreciating other organizations; far from it. Every good man blesses every good work, upon the principle that where the work is good and the results favorable, the motive is proper. But I wish to show, that Freemasonry is not the parent of the obligatory beneficiary system. Upon this point, I have more to say in another connection.

5. Freemasonry is not a Reformatory Institution. Churches are instituted for the cure of souls. Even those which reject the idea of future punishment, advocate reform, honesty in dealings, honor in society, and purity of life. The temperance organizations are based on the reform idea, and relief, prevention, and protection follow in its train. Freemasonry requires testimonials of good character, before she even proceeds to elect. The consequence of this, I will speak of again. That the institution is sadly imposed upon, by neglecting or disregarding this great principle, I admit. Is any society exempt?

7. Freemasonry has no law of perpetuity. Solicitation to become a Freemason is forbidden. I have never yet met one who has acknowledged any solicitation whatever. Questions, candidly put, when proper, are candidly answered. If a worthy man desires information, all proper to know is cheerfully given. By-laws are furnished, and reading matter put into the hands of inquirers. If, upon examination, one deemed worthy desires to petition for the honors of Masonry, the way is laid open before him. Notwithstanding Masonry has no law of perpetuity, yet there is no Mason who lacks faith in its perpetual existence.

But if no one should petition Lewistown Lodge; if that lodge should cease to initiate candidates or admit Masons, the lodge would cease to exist when its members passed away.

The rule in churches and reformatory societies is solicitation, and that, too, with great propriety, for the main object with them is, to change the condition of men from bad to good—from evil habits and depraved tastes, to usefulness and honor.

8. Freemasonry is not exclusive. Every family has its privacies; every society has confidential matters; every church is in possession of family and personal troubles; every lawyer is a sworn secret-keeper; physicians often hold important information, and ministers are the repositories, often, of precious memories, trusts, and confidences; in many other ways, there are vast interests and reputations hanging upon the faithfulness of man to his fellow.

An exposure of these privacies, secrets, and confidential relations, would rouse the indignation of whole communities, and persons who would abuse the trusting confidence of people, patient, client, friend, or relative, is unfit for society, and when such a character is known, he is shunned.

Beyond the mere modes of recognition, Freemasonry has few secrets. Its principles are published freely in books, magazines, and papers.

The rights in Masonry are mostly individual; very few inherent Masonic rights belong to organized bodies; benefits are almost exclusively individual.

Do you know of any Mason who is less a Christian, a citizen, a patriot, a benefactor; who is less charitable, humane, enterprising, or industrious, because he is a Mason? If you do, the case is rare, and it only proves the wrong man is in the wrong place. Our Institution is the very last place for fanatics or theorists, or lazy men, but it would need to be omniscient if it entirely escaped them.

9. Freemasonry has no law of force. She has no trained military bands; no arms; in her own defense, she never opposes force to force. Expulsion from all the rights and benefits of Masonry is the highest penalty known. When that penalty is inflicted, it is the result of charges preferred in writing, due notice, written record testimony, a fair trial by the lodge, and judgment by a two-thirds vote. They bid the offender go forth, an exile and a wanderer, but with the exhortation to bring forth fruits meet for repentance, and he shall be welcomed home again. I make these remarks with a full knowledge of what may be said about Morgan. My memory is as good as that of most men. I was old enough to know all about that matter, and lived in the district which sent the first distinctive anti-Mason to Congress, and was an active voter long before that pestilence died away. I seriously question, as either a legal or general matter of proof, the killing of Morgan, but if he was killed, it was an unjustifiable, unlawful, unmasonic act, for which Masonry furnishes no warrant, which was never the judgment of any Masonic body, nor the result of any Masonic trial.

Expulsion, by a two-thirds vote, is the highest penalty. If the offender tries to reform, or repent, he is encouraged, and in due time restored, but if he does not, then his expulsion is equivalent to moral death. Candidly, I would prefer a natural death. Expulsion to an intelligent Mason, is like the punishment of Cain, greater than can be borne.

Fellow-citizens and ladies, if Masonry is not a religious, political, commercial, or reformatory institution; if not allied to the state; if its lodges are not benevolent societies; if not exclusive, and has no law of force or perpetuity, you will naturally inquire, what is Masonry?

1. It is a moral institution. This embraces several well-defined points.

First, Theology. Before any candidate can proceed one step, or learn one thing, he must avow his belief in God, and His Supremacy and government. Among the Hebrews, the old testament is accepted as the book of the law, while in Christian countries, both the old and the new testaments will be found on our altars, as the great light in Masonry.

Masonic theology also embraces that religion in which men agree. There is no law against honor, honesty, temperance, fidelity, gentleness, goodness, faith, or meekness.

All admit that industry, economy, charity, brotherly kindness, and love are godly virtues. Every moral precept contained in the new testament, is also contained in the old, and are Masonic, and should be observed by every Mason.

Second. In a certain sense, lodges are ecclesiastical. No lodge can be opened without that work being on the altar, which is the recognized rule of life. With us the Bible must be open. Every lodge must recognize the worship of Deity—a worship suitable to all, and unobjectionable to any. So far every lodge is an ecclesiastical body, and no further.

Third. Masons enforce the observance of certain moral duties, by rules peculiar to themselves. If Masons bind themselves to assist each other in distress or need, to relieve the wants of the widow or orphan, to deal honorably with each other, to observe silence and practice charity in the matters of each other's failings, weaknesses, and infirmities, and to preserve each other's honorable confidence, who is to object? These were all duties in the first place; these are all embraced in church covenants; they are enforced by the Bible; they are the duties of every man and woman.

The law of the land only reaches grosser offences, but moral obligations rest upon all alike. Masons intend to observe moral obligations in general, and such as are specified in Masonic covenants in particular, and these latter they intend to enforce.

While the moral law embraces every duty, both positive and negative, still some of them may be treated under other heads.

2. While Masonry is in no sense a political party, nor its members bound to each other in political matters, yet, every Freemason is enjoined to be a quiet and peaceable subject, to submit patiently to legal authority, to conform cheerfully to the government of the country in which he resides, to be true to his country, and not to be engaged in disloyalty and rebellion.

Is there any objection to these? Is it desirable to have brawls, fights, drunken riots, resistance to law, and unsettled government, and to give license to rapine, robbery, lust, and murder? Ladies, which class of politics would you like to have your husbands, brothers, and sons observe? I fancy your eady answer. You will say, that in broils, riots, affrays, and disregard of law, you bear the burdens and are the greatest sufferers, and prefer that your boys should honor their country and observe its laws.

3. Freemasonry is cosmopolitan. In every civilized country, and even among barbarians and savages, Freemasons are to be found. Wherever war prevails among civilized nations, the genius of our institution is present to mitigate the horrors and allay the anguish that follows carnage and slaughter. This has been the case when religion has lost its power. It goes before the battle to make peace or settle terms; it goes after the battle to soothe, comfort, save, and care; it goes with the army to defend the weak and protect the helpless.

It has been said by those who blindly, but perhaps honestly oppose Masonry, that whatever good it pretends to do, can be as well done by other agencies and means. This is untrue.

Masonic principles, embracing every moral duty, are good and never can die. The fabric upon which Masonry rests is indestructible. While nations have disappeared; empires have crumbled to pieces; monarchies have been overthrown; while the light of civilization has given place to barbaric darkness, and heathen gods have taken the place of religion, science, and art, Masonry, often weeping over the desolation, has still remained unchanged, ever ready to mitigate anguish, compassionate misery, allay strife, heal the wounded, and bury the dead. It is the only institution existing, in which men of every country, sect, and opinion, can meet, and it brings together men who, otherwise, would remain at a perpetual distance. Take a Masonic lodge-room; you see Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Disciples, Lutherans, Hebrews, Universalists, and men of no prescribed faith; you see the American and men of other nations, races, and color; democrats and republicans; men of every honorable occupation, trade, or profession, all mingled together. Where else would you see them? In an Odd-Fellow's lodge? No. That society is of modern origin, and is confined to countries where the English language prevails. At what church will you see all those men? None. At what society? None. Where will you see those democrats and republicans? On election day, or in legislative halls, battling with might and main for the ascendancy of their principles.

But for Masonry, men of different nationalities might live within a stone's throw of each other in our towns and cities, and never knowingly meet. Men of diverse religious views might never know and love each other. Men of different political parties might never meet to mingle in fraternal converse, to find loving hearts, and genial minds.

Instead of broad and comprehensive religious charity and co-operation, bigotry would reign, and religious sects, political parties, and industrial classes, following their leaders, would live only in narrow lanes of operation, full of sectarian, political, or class jealousy, ready to be fanned into hate or aversion. Under the benign sun of Masonry, behold all these diverse elements dwelling together in unity.

4. While Masonry has no law of benevolence for its lodges, in its present speculative condition, it has emphatic laws for its individual members. The obligations of Masons in this respect, are between each other. They reach the king and the laborer alike. There is but one limit, worthiness, necessity, and ability. No Master Mason can shield himself under the plea that the lodge has made provision. If that provision is not forthcoming, if the sufferer is worthy, he must be relieved, if the ability is sufficient. This obligation rests alike on every Master Mason, whether a member or non-member of a lodge, or under sentence of suspension or expulsion. Freemasonry is a general system of benevolence, counsel, and mutual confidence. Its sick are attended; its dead are buried; its orphans provided for; and the widow's heart is relieved of sad forebodings and gloomy misapprehensions.

5. In short, Masonry teaches reverence for God and his laws; love to our neighbor; fidelity to our country; obedience to its laws; a charitable disposition, honesty in business, and a personal honor that admits of no question.

It is tolerant of opinions; charitable in construction of motives; hears first, and then decides; and always allows mercy to prevail when evenly balanced with justice.

It is the friend of religion; the advocate and prompter of universal education, the active co-operator in all good enterprises, and frequently the motive power behind them.

It is in all ranks of society, it travels everywhere; is in the marts of commerce; the halls of trade; on the farm and in the shop; on the bench and at the bar; in the pulpit and the sick room; at the wedding and the grave, in the mansion and the cottage, and everywhere the same.

Fellow Citizens: it has been said that in dealing, every man should be treated as a rogue. It is a hateful and pernicious maxim. The other proverb is better which says, "if you wrong me once, it is your fault; if the second time, it is mine." Better far, to be occasionally wronged, than live in a perpetual state of war. Suspicions and jealousies among neighbors breed discontent, feuds, and an uncomfortable state of society. Reason should rule, and a conscientious, charitable, forbearing neighbor is sure to win in the end. And an approving conscience, and a life void of offense, are no mean friends upon a bed of death.

It is in this spirit that I respectfully ask you to judge us. While you observe that a Mason is tender and careful of the reputation and interests of a brother, his widow and children, look and see if he is less charitable in other cases than before he was a Mason; if Masons as a body are less enterprising, industrious, charitable, or religious than before they became Masons, or than the most charitable, moral, and enterprising of their neighbors, and then as you would have them judge you, do ye even so unto them.

Brethren—The time already consumed leaves but little space for you. Familiar as you are with the topics discussed, yet it may be that I have touched upon some matters which have not occupied your thoughts, and if profitable and satisfactory to you, then I am amply repaid.

In this county of Fulton, you have nine lodges, and by this time six hundred members. All of your lodges are respectable in numbers, except the youngest, and that is growing fast enough; some of your lodges are strong, and they are well distributed over the surface of your county. Yet none are of rapid, much less, of mushroom growth. The advance in numbers has been gradual, regular, and stable. You have had an industrious, wealthy, prudent, and respectable community from which to make Masons. In all that constitutes bone and sinew—talent and worth—industry and prosperity—morality and religion, in the general mass, I presume that I only speak what all my auditors from abroad will quickly indorse, that no other county can surpass this. You now have something more. Railroads and the enterprises that flow in their train, are now among you. They will add largely to your enterprising population, wealth, and power. These enterprises quicken the blood, add elasticity and rapidity to the step, force to action, and accelerate velocity in all the machinery of society. They will act surprisingly upon your lodges. And, brethren, they will bring evil as well as good. Now is your time of danger. Not from anti-Masonry; that may spread its slime for a time, may have its brief triumphs, and will do you good if you are wise and silent and observing, and then it will die, as it has lived, desolated and died before.

Your danger lies in the fact that your enterprises, quickened pulses, and rapid growth, may unhinge that steady, moral, and regular habit which is the real pride of your Craftsmen.

Worshipful Masters, be steady at the helm; officers, stand by your staunch crafts; brethren, lend a helping hand, keep your lodges pure and clean of all doubtful material; in all your enterprises provide lots, lands, and buildings for yourselves. Procure land and lots for such purposes as you may need in the future, now. Five years hence, your real estate will double in value, and your population will advance sixty thousand or more. Your mines will be worked; manufactures will thrive, your timber is vast wealth, and with your soil, water, wealth, and thrift, your county will resemble a bee-hive, and you will verily revel in milk and honey.

Again I say, secure lands and lots now; have your own buildings, and be tenants of others no longer. Avoiding extravagance and debt, have neat, tasty, and convenient lodge-rooms and surroundings, well furnished, well kept, made safe from fire, and constantly insured. Be independent; avoid alliances with schools, churches, and other societies. You will avoid trouble and serious danger from fire by heeding my caution.

There is not one lodge in this or any adjoining county, but what can form a stock company of its own members, create a sinking fund, buy a lot of forty or eighty acres of land, and build a hall and furnish it, and in good time, repay from rents and the natural accumulation of funds the entire amount and interest by installments.

When that is done, you can improve your lands, and provide comfortable homes for your orphans, your destitute, your aged and infirm. If you buy eighty acres now, in five years forty acres will make all the improvements you want without drawing a dollar from your treasury. I intend these remarks for brethren in other counties, so far as they apply.

Brethren—A serious hindrance to Masonic prosperity is the constant desire for change. We feel it seriously in grand lodge. It impairs our legislation, and keeps up a feverish feeling among our lodges. I am no advocate of perpetual Masterships, but a good Master should be willing, and the brethren should desire to have him serve from five to ten years. The same is true of other officers. Let qualifications, character, and judgment be the test. Then the successors to your Masters will not go into their position inexperienced and untried, and we shall have more stability and efficiency in our lodges, more experience, knowledge, and certainty in our grand lodge. Then let your love for your lodge be superior to your ambition; let its prosperity be your pride, and let it be, next to your church and family, a pleasant, alluring home.

A trifling expense and a little genius and labor, combined with the fairy creations of womanly fancy and taste, can convert your lodge-rooms, almost at a moment's warning, into a pleasant place for a sociable, basket-party, fair, tea-drinking, substantial supper, or what else you like that is appropriate, where Masons, and their wives, daughters, sisters, and sons, can mingle together in social enjoyment, for mutual improvement, or for any good object or end. Do not make them frequent, yet often enough to have them looked forward to with pleasure, and so that acquaintance with families may ripen into mutual friendship among all their members.

Brethren, you have all signified your trust in God. If you love Him, fear Him, and obey Him, your trust will not be like the spider's web, your expectations will not perish, but your faith will be lost in sight, your hope end in fruition, and you will enter into that rest that remaineth for the people of God.

Once there was a notable, and to all of you a familiar case, where the best of the wine was left until the last of the feast. Such is Masonic custom in public addresses, and heaven's last best gift to man is the last to receive attention in this public manner. This may seem to you, ladies, like a depreciation of your worth, or a slight upon your sex. Be assured that it is not so, in any sense whatever. The real reason is this: we talk here about Masonry, the ceremonies of which you are unacquainted with. Hence, it is desirable that what is said to you should be fresh and pointed, so as to fasten itself in your memories, and be carried away for reflection in your homes. The time has come when woman is no longer to be treated as an idol, or petted as a plaything. They must be treated, especially by Masons, as a component part of the human family.

While I would speak tenderly and courteously, yet I approach this portion of my subject very earnestly and candidly.

Ladies—Masonry is a serious matter to men; and it affects you as seriously as it does them; it affects your children, your estate, your character, and your virtue.

You ask, naturally, why you can not be made members of our honorable Fraternity. The truth, all that is necessary, can be quickly told. Originally, all discoveries and inventions were considered as divine gifts, and they were held as sacred secrets, and those to whom they were communicated were bound to secrecy by obligations as strong as human ability could devise.

Those discoveries and inventions which related in any wise to the art of building, came into the possession of architects, who took care that every learner should proceed by slow gradations until he stood upon an equality with themselves. None were permitted to enter upon any course of instruction until they were examined physically and mentally, so that none but perfect youth, in every physical sense, and who were in the possession of every mental faculty, could be admitted. These rules were unchangeable. Masonry was then both operative and speculative. The physical perfection of man, including strength, symmetry, beauty, and creative power, was emblematic of that perfection at which every Mason aimed in the study of his art, and of that spiritual perfection which all should strive to attain, who desire to please God. Notwithstanding Masonry at present is only a speculative system, still all the forms and ceremonies have been and ever will be handed down from one to another. Hence the impossibility. And it can not be denied, that the scandal which would attend such a union of the sexes in a secret society—especially so extensive an one as the Masonic—would be disastrous to women themselves, and work destruction to our fabric. No sensible woman, who would consider seriously, would give such a matter any favor whatever.

Females who choose, can travel very safely alone in our railroad cars. But sickness, accident, and distress are as likely to attend women when traveling as men. Some mode of recognition, by which a Mason's female relative might be known as worthy, has long been desired. This is furnished now by the system known as the Eastern Star, of which our R. W. Bro. Robert Macoy, of New York, is the principal manager, and for which I am the deputy for Illinois. The order can be given to a brother, and to his wife, his unmarried daughter, or unmarried sister of suitable age. The system is not Masonry, but the degrees are beautiful and impressive.

Passing from this theme, I want to say to the ladies, who have honored me with a hearing to-day, have no fear of Masonry. In the present imperfect state of society, Freemasonry throws shields and guards around the honor and defencelessness of women, whose fathers, husbands, brothers, and sons belong to our Fraternity, which nowhere else exist.

Thousands of good women have gone down to the grave entirely unconscious that Masons have foiled the arts of the seducer, or have prevented their marriage with worthless or abandoned men.

I do not stand here to-day to advocate or combat the woman's rights doctrine, now so earnestly pressed upon our consideration.

But man, in a state of health, is ever ready for certain offices, duties and labors, which woman, in the exercise of the functions designed of God, and upheld by morality and religion, can never properly fill or perform.

Man must till the ground, erect buildings, conduct vast enterprises, build and man our railroads and canals, traverse the seas, navigate our rivers, explore, survey, and settle unknown regions, mine the earth for its hidden treasures, and with severe manual labor, he must create and manufacture, amid smoke, heat, cold, and dust, the vast machinery and useful articles which demand physical power combined with skill.

Man must administer justice; must conduct the business of legislation; must go to war; visit and reside at foreign courts, and must perform all duties requiring physical strength, moral power, high courage, and dauntless valor.

He stands erect, the vitalized, moving, sentient, and majestic image of the Invisible God, endowed with creative power and the ability tb command.

The functions of woman are in no sense inferior to those of man.

The son of a daring, haughty, and imperious sire, under the tutelage of a weak, vain, and unprincipled mother, may be trained a moral and physical coward, with low and vicious instincts, a curse to her that bore him, a grief to his father, and useless in the world.

But the son of an ordinaay, plodding man, in the hands of a healthy, high-souled, intelligent, fearless, moral matron, may be a hero in war, a Solon in legislation, a clear and incorruptible judge, the tender and proud defender of innocence and weakness, and the courageous and faithful minister of God.

As is the mother, so, very much, is the man. To be short, and without disguise, and at the risk of being considered ungallant, I proclaim, that while woman is to be the companion of man, is to share his honors, his fortune, and disgrace, is to be the light of his home and is to guide his house, her chief and God-given function is to train sons and daughters to go forth and inhabit and cultivate the earth, and make it fit for the habitation of the Most High God.

What impels you, my brother, you, fellow-citizen, me to deeds of daring, to find out hidden secrets, and invent useful machinery; to reach lofty peaks in eloquence, learning, and power; to delve, and mine, and labor day by day?

It is the inspiration that comes from mother, wife, sister, and daughter.

And as a man should throw aside his cares, anxieties, and burdens at his threshold, and carry peace, and happiness into the bosom of his family, so woman, framed in a finer mould, endowed with quick and keen susceptibilities, and capable of far higher attainments in all that is beautiful, graceful, refined, and lovely, is ordained of God to train man for usefulness, glory, and honor—for the service of God on earth and for His glory in Heaven.

Sisters! America is in your hands! As the women of America are to-day, so will the coming generation be. As is America, so, ultimately, will be the world.

Oh, woman! great has been your faith! Let it be greater still! Prove it by your works, and let the world know that America is, and ever shall be, the home of freedom, equality, learning, science, security, and religion. Then man will praise you, nations revere you, and God will bless you.

My friends, thought starts upon the wires at San Francisco, crosses the continent, passes through the depths of ocean, and thence traversing sea and land, speaks in an audible voice in the celestial country. Huge leviathans cross the briny deep, and giant trains follow the bellowing engine over the land from shore to shore.

Heathen nations are commencing to reverence and adore Him whe rules in Heaven, and who reigns over all things, visible and invisible.

Learning, science, and genius, are bringing order out of confusion, and harmony from discord.

Plodding industry, patient labor, and trained experience till the soil, beautify the earth, create paradises around our dwellings, and are gradually changing the world into scenes of loveliness, landscapes, beauty, and joy. Mechanical skill and fairy hands make all that is necessary in our homes of content, and all that is coveted in luxurious palaces.

In spite of barbaric darkness, kingly edicts, popish decrees, and the fulmination of narrow-minded clerical bigots, universal toleration is rapidly gaining ground.

The wilderness and the solitary place are becoming glad; the desert is beginning to rejoice and blossom as the rose.

The prophecies are rapidly being fulfilled. The valleys are exalted, the hills are made low: and the crooked made straight, and the rough plain.

"Behold, the mountain of the Lord,
In latter days shall rise
Above the mountains and the hills,
And draw the wondering eyes."

When "a man shall be a hiding-place from the wind, as a covert from the tempest, as rivers of waters in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land," then shall the earth be full of glory, and the glorious mission of Masonry will be ended.

Measurements of the Temple.

From the N. Y. Dispatch.

So much inquiry is being made by writers of all classes into the size, form, and special measurements of the Temple of Solomon, and the conclusions of authors are so singularly diverse from each other, that we think the following translation from the celebrated Jewish work, the Mischna, will be of interest to our readers. It was made by a person at Jerusalem thoroughly skilled in the Hebrew language, and has never been published in this country. The copy from which we publish was printed at Jerusalem, at the English press, and presented us by a traveler who procured it there. The English is not always grammatical, but every reader can readily make the needful corrections:

1. The priests guarded the sanctuary in three places—in the House Abtinas, in the House Nitzus, and in the House Moked, and the Levites in twenty-one places, five at the five gates of the Mountain of the House, four at its four corners inside, five at the five gates of the Court, four at its four corners outside, and one in the chamber of the Offering, and one in the chamber of the Veil, and one behind the House of Atonement.

2. The Captain of the Mountain of the House went round to every watch in succession with torches flaming before him, and to every guard who did not stand forth the Captain said: "Peace be to thee." If it appeared that he slept, he beat him with his staff; and he had permission to set fire to his cushion. And they said: "What is the voice in the Court?" "It is the voice of the Levite being beaten, and his garments burned, because he slept on his guard." Rabbi Eleazer, the son of Jacob, said: "Once they found the brother of my mother asleep, and they burned his cushion."

3. There were five gates to the Mountain of the House. Two Huldah gates in the South, which served for going in and out. Kipunus in the West, served for going in and out. Tadi in the North, served for no ordinary purpose. Upon the East gate was portrayed the city Shushan. Through it one could see the High Priest who burned the heifer, and all his assistants, going to the Mount of Olives.

4. In the court were seven gates. Three in the North, and three in the South, and one in the East. That in the South was called the gate of Flaming, the second after it the gate of Offering, the third after it the Water gate. That in the East was called the gate Nicanor. And this gate had two chambers, one on the right and one on the left. One the chamber of Phineas, the vestment keeper, and the other the chamber of the pancake maker.

5. And at the gate Nitzus on the North was a kind of cloister, with a room built over it, where the Priests kept ward above and the Levites below; and it had a door into the Chel. Second to it was the gate of the Offering. Third the House Moked.

6. In the House Moked were four chambers opening as small apartments into a saloon—two in the Holy place and two in the Unconsecrated place, and pointed rails separated between the Holy and the Unconsecrated. And what was their use? The southwest chamber was the chamber for the offering. The southeast was the chamber for the shew-bread. In the northeast chamber the Children of the Asmoneans deposited the stones of the altar which the Greek kings had defiled. In the northwest chamber they descended to the house of baptism.

7. To the House Moked were two doors. One open to the Chel, and one open to the court. Said Rabbi Judah: "The one open to the court had a wicket through which they went in to sweep the court."

8. The House Moked was arched and spacious, and surrounded with stone divans, and the elders of the Courses slept there with the keys of the court in their hands, and the young priests each with his pillow on the ground.

9. And there was a place a cubit square with a tablet of marble, and to it was fastened a ring, and a chain upon which the keys were suspended. When the time approached for locking, the Priest lifted up the tablet by the ring, and took the keys from the chain and locked inside, and the Levite slept outside. When he had finished locking, he returned the keys to the chain, and the tablet to its place, laid his pillow over it, and fell asleep. If sudden defilement happened, he rose and went out in the gallery that ran under the arch, and candles flamed on either side until he came to the house of baptism. Rabbi Eleazer, the son of Jacob, says: "In the gallery that went under the Chel he passed out through Tadi."

OUR BEAUTY BE UPON THEE IN THREE PLACES.

1. The Mountain of the House was five hundred cubits square. The largest space was on the South, the second on the East, the third on the North, and the least westward. In the place largest in measurement was held most service.

2. All who entered the Mountain of the House entered on the right hand side, and went round and passed out on the left, except to whomsoever an accident occurred, he turned to the left. "Why do you go to the left?" "I am in mourning." "He that dwelleth in this house comfort thee." "I am ex-communicate." "He that dwelleth in this house put in thy heart repentance, and they shall receive thee." The words of Rabbi Mayer, to him said Rabbi Jose: "Thou hast acted as though they had transgressed against him in judgment, but may He that dwelleth in this house put in thy heart that thou hearken to the words of thy neighbors, and they shall receive thee."

3. Inside of the Mountain of the House was a reticulated wall ten hand-breadths high; and in it were thirteen breaches broken down by the Greek kings. The Jews restored and fenced them, and decreed before them thirteen acts of obeisance. Inside of it was the Chel, ten cubits broad, and twelve steps were there. The height of each step was half a cubit, and the breadth half a cubit, except those of the porch. All the doors there were in height twenty cubits and in breadth ten cubits, except that of the porch. All the gateways there had doors, except that of the porch. All the gates there had lintels, except Tadi; there two stones inclined one upon the other. All the gates there were transformed into gold, except the gate Nicanor, because to it happened a wonder, though some said "because its brass glittered like gold."

4. And all the walls there were high, except the eastern wall, that the Priest who burned the heifer might stand on the top of the Mount of Olives and look straight into the door of the sanctuary when he sprinkled the blood.

5. The court of the women was one hundred and thirty-five cubits in length, by one hundred and thirty-five in breadth. And in its four corners were four chambers, each forty cubits square, and they had no roofs; and so they will be in future, as is said, "Then he brought me forth into the utter court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the court; and behold, in every corner of the court there was a court." In the four corners of the court there were courts smoking, yet not smoking since they were roofless. And what was their use? The southeast one was the chamber of the Nazarites, for there the Nazarites cooked their peace offerings, and polled their hair, and cast it under the pot. The northeast was the chamber for the wood, and there the Priests with blemishes gathered out the worm-eaten wood. And every stick in which a worm was found was unlawful for the altar. The northwest was the chamber for the lepers. The southwest, Rabbi Eleazer, the son of Jacob, said: "I forget for what it served." Abashaul said: "There they put wine and oil." It was called the chamber of the house of oil. And it was open at first, and surrounded with lattice work, that the women might see from above and the men from beneath, lest they should be mixed. And fifteen steps, corresponding to the fifteen steps in the Psalms, ascended from it to the court of Israel, upon them the Levites chanted. They were not angular, but deflected like the half of a round threshing floor.

6. And under the court of Israel were chambers open to the court of the women. There the Levites deposited their harps and psalteries and cymbals and all instruments of music. The court of Israel was one hundred and thirty-five cubits long and eleven broad; and likewise the court of the Priests was one hundred and thirty-five cubits long, and eleven broad. And pointed rails separated the court of Israel from the court of the Priests. Rabbi Eleazer, the son of Jacob, said, "there was a step a cubit high, and a dais placed over it. And in it were three steps each half a cubit in height." We find that the Priest's court was two and a half cubits higher than the court of Israel. The whole court was one hundred and eighty-seven cubits in length, and one hundred and thirty-five cubits in breadth, and the thirteen places for bowing were there. Abajose, the son of Ghanan, said, "in front of the thirteen gates." In the South near to the West, were the upper gate, the gate of the flaming, the gate of the first-born, the water-gate, and why is it called the water gate? because through it they bring bottles of water for pouring out during the Feast of Tabernacles. Rabbi Eleazer, the son of Jacob, said, "through it the water returned out, and in future it will issue from under the threshold of the house." And opposite them in the North near to the West the gate of Jochania—the gate of the offering—the gate of the women—the gate of music, and "why was it called the gate of Jochania?" "because through it Jochania went out in his captivity." In the East was the gate Nicanor and in it two wickets, one on the right and one on the left, and two in the West which were nameless.

OUR BEAUTY BE UPON THEE, O! MOUNTAIN OF THE THE HOUSE.

The altar was thirty-two cubits square. It ascended a cubit and receded a cubit. This was the foundation. It remains thirty cubits square. It ascended five cubits and receded one cubit. This is the circumference. It remains twenty-eight cubits square. The place for the horns was a cubit on either side. It remains twenty-six cubits square. The place of the path for the feet of the priests was a cubit on each side. The hearth remains twenty-four cubits square. Rabbi Jose said, "At first it was only twenty-eight cubits square." It receded and ascended until the hearth remained twenty cubits square; but when the children of the captivity came up, they added to it four cubits on the North and four cubits on the West, like a gamma, it is said; and the altar was twelve cubits long by twelve broad, being a square. One could say it was only "a square of twelve," as is said. Upon its four sides we learn that it measured from the middle twelve cubits to every side. And a line of red paint girdled it in the midst to separate the blood above from the blood below. And the foundation was a perfect walk along on the North side, and all along the West; but it wanted in the South one cubit, and in the East one cubit.

2. And in the southwestern corner where two holes as two thin nostrils, that the blood poured upon the western and southern foundation should run into them; and it commingled in a canal and flowed out into the Kedron.

3. Below in the plaster in the same corner there was a place a cubit square with a marble tablet, and a ring fastened in it. Through it they descended to the sewer and cleansed it. And there was a sloping ascent to the South of the altar thirty-two cubits long by sixteen broad. In its western side was a closet where they put the birds unmeet for the sin-offering.

4. Either the stones of sloping ascent or the stones of the altar, were from the Valley of Bethcerem. And they digged deeper than virgin soil, and brought from thence perfect stones over which iron was not waved. For the iron defiles by touching. And a scratch defiles everything. In any of them a scratch defiled, but the others were lawful. And they whitewashed them twice in the year; once at the Passover, and once at the feast of the Tabernacles. And at the sanctuary was whitewashed once at the Passover. The Rabbi said, "every Friday evening they whitewashed them with a mop on account of the blood." They did not plaster it with an iron trowel, "mayhap it will touch and defile." Since iron is made to shorten the days of man, and the altar is made to lengthen the days of man, it is not lawful that what shortens should be waved over what lengthens.

5. And there were rings to the northern side of the altar, six rows of four each; though some say four rows of six each. Upon them they slaughtered the holy beasts. The slaughter-house was at the North side of the altar. And in it were eight dwarf pillars with a beam of cedar wood over them. And in them were iron hooks—three rows to each pillar. Upon them they hung up the bodies, and skinned them upon marble tables between the pillars.

6. The Laver was between the Porch and the Altar, but inclined more to the South. Between the Porch and the Altar were twenty-two cubits, and there were twelve steps. The height of each step was a half cubit, and its breadth a cubit—a cubit—a cubit—a landing three cubits—a cubit—a cubit—and a landing three cubits. And the upper one a cubit—a cubit, and the landing four cubits. Rabbi Jehuddah said, "the upper a cubit—a cubit, and the landing five cubits."

7. The doorway of the Porch was forty cubits high and twenty broad. Over it were five carved oak beams. The lower one extended beyond the doorway a cubit on either side. The one over it extended a cubit on either side. It results that the uppermost was thirty cubits, and between each one there was a row of stones.

8. And stone buttresses were joined from the wall of the Sanctuary to the wall of the porch lest it should bulge. And in the roof of the porch were fastened golden chains upon which the young priests climbed up and saw the crowns. As is said, "and the crowns shall be to Helem, and to Tobijah, and to Jedaiah, and to Hen the son of Rephaniah, for a memorial in the temple of the Lord." And over the doorway of the sanctuary was a golden vine supported upon the buttresses. Every one who vowed a leaf, or berry, or a cluster, he brought it and hung it upon it. Said Rabbi Eleazer the son of Zadok, "it is a fact, and there were numbered three hundred priests to keep it clear."

OUR BEAUTY BE UPON THEE, O! ALTAR.

The doorway of the Sanctuary was twenty cubits in height and ten in breadth. And it had four doors—two within and two without as is said, "two doors to the temple and the holy place." The outside doors opened into the doorway to cover the thickness of the wall, and the inside doors opened into the Sanctuary to cover the space behind the doors, because the whole house was overlaid with gold excepting behind the doors. Rabbi Judah said, "they stood in the middle of the doorway, and like a pivot, these folded behind them two cubits and a half; and those two cubits and a half. Half a cubit and a jamb on this side, and half a cubit and a jamb on the other side." It is said "two doors to two doors folding back—two leaves to one door and two leaves to the other."

2. And the great gate had two wickets—one in the North and one in the South. Through the door in the South no man ever entered. And with regard to it Ezekiel declared as he said, "The Lord said unto me: This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the Lord, the God of Israel, hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut." The Priest took the key and opened the wicket, and went into the little chamber, and from the chamber to the sanctuary. Rabbi Judah "he went in the thickness of the wall until he found himself standing between the two gates, and he opened the outside gates from inside, and the inside from outside."

3. And there were thirty-eight little chambers—fifteen in the North, fifteen in the South, and eight in the West. The northern and southern ones were placed five over five, and five over them; and in the West three over three and two over them. To each were three doors—one to the little chamber to the left, and one to the little chamber over it. And in the northeastern corner were five gates—one to the little chamber on the right, and one to the little chamber over it, and one to the gallery, and one to the sanctuary.

4. The lowest row was five cubits, and the roofing seven, and the upper was seven—as is said, "the northermost chamber was five cubits broad, and the middle six cubits broad, and the third seven cubits broad."

5. And a gallery ascended from the northeastern corner to the southeastern corner. Through it they went up to the roofs of the little chambers. One went up to the gallery with his face to the West. So he proceeded all along the northern side till he reached the West. On reaching the West he turned his face southward, going along the West side till he reached the South. On reaching the South with his face to the East, he went along the South side till he arrived at the door of the upper story opened in the South side. And at the door of the upper story were two cedar beams. By them they went up to the upper story, and on its summit rails separated between the Holy and the Holy of Holies. And in the attic trapdoors opened to the Holy of Holies. Through them they let down the workmen in boxes, lest they should feast their eyes in the Holy of Holies.

6. The Sanctuary was a square of one hundred cubits, and its height one hundred. The foundation six cubits, and the height of the wall forty cubits, and the string course one cubit, and the rain channel two cubits, and the beams one cubit, and the covering plaster one cubit; and the height of the upper story was forty cubits, and the string course one cubit, and the rain channel two cubits, and the beams one cubit, and the covering plaster one cubit, and the battlement three cubits, and the scarecrow one cubit. Rabbi Judah said, "the scarecrow was not counted in the measurement; but the battlement was four cubits."

7. From East to West were one hundred cubits. The wall of the porch five, and the porch eleven, and the wall of the sanctuary six, and the interior forty, and the partition space between the Vails one, and the Holy of Holies twenty cubits. The wall of the sanctuary was six, and the little chamber six, and the wall of the little chamber five. From North to South were seventy cubits. The wall of the gallery five—the gallery three—the wall of the little chamber five—the little chamber six—the wall of the sanctuary six—its interior twenty—the wall of the sanctuary six—the little chamber six—the wall of the little chamber five—the place for the descent of the water three—and the wall five cubits. The porch was extended beyond it fifteen cubits in the North and fifteen in the South; and the space was called "the house of the instruments of slaughter," because the knives were there deposited. And the sanctuary was narrow behind and broad in front, and it was like a lion, as it said "Ho! Ariel the city where David dwelt, as a lion is narrow behind and broad in front, so the sanctuary is narrow behind and broad in front."

OUR BEAUTY BE UPON THE DOOR OF THE SANCTUARY.

1. The length of the whole court was one hundrtd and eighty-seven cubits. The breadth one hundred and thirty-five. From East to West one hundred and eighty-seven. The place for ths tread of the feet of Israel was eleven cubits. The altar thirty-two. Between the porch and the altar twenty-two cubits. The Temple one hundred cubits. And eleven cubits behind the House of Atonement.

2. From North to South one hundred and thirty-five cubits. From the sloping ascent to the altar sixty-two. From the altar to the rings eight cubits. The space for the rings twenty-four. From the rings to the tables four. From the tables to the pillars four. From the pillars to the wall of the court eight cubits. And the remainder lay between the sloping ascent and the wall and the place of the pillars.

3. In the court were six chambers—three in the North and three in the South. In the North the chamber of salt—the chamber of Parva—the chamber of washers. In the chamber of salt they added salt to the offering, and upon its roof was the house of baptism for the High Priest on the day of atonement. In the chamber of washers they cleansed the inwards of the offerings; and from thence a gallery extended up to the top of the house of Parva.

4. In the South were the chamber of wood—the chamber of the captivity—and the chamber of hewn stone. The chamber of wood—said Rabbi Eleazer, the son of Jacob, "I forget for what it served." Abashaul said "the chamber of the High Priest was behind them both, and the roof of the three was even." In the chamber of the captivity was sunk the well with the wheel attached to it, and from thence water was supplied to the whole court. In the chamber of hewn stone the great sanhedrim of Israel sat and judged the priesthood, and the priest in whom defilement was discovered clothed in black and vailed in black, went out and departed; and when no defilement was found in him, clothed in white and vailed in white he went in and served with his brethren the priests. And they made a feast-day because no defilement was found in the seed of Aaron the Priest, and thus they said, "Blessed be the place. Blessed be he since no defilement is found in the seed of Aaron. And blessed be He who has chosen Aaron, and his sons to stand and minister before the Lord in the House of the Holy of Holies."

OUR BEAUTY BE UPON THE WHOLE COURT; AND COMPLETION TO THE TRACT
MEASUREMENTS.

◆

From the Chicago Republican.

Concentrated Bigotry.

The following severe article appeared during the sitting of the late anti-Masonic convention, and the writer evidently wrote as he felt at the time, and although it may be well to use milder expressions, yet the article, which is in all its principles, statements, and facts, eminently proper and just, shows the righteous indignation which mantles an honest face, where men fill holy offices and profess sacred callings, will stoop to exhibitions of falsehood, meanness, and depravity:

A parcel of fanatical vinegar-cruets have met in this city under the pretentious name of "The National Christian Convention." With a "thus saith the Lord," these bigots promulgate the doctrine that secret societies are an obstable to the conversion of sinners. In the list of these nefarious and iniquitous institutions, they make Masonry the most prominent. With this ancient Fraternity they profess to be perfectly familiar. While not one of its calumniators here in session even pretends to have been a member of the Order, each asserts a most intimate knowledge of its ceremonies, oaths, purposes, operations, and influences. What kind of secrecy must be that which lies open to the discovery of any prying antagonist, and which can be disclosed in open meeting with abundant minuteness? A certain "Bishop" Edwards, who evidently possesses about as much capacity for his ecclesiastical work as a donkey has to solve a constitutional question, asseverates upon his honor, whatever that may be, that the initiatory oaths of Masonry are not only silly and childish, but horrible, profane, and wicked. How does he know? Has he ever been present at an initiation ceremony? If he speaks by the card, why does he not give specifications—oaths and the proceedings? If Masonry is the monstrosity he represents it, what prevents the revelation of its whole organism? If Masonry is the pit of corruption that is held up conspicuously by the bigots of the "National Christian Convention," why do not we have the iniquitous oaths, word for word—verbatim, literatim et punctuatim—exhibited to the eyes of all for universal execration?

We have no patience with these Quixotic crusades upon nothing, magnified into mammoth proportions by ecclesiastical microscopes of double-parson power, that turn a flea into a nondescript jumping elephant, and that enlarge a speck of unfounded suspicion into a mountain of certainty. Masonry has lived prosperously through centuries of persecution, obloquy, and trial. Among its members have been numbered many of the most distinguished philosophers, statesmen, mathematicians, orators, authors, divines, generals, reformers, and patriots of all past time. Men of the most benevolent nature, of the most exalted Christian character, of the most self-poised and cultivated intellect, have belonged to the Order, and have united their testimony as to its purity, desirableness, and charity.

If a high Mason is rarely or never punished before a court of justice, it is not because of the influence which the society exerts nefariously and surreptitiously upon judicial tribunals, but because the declared principles which permeate its ceremonies and give vitality to its membership, scorn the presence of depravity and guilt. As well might it be made an argument against the Christian religion that the lowly, faithful, and consistent followers of Jesus are not arraigned for criminal offenses, and that murderers, thieves, plunderers, and drunkards are not to be sought for within the pale of the orthodox denominations.

The crusade upon Masonry is nothing new. Spawned by prejudice, fostered by bigotry, bred into apparent strength by sophistry, and armed with the terrors of supposition, it has waged war upon every organism of secret societary development. Hitherto its chief weapon has been hypothesis. It imagines, and then presents to the public its imaginings as an aggregate of established facts.

Sentences that sneer and strike a blow would ordinarily have been a sufficient answer to these ecclesiastical iconoclasts. But association and combination lend force to any blow aimed at an existing institution. Congregated effort is one of the indices of our age. In fact, it sometimes drives reason into combat with folly. The struggle is not doubtful, but its requisition is unavoidable. This consideration alone leads us to make fight against the bigoted, fanatical, unreasonable opposition to Masonry which finds support among the bigots who constitute the "National Christian Convention," of whom "Bishop" Edwards is the representative blockhead. Let us tell the reverend, right reverend, or very reverend objector, as he may be named, that Masonry will live and flourish when he and ten, twenty, or more generations of his descendants plod along the weary highway of life.

We are sorry to be compelled to use harsh language toward men professing to be ministers of Christ, but the concourse to which we refer deserve no better. In Galileo's time, they would have been found among the foremost of his persecutors. We wish they were half so good men and citizens as the great majority of the Masons whom they denounce as heathen and blasphemous infidels. The fact is, either they don't know what they are talking about, or they deliberately and maliciously falsify in their assertions about Masons and Masonry. In either case, our opinion of them may be estimated.

We of course intend these remarks to apply only to those speakers who used insulting, abusive, and lying remarks about Masons and Masonry, and gave the Almighty definite instructions that it is His duty to "crush them out."

◆

We knights have made a public profession of religion, and the cause in which we will wield our sword. We are sworn followers of the cross. Do we often enough reflect on what following the cross is? What is required of us? We must become poor in spirit; meek and humble as little children; penitent for sin; perfect and pure, as He is pure; denying ourselves, we must crucify the body and mortify the flesh; we must subdue inordinate desires; set our affections on things above; hunger and thirst after righteousness; forgive our enemies; submit to persecution for Christ's sake; exercise a constant watchfulness over ourselves, and against the world and the devil. Should our right hand offend, we must cut it off. Should our eye offend, we must pluck it out. We may not substitute something else for the cross; no philosophy, no morality, no painful penance. There is no neutrality in our war. "He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad."

By union, we must rout the enemy and gain the victory. "Behold," says the Psalmist, "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Not only is it good and pleasant, but essential to success. As Christians, we have a mighty work to do. Union is strength in religious as well as in military tactics. "United we stand, divided we fall!" As great military commanders plan to divide the enemy's forces in council and field, so, likewise, the devil plans to divide the Christian army. Our great Head has furnished us a principle which nourishes, binds, and consolidates the members of the body together. If this principle is neglected, the army of the Cross is easily dispelled. The principle is love.

Æsop tells us of an old man who lay dying, and called his sons around his bed, and, to show them the necessity of unity, commanded a bundle of sticks to be brought before him. Beginning with the eldest, he asked him to break the bundle, but he could not. The next was called, and all failed to the youngest. He also failed. The old man cut the cord which bound the faggots together, and they were broken one by one. Love is the cord which binds us together. Union alone supplies the lack of numbers, of talents, of wealth. You, Eminent Commander, are the leader of our army. We are bound to you, and sworn soldiers of the Cross. If every one of us rally round that standard,* and all are determined to conquer or die, nothing can stand before us; we will drive back all fleshly antagonists.

For want of union, and firm accord, antichrist and infidelity prevail. But when professing Christians cease to vex each other, and, in union, strive against a common foe, then the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of God and His Messiah, and he will reign forever and ever.

"Grant, we beseech thee, Almighty God, that, like as we do believe thy only begotten Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, to have ascended into the heavens, so may we also, in heart and mind, thither ascend, and with him continually dwell, who liveth and reigneth, with thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen."

---

*The standard of the Nashville Commandery, bearing a Latin Cross with the inscription, "In Hoc Signo Vinces."

◆

The principal merchants of Paris, at a meeting held for the purpose on April 18th, agreed unanimously to close their establishments on Sundays.

An Improvised Dinner.

A lady, in the Ohio Farmer, sets forth what a tired and cross housekeeper got for dinner one day, when house-cleaning was in full blast, as follows:

In the first place she made a big johnny-cake; but of course something must come before that, something appetizing and hearty—and there were four to eat it. She couldn't stand on her feet another minute, so she threw herself on the lounge, and called her little girl, nine years old.

"Bessie, is there any cold meat in the pantry?"

"Yes, ma'am; two little pieces of boiled beef, not a quarter enough for dinner."

"Get the chopping bowl and knife, and chop it fine." Bessie did it.

"Is there any cold potato?"

"A few little ones."

"Chop them up nicely with the meat. And is there any bread except the small loaf saved for tea?"

"Yes, ma—some broken pieces and nice crusts."

"Moisten them a little with water, and chop with the rest."

"It's done, mamma."

"Now take an egg, or if they are plenty, take two, beat them, and stir in with the rest. Is there any other eatable thing in the pantry?"

"Just somo butter and cheese; that's all."

"Put in a small lump of butter, and let the cheese go."

"It's done. What a funny mess, mamma!"

"Very funny. Is there enough of it for dinner, do you think?"

"I guess not, ma, if you and I eat any."

"Of course we must eat. Pour in two-thirds of a cup of sweet milk (water would do if milk wasn't plenty), then sift in a handful of flour very carefully, so that it will not lump. This will help the egg to bind all together. Season it with pepper and salt till it tastes savory. Now, if it is of the consistency of rather moist mince-meat, you may put the frying-pan over the fire, put in a little lard, dip out the mixture in large spoonfuls, and fry it as you would fish-balls. Be sure that all are well heated through, and browned on both sides."

When the folks came to dinner, Bessie dished up the balls in the new tureen, and they looked tempting enough. But men never think anything out of the common way can be good, until they've tried it; so the tired housekeeper's husband looked rather contemptuously at the dish, and said:

"What kind of a formation is that?"

"Conglomerate," answered the wife, spunkily, for she was feeling anything but pleasant.

"Why, it tastes like dressing," returned he, taking a good-sized mouthful. "Did you make it to stuff anything with?"

"Yes," said the tired housekeeper.

"Well—but—" looking round the table, "what's to be stuffed?"

"A goose!" said she, giving him such a look that he got off that tack immediately.

"Well, they are excellent," said he, taking two more cakes, but I should like to know what they're made of. What's the foundation?"

"The tureen," said she, shortly.

"Is there any meat in them?" says he.

"Just a visible admixture," said she.

"Any potato?"

"All those little white bits are potato."

"Any egg?"

"All those yellow specks are egg."

"Any bread?"

"All that soft substance is bread."

"Anything else?"

"Nothing but flour, milk, butter, pepper, and salt."

"Well, they are capital," said he, helping the boy and Bessie again; and by the time the originator of all this excellence was rested enough to enjoy something, there was one left on the plate, and the husband looked lovingly at that. So she just folded her napkin, and sat back in her chair, and in a minute it was gone. But what woman doesn't count it a happiness to go hungry, if only her cooking can be praised?

◆

Protestant churches are organizing in many of the Turkish towns.

The Jewels of the Months.

In Poland, according to a superstitious belief, each month of the year is under the influence of some precious stone, which influence is attached to the destiny of persons born during the course of the month. It is, in consequence, customary among friends, and more particularly between lovers, to make on birthdays reciprocal presents, consisting of some jewel ornamented with the tutelar stone. It is generally believed that this prediction of happiness, or rather of the future destiny, will be realized according to the wishes expressed on the occasion.

January.—The stone of January is the jacinth, or garnet, which denotes constancy and fidelity in every sort of engagement.

February. The amethyst, a preservative against violent passions, and an assurance of peace of mind and sincerity.

March.—The bloodstone is the stone of courage and wisdom in perilous undertakings, and firmness in affection.

April.—The sapphire, or diamond, is the stone of repentance, innocence, and kindness of disposition.

May.—The emerald, signifying happiness in love, and felicity.

June.—The agate is the stone of long life, health, and prosperity.

July.—The ruby or cornelian denotes forgetfulness of, and exemption from, the vexations caused by friendship or love.

August.—The sardonyx, denoting conjugal felicity.

September.—The chrysolite is the stone which preserves and cures madness and despair.

October.—The aqua-marine or opal signifies distress and hope.

November.—The topaz is the emblem of fidelity and friendship.

December.—The turquoise is the stone which expresses great sureness and prosperity in love, and in all the circumstances of life.—Sharpe's Magazine.

Oldest Mason.

Within the last few years we have read a good deal in the papers, about "the oldest Mason." At one time he was discovered in New York, then in Maine, and soon in some other State. Generally, however, it was found that some other one was older still. We have had two or three specimens of "the oldest Masons" in Ohio; but on inquiry. they were found not to be the oldest after all. We believe, however, we have now found the "oldest Mason," and feel half inclined to shout—Eureka!

Recensly, in New Lisbon, Ohio, we were introduced to a venerable brother by the name of William Moore. He was born in Ireland, May 18th, 1877, and is therefore ninety one years of age. He was made a Mason on the 23d of of June, 1799, and was a Mason seventy years on the 23d of June last. We examined his diplomas, up to and including the orders of Christian Knighthood; they are dated on the 2d of May, 1803' on the eve of his coming to the United States. He was in Chillicothe in 1809, when the Grand Lodge of Ohio held its first annual meeting in that city. This venerable brother is now poor, but is provided for by the Craft. His faculties are yet clear, and, save a partial paralysis of the lower limbs, he is vigorous and in good health. He is waiting for his change, and expresses his entire confidence that it will be well with him in the hereafter. We asked him about Masonry in the olden time, and spoke of his native land—his own "green Isle of the ocean," and the old man west at the memories it recalled. An Irishman's heart is always true to Ireland, and he is never ashamed to claim it as the land of his birth, however long it may be since he left it. It is a land to love; and though some writer described it os an Island with "a prison at one end and a poor-house at the other," yet it is the land of wit and poetry and eloquence, while England's greatest heroes have been Irishmen: But—"the oldest Mason"—he clings to Masonry yet with all his early affection, and feels prouder of his seventy years of membership than he would of a coronet. May his end be peace.—

◆

The Cincinnati Commercial speaks of Solomon as "an individual with whom wisdom was a specialty."

THE MASONIC TROWEL,
HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Editor,
IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY
H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

One copy, one year..$1 25

All communications should be addressed to H. G. REYNOLDS, or THE MASONIC TROWEL, Springfield, Ill.

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for THE TROWEL.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

NOTICE.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., JULY 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

Cotemporaries.

The Freemason's Magazine, Boston, for June, has a leading article on "wearihg Masonic jewelry," followed by comments on proceedings of Masonic bodies, news, selections, editorials, and chit-chat. We thank Bro. Moore for his friendly notice of our Grand Lodge, Bro. Gorin, and ourself.

The Masonic Review, Cincinnati, for April, is full of good things, editorials, letters, original articles, and valuable selections.

The Voice of Masonry, Chicago, for June, has a "Holy Land" and several original articles and communications, and much valuable information.

The Masonic Record, Nashville, for June, leads out with an elegant oration on the sublime teachings of the Templar Order, by Sir George S. Blackie, M. D. The make-up of this number is readable, enjoyable, and instructive throughout.

The Keystone, Philadelphia, comes regularly, is well edited, spirited, and filled with a variety of good matter.

The Freemason, St. Louis, is at hand. It notices the proceedings of Illinois in the same manner which has characterized the effusions of its editor towards us for some time past. Much of its matter is full of gangrene and bitter partisanship. As to the committee on correspondence, we leave him in the hands of Dr. Robbins and his associates.

The Masonic Record of Western India, for May, is at hand. The news items are few; an excellent letter from Bro. Hoff; an article from the Freemason; summary of the proceedings of Hope and Perseverance Lodges from their establishment; general intelligence items; Masonic intelligence from Bombay—Lanowles—Aden—Bengalore—Lahore—Poona—Scotland—Turkey and France.

The Masonic Monthly for March, April, May, and June came in one package. "Let us have Peace," is the leading article in the March No. It is one of the best of the editor's fault-finding articles. "A friend in need," is a nice, short story; the first part of the article "The Oberlin Crusade against Freemasonry," is excellent, but the latter part is too bitter and pharisaic.

The leading article for April is "Objections to Advancement; the Master's Duty;" it is the best article on that subject that we have read. "Let us have War" leads in May, in which the editor is after one Gouley, of the St. Louis Freemason, and quite plainly intimates that the Freemason is not a Masonic paper, and had better shut up shop.

We thank the editor personally for inserting an extract from M. W. Bro. Bromwell's speech at Washington, under the appropriate heading, "Masonry needs no Apology." It is a brief resume of an eloquent speech uttered in the Grand Lodge of Ills., Oct., 1867.

The editor evidently considers that the Grand Lodge of New York does not exist in a Christian country, because it does not ignore Christian prayers. He offsets this, however, by publishing Bro. Henderson's admirable article on that subject in the Kentucky Freemason.

The leading article for June is an unkind attack upon Bro. J. H. Drummond, the chief of Scottish Masonry in the North, in which he is held responsible for all the vagaries and inconsistencies of Albert Pike. Bro. Drummond is a Past Grand Master, P. G. High Priest, P. G. Puissant, and, we believe, P. G. Commander. He is pre-eminently consistent in all these positions. The attack upon him is only a part of the agrarian intent to destroy Scottish, Templar, Cryptic, and Capitular Masonry, and, if possible, to consign them to a common grave.

Jacob Norton comes in with sneers at Oberlin, deacons, piety, and religion.

The editor has a four page article, setting forth that Grand Master Gardner has done a very reputable thing, and more than insinuates that Bro. Gardner intends thereby to reach a very disreputable end.

The Mystic Star for June is filled with good matter. It lacks the usual contribution from Bro. Rounsville. The editors hope that we will not give our picture to our readers. No danger. We have too strong an "abiding sense," in eastern language, that we are too homely, and in western phrase, too ugly, to add a picture. We hope, however, that it did not take both of the Reverend editors to hatch that article.

The Masonic Record, Nashville, is also at hand for July. The history of Cumberland Lodge, at Nashville, is continued. Among the members we find Thomas Claiborne, P. G. M., and several who have figured in Congress. A fine review of proceedings of grand bodies graces each number.

The Voice of Masonry, for July, has another Holy Land article; a continuation of the report in the Supreme Scottish Council Rite; a capital article in regard to the anti-Masonic Convention, and other articles of news, etc.

The Kentucky Freemason, for June, has an excellent variety of matter, original, selected, and communicated.

The Evergreen has a good story of a "Victim of Intemperance;" an epistle from "Father Adoniram;" a Holy Land article; some articles in the Guilbert vein; a summary of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge; a good lick at Davenport, and a proclamation that Iowa money won't pass in Milwaukee!

The Michigan Freemason comes to us in a nice dress, in magazine form of forty pages, and is published monthly by Breth. Chaplin & Rix, at Kalamazoo, Mich.; price, $2.00 per annum. Edited by Breth. W. J. Chaplin and S. C. Coffinbury. Bro. Chaplin was the founder of the Mystic Star, and is a brother of worth, refinement, and talent. Bro. Coffinbury is widely known as a scholar and author, an eminent lawyer, and as a distinguished Grand Master.

The articles are all first class, and the initial number of a story by Bro. Coffinbury will certainly draw. Success, comfort, and profit to the Michigan Freemason.

Perils by the Way—Chenoa.

We left Canton on the morning of June 26, on the T. P. & W. R. R., east, expecting to reach home the same evening. After passing over the river at Peoria, we found the track badly impaired by recent storms, and about five miles out, we encountered a storm of rain, which came down the steep bluffs like a falling sheet of water. Upon inquiry, we found the shower to be only one of a series of real storm rains. Moving forward carefully, and with admirable vigilance, the train reached El Paso, but too late for the train to Decatur. So we pushed on to Chenoa, hoping to find some train south, but after passing several places where the water was deep enough on the level ground for a skiff, we reached ,Chenoa, and found ourselves, with others, weather bound. Soon we were gobbled up bodily by W. Bro. Louis Zeigler, Master of Chenoa Lodge No. 292.

This lodge is about eleven years old, has grown steadily with town and country, and is now in a good financial and harmonious condition, with a well furnished hall, ample for all the needs of the Fraternity. In the evening we visited the lodge—about thirty present; witnessed the opening, spoke some time to the brethren, conversed with and instructed them, and found them correct in the work.

Here, as at Lewistown and Canton, we had no money that we could pass. Isn't it singular?

The brethren were courteous, and we thank Bro. Zeigler for his polite and assiduous attentions.

Chenoa, at the crossing of the C. A. & St. L. and the T. P. & W., is now building up rapidly, and has the very best free school building that we have seen in the State.

A Nice Place.

For four years, 1850–1–2–3, we visited Lewistown twice each year, as State's Attorney. Upon entering town, the residence of Bro. Hugh LaMaster was conspicuous upon an elevated ridge, with a wide space in front. It has now passed into other hands. As early as 1843, we became acquainted with Hon. Henry L. Bryant, a relative of the poet, who was then a popular young lawyer in Macomb, and who was strenuously urged in convention at Rock Island, as a candidate for Congress. At the formation of Macomb Lodge No. 17, he was Secretary, and subsequently Master. In 1850, we found him at a beautiful residence at Independence, Fulton Co.; in 1853, he was elected County Judge, and soon after purchased the LaMaster property. It is transformed to an earthly paradise. No language of ours can paint the beautiful lawn, converted into fanciful winding paths, embordered with beautiful flowers, amid forest trees, with a great variety of rare shrubbery, climbing roses and useful plants. With great modesty and delicacy the Judge gave all the credit to his accomplished wife. No doubt she deserves the compliment, but we shall never forget the remark of the late Hon. Julius Manning, made eighteen years ago, while passing Bro. Bryant's residence in Independence: that "one who loves flowers like him is by nature a poet and nobleman." Near the dwelling is a greenhouse, where the lemon, fig, cactus, and shrubs and flowers are in perpetual verdure. And such a vineyard in the rear! such taste! We must stop, with the remark that the finest flowers on that lovely spot are the beautiful children. May sorrow come to them lightly, seldom, and far away.

Masters of Lodges U. D.

The Master of a chartered lodge is not subject to trial in his own lodge—or, in other words, by any subordinate lodge, while he is Master, or thereafter, for any official acts as Master.

A lodge under dispensation, is one for the time being only. While in life it can make Masons, and perform all acts necessary thereto. But it cannot affiliate members by admission, has no trial powers, and can transact no business except such as is permitted and is necessary to the proper management of its affairs. Its officers acquire no rank, and are not entitled to be reckoned among past officers. Its Master is not entitled, by virtue of his position, to the secrets of the chair, and constitution and installation do not follow the formation of a lodge U. D. Its members, including the Master, may be, and it is every way desirable that they should be, members of a chartered lodge. Hence, the clear intention of a lodge U. D. is to prove the ability of certain brethren, duly recommended by several lodges to the Grand Master, to conduct the affairs of a lodge, preparatory to the granting of a charter and its subsequent constitution into a regular lodge. Its members are the agents—the Master especially so—of the Grand Master, and it is his prerogative to supervise its affairs and business, and to suspend or annul its dispensation for cause at pleasure. Every member of a lodge U. D. is subject to trial in the chartered lodge of which he is a member, or, if nonaffiliated, in the nearest and oldest lodge.

The Master is not exempt from charges and trial, in any chartered lodge which may have jurisdiction over him, for any offense against law, morals, or Masonry, not immediately connected with his administration of the affairs of his lodge; for improper, corrupt, or unmasonic conduct as Master, he is subject to trial and deposition by the Grand Master, and to expulsion by the Grand Lodge.

Visit to Canton.

Agreeably to previous invitation, we visited Morning Star Lodge No. 30, at Canton, on the evening of June 25th. We were handsomely received, and met some of our old acquaintances, Breth. Wilson, Piper, Fast, Curtis, Brinkerhoof, and others, with several from Farmington and Cuba. Although the evening was stormy, and the brethren wearied with the celebration of the previous day, yet the hall was full. Several short speeches were made, many questions asked and answered, and the time passed away agreeably, and it was a very different affair from the meeting we held there eighteen years before, when we returned the charter and re-organized the lodge. Eight or ten were present at that time; now, the lodge numbers over one hundred, and the chapter and council are in a thriving condition.

Bro. C. Wilson, a whole-souled brother, took us in charge, and we were made the welcome guest of his late employer, Bro. Thompson, formerly of Peoria; in his family our disabled Comp. Stevens, of Knoxville, in his visits to Canton, finds comfort and rest; so did we.

Canton is now a large place, and has several classes of manufacturing and business which give life and energy to the place. The Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw, and a lateral branch of the Chicago and Burlington roads, cross each other here. The former is completed to Warsaw, the latter to Rushville, and is pushing out towards Mt. Sterling.

The Fraternity at Canton are now occupying a new and spacious hall, which will soon be elegantly fitted up. Few lodges have a happier or more glowing prospect before them than Morning Star. The town and country are rich, and rejoice in liberal things, while the material is unsurpassed.

Make Life Happy.

Light and beauty embosom Life. God never intended the earth for a "vale of tears."

Man should co-operate in God's arrangements, which are intended, along with labor, seed time and harvest, summer and winter, to beautify the earth with joy, plenty, and peace.

True, troubles—often grievous—come upon men; but none inflicted by Providence are so great as those mankind bring upon themselves, and suffer willingly. Our experience in life rests mainly with ourselves. We need not, of necessity, be miserable, because the world has decreed our misfortune; and, generally, if we are miserable, the fault is with ourselves. The great, only, order their own circumstances. In the voyage of life, the winds and waves are on the side of the experienced navigator. Where one is faithful, there are more who are not. Out of this it is our privilege to weave much happiness, and to see and rejoice in the good and beautiful.

Be careful to preserve a sound estimate of what is past, the joyful and sorrowful experiences alike, and cause for regret will be seldom, and hope and thankfulness will be the rule; that which spoils life is not so much the events which occur, as the perverted recurrence to them, and this, quite likely, may be true of happy events as of sorrowful ones.

Many men who make no effort of themselves—who are so neglectful of brilliant opportunities,— may still find life crowded with pleasures. When the sun shines, it should be enjoyed; and whenin shadow, hope for the sun again.

Thorns and weeds are suggestive of flowers, blossoms, bloom, and fruit; but the latter should never be suggestive of the former.

There is more joy and comfort in the world than sorrow and tears—less hate than love—more constancy than treachery; and those who urge the contrary are unfit companions for youth, purity, innocence, goodness, or honor. Reject them quickly.

When the mists and clouds disappear, how beautiful nature appears. While winter has its comforts and compensations, yet how pleasant the anticipation of spring—how glorious the fruition of summer and autumn! The days of wintry distress are painful while they last, but they are usually precursors of brighter and happier ones. The divine law is consistent with itself, and nature is ever true to herself. The common course of things tends to happiness; the contrary is the exception. Properly appreciated, life is pervaded with light and beauty, and if unhappy, is untrue to itself.

Imposters.

We have given much of our space heretofore to notices of imposters, and we have evidence that some of them assume other men's names, and that some harm has been done by it.

We are resolved to publish no more of them unless requested by a lodge under seal, or by some grand officer whom we know.

The lawful way to relieve a brother, who is a stranger, is, upon his producing proper vouchers, to give him work, or sufficient aid to reach the next lodge.

The amount improperly abstracted from our lodge treasuries, or from the pockets of brethren, will run largely into the ten thousands.

We shall bring the matter before the Grand Lodge, and ask for some effective action.

Public Works, Chicago.

Through the politeness of R. W. Bro. Cregier, we are favored with the Seventh Annual Report of the Board of Public Works. A. H. Burley, Pres.; John McArthur, Treas.; W. H. Carter, Com.; Wm. Gooding and R. B. Mason, Commissioners in matters pertaining to the cleansing of Chicago River; A. W. Tinkham, Sec.; E. S. Cheesebrough, City Engineer; D. C. Cregier, Engineer of the Pumping Works.

Net revenue from works, $54,341,39. Expended on Washington Street Tunnell, $106,546,79; street, bridge, sidewalk, cemetery, dredging, survey, hospital, court-house, road, market, prison, park, and lighting expenditures, $734,395,34; receipts, $810,282,04.

Anti-Masonic Convention.

A few zealots assembled at Chicago, June 8, and held a meeting, dubbed "National Association of Christians opposed to Secret Societies." And such a body! Of those who claim to have been Masons and have seceded, all we can say is, that upon their own statement, they are either liars or perjurers. We leave them in the hands of a just God! Of the other—office-seeking, disappointed, cynical, pharisaical, and notoriety-seeking brethren, we have nothing to say. We presume the most of them have been rejected by various lodges, and of course they must have their revenge.

Pianos and Organs.

We would call attention to the advertisement of Bro. A. Bower, at Brimfield, Peoria Co., agent for the Smith's American Pianos, and Carpenter & Coleman's Organs and Melodeons. He wants agents to sell. Write to him for terms and price lists. All who desire to introduce good music and turn an honest penny, will do well to consult Bro. Bower.

Capt. R. Orendorff.

Our old friend and Bro. Orendorff, lately of Galveston, Texas, and Lincoln, Ills., has located at Kansas City, Mo., as a practicing attorney.

Business men will find him to be a faithful, competent attorney, and withal a genial companion and pleasant correspondent.

There is true greatness in gentleness. He whose heart is filled with love to God, and love to man, can bear with the weaknesses, the imperfections, and even the perverseness of others.

St. John's at Home.

Chicago Consistory arranged for a gala time at Haas' Park, and a large party in full dress, under the command of Ill. Bro. D. M. Carr, paraded in good style, and at 10 o'clock the train was densely crowded with Scotchers, Templars, Archers, Cryptics, and Symbolizers, with their ladies, families, and friends. Judge Austin delivered the oration, and short speeches were made by Breth. Berry, Bailey, Gayle, and Ellis. Two hundred lady members of the Eastern Star were also present in regalia. For once, it did rain at Chicago on the 24th of June!

The Fraternity at Cairo, Mound City, Caledonia, and we presume at Metropolis, went to Paducah, Ky., to celebrate. Of course, Past Grand Master Picket did duty as usual.

At Dallas City, large delegations came in by the Carthage and Burlington R. R., from adjoining lodges, and from Iowa. The occasion was greatly enlivened by the consolidation of Durham Lodge No. 329 and Dallas City Lodge No. 235, under the latter name and number, at Dallas City. This junction makes one of the strongest lodges in Hancock county. The meeting was one of great joy and festivity, and R. W. Bro. J. P. Sanford, Grand Orator in Iowa, delivered the oration, and he demonstrated that all the old backbiting or persecution brought to bear on the Masonic bulwarks of Masonry, avail but little. The repast was bountiful, and our correspondent describes it as fit for queens, kings, and princes. Bro. Sanford regaled the brethren at night with a lecture upon his tour in Europe and the Holy Land. We should like to hear that lecture.

◆

The State Journal.

The enterprising publishers of the weekly and daily Journal, Messrs. Baker & Phillips, have recently brought out their paper in a new and tasty dress, and we notice a decided improvement in the general tone of its leading editorials, and in the general character of its make-up. The Journal has always been ably conducted, and fairly takes rank with the best papers published.

It is the leading and influential organ of the republican party in Central Illinois, and is eminently worthy of the patronage of the members of that party. We are pleased to note these evidences of prosperity, and have not forgotten that THE MASONIC TROWEL was originally a protege of that office.

◆

Reformed Church, Pennsylvania.

At a recent meeting of the General Synod of the Reformed Church of Pennsylvania, a Committee on Freemasonry, previously appointed, concluded their report by saying "that, in our own country at least, the Order has numbered among its members some of the purest and noblest men, statesmen, Christians, and not a few ministers of the Gospel."

◆

Corner-Stone Laid.

On the 27th day of May last, R. W. Bro. Richard D. Hammond, assisted by Macomb Lodge No. 17 and Kyle Lodge No. 553, laid the corner-stone of the new Baptist meeting-house in Macomb, with full and appropriate ceremonies.

◆

DURING the month of May, 4,960 passengers arrived at San Francisco by sea, 2,900 of whom came via the isthmus; 1,670 came from Asia, and 268 from Australia. The departures were only 858, including 143 for China.

Tidings.

Items.

It is supposed that the population of the earth is 1,288,000,000: Caucasian, 360,000,000; Mongolian, 552,000,000; Ethiopian, 160,000,000; Malay, 170,000,000; Indo-American, 1,000,000. Of these, 335,000,000 are classed as Christians; 5,000,000 Jews; 60,000,000 Asiatic religions; 160,000,000 Mohammedans; 200,000,000 pagans. Of those classed as Christians, 170,000,000 are supposed to be Roman Catholics; 75,000,000 Greek Church; and 80,000,000 Protestants.

There are vices which do not deprive us of friends; there are many which prevent our having any.

Indiana Grand Lodge.—Martin H. Rice, Grand Master; George W. Porter, Deputy; W. T. Clark, S. G. W.; Christian Felta, J. G. W.; Charles Fisher, G. Treas.; John M. Bramwell, Indianapolis, Grand Secretary; John Leach, G. Chaplain; D. McDonald, S. G. D.; S. H. Pearse, J. G. D.; W. M. Black, G. Tyler.

If you don't owe the devil anything, then you will not have to give him any due.

The Connecticut Methodists are anti-tobacco and anti-cider.

Iowa claims to raise more and better spring wheat to the acre, than any other State in the West.

The inaugural of President Grant has been translated and printed in Japanese.

Protestant churches are organizing in many Turkish towns.

The worst liars are those who are always on the verge of truth.

Postoffices established and re-established in Illinois—Pollock, Wayne county; Fountain Bluff, Jackson county; Wilsonburg, Richland county.

Iowa Grand Lodge.—John Scott, Nevada, Grand Master; W. P. Allen, Dubuque, S. G. W.; W. J. Ross, Ottumwa, J. G. W.; J. W. Jamison, Davenport, G. Treas.; T. S. Parvin, Iowa City, G. Sec.; O. P. Waters, Muscatine, D. G. M.; Wm. Purvis, West Liberty, G. Chaplain; J. P. Sanford, Marshalltown, G. Orator; W. D. Taylor, S. G. D.; C. A. Croney, J. G. D.; Theodore Schreiner, G. Tyler.

It is said that there are 38,000,000 hogs in the United States.

There are fifteen chapters in New Hampshire, with a membership of 1,600.

The Sons of Temperance have 1,968 divisions, 96,673 members, and 40,781 lady visitors.

The Freemasons of England are about to make a Grand Master of "Wales." We hope not.

Joseph's Well is an Egyptian work, 260 feet deep, and 20 feet square, and for the greater part of the way, is cut in solid rock.

Seven hundred and fifty-six suits are pending against American editors; damages claimed, $47,500,000.

Immigrants from the south, east, and north are filling up Minnesota.

A school for deaf mutes is to be opened in Boston in September.

The overland mails from New York and Boston reach San Francisco in eight days, and from England via New York, in twenty-five days.

A local rhymster indited a sonnet to his mistress, entitled, "I kissed her sub rosa." The compositor sat it up snub nosa.

Grand Council R. & S. Masters, Penn.—Chas. Fred. Knapp, Bloomsburg, Grand Master; C. Stoltz, Reading, Grand Recorder.

"Pa, will you get me a pair of skates, if I will prove to you that a dog has ten tails?" "Yes, my son." "Well, to begin, one dog has one more tail than no dog, hasn't he?" "Yes." "Well, no dog has nine tails; and if one dog has one more tail than no dog, then one dog must have ten tails." He got his skates.

A gentleman has purchased six townships of land in Kansas, and intends to settle five hundred families on them before March, 1870.

Bismarck has 1,440,000 troops at call in case of war.

Two hundred weekly, and fifty daily German papers are published in the United States.

Sternness isn't dignity, no more than silence is necessarily wisdom.

A diamond, said to be worth $300,000, and the second or third in size in the world, and about the size of a walnut, was recently found in the gold mining district in Nova Scotia.

Methodist Episcopal Church South.—Conferences, 40; traveling preachers, 2,495; superannuated, 179; local preachers, 4,413; white members, 503,596; colored, 32,085; Indian, 2,301; Total ministers and members, 545,069.

Commodore Nutt is married to Minnie Warren. We hope the marriage may prove to be as happy as that of Gen. Tom Thumb to Minnie's sister, Lavinia.

Hon. O. H. Browning, of Quincy, recently addressed an old settlers' convention at Carthage. The oldest resident was I. N. Waggoner, who came to the county in 1824.

We are gratified to see the Clinton Public enlarged and in a beautiful new dress.

Childhood should be playful; old age, tranquil.

Grand Commandery Pennsylvania.—James H. Hopkins, Pittsburg, Grand Commander; Alfred Creigh, Washington, Grand Recorder.

The Old and New School Presbyterians have united, by the nearly unanimous vote of the Old, and the unanimous vote of the New School General Assemblies.

The Apostle Islands in Lake Superior, are said to be well adapted to the raising of grapes.

The women's parliament, to be held in New York next autumn, will discuss matters of education, reformatory institutions, women's labor, domestic economy, hygiene, and political corruption.

Mrs. Speed Butler, of Springfield, recently won a silver pitcher, in a contest for beauty, in the Episcopal church. Her principal contestant was the beautiful Miss Lottie George. Mrs. Butler received 1,275 votes; Miss George, 1,013; whole number cast, 2,605; making the sum raised by this device for charitable purposes, $651.25.

A Cincinnati lady indorsed on her tax return, "Taxation without representation is tyranny."

Aristotle, on being censured for bestowing alms on a bad man, made the following noble reply: "I did not give it to the man; I gave it to humanity."

Zeal, even in a good cause, is an evil, without judgment.

An ounce of mirth, with the same degree of grace, will serve God further that a pound of sadness.

The lakes in the State of New York have an area of 728 square miles.

North Carolina has 211 working Masonic lodges, and 8,944 members.

The Earl of Zetland has been Grand Master in England 25 years.

Seven Americans occupy official stations in the building of railroads in Russia.

Those who boast of their discretion, are the last persons to confide in.

The Life Association of America issued 444 policies in the month of May, insuring $3,017,700; average, $7,796. The Southern Illinois Department is located at Springfield. Directors, O. H. Miner, E. B. Pease, E. R. Ulrich, Charles Ridgeley, Charles A. Helmle, H. G. Reynolds Jr., L. W. Shepherd, G. A. Van Duyn, C. E. Hay. O. H. Miner, Grand Secretary Grand Lodge, is Secretary.

Joppa Lodge is the oldest Hebrew Lodge in London, and one of the oldest in England.

A system of telegraph money orders has been perfected in France.

A citizen of Iowa lately received $625 bounty for gopher scalps.

The earnings of the Illinois Central Railroad from Nov. 1, 1868, to April 1, are as follows: Freight, $2,066,947.53; passengers, $797,371.73; extra baggage, $904.74; mails, $38,601.38; express, $95,381.03. Total, $2,999,196.41; seven per cent. to the State, $209,943.75.

Illinois has 87 wool-carding mills, 133 manufactories of woolens, and a capital of $3,600.000 invested in buildings and machinery, employing 3,450 operators, and consuming the wool from 2,000,000 sheep.

We are under many obligations to M. E. Comp B. B. French, for a copy of his address before the Grand Chapter D. C., May 10, 1869.

R. W. Bro. T. S. Parvin, Grand Secretary Iowa, will please accept our thanks for a copy of the Grand Master's address and the report on correspondence.

Texas.—P. C. Tucker, G. M.; C. M. Winkler, Dep.; T. J. H. Anderson, S. G. W.; Wm. Bramlitte, J. G. W.; C. H. Bringhurst, Houston, Grand Secretary.

The Phonographic Advocate is published by James E. Munson, 117 Nassau street, New York, at one dollar a year. It is valuable to all who find any necessity for a rapid or short hand.

Warren Colburn's "First Lessons in Mental Arithmetic" are re-stereotyped and for sale by Lee & Shepard, 149 Washington St., Boston. They are valuable for family study.

Dake, the celebrated Chicago cracker man, died recently with an insurance upon his life of $150,000.

Major Manning Mayfield, formerly Secretary of our State Senate, and more recently Clerk of the Circuit Court in Macoupin county, has removed to Little Rock, Ark. He is a Royal Arch Mason.

All classes of Presbyterians in the United States, including the Dutch Reformed and German Reformed churches, number about 900,000, which places them numerically next to the Methodists and Baptists.

The Chicagoan, which started with so much promise as a literary paper, seems to have descended to a controversial position. It proposes to consolidate with the Sorosis and Advance Guard, under the name of the Universe, and is to be a woman's rights paper, and will advocate reform in the marriage system.

The claims of American citizens in Mexico foot up $60,000,000.

The Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville Road is now completed; daily trips are made from Peoria to Jacksonville and back. The road-bed, track, culverts, and bridges are in fine condition.

The Louisville Courier estimates the tobacco crop of the western States this season, at 120 hhds.

Chicago has been selected as the grand distributing postoffice for China, Japan, and Sandwich Island mails that go over the Pacific Railway.

China has 500,000 temples, 3,000,000 idols. The houses are valued at $1,000,000,000.

A handsome block of rose-colored alabaster, containing 2,437 cubic feet, was recently unearthed at Rome.

Baron Rothschild's estate amounts to $340,000,000 in gold.

A custom-house and postoffice are now being erected by the government in Portland, Oregon.

Eleven hundred Englishmen keep more than ten male servants each, for which luxury they have to pay a tax.

Fruits in a good state of preservation have reached New York from San Francisco, in eight days.

The New Age, the organ of Odd-Fellowship in California, comes to us in an elegant new dress.

The man who does not know his own mind, contemplates an introduction.

A flower sweetens the air, rejoices the eye links you with nature and innocence, and is something to love.

Isaac N. Morris is practicing law in Washington.

Literary Publications.

Peters' Musical Monthly, for June, at hand. Its literary, descriptive, and musical articles are equal to those of any previous number.

Mother's Journal, for July. The children feeding the mules with fresh grass, is a taking picture. While no arbitrary rules can be fixed for the training of each child, yet much counsel and comfort can be gathered from such a monthly visitor as the Mother's Journal, in the hands of such a lady-mother as Mrs. M. G. Clarke.

Oliver Optic comes to us with elegant prints of President Grant and Vice President Colfax. This magazine is a 16-page weekly, published at 149 Washington street, Boston, by Lee & Shepard, at 6 cents per number, and is intended for boys and girls. Its stories are dished up attractively, and are brim-full of variety, fun, dash, and spice.

Packard's Monthly is as interesting as ever. The July number has the first instalment of the courtship of Gen. Tom Thumb and Miss Lavinia Warren. It is decidedly rich.

Good Health is the title of a new candidate for public favor, published monthly by Alexander Moore, 21 Franklin street, Boston, at 20 cents per number, or $2 yearly. It is a magazine of 48 pages, and is a neat, well printed affair. Now is just the time to have such a work. "Practical physiology—the eye and sight," is the leading article. It is sold by the Western News Company, Chicago, and the St. Louis Book and News Company, St. Louis.

The Protestant Missionary, published at Jacksonville, by Rev. J. G. White, monthly, is devoted to exposures of Catholicism. The editor is in earnest, and not a little in danger. $1.50 per year.

Home Circle and Temperance Oracle.—Subscription price, $1.00. With the July number this monthly enters upon its ninth volume. It has won its way among the temperance lodges and divisions to a very large circulation. To any lodge or individual sending a list of subscribers, a copy will be furnished free. Agents are desired for every town and lodge. A stirring story will be commenced in the July number. Specimen copies, ten cents. S. M. Kennedy, editor, 194 Clark street, Chicago.

St. John's Abroad.

AT OMAHA, NEB.

The Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter of Nebraska, assisted by several lodges, chapters, and commanderies, celebrated the 24th at Omaha. The turn-out was large, and full two hundred Templars were in full dress. Rev. Geo. C. Betts delivered the address. Four brass bands enlivened the scene, and mirth, good eating, and genuine good fellowship abounded.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS.

Nine lodges, one chapter, and six commanderies, embrrcing, with other guests, about fifteen hundred persons, were in the procession. It is probable that as many more were present. Gen. Josiah Whitaker, 80 years of age, and 57 years a Mason; John Ackerman, 73 years old, and 50 a Mason; and Abner Kenniston, of Newburyport, 85 years old, and 50 years a Mason, joined in the exercises of the day. Hon. B. B. French, of Washington, noted as a scholar, poet, gentleman, and Masonic orator, delivered the address. From its freshness and roseate hues, one would judge him to be a gallant young man of 35!

Our old friend, Gen. Wm. Sutton, was also present. Green and fresh may his long old age be!

AT ATCHISON, KANSAS.

Grand Master John H. Brown, dedicated the new Masonic hall. The furniture and carpeting are minutely described; the carpets were furnished by H. M. Glancy, formerly of this city. Past Grand Master M. S. Adams addressed the assemblage, and Rev. Dr. Sawyer officiated as Chaplain. Large delegations were present from lodges in Missouri and Kansas.

AT KANSAS CITY, MO.

Grand Master Vincil addressed an immense crowd.

The brethren at Louisville, Ky., Jeffersonville and New Albany, Ind., were present in large numbers at the latter place.

Industrial Publications.

The American Builder, Chicago, contains an illustration of the suburban residence of Wm. B. Ogden, on Fordham Ridge, Winchester county, New York, and of the residence of Geo. W. Gage, in Chicago. So far as we have read, the articles are practical and valuable.

Colman's Rural World, is a weekly journal devoted to agriculture, horticulture, mechanics, gardening, and matters which interest farmers and housewives in general. It is an able and useful journal, especially for the West.

The Commercial Printing Gazette is published by G. S. Newcomb & Co., at Cleveland, Ohio, monthly, at $1 per annum. It has some good reading matter, and its advertisements are valuable to printers and publishers.

Another Corner-Stone.

We have accepted an inbitation to lay the corner-stone of the new Jewish Synagogue in Qvincy, on Friday, the 30th July inst.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—Isa. 8, 20.

DECISIONS BY THE GRAND MASTER.

56. Can members of a Lodge whose warrant has been suspended visit sister lodges?

Ans. Yes, if the members are exempted from the decree of suspension.

Query. If a candidate has taken his first degree in said lodge, can he go any further without permission of the Grand Lodge?

Ans. No. The Lodge being suspended, there is no power to give permission, save the power that resides in the Grand Lodge or Grand Master.

57. Lodges can not tax members. See proceedings of Grand Lodge, 1866.

Mammoth Cave.

BY THE PUBLISHER.

By invitation of an intimate friend in Louisville, he, ourself, and others, visited the renowned curiosity known as the "Mammoth Cave."

By the Toledo, Wabash, and Western R. R.—now one of the greatest thoroughfares of the country, extending from Toledo to Quincy and Keokuk, we soon found ourselves at Lafayette; from whence we glided safely to Indianapolis, over the Lafayette, Indianapolis and Cincinnati R. R., and after a short delay, we took the Jeffersonville, Madison and Indianapolis R. R., and were soon cosily with our friend, pleased with the comfort over the route traversed in the fertile States of Illinois and Indiana. The three roads above mentioned have suffered from financial embarrassment, but are now passing rapidly to solvency and prosperity. Their tracks and bridges are improved, and nice sleeping cars and coaches take the place of the old ones, and are hardly excelled by any road in the West.

The J. M. & I. road, of which Horace Scott is the General Superintendent, is now running Silver Palace day and sleeping cars through from Jeffersonville (immediately opposite Louisville) to New York, without change. The company is building, and has nearly completed a splendid iron bridge across the Ohio River, at Louisville, length 5,280 feet. The fine condition of the road and rolling stock reflects great credit on Mr. Scott. We have for sometime enjoyed the pleasure of an acquaintance with the General Freight Agent, Thomas Carse, a most pleasant and affable gentleman, and the freight department will prosper under his management. While in Louisville, the new railroad from that city to Cincinnati was opened for business, and the event was celebrated with great joy by the inhabitants of both places. With an excursion ticket over the road, we very gladly took advantage of the courtesy extended to us, and visited the "Queen City," in which place we spent one day very pleasantly, seeing the sights. Visited the office of Bro. Cornelius Moore, but he was absent from the city. On the return trip, we were witnesses to a sad accident; a construction train had broken through a bridge about 12 miles from Cincinnati. Two men killed and six wounded. Our train arrived at the scene of the accident while the dead and wounded were being removed. We spent the 4th and 5th of July in Kentucky and Indiana, and judging from the celebrating we saw going on, we are inclined to think our national birth-day is loved more than ever before. On the evening of the 6th we took the train for the cave. At Glasgow Junction we stopped for the night, and in the morning took the "bus."

The Louisville and Nashville Railroad, with its branch to Memphis and connecting line to New Orleans, is the best equipped and best paying road in the South. From Glasgow Junction to the cave is a drive of 7 miles, through some of the most beautiful scenery of Kentucky. It is always with a feeling of reverence that we view the grand and beautiful scenery of this noble State.—"the dark and bloody hunting ground," the home of Boone, Audubon, and Clay, the camping ground for the early Pioneers of the "Great West. At the "Cave Hotel we were received by a large delegation of our "colored brethren" who were anxious to wait on us for every conceivable purpose. In a few minutes a party of ladies and gentlemen was made up to visit the Cave, from the States of Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio, Tennessee, and far-off Texas, with a gentleman from "the land o'cakes and chiel." We entered the cave at 9 o'clock A. M. and returned at 7 P. M.; the route traveled is 9 miles long, and is known as the long route, making an entire walk of 18 miles. On the next day we went through the "short route" 4 miles long. Our guide, Henry Hughes, is a capable and intelligent young man, and we took almost as much pleasure in listening to his descriptions of the curiosities, as we did in seeing the wonders themselves. We will not attempt to describe this wondrous work of the Lord; it has been done often times by abler writers than ourselves, and any attempt of ours would be like offering light to the sun.

This great curiosity is considered common property. Here the soldiers of the Union and the Confederacy meet in peace and harmony, talk over camp times, fight their battles o'er, and finally part with a grasp of the right hand, and a mutual feeling of thankfulness that they part friends, and not foes seeking each other's lives. Our trip home was short and pleasant.

Transactions Examined.

We have received a review of the transactions in New York from the date of the warrant for a Provincial Grand Lodge, Sept. 5, 1781, until July 8, 1852. . Rev. William Walter was the first Grand Master. At the meeting of the Grand Lodge Dec. 5, 1872, six military and three local lodges were represented. Wm. Cock was elected Grand Master in 1783. The following year, Chancellor Robert R. Livingston was elected, and remained Grand Master until 1800.

The costume of a Tyler, at that time, was a blue coat and waistcoat, corduroy breeches, all with yellow buttons; white stockings; three cornered hat, and a hairy cap for public occasions: to be the property of the lodge.

In 1800, Chancellor Livingston was appointed Minister to France, and Col. Jacob Morton was elected Grand Master.

June 25, 1801, the grand officers, at their installation, were received and escorted to their seats by the Knights Templar.

DeWitt Clinton, the most renowned of all the Governors of New York, and the most distinguished and venerated Mason at his death, was elected Grand Master in 1806, and held that station until 1819. For several years he presided with admirable judgment and felicity over Holland Lodge.

Daniel D. Tompkins was elected Governor in 1812, Vice President in 1816, and Grand Master in 1819, and held the latter office two terms.

About this time, serious jealousies arose between the city and country lodges, and propositions were made to divide, and a division actually took place, and the seeds were sown which ultimately produced rebellion, secession, and division. Several of the active members of the St. John's secession Grand Lodge, and the contumacious Phillips Grand Lodge, are now eminent and valuable members of the only and powerful Grand Lodge of New York.

In 1823, the country grand lodge and city grand lodge were formed, or rather exercised jurisdiction as the regular Grand Lodge, and so continued to act until June 7, 1827, when they united again under the Grand Mastership of E. W. King.

Sept. 20, 1824, Gen. Lafayette visited the Grand Lodge.

In 1822, Joseph Enos was elected Grand Master; Martin Hoffman and Joseph Enos in 1823 and 1824; Martin Hoffman and Solomon VanRensselaer in 1825; E. W. King and S. VanRensselaer in 1826; Solomon Van Rensselaer in 1827, '8 and '9.

June 4, 1828, resolutions of condolence were passed, and a eulogy pronounced, in memory of DeWitt Clinton.

In 1830, Gov. Morgan Lewis was elected Grand Master, and held the position until 1844.

June 6, 1832, a long and exhausting report was made in regard to the Morgan affair. Its length precludes its insertion here. But it is a complete refutation of any complicity or sympathy of the Fraternity in the Morgan affair.

One writer describes the pestilence at the time as follows:

"That fearful excitement which swept over our land like a pestilence; which confounded the innocent with the guilty; which entered even the Temple of God; which distracted and divided churches; which sundered the nearest ties of social life; which set father against the son, and the son against the father; arrayed the wife against her own husband—and, in short, wherever its baneful influences were most felt, deprived men of all those comforts and enjoyments which render life to us a blessing."

This is not fancy; it is the barest possible statement of what we witnessed at the time.

Here is a specimen of the Solomon Southwick literature:

"Free Masonry is the step that leads down to the dark gates of hell, the paths of perdition, conclaves of corruption and licentiousness, lamb-skin order, dark altars of infidelity, protection of fraud and villainy, the genuine academies of tippling, manufactory for noodles, &c."

He applied the following epithets to Masons:

"Banditti brethren, vile imposters, hypocrits, time-fuddlers, sharpers, knaves, noodles, fools, blackguards, drunkards, gullees, dumpling-heads, imposters, nincompoops, blockheads, &c."

President Blanchard used worse and immeasurably dirtier language, in church, at Galesburg, as late as 1850.

Reader, please consider the personal hardships endured, contributions made and services rendered by such men as Robert R. Livingston, Solomon Van Rensselaer, Gen. Lafayette, Gov. Lewis, DeWitt Clinton, D. D. Tompkins, and hosts of others in New York, and then justify such language if you can!

June 23, 1834, the Fraternity united with the public authorities in the funeral ceremonies in memory of Gen Lafayette.

July 19, 1837, Henry C. Atwood and Wm. F. Platt were expelled, and Aug. 2, the charter of York Lodge was declared forfeited, for having a procession on St. John's Day without lawful leave.

Alexander H. Robertson was Grand Master in 1844 and 1845.

Gov. Lewis died April 8, 1844.

June 24, 1845, the Grand Lodge joined with the public authorities in paying respects to the memory of Gen. Andrew Jackson.

Feb. 13, 1846, Grand Master Robertston died.

June 6, 1846, John D. Willard was elected Grand Master. His competitor was Isaac Phillips, and at this time serious trouble commenced. The following year, Judge Willard was re-elected. It was at that time that Isaac Phillips declared the Grand Lodge dissolved, the funds were taken, and the malcontents pretended to be the Grand Lodge of New York, and were long known as the "Phillips Grand Lodge."

At the same time, another spurions organization, known as "St. John's Grand Lodge," was courting recognition, with the notorious Henry C. Atwood at its head.

In 1850, W. H. Milnor was elected Grand Master.

Dec. 27, sentences of expulsion having been revoked, the "St. John's Grand Lodge" was received by the Grand Lodge of New York. Let silence rest upon this deed.

In 1851, Oscar Coles was elected Grand Master, and was succeeded in 1852 by Nelson Randall.

This brings us to the end of the important resume before us; Chancellor Walworth was elected Grand Master in 1853; Joseph D. Evans in 1854; John L. Lewis, Jr., in 1856; John W. Simons in 1860; Finlay M. King in 1861; John J. Crane in 1862; C. F. Paige in 1863; R. D. Holmes in 1865 and '6; Stephen H. Johnson in 1867, and James Gibson, the present incumbent, in 1868.

WISCONSIN.

Grand Chapter.—Met at Milwaukee, Feb. 3; A. V. H. Carpenter, G. H. P.

Comp. Carpenter opens eloquently; speaks at length of charters, dispensations, Grand Lecturer, the Rite of Memphis, General Grand Chapter, foreign relations, and discipline. The following beautiful and practical remarks should be carefully read and pondered by every Mason:

Companions:—Masonry is becoming very popular, and, moreover, there is a great tendency to rush through from the "Ground Floor" to the summit. Railroad, and almost telegraph speed is demanded, through the different stages. There is great danger in all this. The "outer door" has always been considered the principal post of danger, and we have been warned to "guard it well," from time immemorial. But in this fast age, and with the hot-bed process of growing Masons, our "inner courts" are points of even greater danger, and we must look to their purity, or all our vigilance at the outer door will not save us. If a scamp gets past the outer guards into our lines, the safety of the Craft requires that he should not be permitted to stay there. If evils and temptations beset our brethren, and some through weakness fall, it is our duty to endeavor to remove the cause, and to reclaim the wanderer. It becomes us, with an anxious care for the welfare and perpetuity of our Institution and its members, to look these dangers squarely in the face, and not deceive ourselves with any fancied security on account of our intimate connection and mutual obligation to each other. This, instead of proving an element of strength, will be the cause of our destruction, unless morality and virtue, honesty and sobriety, are the foundation of our ties. "Masonry unites men of every nation, sect, and opinion." No national lines confine it; no political or religious differences divide its members; the harmony of its assemblies is undisturbed by the jarring elements that agitate the outer world; fraternal interchange of sentiment pervades the intercourse of the brethren, and the friendly feelings thus engendered are carried forth and characterize to a great extent their relations with the world at large. The true Mason is the true MAN, and in his deportment is ever the courteous gentleman, respectful of the opinions and sensibilities of his fellow men, in all the walks of life.

Intolerence is foreign to all the teachings of the Institution, and has no place in the heart of him who is fit to be a Mason. Thus constituted, unconstrained sociality and unbounded hospitality are distinguished characteristics of the intercourse of the Craft, particularly on the occasion of their festivals and public assemblies.

The eyes of the world are upon us, and by our deportment, more than anything else, the world judges of the nature of the Institution. And hence, any deviations from the line of propriety are particularly noted, commented upon, and charged to the account of something wrong behind the veil which is not permitted to the uninitiated to penetrate; and, therefore, secret societies are denounced as immoral, corrupt, and dangerous in their very nature—and so the noblest and best institution suffers through the indiscretion of, perhaps, its very best members in other respects. One of these dangers to which we as a body and individually are exposed, is the practice of carrying our festivities at too "high pressure"—in some instances allowing them to extend into revels. Those who entertain seem to think their hospitality not appreciated unless their guests partake of everything in all the profusion in which it is offered, and guests think their hosts niggardly unless they invite them to participate in frequent libations. "Friendship, morality, and brotherly love" are cardinal tenets of our profession, and I submit that it is neither friendly, moral, or particularly fraternal treatment of a fellow being to urge him to "put an enemy in his mouth to steal away his brains." Whoever can not exercise hospitality without encouraging excess, or can not accept of the same without being overcome, should never give or accept an invitation to an entertainment.

Another of the same class of dangers is the habit, so prevalent, of hob-nobbing over the social glass when two or more casually meet, and especially if an introduction to a strange brother occurs. From these habits spring a taste, and that once formed, instead of being a mere social pastime, the glass becomes a necessity, and ruin to self and beggary to family is the last scene in the sad tragedy—and how many of our noblest brotners and best of men have verified the truth of this terrible history.

These remarks are aimed at no locality or individual. My observation within the past year has made it painfully apparent to my mind that our bark is drifting into a dangerous sea, and I have no apology to offer for introducing this subject into an address of this kind. We have been too much in the habit of self-laudation, and have not examined into our actual condition; or if we have done so, we have been very careful to conceal the facts. "Whitewashing" is very useful as an ornamental art, and to obliterate superficial spots, but should never be used to cover up indications of internal defects, which, if not remedied, will corrupt the whole system.

He who would remove the mote from his brother's eye, should first pluck the beam from his own; and how can we say to others, be thou pure and temperate, unless we first become so ourselves? or how can we attempt a reformation by purifying our ranks, if a majority approve this habit? Were a brother on trial for drunkenness before his lodge or chapter to turn on his judges, and in the language of Him who spake as never man spake, say, "Let him among you who is without sin, cast the first stone," what answer could be made? We must judge with whatsoever judgment we would be judged by. Our only response could be, "Go and sin no more;" and yet that word sin would sound strange, unless we were ourselves free from all reproaches to the habit for which he stood arraigned. No man probably ever became a Mason who was a drunkard at the time; and it is as much the fault of our customs, and remissness of our duties towards our brethren, that any of them ever become so, as it is their own. We all have a responsibility for our individual characters, and more or less for the character of our brethren, so far as it affects the standing of the Order. We must discharge our duty in the full spirit of brotherly love, and we shall not need sermons or lectures on intemperance if we only live correct lives—not ascetic, icy, frigid in our virtue, not shut up in a cloister, but warm-hearted, generous, and considerate in our daily life and walks with our brethren. The staid, sober brethren who never indulge in the use of intoxicating beverages, and stay away from the assemblies of the Craft for fear some one may commit an excess, and they will be contaminated by the association, are thereby responsible in a great degree for withholding the influence which their presence and example would exert in restraining over-indulgence. No one should "hide his light under a bushel," especially Masons, whose mission is to benefit mankind, and especially those who are of the household of the faithful. Veteran Masons! come out from your seclusion and "let your light so shine before men in the world that they, seeing your good works, may glorify our Father who is in Heaven."

I appeal also to those who "occasionally indulge in a social glass," to pause and consider if they are not setting an example for evil to some brother whose nerves are not as strong to resist the propensity to excess as their own, and who, having partaken of one drop, even for social purposes, can not stop until prostrate, and then say if it is asking too much of them to refrain from the habit, the indulgence of which is leading a brother to ruin and his family to beggary. Does any one say this is asking a great deal? I answer, Masonry requires much at our hands, as it gives us much, and, "where much is given, much is required."

Yet another way of lessening this evil is to be punctual in the observance of all Masonic festivals and holidays, and bring there together our wives and children, and let their cheerful faces and glad voices awaken the enthusiasm of the occasion, rather than arouse by wine or its concomitants. Interest our wives and daughters in our celebrations, and thus make glad the hearts of those who so often keep the lonely vigil while we are away at the lodge or chapter until the "wee, sma' hours ayont the twal." Let us study to provide healthy amusement and recreation during the hours of refreshment, and thus take away the temptation to excess. Our wives and daughters have rights in this matter—let us see to it that they are respected. The character of our principles and the strength of our organization are proof against all the assults of ignorance, bigotry, or malice, if we are only true to ourselves, for "it will follow, as the night the day, we can not then be false to any one," but we can not abide the lightest blow of the chastening rod of justice if we are not thus true. Only

> "Thrice is he armed who has his quarrel just,
> And he but naked, though clothed in steel,
> Whose conscience with injustice is attaint."

We are all liable to err—then let us "gently scan our brother man," but wage uncompromising war against evil per se, with the full assurance that we shall but do our duty if we exercise the best faculties of our nature.

A. V. H. Carpenter was elected G. H. P.; Thos. B. Tyler, Deputy; Joseph Yates, G. K.; J. A. Horlick, G. S.; J. M. Levi, G. Tr.; Wm. T. Palmer, G. Sec. Wisconsin Chapter has 220 members.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Grand Chapter.—Met in Charleston, Feb. 9, and 10; R. S. Bruns, G. H. P. He speaks rapturously of the gathering at St. Louis, pleasantly and properly of Masonic duties and attainments, and pleads the cause of an applicant for restoration with ability and feeling.

Comp. Bruns was elected G. H. P.; M. Moses, Deputy; C. E. Jaegar, G. K.; Jas. A. Hoyt, G. S.; C. F. Jackson, G. Treas.; E. Thayer, G. Sec. The committee on the petition of Joseph Samson, for restoration, reported against it, and the report was sustained.

The report on correspondence is a first class paper.

Miscellaneous Reading.

"Deal gently with the erring."

THE MOTHER AND SONS.

An Incident in Real Life.

"Think gently of the erring!
Ye know not of the power
With which the dark temptation came,
In some ungrateful hour.

Ye may know not how earnestly
They struggled, or how well,
Until the hour of darkness came,
And sadly thus they fell."

It affords us no little pleasure to notice cases in which the erring have been won by kindness and benevolence, from the paths of impropriety and sin. Such examples are not only cheering in particular cases, but they are well calculated to stimulate and encourage philanthrophy, to induce others to make like efforts for the rescue and reform of the mis-guided, and thus to assist in the restoration of the unfortunate and the wretched, who otherwise would be utterly abandoned and hopelessly lost. How few of us, when passing judgment even upon the vicious, turn for a moment to the contemplation of their early lives, the evils and temptations by which they were surrounded, or ask what in all probability would have been our own conduct under like circumstances? How few make the necessary allowances for bad example, ignorance, and poverty! We hear that an individual has been arrested for theft, for fraud, for misdemeanor, or some similar violation of law, and our prejudices are at once excited, and the feeling of mercy is scarcely experienced for a moment. And yet the miserable offender may be, to a certain extent, the victim of circumstances—an evil-doer, not from natural inclination to vice, but through bad associations, intemperate parents, vicious guardians and guides. At all events, when the offense is found to be a first one, and when youth and hope are still on the side of the erring, a chance, an opportunity, should be afforded, kind words should be uttered, encouragement for better things should be mingled with gentle admonitions, and thus in many cases highly gratifying, heart-cheering results would ensue. We may give an illustration from real life.

Not many years ago, an aged female, miserably clad, presented herself at the house of a professional gentleman, one of the most distinguished of our citizens. She had with her a basket of tapes, thread, and other trifles of the kind. She asked for the gentleman of the house, and on being told that he was absent, inquired for the lady. The latter, on making her appearance, was touched by the miserable aspect of the poor woman; and promptly purchased a few of the articles in her basket. The stranger then begged attention for a moment to a tale of sorrow. She said she had not tasted food since the morning of the preceding day; and worse, she had a helpless son at home, who had been without sustenance of any kind, still longer. But she had come, not so much to ask for bread, as to implore mercy. She had another, an erring, but beloved son in prison, and she desired the husband of the lady to exert himself to procure his discharge. She was told that the gentleman would be at home at a particular hour, when, if so disposed, she might call and feel certain of seeing him. She bowed her thanks, promised to return, and did so accordingly at the time designated.

"Well, my good woman," said the gentleman, "I have heard of your former visit. What do you want me to do for you?"

"Oh! sir, I came to supplicate mercy for my son, who is in prison."

"What is his name?"

"D——."

He shook his head, and said that the young man was in for a very grave charge, and named the offense.

"Oh! sir, he is not the one. You have confounded him with another—another son—and her voice trembled with the admission.

"What—have you two so sadly circumstanced?"

She burst into tears, and exclaimed, "I have—alas! I have."

"And which do you wish discharged?"

"It is a hard thing for a mother to select between two children. But Charles, sir, is far the less guilty than his brother. He has of late years been my only stay; and not mine, alone, but that of his wretched and invalid brother, whom the ravages of disease have rendered little better than an idiot. Charles has sustained us both, and I firmly believe that his strong desire to procure sustenance for an aged mother and a feeble brother, induced him to commit the theft for which he is now in prison."

"You seem," remarked the gentleman, "not always to have been in the situation in life in which you are now placed."

The mother—"I once was prosperous, once was happy. But for many years I have drank the cup of sorrow to its very dregs.

I received a tolerable education, and possessed a small property. In an evil hour I married the object of my affections. I say an 'evil hour,' for, alas, my husband became dissipated and squandered the means that I brought him, and left me to struggle with poverty as best I could, while he pursued his dissolute and vicious courses. His example has been the ruin of his children. Edward followed the footsteps of his profligate father, rather than the counsel of his unfortunate mother, and strayed far, far from the path of rectitude and honor. Charles was of gentle, amiable disposition; but possessed less intellect than his bold and desperate brother; while Nicholas has been rendered by disease, a helpless object of pity, and incapable of taking care of himself. Such, good sir, is the sad story of my family. Such is a brief picture of my position and misfortunes. And therefore it is, that I implore your clemency and assistance in behalf of my misguided child. I believe that he is not naturally vicious; know that he has always treated his mother with affection, and for years has generously shared his scanty pittance with her. I do not mean, sir, to attempt any justification of his conduct, in the matter for which he was arrested. But it surely admits of some palliation, when all the facts are taken into view. I hope, sir, that you, animated by some consideration for the misguided and the needy, will regard him rather as an object of commisseration than of punishment. The article he took was of small value, and it was the first time he ever appropriated to his own use what belonged io another. I am old, penniless, and wretched. I have no other dependence than this, my unfortunate child. If he should not be discharged from imprisonment, I have no alternative but the almshouse. Surely, sir, public justice has already been satisfied by the punishment that Charles has endured, and you may interfere in his behalf, and with propriety. Once released, and he may reform; and oh! my dear sir, it is that hope alone which renders life an object werth possessing. Could I but see my child restored—could I feel convinced that his feet were once more in the path of rectitude and virtue, I would thank God for his goodness, and look forward to death and the grave with resignation."

Some further conversation took place, and the gentleman, touched and melted by the appeal of the mother, promised to make due inquiry into all the circumstances of the case, and if he should find them to correspond with her statement, to exercise all his influence in behalf of her son. The result was favorable. The story of the poor woman was fully verified—Charles was discharged, and was restored to the arms, the heart, and the home of the parent who had clung to him with so much tenacity. The meeting was most affecting. The mother wept with excess of joy; while tears also streamed profusely down the cheeks of her son.

"Charles, since his restoration, had been steady, industrious, and temperate. He was, she hoped and believed, fully reformed. He was not only able, by rigid frugality, to support himself and mother, but to minister to the comforts and necesiities of his afflicted brother." And here she again broke forth in thanks. "Mr. Thompson, had not only saved her boy from a life of infamy and wretchedness, but he had brightened as with a beam from heaven, a house that was dark and desolate."

A tear tembled in the eye of Mr. Thompson, and shaking the hand of the grateful mother, he mentally thanked God for the happy result.

"Speak kindly to the erring!
Thou yet may lead them back,
With holy words and tones of love,
From misery's thorny track.

Forget thou hast often sinned,
And sinful yet must be—
Deal gently with the erring one,
As God hath dealt with thee!"

Crooked and Straight.

"Most singular! Most extraordinary!" murmured the Brook as she danced along in the bright sunlight.

"Extraordinary! Pray, may I ask what is extraordinary?" inquired a Willow Tree with delicate leaves of sparkling green, that hung over the streamlet.

"You might see for yourself, I should think," returned the Brook, with a lively little leap over some stones that impeded her course. "In fact, it only proves to me what I have long suspected."

"And what may that be?" asked the Willow Tree, rather perplexed.

"Why, that broad Road at a little distance, which makes such pretensions to being perfectly straight, and leading people in the shortest manner possible from the village to the town, is just as winding and tortuous as she can be. A few hours ago, as I flowed quietly along, I found myself as close to her as I am now. She thereupon turned off at right angles, and entirely disappeared for a time, until I found that she was again approaching me; and she actually came so near, that I was almost under the disagreeable necessity of passing beneath her in order to preserve my direct unbroken course. However, I escaped it that time, and lost sight of her again, and now here she is for the third time within a few yards of me. I shall, I am afraid, be at last compelled to go under her. There can be no doubt whatever that the Road is as winding and crooked as possible."

By this time the Brook was so close to the Road, that the latter could hear all she said, and not a little indignant was she at the aspersions cast upon her character.

"Crooked, indeed!" she exclaimed. "It is you, poor wretched little stream, with whom all the crookedness rests. You are so perpetually winding in and out, and running backwards and forwards, that it is no wonder we are constantly meeting. I am as straight as a dart. Ask the Willows, ask the Oak trees, if they can detect in me the slightest resemblance to a bend." And the Road flung up a little cloud of angry dust, which the wind speedily carried and deposited in the water.

"Never mind what the Brook says," gravely observed a stately Oak, which grew beside the road. "Every one knows that she is a flippant uncertain little thing, pretty and sparkling as she looks. People would walk long enough before they reached the town if they followed her guidance. One never knows where she may be found, or in what direction she will go next, and as for her being straight, why, we all know that she can not even preserve the same course for a dozen yards together. But it is the way of the world. Crooked people never seem able to understand straightforward ways, but must needs fancy every one else as crooked as they are themselves."

An Unexpected Lesson.

Mr. Ely used to tell a little story of a brother clergyman, Rev. Mr. Gay, of Suffield, which story was a good illustration of Yankee "cuteness." Several similar anecdotes have appeared in print; but this is a genuine "Simon Pure," I believe.

Among Mr. Gay's parishioners was a well-to-do-farmer, named, we will say, Brown, who was especially generous in his free-will tithes to the good minister. This farmer's errand and "chore" boy getting big enough to take his place at the plough, a new boy was taken into service—a rough untrained little fellow, I think from the poor-house. To him the promoted boy discoursed quite condescendingly: you hev got into a pretty nice place, I tell you; and if you behave they'll use you well, give you plenty of good victuals, a suit of Sunday clothes, winter schoolin', and not work you tew hard. But one thing—you'll have to go on errands to the minister's pretty often, and lug big baskets of things; and the worst of it is that you'll never get nothing but thanks from the parson and his folks—not so much as a shillin' for your pains."

Johnny heard and pondered; and it happened that the very next morning he was sent to the ministers with a heavy quarter of veal, about as much as he could carry. The way was long and the weather was warm, and when he reached the parsonage he was not in the sweetest of tempers. He marched into the breakfast-room, without knocking or removing his hat; and, setting down his basket, said, rather gruffly: "Mr. Gay, Mr. Brown has sent you this here quarter of veal."

"Ah! indeed," said the minister blandly, 'I am obliged to him. Are you Mr. Brown's new boy?"

"Yes."

"Well, my lad, when you have been in his family a while longer, your manners will doubtless improve."

"Why, what's the matter with my manners?" asked the boy with stupid astonishment.

"Why, my son, they are a little abrupt and discourteous. Now your way of presenting Mr. Brown's present was not just what it should have been. I think I can show you, so that you will know just how to do next time. I will personate you, and you may pretend you are me, for a few minutes."

Saying this, the minister took up the basket, went with it into the entry and closed the door. Then he knocked gently.

The boy, having seated himself in the minister's chair, and put on a grave and reverent aspect, called out "Come in."

Entering very quietly and deferentially, though with difficulty preserving his gravity, holding his hat in one hand and the basket in the other, the minister approached his small proxy, and said, with a low bow: "Mr. Brown sends his compliments, and begs you will accept this quarter of veal, Mr. Gay."

"I am very much obliged to Mr. Brown, and to you, too, my fine boy," said Johnny, with the air of the utmost seriousness; "but it seems to me it's a big load for so small a lad to carry. Just take it into the kitchen, and ask Mrs. Gay to give you a quarter of a dollar."

Nobody ever enjoyed this story more than Mr. Gay himself; except, perhaps, Mrs. Gay, who promptly paid over the quarter to the clever little actor.

He ought to have made a great lawyer. Perhaps he did, and ended his days on the bench.

Our Revolutionary Sires.

Alexander Hamilton was hardly of age when he began to play his part in the awful drama of the Revolution, being only 20 when he was taken into the family of the Commander in-Chief, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel; Benjamin Franklin was 50 before he began to be heard of; Samuel Adams, 44; James Otis, 38; John Adams, 35; Josiah Quincy, 40; John Hancock, 38; and Thomas Jefferson 32, before they were greatly distinguished. And so with all actors of that age. They were full grown men—workingmen—ripened with toil and strengthened by long habits of endurance and self-dependence. Washington was a surveyor and in after life a farmer. ("Expressive silence muse his praise!") Knox was a book binder and stationer. Morgan (he of the Cowpens) was a drover—Tarlton got from him a lecture on that subject. Green was a blacksmith and withal a Quaker, albeit through all his southern campaigns, and particularly at the Eutaw Springs, he put off the outward man. Arnold—I ask pardon for naming him in such company—was a grocer and provision store keeper in New Haven, where his sign is still to be seen—the same that decorated his shop door before the revolution. Gates, who opened Burgoyne's eye to the fact that he could not "march through the United States with 5,000 men," was a "regular built soldier," but after the revolution a farmer. Warren, the martyr of Bunker Hill, was a physician, and hesitated not to exhibit to his countrymen a splendid example of the manner in which American physicians should practice when called on by their country. Marion, the "Old Swamp Fox" of the South, was a cow boy. Sumter, the "fighting cock" of South Carolina, was a shepherd's boy. Let it be forever remembered that the men of the revolution were working men, those of New England especially. Green (as we have stated) was a blacksmith; Franklin a printer; Roger Sherman a shoemaker, and Putnam, Stark and Allen were farmers; not a man of them all above his business or ashamed of his calling.

"They were tinkers. and tailors, and cobblers—what then
Were they not patriots? Were they not men?

An Eastern Story.

The following beautiful story is worthy to be laid up in the memory of every one:

A poor Arab traveling in the desert met with a spring of clear, sparkling water.

Used as he was only to brackish wells, such water as this appeared to his simple mind worthy of a monarch, and filling his leathern bottle from the spring, he determined to go and present it to the caliph himself.

The poor man traveled a long way till he reached the presence of his sovereign, and laid his humble offering at his feet. The caliph did not despise the little gift brought to him with so much trouble. He ordered some of the water to be poured into a cup, drank it, and thanking the Arab with a smile, ordered him to be presented with a reward. The courtiers around pressed forward, eager to taste of the wonderful water, but, to the surprise of all, the caliph forbade them to touch a single drop.

After the poor man had quitted the royal presence with a light and joyful heart, the caliph turned to his courtiers and thus explained his conduct:

"During the travels of the Arab," said he, "the water in his leathern bottle became impure and distasteful. But it was an offering of love, and as such I have received it with pleasure. But I well know that had I suffered another to partake of it, he would not have concealed his disgust, and therefore, I forbade you to touch the draught, lest the poor man's heart should have been wounded."

The act of the caliph was worthy of a Christian gentleman. Read the story over again, think about it, and try to remember it when you see some one more simple minded than you are expose his ignorance while trying to do you a service.

If you laugh and make sport as the courtiers would have done, you show yourself to be no gentleman. The truly great are kind to the humblest. It is the mean man who treats the lowly with contempt.

Eyesight.

Milton's blindness was the result of overwork and dyspepsia.

One of the most eminent American divines has for some time been obliged to forego the pleasure of reading, has spent some thousands of dollars in vain, and lost years of time, in consequence of getting up several hours before day and studying by artificial light. His eyes will never get well.

Multidudes of men and women have made their eyes weak for life, by the too free use of the eyesight in reading small print and doing fine sewing.

In view of these things, it is well to observe the following rules in the use of the eyes:

Avoid sudden changes from light to darkness.

Never begin to read, or write, or sew, for several minutes after coming from darkness to a bright light.

Never read by twilight or moonlight, or of a very cloudy day.

Never read or sew directly in front of the light, or window, or door.

It is best to have the light fall from above, obliquely over the left shoulder.

Never sleep so that on first awakening, the eyes shall open on the light of a window.

Do not use the eyesight by light so scant that it requires an effort to discriminate.

Too much light creates a glare, and pains and confuses the sight.

The moment you are sensible of an effort to distinguish, that moment cease, and take a walk or ride.

As the sky is blue and the earth green, it would seem that the ceiling should be of a bluish tinge, and the carpet green, and the walls of some mellow tint.

The moment you are instinctively prompted to rub the eyes, that moment cease using them.

If the eyelids are glued together on waking up, do not forcibly open them; but apply the saliva with the finger—it is the speediest dilutent in the world—then wash eyes and face in cool water.—Water-Cure Journal.

The Broken Horseshoe.

On a summer day, a farmer was going to town with his little boy, whose name was Thomas; and, as they were passing along the road, he saw a piece of a broken horse-shoe on the ground. He told Thomas that he might pick it up and put it in his pocket, but Thomas thought it was of no value, and said he did not think it worth the trouble of stooping to pick up a piece of old iron. The father said no more at the time, but quietly picked up the fragment of a horse-shoe, and thrust it into his pocket; and they walked on. When they came to a village which was on the way, he sold the piece of iron for three pennies, and with the money he bought some cherries. Then, they passed along the road, and as the day advanced, it became very warm. Thomas began to feel thirsty, and, when he looked around, he saw no house, no cool shady grove, nor any spring of water. He felt weary and almost overcome by the heat. He could, with difficulty, keep up with his father; and he began to lag behind. Then his father, as if it were by accident, let fall a cherry. Thomas snatched it as eagerly as if it had been a ball of gold, and thrust it into his mouth. When his father had gone on a few steps, he let another cherry fall, and Thomas again quickly picked it up, and ate it with as much gratification as he did the first one. The father still went on, at every few paces dropping a cherry, and little Thomas followed him, picking up and eating the cherries until all had been picked up and eaten. The father then turned to Thomas, smiling, and said: "Now, see; if you had stooped once and picked up the piece of a broken horse-shoe, you would not have had to stoop a hundred times for the cherries!"

Sometimes, when a little boy neglects to do some easy thing, which he is told to do, he makes for himself a great deal of work.

An Oriental Table-Cloth.

About four in the afternoon we reached the station of Stoora, tired and hungry, where we descended to make, as we hoped, a good dinner. For many hours we had been comforting ourselves with the prospect of this meal, to cheer us after so much tribulation; but one glance at the repast spread before us dissolved these fond expectations, and we sat mournfully down, resolved to accept our fate, and comforting ourselves with the reflection that every one in this life is doomed to eat a peck of dirt, and concluded that it was as well to take the whole amount at once as to consume it in detached portions. As we were sitting down, a lady of our party remarked that she strongly suspected our table-cloth to be a sheet. Of course we hoped that she was deceived; but afterwards I had undoubted proof that she was right—for on my return to Beyrout, a few days later, we had occasion to spend the night at Stoora, when the article in question did duty on my bed, and in the morning performed its daily function. This appetizing discovery caused us to believe that our host was an Italian, which proved to be the case; and we sent for him with the intention of venting our wrath upon his devoted head. But the moment his dirty, yet benign face appeared in the door, we abandoned our resolution, and turned the matter off by making inquiries in regard to the possibility of finding horses at his station to take us to Baalbek in a few days.—From "Ramblings in the Orient," in Western Monthly for June.

The Druid Lodges of the State of Wisconsin propose establishing mutual life insurance companies.

The distance between Promontory and Omaha is 1,083 miles, and passenger trains are now running it in less than sixty hours.

From the State Journal.

Railroads in the United States.

The importance of railroad facilities in the United States is perhaps better appreciated now than at any former time in the history of the country. We have such an immense extent of country yet undeveloped, and the boundaries of our dominion are so widely separated that, without numerous railroads intersecting and connecting with one another, it would probably be impossible to maintain a political union between people so widely separated as are those of some of the States. The first railroad for passengers was opened in 1831, and since then the progress of railroad building has been as follows:

Year.	Miles.	Year.	Miles.
1831	23	1855	18,374
1837	1,373	1860	30,630
1840	2,818	1865	35,080
1845	4,633	1867	39,270
1850	9,020	1868	42,250

It is estimated that at the present time over forty-three thousand miles of railroad are in actual operation. Pennsylvania leads all the States, having four thousand and four hundred miles; Illinois ranks second; and Ohio and New York, which have nearly the same number of miles, come next. The following table gives those States that have over 1,000 miles of railroad:

	Miles.		Miles.
Pennsylvania	4400	Missouri	1400
Illinois	3450	Virginia	1480
Ohio	3400	Tennessee	1440
New York	3400	Wisconsin	1250
Indiana	2600	Michigan	1200
Iowa	1550	North Carolina	1100
Georgia	1580	South Carolina	1090
Massachusetts	1450

The amounts of capital invested in these roads is of course immense, and a comparison between them and the banks will show the importance of the railroad interests:

Banks, National, 1630; capital 1869	$426,000,000
Banks, State 240; "	67,000,000
Total, United States	$493,000,000
Railroad, 43,000 miles in operation in the United States, cost	$1,870,000,000

The earnings of the banks may be estimated at from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000, or from 10 to 12 per cent. on their capital, while the earnings of the railroads in the United States amounted to $400,000,000, as follows:

From freight	$280,000,000
From passengers	120,000,000

—a sum exceeding largely the entire yearly revenue of the government.

The number of miles and the capital invested in railroads in this country, as compared with Great Britain, are very nearly as follows:

	Miles.	Cost.
United States	43,000	$1,870,000,000
Great Britain	14,500	2,510,000,000

According to the most reliable information on the subject, there are in the whole of Europe about 56,700 miles of railroad, which cost about $7,500,000,000.

The increase in the number of miles of railroad constructed in the United States at different periods, presents some interesting figures.

From 1840 to 1850 the increase was over two hundred per cent.; from 1850 to 1860 the increase was about in the same ratio; from 1860 to 1870 it is estimated that the increase will be about fifty per cent., or from 30,000 miles in 1860 to 45,000 in 1870.

In Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, and in many others of the Western States, great exertions are being made to increase the railroad facilities for the development of internal resources; and now that the Pacific Railroad is completed, what is now a wilderness will probably soon be covered with a net-work of iron rails, which will open up the waste places of our empire for cultivation and civilization.

Died.

At Litchfield, Ill., Bro. THOMAS TILLER, in the 62d year of his age.

The deceased was an exemplary member of the church, an active member of Charter Oak Lodge No. 236, and Elliott Chapter No. 120, a good citizen, and the revered head of a family, and has left a widow, children, and many relatives to mourn his loss.

In Vermont, Fulton county, JAMES DRESBACK, a member of Vermont Lodge No. 116.

He is described in the lodge resolutions as an early pioneer in the county, a courteous neighbor, a just man, and upright Mason, and leaving behind him a widow and children.

In Pocahontas, Bond county, Ill., June 26, of consumption, Bro. HARVEY W. COLE, in the 34th year of his age.

The deceased was a member of Gordon Lodge No. 473, and was buried with Masonic honors. He leaves a widow and family. The lodge resolutions represent him as a good man and Mason, and highly endeared to the community by his many virtues.

Moneys Received for Masonic Trowel,

FROM JUNE 9TH, TO JULY 12TH, INCLUSIVE.

$1.25 each.—A. A. Beidleman, Wm. Bowman, Michael Burns, H. E. Crandell, T. J. Connelly, J. H. Eldredge, O. C. Frown, C. H. Lillibridge, A. J. Moon, J. E. McDermott, M. W. Porter, T. B. Schermerhorn, J. A. Summers, Jas. W. Weatherford.

$2. each.—W. C. Benedict, D. C. Condrey, Geo. E. Frost, John Humphrey, R. Johnson, D. C. H. Rothchild.

$3. each.—J. H. Knapp, Benj. McElroy, Julius Tower.

$4 each.—R. J. Allmond, J. H. Crocker.

$6 each.—G. N. Arnold (twice), J. Craig, E. T. Disosway.

$5 each.—J. L. Dewey, H. S. Jacob, H. G. Reynolds (for Edwards, Clarke, Stewart, and Dobbins).

$1 each.—James Eads, J. W. Goodwin, John Humphrey, J. M. Wilcox.

Other sums.—Joseph Allen, $1.10; Daniel Dustin, $8.90; J. H. Dodson, $1.30; J. B. Dailey, $1.80; P. V. Doty, $1.30; E. M. Hughes, $2.35; J. J. Rider, $5.10; J. F. Shadwell, $2.20; W. S. Vail, $1.90; G. W. Wilkins, $1.50; E. G. Hill, $2.50; C. W. Hadley, $10.

R. ORENDORFF,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Business Solicited in the State and Federal Courts.

4v8–6m*

A PIPE ORGAN FOR SALE.—I have for sale a new Church Pipe Organ, six stops, suitable for lodge use, which I will sell for $350 cash (half its value), having no use for it myself. It is a good instrument, and can be seen by calling at Room 8, 115 Madison street, Chicago, or a line addressed to W. D. ST. CLAIR, drawer 5991, Chicago, will receive immediate attention.

The Latest Sensation
The question
"Where shall I Buy Pianos and Organs?"
ANSWERED.

If you want to buy the most beautiful in style and finish; the sweetest and purest toned; the most durable and in every way the Best Instruments, then buy of

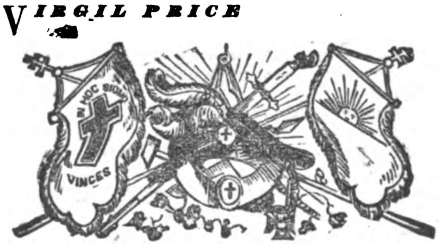
A. BOWER,
SOLE AGENT IN ILLINOIS FOR
SMITH'S AMERICAN PIANOS,
IN EIGHT STYLES,
New and beautiful, indorsed by the best men of the nation.
CARPENTER & COLEMAN'S
CELEBRATED & UNEQUALED ORGANS,
In 31 Styles, and Melodeons in 25 Styles.

Good Agents wanted. Send for terms and price-lists. Address all letters to

A. BOWER, Brimfield, Ill.

N. B.—One-tenth of the net profits given to the Sunday-School cause. 6v8-3t.

VIRGIL PRICE



MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Manufacturers of all kinds of
Masonic Materials, Swords,
BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.,
No. 144 GREENE STREET,
NEW YORK.

Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO
KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.

Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords. 1v8-1y

H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.,
25 SOUTH FIFTH ST.,
SPRINGFIELD, - - ILLINOIS,
Dealer in
Masonic Manuals of all Kinds.

MASONIC, HISTORICAL,
and
LITERARY WORKS.

DIPLOMAS,
for all
Branches of the Order.

BLANKS & BLANK BOOKS
For Every Possible Use in LODGES, CHAPTERS, COUNCILS,
and
COMMANDERIES.

ALL KINDS OF
OFFICIAL JEWELS,
OFFICIAL AND DRESS REGALIA,
FURNITURE, CHARTS,
and
PICTURES
FOR LODGES & CHAPTERS.

Knight Templar Equipments,
&c., &c., &c.

PRINTING & BINDING,
OF ALL KINDS,
DONE TO ORDER,
At as Low Rates,
AND IN AS NEAT STYLE,
as done by any
PUBLISHING HOUSE
IN THE WEST.

CATALOGUES,
Containing Prices and Descriptions, sent free, by mail, to any address.

STEREOTYPING.

I am prepared to do
STEREOTYPING
Of all kinds, at as low rates and as good style as it can be done in Chicago or St. Louis.

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, AUGUST 15, 1869. NO. 8.

Poetry.

Irish Astronony.

A veritable myth touching the constellation of O'Ryan, ignorantly and falsely spelled Orian.

BY MILES O'REILLY.

This is an ode to Irish Astronomy, explaining the true origin of the constellation of O'Ryan (Orian). It is worthy of Lever or of Sam Lover.

O'Ryan was a man of might
Whin Ireland was a nation,
But poachin' was his heart's delight
And constant occupation.
He had an ould militia gun,
And sartin sure his aim was:
He gave the keepers many a run,
And wouldn't mind the game laws.

St. Patrick wanst was passin' by
O'Ryan's little houldin',
And as the saint was wake and dhry,
He thought he'd enter bould in.
"O'Ryan," says the saint, "avick!
To praich at Thurles I'm goin',
So let me have a rasher quick,
And dhrop of Innishowen."

"No rasher will I cook for you
While better is to spare, sir,
But here's a jug of mountain dew,
And there's a rattlin' hare sir."
St. Pathrick he looked mighty sweet,
And says he, "Good luck attind you!
And when your in you're windin sheet,
It's up to heaven I'll sind you."

O'Ryan gave his pipe a whiff—
"Them tidin's is transportin';
But may I ax your saintship if
There's any kind of sportin'?"
St. Pathrick said, "A Lyon's there,
Two Bears, a Bull, and Cancer"—
"Bedad," says Mick, "the huntin's rare;
St. Pathrick, I'm your man sir."

So, to conclude my song aright,
For fear I'd tire your patience,
You'll see O'Ryan any night
Amid the constellations,
And Venus follows in his track
Till Mars grows jealous raaly,
But faith, he fears the Irish knack
Of handling the shillaly.

The Beautiful.

Walk with the Beautiful and with the Grand;
Let nothing on the earth thy feet deter;
Sorrow may lead thee weeping by the hand,
But give not all thy bosom thoughts to her:
Walk with the Beautiful.

I hear thee say, "The Beautiful! What is it?"
O, thou art darkly ignorant! Be sure
'Tis no long, weary road its form to visit;
For thou canst make it smile beside thy door:
Then love the Beautiful.

Aye, love it; 'tis a sister that will bless,
And teach thee patience when the heart is lonely;
The angels love it, for they wear its dress;
And thou art made a little lower only;
Then love the Beautiful.

Sigh for it—clasp it when 'tis in thy way!
Be its idolator, as of a maiden!
Thy parents bent to it, and more than they;
Be thou its worshiper. Another Eden
Comes with the Beautiful.

Some boast its presence in a Grecian face;
Some, on a favorite warbler of the skies;
But be not foiled; where'er thine eyes might trace,
Seeking the Beautiful, it will arise;
Then seek it every where.

The bosom is its mint; the workmen are
Thy thoughts; and they must coin for thee; believ-
The Beautiful exists in every star, [ing
Thou mak'st it so, and art thyself deceiving
If otherwise thy faith.

Thou seest Beauty in the violet's cup;
I'll teach thee miracles! Walk on this heath,
And say to the neglected flower, "Look up,
And be thou Beautiful!" If thou hast faith,
It will obey thy word.

One thing I warn thee; bow no knee to gold;
Less innocent it makes the guileless tongue;
It tusns the feelings prematurely old;
And they who keep their best affections young,
Best love the Beautiful.

Selected Story.

THE MISCHIEF-MAKING RING.

It was a comfortable room, even for the West End of London. It was not the grand drawing-room of the house; it was not the commodious dining-room, where Sir Philip's patients awaited their turn to go in to him; it was only a small, cozy apartment, with a bright fire, easy chairs, and, generally, plenty of litter. For a wonder, it was tidy now; nothing was on the centre-table save Lady Annesley's desk, at which she sat writing—a plain, pleasant woman of forty, wearing weeds yet. The late Sir Robert, a popular and successful physician, had risen in the world and got his baronetcy; but this had been his second wife.

On a low sofa, near the fire, sat an old lady, —a cheerful, nice old lady, in spite of her blindness and her eighty-four years. She would tell you, could you speak with her, that God had seen fit to take her dear son, Sir Robert, and had spared her. Upon her lap was a bag made of white linen, resembling a pillow-case, but not so long; and she was stuffing it with handfuls of paper torn into minute bits. Since she became blind she was wont to employ some of her time in tearing up waste paper, newspapers and the like, to stuff cushions. Maria Carr, Lady Annesley's niece, was at the far window, making the case for this cushion; two square pieces of white velvet, on each of which was painted an exquisite group of white flowers—Maria's doing. The cushion was intended for a present for Mary Annesley, who was on the point of marriage with Dr. Scott. She had gone out now with the late Sir Robert Annesley's ward, Georgina Livingston, who lived with them.

Mrs. Annesley looked up from her cushion and her bits of paper—if it be allowable to say that of one who has no sight; but when she spoke to people, she was in the habit of turning her face in the direction she thought they might be, as she had done before the darkness came on: "What about Charley's going to church? Is it decided?"

"Well; I suppose—" Lady Annesley stopped. The door had hastily opened, and a gentleman entered—a tall, fine man. But for the sweet smile that frequently parted his lips and lighted up his dark blue eyes, his features might have been deemed plain. And yet, ladies were apt to say that Sir Philip Annesley, being unmarried, was too attractive for a medical man.

"Is that Philip?"

"Myself, and nobody else, grandmamma;" for Sir Philip sometimes, half in sport, addressed her by the old, familiar title of his boyhood. "Who will lend me a finger?"

"A finger!" echoed Lady Annesley. "What for? Ask Maria."

Maria laid down her velvet, and came forward. Sir Philip opened a little square box, and, taking out a ring, passed it on to the third, or wedding-finger of her left hand. She stood before him, perfectly quiet in motion and bearing, but blushing to the very roots of her hair. Two thin chains of gold crossed and recrossed each other, enclosing a brilliant between each crossing—twelve brilliants in all, small, but of the first water—a jewel of rare beauty, remarkably light and elegant.

"Philip, what a beautiful ring!" uttered Lady Annesley.

"Yes; it took my fancy. Mary will like a keeper, and Scott, in his absent fashion, is sure not to think of one. Lucky, I say, if he remembers the wedding-ring. It is too large; is it not, Maria?"

"Much too large for a keeper. Mary would require another ring to keep this one on."

"I ought to have chosen the smaller one,' said Sir Phillip. "There is another, just like it, only less in size. I'll take this one back and change it."

"It must have cost a good deal?" said Lady Annesley.

"Pretty well. Forty-eight guineas."

Mrs. Annesley lifted her hands in dismay. "Oh, Philip! Forty-eight guineas for a ring! It seems next door a sin. Your father, my dear, would have looked twice at a quarter of the money before giving it."

He crossed the room, and put the keeper into her hand, bending down to her, and speaking gently. "Feel it, grandmother; it really is a beauty. I know the sum is large; but we do not give away Mary every day."

Mrs. Annesley passed her fingers over the ring, after the manner of the blind, and handed it back to him. "Philip, when do you intend to buy a wedding keeper on your own account? Ever?"

That sweet smile of his rose to his lips, and perhaps the least tinge of color to his face. "A doctor has no time to think of such things."

"No time?" returned the old lady, taking the remark literally. "I think he has as much time for it as other people. Where there's a will there's a way. Philip, do you know that you are in your thirty-fifth year?"

"And do you know also what your patients say?" put in Lady Annesley. "They say—"

"I can guess; that will do!" interrupted Sir Philip, with a laugh. "If they don't like an unmarried man, they need not come to me. Let them go elsewhere."

"Not they," said Lady Annesley, significantly. "Philip, you really ought to marry. Delay it another ten years, and your children will be growing up when you are an old man. I wish you would; it would set my mind at rest."

"At rest from what?" asked Sir Philip in a hasty and somewhat sharp tone.

"Oh, well; I am not going to explain," answered Lady Annesley. "At rest in more ways than one."

"Provided, I presume, that I married to please you," cried Sir Philip, who fully understood the by-play.

"Of course not to please me, Philip—I am nobody. To please your sisters, and to please the world."

"Terrible if I married only to please myself, would it not be, Lady Annesley?" he laughed.

He had never called her "mother"; at one time had studiously called her "Lady Annesley." Four-and-twenty years of age when his father married this, his second wife, Philip, in his inmost heart, had rebelled at the union. They all had, at first; but they learned to like her in time. The girls were married now, save Mary, who would be the last.

"It is no joking matter, Philip. What a nice rose that is in your button-hole!" continued Lady Annesley. "Where did you get it?"

"Out of Mrs. Leigh's conservatory,"—he replied, taking it from his coat—a magnificent white rose, beautiful as a camelia—"she seduced me into it just now, when I was at her house."

"Is her daughter better?"

"No, poor girl. And I fear——"

Sir Philip did not say what he feared. He was not one to speak, at home, of his patients. In the silence that supervened, a servant appeared.

"Lady Oliver, sir."

Sir Philip nodded; stood a moment or two, as if in thought; then prepared to descend.

"Will you put this up for me?" he said, giving the diamond keeper to Lady Annesley as he passed her. "I will change it when I go out. There, Maria! a present for you."

He flung the white rose into Maria's lap. She did not touch it, only let it lie there, her cheeks again growing hot. Lady Annesley knitted her brow. But it cleared as her eyes fell on the ring.

"I never did see a greater beauty!" she enthusiastically exclaimed, as she slipped it several times on and off her finger. "But what a judge Philip must have been to get it so large as this. Who is this, coming up?"

It was Charles Carr, Maria's brother, popularly known in the house as "Charley." A young lieutenant, he; gay, careless, and handsome. Often in scrapes, always in trouble; deep in debt, in "bills," in many things that he ought not to be; altogether, a gentleman who was believed to be going to the bad headlong, especially by Lady Annesley. He was her own nephew, her dead brother's son; and he came to the house, presuming upon the relationship and upon Maria's residence in it, oftener than Lady Annesley liked. A great fear was at her heart that he had grown too fond of Georgina Livingston, or that Georgina had of him—perhaps both. Her penniless nephew, who had not cross or coin to bless himself with, steal Georgina and her nine hundred a year! The world would talk then—would say that she, Lady Annesley, had planned it; and Lady Annesley was remarkably sensitive to the world's censure.

Charley glittered in, in full regimentals; one of the handsomest young fellows that had ever bowed before her Majesty at St. James. And he had no objection that somebody else should see him and think so.

"Where's Georgina?" asked he.

"Georgina's out," snappishly replied Lady Annesley. "What are you dressed up for?"

"I have just come from the Levee. Did you forget it?" he returned, taking up mechanically the little jewel-box and opening it. Charley's fingers had a trick of touching things, and he often got a rap on the knuckles for it, literally and metaphorically, from my lady. "What a splendid ring!" he uttered.

"Sir Philip's present to Mary. But it is to be changed; it is too large."

Charley put it on his little finger and turned it round admiringly; as they had all done. "A charming ring!" he repeated. "It is really beautiful."

"Do you not wish it were yours?" laughed Maria, from her distant window.

"I wish I had the cost of it," he said. "That would be of more use to me. What was it? Fifty guineas?"

"Not a bad guess," said Lady Annesley, who really liked Charley, and his good looks, and his good nature, au fond, when she could forget the fear and trouble touching Miss Georgina.

They stood together, singing praises of the ring; now she had it on—now he. Lady Annesley at length took it from him, and held it over the open box, as if taking a farewell look at it before she dropped it in.

"Oh, dear!" cried out Mrs. Annesley.

Lady Annesley hastily put the lid on, left the box on the table by Charley, and ran to her mother-in-law. The old lady had let the sack fall upon the hearth-rug, and some of the ammunition was falling out.

"Don't trouble yourself, my dear," she said, as Lady Annesley began pushing it in. "Put it on my lap again; I won't be so clumsy a second time. It is nearly full, you see."

Lady Annesley did as requested, and returned to the table. Charley, restless Charley, was then standing by Maria, and the two were whispering together. Lady Annesley took a sheet of fair white paper and wrapped up the little box, without again looking in it, lighted a wax match, and sealed it.

"Well, I must be off," cried Charles. "Shall you be at home this evening?"

"I shall," laughed grandmamma, from her place on the sofa. "I don't suppose many of the others will be out." She had not penetrated to Lady Annesley's fear; and Charley was a wonderful favorite of hers.

"Look, Maria," said Lady Annesley, as they heard Charley and his sword clattering down the stairs four at a time—"I will put it in here. If Sir Philip should come for it, you can tell him where it is."

She lifted the lid of her desk, and put in the little box. Then approached Mrs. Annesley, and took hold of her arm to lead her from the room. "We shall have no drive to-day, unless we make haste. Maria will finish that."

"It is finished, all but tacking," said the old lady; "it is as full as it ought to be. Maria, my dear, come and do it at once."

Maria carried her velvet to the sofa, and set about completing the cushion, kneeling down for convenience sake. She had got the velvet cover on to it, and was beginning to put round the gold cord and to sew on the tassels, when Sir Philip entered. He rested his arms on the back of the sofa, and looked down at her and her work,—a fair girl she, with gentle face.

"I wonder if folks would send me presents if I set up housekeeping on my own score?" cried he.

"You had better try them," said Maria. But she spoke the words without thought, and felt, the moment they had left her lips, that she had rather have bitten out her tongue than uttered them.

"But the flitting from the house for all of you, what a trouble it would be!" returned he, in a tone of much remonstrance. "I don't know that every one of you would have to go, though," he continued, while the too-conscious crimson dyed her face, and she played nervously with the gold cord.

"Certainly not, if Lady Annesley had her way," he resumed. Maria, astonished at the words, glanced at him in amazement. "Don't you see it all, Maria?"

"See what!" she exclaimed.

"Nay, I shall not tell you. So much the better if you have not seen it. I thought it had been patent to the house. My vanity may be in error, after all."

"What do you mean, Sir Philip?"

He was gazing hard at her with his deep blue eyes—vain and saucy enough they were, just then. She felt completely at sea.

"Give me your opinion, Maria. If I did resolve to set up housekeeping for myself, do you think that any of you could be induced to stop and help me in it?"

Her heart beat violently; her eyes fell. The gold cord in her fingers was wreathing itself into knots. Sir Philip came round and laid his hand upon her shoulder as she knelt, making her turn her face to him.

"Because I may be asking the question some day. Do you know where Lady Annesley put the ring?"

She sprang up. She opened the desk, and gave the parcel to him, sealed as Lady Annesley had left it. He slipped it into his waistcoat pocket, and went down to his brougham, and drove off.

In less than twenty minutes he was back again, and came flying up the stairs as fast as Charley Carr had flown down them.

"A pretty simpleton you made of me, Maria! —giving me an empty box!"

"An empty box!" she echoed.

He took the box out of his pocket, and held it open before her.

"I told the man I had brought back the ring to exchange it for the smaller one, opened the box, all gingerly, to hand it to him, and behold! there was nothing in it."

"Did you drop it in the brougham? Did you open it in the brougham?" she reiterated.

"I never touched it after you saw me put it in my pocket, until I was in the shop. I unsealed the paper before the shopman's eyes."

"Then where can it be!" exclaimed Maria. "Lady Annesley certainly sealed it up, and put it, herself, in the desk, ready for you. No one went near the desk afterwards; no one came into the room, or was in the room, but myself."

"Lady Annesley must have sealed up an empty box, that's clear," said Sir Philip. "I have brought the other ring."

But Lady Annesley, when she entered, protested that she had not sealed up an empty box—that the ring was in it. And she related the details to Sir Philip, as they have been given above. The box, she said, was not out of her hand a minute altogether.

"Are you sure you put it in?—that you did not let it slip aside?" questioned Sir Philip.

"Sure!" repeated Lady Annesley, half inclined to resent the implied suggestion of carelessness; "I am quite sure. And, had the ring slipped aside, it would only have gone on to the table. I put it in safely, and shut it in."

"Who was in the room besides yourselves?" asked Sir Philip.

"Only Charley Carr. He was standing by me, wishing that the ring were his."

"No," cried out Mrs. Annesley, innocently; "wishing its value in money was his! The more sensible of the two."

A wild, sickening sensation darted to Maria Carr's brain. It was not yet a suspicion; it was a fear lest suspicion should come; nay, a foreboding that it was coming.

The suspicion did come; came immediately, to all of them. In vain Sir Philip suggested that Charles must have done it in a joke, to put Lady Annesley in a fright, for he was as full of tricks as a monkey—that he would bring it back with him in the evening. That he had taken the ring from the box there was no doubt whatever; and Lady Annesley, in her anger, refused to be soothed.

She attacked Charles the moment he made his appearance. "Where's that keeper?" she sternly demanded, without circumlocution.

"What keeper?" returned Charles.

"The brilliant keeper, that you made off with to-day."

"I don't know what you mean, aunt."

Lady Annesley flew into a rage. "I left the box close to your hands when I turned to pick up the cushion for Mrs. Annesley. How dared you take the ring out?"

"Let's see whether I have got it about me," retorted Charley, in a careless, indifferent, provoking manner, as he made a show of feeling in all his pockets. "Oh, I must have left it in my regimentals."

Lady Annesley nearly boiled over. Words led to words; Charles grew angry in his turn, and at length she gave a hint that he must have stolen the ring. He declared he had not touched the box, or the ring; that he had turned from the table when Lady Annesley did, and remained talking to Maria while the cushion was being picked up; and he swore to this with sundry unorthodox words, forgetting that he was not in quarters, but in a lady's drawing-room.

"If nobody takes his part, I will!" hotly cried Georgina Livingston, after Charles had dashed away from the house, promising that he'd never enter it again; and her countenance was distressed, and her cheeks were scarlet as she said it. "Steal a ring! You may just as well accuse me, Lady Annesley, as accuse him; I should be the more likely of the two to do it."

"Do, pray, recollect yourself, Georgina!" remonstrated my lady. "Is this avowal seemly for a young girl?"

"I don't care whether it's seemly or unseemly," responded Georgina, dashing away some tears. "You ought to be ashamed of yourselves, all of you! Because Charley happens not to be made of money, you turn against him, and think he'd take it. I'll let him know that I don't."

Hot words, hotly spoken. A few days after, and even Georgina was obliged to judge him less leniently. Sir Philip chose quietly to investigate the suspicion; and he ascertained that Charles had, the very evening subsequent to the loss of the ring, and the following day, paid sundry small debts for which he had long been dunned. Twenty pounds, at least, of these payments were traced, and then Sir Philip dropped the search. Why pursue it? It was all too clear, for Charles had no resources of his own to draw upon.

But here Maria stepped in to his defence. She protested with earnestness, with tears, that she had furnished him herself with twenty pounds; that she had given it to him in that moment when they were whispering together. She knew Charles' wants, she said, and had been saving this money up for him. Lady Annesley flatly contradicted Maria. It did not stand to reason, she contended, that Maria, with her poor means, could save up twenty pounds, or even ten. The thing was almost against possiblity; and Maria fell under nearly as great a ban as her brother, for attempting to screen him by falsehood. There were moments when, in her own sick heart, Maria did believe him to be guilty. Such things have been heard of in the world—done in the recklessness of necessity.

* * * * * * *

A twelvemonth passed away—and a twelvemonth brings changes. Georgina Livingston was of age now, and at liberty to choose her own residence. She was alone in the drawing room one April evening. Mrs. Annesley was much confined to her chamber, and Lady Annesley had gone up to her. Sir Philip came in.

"Alone, Georgina! Why! what is the matter?—crying?"

"Oh, Lady Annesley set me on!" was the young lady's pettish rejoinder, as she brushed the tears away. She was angry with me for 'moping,' as she called it; and I told her I would not stay here to be grumbled at."

"Why do you mope?" he asked.

"Because I choose," was the wilful retort. "I can leave now, if I like, you know, Philip."

"If you like—yes," assented Sir Philip. "Where would you go?"

"I don't know, and I don't much care," dreamily responded Georgina.

"Would you like to remain in the house for good?" resumed Sir Philip, after a pause. "I was thinking of asking you to do so."

A faint blush rose to her face, but she showed no other emotion; and his tone, considering the momentous words, was wonderfully calm. Perhaps both had been conscious for some little time that these words would be spoken. Sir Philip bent his head towards her.

"The world has reproached me with not marrying. Help me, Georgina, to put the reproach away! There is no one I would ask to be my wife but you."

"Look here, Philip!" she exclaimed, pushing back her hair, and turning her face, full of its own eager excitement, towards him—excitement not caused by him. "I'll speak out the truth to you; I could not to every one; but you are good, and true, and noble. Were I to say to you 'Yes,' and let you take me believing that I loved you, I should just be acting a lie. I loved some one else; I am trying to forget him with my whole heart and might—but I did love him."

"Who was this?"

"Charles Carr."

Sir Philip's blue eyes flashed with a peculiar light, and he looked into the fire—not at Georgina.

"That love ought to end," he said. "It can bring you no good."

"Don't I tell you that it has ended—that I am putting it from me as fast as ever I can? But the remembrance cannot go all at once. I did love him; and I believe it was your generosity, in hushing up his dreadful disgrace, instead of proclaiming it and prosecuting him, that first made me like you more than common."

"You acknowledge, then, that you do like me?" smiled Sir Philip.

"Very—very much."

"Well enough to take me for better and for worse?"

"Yes; if, after this confession, you would still wish it."

"I do," he answered, drawing her to him, and taking his first kiss from her lips. Georgina flew to her room, and there burst into a flood of tears.

Lady Annesley was strangely elated at the news. She had hoped for it in her inmost heart—long and long.

"You have done well, Philip," she said to her step-son.

"I shall escape the worrying about not getting married, at any rate," responded Sir Philip.

"Philip"—lowering her voice confidentially—"do you know, I frightened myself to death, at one time, lest you should marry Maria. I fancied you were growing attached to her; and people would have said I set it on."

The red color flashed into Sir Philip's face. "I should have married her, but for that affair of the diamond keeper."

Lady Annesley looked blank. "Did you like her so much as that?"

"Like her!" he echoed, in emotion, "I loved her. I am not sure but I love her still. Why, Lady Annesley, I all but asked her to be my wife the very afternoon that wretched boy did the mischief."

"I'm sure I am very glad he did do it, if it prevented that," retorted my lady.

"I might have got over that; his fault; but I could not get over Maria's. To uphold him in his deceit—to invent a falsehood to screen him—how could I make her my wife?"

"Whatever is there about Maria to like?" fretfully interrupted Lady Annesley.

"She's more likeable than any one in this world, to my thinking——"

"Hush, Philip."

The news of the engagement went forth to the house. Maria had still remained in it, making herself useful, as she had done before, especially to Mrs. Annesley, for she had no other home. Better she had quitted it; to see Sir Philip daily was not the way to cure her love for him.

"I hope you will be happy, Sir Philip; I wish you every happiness," she stammered, believing it incumbent on her to say something to him to that effect. But Sir Philip observed that her face turned ghastly with emotion as she spoke.

"Thank you; I hope we shall be," he coldly replied; and, since that unhappy episode, he had never spoken to her but coldly. "Georgina Livingston possesses one great essential towards making herself and others happy—truth."

The preparations for the wedding went briskly on. Lady Annesley would first move into another residence. No change had been made since Sir Robert's death, but Sir Philip must have his house to himself now. One evening Sir Philip was spending an hour with Dr. Scott. A navy surgeon was also there—Mr. Blake, once their chum at Bartholomew's; and Georgina was sitting upstairs with Mary Scott and her baby.

"Is smoking allowed here?" asked the surgeon—glancing at the elegant sofa on which he sat, where was displayed that beautiful cushion painted by Maria Carr—"I'm half dead without my pipe."

Receiving assent, he lighted it, and then walked across the room to Sir Philip and the doctor, who stood at the window. There was some disturbance in the street, and they all three remained there chatting and looking out.

Suddenly a burst of light shot up in the twilight of the room, and they wheeled round in consternation. A blaze was ascending from the velvet cushion. They caught up the hearth-rug and succeeded in putting out the fire. Georgina Livingston, hearing the commotion, came in with a white face.

In lighting his pipe, Mr. Blake must have suffered a spark to fall upon the cushion. There it had smouldered, penetrating at length to the stuffing, which then blazed up. You may remember that it consisted of paper.

"Oh, that lovely cushion!" lamented Georgina.

"What's this?" uttered Dr. Scott, picking up something brignt and glistening from the ashes. "If I don't believe it's a ring!"

A ring it was. The lost, the beautiful, the brilliant keeper! The eyes of Sir Philip and Georgina met.

Maria was that same evening sitting alone; she and her breaking heart. It had felt breaking ever since that cloud fell upon it. She heard Sir Philip come home—and she began gathering her work together.

"Don't run away, Maria; I have something to tell you!"

She looked at him in wonderment. His voice wore the same loving tone as in days gone by; a tone long past for her.

"Lend me your hand, Maria!" And, without waiting for assent, he took it in his, the left hand, and slipped upon the third finger, as he had done once before, the diamond keeper. "Do you recognize it?"

"It is Mrs. Scott's," replied Maria. "Why have you brought it here Sir Philip?"

"It is not Mrs. Scott's; it is larger than hers. Do not remove it, Maria. It shall be your own keeper, if you will let me add the wedding-ring."

Confused, bewildered, wondering what it meant, wondering at the strangely loving expression that gleamed on her from his dark blue eyes, she burst into tears. Was he saying this to mock her?

No; not to mock her. No! Sir Philip wound his arms round her as he told the tale; he drew her face to his breast, his eyelashes glistening in the intensity of his emotion. "I can never let you go again, my darling! I do not ask your forgiveness; I know that you will give it me unasked, for you and I have been alike miserable."

"Charley innocent!—been innocent all this while?" she gasped.

"He has, in good truth! We must try and make it up to him. I——"

"Oh, Philip!" she interrupted, with streaming eyes; "you will believe me now! I did give him the twenty pounds. I did indeed! I had saved in so many trifles; I had made old gowns look like new ones; all for him. You should not have doubted me, if the rest did."

"My whole life shall atone to you, Maria," he softly whispered. "Georgina——"

She broke from him, her cheeks flushing crimson. In the moment's bewilderment she had totally forgotten his engagement to Georgina. He laughed merrily, his eyes dancing, and drew her back again.

"Never fear that I am about to turn Mormon, and marry you both! Georgina has given me up, Maria. In the excitement caused by the discovery, she spoke her mind out to me, that she did not like me, with all her 'trying,' half as well as she did Charley Carr, and that none but Charley should be her husband. Scott has gone to tell Charles the news, and bring him up. If——"

"What on earth is this?" ejaculated Lady Annesley, as she came in and stood like one petrified.

"It's this," replied Sir Philip, holding out Maria's hand, on which shone the brilliant keeper. "This mischief-making ring has turned up again. When you held it that day over the open box, and Mrs. Annesley called out, there can be no doubt that you, in the hurry, unconsciously slipped it on your finger, instead of into the box, and lost it off your finger again immediately amidst the paper stuffing. The cushion has, fortunately, just given up its prey."

Lady Annesley sank upon the first seat, with a very crest-fallen expression. "I never heard of such a thing!" she stammered. "My finger! Whatever will be the consequence? Poor Charley!"

"The consequence, I expect, will be that we will have two weddings instead of one," laughed Sir Philip. "Georgina has proclaimed her intentions, and I don't suppose Charley will bear malice. I think I ought to have given the ring to him as a memento, instead of to Maria."

"To Maria!" irascibly returned Lady Annesley, not precisely understanding, but not feeling comfortable. "What in the world need is there to give it to her, Sir Philip?"

"Great need," he replied, his tone becoming serious. "But it is given with a condition attached to it—that I add one of plain gold. Ah! Lady Annesley, we can not be false to ourselves, try as we will. Maria has remained my best and dearest love up to this hour, cajole and deceive my heart as I would. And now, I trust, she will remain so, so long as time shall last!"

◆

Too Unwell.

We were absent several days last week and came home sick, and were not able for several days to write or dictate. Hence the delay in getting out the paper, and the non-appearance of several valuable articles and contributions, and several notices and minor matters, which should be in this number.

Communications.

PHILADELPHIA, July 1, 1869.

DEAR BRO. REYNOLDS—THE TROWEL of June 15th is received. For the kind and fraternal notice of the Mason's Home Book, please accept my thanks. There are two observations which seem to need an explanation. The first is, you remark, "Years ago Bro. Leon Hyneman, of Philadelphia, published the Mirror and Keystone. For some reason it ceased." The reason, although stated at the time, I will here reiterate. In the spring of 1860, my health was impaired, and the best medical advise insisted that if I wished to retain my sight and prolong my life, I must retire from all pursuits, and give rest to my intellectual faculties. I would not discontinue my publication after the volume had commenced, and continued at my post until I was obliged to employ an amanuensis. Such being the case that I could no longer employ my pen, I dictated an editorial notice that the publication of the Masonic Mirror and Keystone would be discontinued at the close of the year. The notice will be found on page 571, vol. 9. I deemed it my duty as a man and Freemason to give such notice, for the reason that great impositions had been practiced upon the Fraternity by Masons (some of high standing) entering the field of serial publication, and, after having given birth to their bantlings with high-sounding salutatories and much joy to themselves, the infant bantlings in a brief time expired, without giving a sign, much to the disappointment and mortification of those who had paid their subscriptions in advance. To that editorial notice I invite the attention of the Masonic press, as well as the Craft in general, as embracing mutual obligations equally upon the subscribers and publishers.

The second observation is in relation to the address introductory to the Mason's Home Book. "To the Craft universal," which you say "to our mind develops a purpose not expressed." Bro. Reynolds will admit that there are many absurdities, inconsistencies, and contradictions in Masonic teachings in the various jurisdictions; that there is no uniform understanding as to the ancient landmarks, ancient usages, and ancient charges; that interpolations, innovations, and changes have been made in the ritualistic teachings, even in our day; that fundamental principles are ignored, and the elements of discord introduced into the MaMasonic temple which, if not resisted, will ultimately change every characteristic of our noble, benevolent, and beneficent Institution, of which this inharmony prevailing to some extent is evidence, and the indifference of the masses to seek for "more light," to acquire a knowledge of the principles of Masonic science, is prophetically indicative.

The purpose of the Mason's Home Book, if not expressed clearly, is to show, according to the best sources at my command, how these innovations, interpolations, inconsistencies, and absurdities were introduced and incorporated into the Masonic system, after the basis has been laid with some reprints of Oliver, the 1738 Constitutions of the Grand Lodge of England, Dermott's "Ahiman Rezon," Preston's "Illustrations," &c. In the reviews of these authors, the Masonic writers of the past and present century will not be overlooked. That there are errors and falsifications of Masonic history, false traditions, symbols, and illustrations incorporated into the body of Masonic teachings, will not be questioned by any intelligent investigating Freemason, nor that they are inconsistent with the original principles and the high and holy aims of the Masonic Institution. To project a new theory is not the intention. The symbolic work can be traced clearly and definitely to the beginning of the present century, and which accords in the main with that of the first third of the last century. It will occupy too much of your valuable space to elaborate in detail. I will therefore close with the remark that, although much of that which has been written on the subject of Masonry in recent times is the merest trash, there are many scintillations from the brains and pens of others which show conclusively a clearer comprehension of the primal principles upon which the structure of Freemasonry is based. Truth is the grand object to be attained, and that should be the aim of every lover of the human kind—of every member of our time-honored Order.

The 1723 and 1738 Constitutions of the Grand Lodge of England and Dermott's Ahiman Rezon are, in a historical and Masonic point of view, works of the greatest importance, and no one can claim to be an intelligent Freemason without a knowledge of these publications. These will be reprinted in the Mason's Home Book, because they are inaccessible to the great body of the members of the Fraternity. By comparing the "Ancient Charges" of the 1723 and 1738 Constitutions of the Grand Lodge of England, it will be seen there is a difference. Dermott copied the 1738 Ancient Charges, and because Bro. Mitchell had no copy of the 1738 Constitutions, as he admitted, he denounces him as an impostor. The Mason's Home Book will make this all clear.

LEON HYNEMAN.

◆

Mr. David Stiles.

We have received several photographs—large size—to sell for the benefit of the aged veteran whose biographical notice is given below—price $1. We hope our brethren will order them speedily. We and others sell them without any commission.

Mr. David Stiles was born in Woodbury, Litchfield county, Conn., May 21, 1766, and is, therefore, a little over 103 years old. Mr. Stiles followed, or rather led, the advance of civilization westward to the Mississippi, having located at Hazel Green, in Grant county, Wis., in 1839. He now lives at Prescott, Wis.

His Masonic history is alike interesting and honorable to him. He has been a Master Mason 72 years, and a Royal Arch Mason 70 years, and is no doubt the oldest Mason in the world. He was made a Mason at Toronto, Canada West, December 27, 1779, when Wm. Jarvis was Grand Master of Canada. The lodge at Toronto was No. 16 of that jurisdiction.

He has assisted in forming very many new lodges, and is now a member of Hazel Lodge No. 43, of this State.

He is not like to many—a Mason merely in name—a rough Ashler—but he has been a devoted student of its teachings and a faithful follower of its precepts. His memory holds intact its lectures, and he is truly a polished stone, fit for the Master's use.

With his naturally genial and cheerful disposition, sweetened by piety and strengthened by faith, with the companions of youth and the friends of middle age all gone before him, he stands on the far outstretching point of Time, waiting for the Master's beck to cross the narrow space which keeps him from the "other side."

May the call be gentle when it comes, and the answer ready and willing.

C. P. SARGENT, Prescott, Wis.

A Sad Story of Suffering.

The adage that "Truth is stranger than fiction" is strongly exemplified in a case that has lately been brought under the notice of the W. Matron of Alpha Chapter No. 1, Order of the Eastern Star, the history of which is filled with all the thrilling incidents of a romance, and details a story of suffering scarcely equaled in many of the exciting tales of fiction that grace our sensation periodicals.

On the 19th of November, 1867, the steamship "Bristol" left the port of Liverpool for New York, with all the prospects of a pleasant voyage. The Captain—whose name can be easily ascertained from those now so intimately conversant with the whole of the sad history—was a Mason, and had attained some degree of eminence in the Craft. Hope painted for him a cheerful voyage, for he had with him on board his wife and little son, and as the season was likely to betoken a calm and steady sea, he had no thought of danger either for himself or those he loved better than his life. The vessel steamed out of the Mersey in gallant style, and was soon ploughing its way through the waters of the Irish Channel. When the sun went down that evening, it was with all signs of fair weather for the coming day, and to the well-trained sailor who commanded the vessel, the coming of night brought no thought of danger or trouble.

The gallant Captain was, however, destined never to see another sunrise. During the night, while the steamship was ploughing her way southward through the channel, when twelve miles off the coast of Wales, the vessel sprang a leak which was far too formidable to be controlled, and the waters soon became the master instead of the servant of the brave seafarer. In vain he endeavored to check the rising water in the hold; in vain his crew tried to find the place through which it flowed; the limpid element had gained the upper hand of the vessel, and its fate was fixed.

Finding that he had lost all control over the steamship, the husband and father turned his attention to his wife and little son, who were calmly sleeping in the cabin, all unconscious of the terrible peril which threatened them. Ordering out the life-boat, he aroused his wife, told her of the danger, and removed her with the child to the boat, which he placed in charge of the mate, who was also a Mason. As they went over the side, he said to his chief officer, "Take care of my wife and child, whatever may be my fate," and then the slight bark was cut adrift, so that it might not be engulfed in the whirlpool of the sinking ship. Having seen them as he supposed safe, the Captain then turned his attention to the duties of his office as commander of the steamship. He ordered the crew to take to the boats, together with all on board, having resolved after he had seen every human being safely out of the vessel, and that nothing more could be done for the steamship itself, to secure himself to a life preserver, jump into the sea, and swim to one of the boats.

Gradually this life boat, in which was the half naked wife and mother, pulled away from the sinking ship, the eyes of the Captain's wife intently fixed on the form of her husband, who could be distinctly seen moving about rapidly on the deck. She saw the noble vessel sinking lower and lower, and her agonized brain was almost seared with the dread lest the man she so fondly loved should not leave the vessel in time to escape. In a short time her worst fears were realized. She saw him seize the life preserver when the terrible tremor of the vessel told him that the moment for the final plunge had come; she saw the steamship give that convulsive leap which precedes the sinking of a large ship; she saw her husband go down with the vessel, and after vainly attempting to save him when he rose to the surface, she lost her senses, and was taken in that condition back to Liverpool—how, she knows not, nor ever knew except by hearsay. For two months she remained in that unconscious state, only to recover and find herself reduced from comfort to comparative indigence, with three helpless children under her care.

When she had so far recovered as to be able to think upon what was best to be done for the purpose of procuring a maintenance for herself and family, she resolved to come to the United States, as here she could work, and, as she thought, be able to earn a living for herself and little ones. Among the articles saved from the wreck was her husband's Masonic clothing and papers, and these she brought with her. The company for whom her husband had worked gave her a saloon passage on one of their vessels free, and placed in her hands £150 as something to use until she could see herself fairly started. With this small sum she landed in this city, knowing no one, and at the same time unknown; yet having faith that she would be able to make her way. Unable to get employment sufficient for her necessities, the little store soon began to dwindle down, until she found it necessary to look out for her children by some other means. A friend advised her to place them in the Sailors' Snug Harbor, when she would be far more free to act; and taking this advice she secured enough influence to get the children into that institution. A brother belonging to Manhattan Lodge then procured for her a sewing machine, in the hope that by it she might earn enough to maintain herself and pay the children's board. Those who know what it is for a woman to earn her living by a sewing machine, can well appreciate the trials of one who had never before been compelled to toil for her bread. It was working life and soul out for a mere pittance, which was even begrudged after it had been earned. To add to all, she thought that her children were badly treated at the before-named institution, and she resolved to have them with her even, as she said, "if it became necessary to beg from door to door for the very bread they had to eat."

About this time, some friends advised her to go to New Jersey, where she would find rents cheaper, and where, perhaps, she could obtain more employment. Having selected a place on the meadows, at the back of Hoboken, for the purpose of living, she went down to Staten Island, and took her children out of the Sailors' Snug Harbor, as she was unable and unwilling to pay any longer for their being almost starved. When she got to the ferry on her return, she had not money enough to bring her back to this city, and the captain of the ferry boat, when he heard her story of suffering, gave her a passage free. Taking her sick child in her arms she walked, after she had reached the Jersey shore, to her selected home—if "home" it can be called. On her way she saw the sign of a drug store, and fearful that her child would die, she stepped in and asked if the proprietor could give her any medicine to save its life.

"But I have no money," she added in a piteous tone.

Attracted by the manner and language of the poor woman, the druggist asked her the cause of her present state of suffering, and she told her story in a plain and unvarnished way. She also added that her husband had been a Mason. Fortunately, the druggist was also a member of the Craft, and, instead of telling her to go about her business, as too many are apt to do with those who have no money, he sent her up stairs to his wife, gave her children food and lodging for the night, procured the services of a physician, and, when the next day came, placed in her hands a $5 bill, as a small item toward procuring food for herself and children. Not expecting such kindness from an entire stranger, the poor woman was almost as much upset with joy as she had previously been with sorrow; and when taking her leave for her new home she could hardly speak her thanks.

Her sorrows were, however, not yet over. The home she had chosen was subject to the influx of the tides, and when the river rose her miserable dwelling was under water. Her children were then down with sickness, and distress came upon her in more than one shape. She, herself, for want of proper nourishment, was sinking under the calamity, and in a short time the whole family would have perished from famine and disease. She applied to the New York Board of Relief; but as "she lived out of the State and jurisdiction," that body could not do anything for her for want of funds to be applied to such a case. Fortunately, however, for her, all Masonic hearts are not confined to jurisdictions, and the case became known to W. James Duke and W. and Rev. Stephen Merritt, Jr., both of Templar Lodge, of this city, who set about relieving temporarily her present necessities; and her half famished eyes glistened when they lighted on the food that these worthy brethren took to the sufferers. They then made the case known to W. Mrs. Johnson, Matron of Alpha Chapter, who, with Mrs. Alexander, visited the poor woman and ascertained the nature of her necessities. She was then two months in arrears for rent, and the amount was at once raised by the Sisters.

THE SEQUEL TO THE STORY.

Since the foregoing was written, a letter has been received from one of the Sisters, which, to a great extent, tells its own story:

"I called on the lady we were talking about, and went with quite a little sum of money, to assist her if possible. To my great surprise I learned that W. Bro. Duke had felt so much sympathy for her that he had married and taken her to a comfortable home in Brooklyn."

The conclusion of the story is even as pleasing as it is surprising; but we cannot help admiring the course taken by the Worshipful Brother. We have no doubt that the sufferings of this stricken family are now over, and we wish the worthy couple joy, trusting that the wife will always retain the high opinion she lately held both of Masonry and Masons.—Courier.

Anti-Secret Society at Chicago.

Neither the prayers uttered nor the remarks offered at any time, had the least tendency to recall any member of secret organizations from such a relationship, provided even, that such a tie imperiled the soul's best interests. No tender exhortation was given during the thinly attended services extending from the evening of June 8 till the evening of the 11th; no prayer was made during all that wearisome service that at all breathed an affectionate desire to save the objects of such prayer from any danger, fancied or real, but a continuous supplication that destruction might speedily overtake them, went up to the—ceiling. The entire tone of the pseudo devotional exercises was in strict harmony with the severe, denunciatory style of the men who sat upon the platform and occupied the seats of the inexpensively procured prayer meeting room of Farwell Hall.

It is not too much to say that nothing excepting Christianity suffered from the rude, boorish conduct of the leaders, some of whom have been for years seeking notoriety as reformers, but really indulging in their pugnacious propensities under the guise of benefiting the world and advancing the interests of the church.

We regret that the cause of the Master should be damaged in the estimation of those increasingly large and highly respectable bodies so malignantly assailed on this occasion. Also that that educated and cultivated religious denomination with which so many of these fanatical leaders are identified should be unfairly represented—we mean the Congregational denomination. Multitudes of her church members are connected with the Masonic, Odd-Fellow, Good-Templar, and other secret organizations, and hundreds of her clergy glory in bearing such honorable relations. Our own subscription list, as well as that of others, demonstrates this statement unqualifiedly.

One thing not noticed by any of our daily or weekly journals, so far as we are aware, should be touched on. These opposers of what they are confessedly ignorrnt, dwelt largely and perhaps effectively on the fact, if it be a fact, that Good Templars and others neglected the prayer meetings of the church in order to attend lodge. Here they waxed vehement, bordering on vindictive.

Prayer meetings neglected to attend the lodge!! This was the strongest point taken, and followed by conduct exactly the same and worse even than that which was so vehemently censured. These very ministers and lay members condemning unsparingly the neglect by others of the weekly prayer meeting for attendance upon secret society meetings themselves neglected the weekly prayer meeting to attend an anti-secret society meeting! It was well known to most of these sojourners that Wednesday evening was the evening observed by all denominations in this city as the occasion of weekly prayer, still these zealots spent the evening in attending an anti secret meeting, and while Christians of every persuasion were engaged in their social devotions, these paragons of piety performed theirs by stamping of feet, clapping of hands, boisterous laughing, and other conduct that might not be much out of the way for a saloon, but undeniably was for a prayer-meeting room and on a prayer-meeting evening.

On the whole, the influence of the meeting was decidedly adverse to Christianity, with which it was professedly identified, and to befriend which it was pretended to have been originated.

Beside the utter lack of public spirit shown on the occasion, the want, even, of ordinary hospitality shown by resident anti-secret individuals and the positive development of rudeness of behavior, stamped the men, the measures, and the occasion as unworthy of public confidence, and hence it was unanimously withheld. The next multitudinous gathering of the very great National Anti-Secret Association is to be held where even less sympathy, if possible, we apprehend will be manifested—in Cincinnati.—The Mystic Star.

Royal Arch Masonry.

The degrees of Freemasonry known as the Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason, were first instituted, and are of antiquity long anterior to the subsequent orders, and are the foundation upon which the latter were built. They are more widely diffused than the higher orders; are incorporated into every rite, and embrace those pure principles of morality which, by their practice, render men wiser and better.

The origin of Royal Arch Masonry is distinctly traced to the erection of the second temple of Jerusalem, five hundred and thirty-two years before Christ, when, in the fulfillment of prophecy, the Jews repaired from Babylon to Jerusalem to rebuild the house of the Lord which had been destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar.

The magnificent temple erected by Solomon was situated on Mount Moriah, near the place where Abraham was about to offer up his son Isaac, and where David met the destroying angel. The foundation of this temple was laid in the fourth year of the reign of Solomon, in the year of the world 2,292, and, in consequence of the wise regulations of the founder, it was completed in all its parts in little more than seven years. It was at this period the original degrees of Masonry were instituted, and so admirably were they designed that the building proceeded with the utmost regularity, and during the period in which the workmen were engaged, neither the sound of the hammer, the axe, or any other tool of iron was heard.

In the ninth year of the reign of Zedekiah, the city of Jerusalem was besieged by Nebuchadnezzar. The siege was continued with great vigor, and the city was as vigorously defended by Zedekiah, who was at length compelled to surrender in the eleventh year of his reign. Zedekiah himself was conducted in chains to Babylon, where he remained in prison until his death, his eyes, according to the barbarous practice of the times, having been previously put out. By the orders of Nebuchadnezzar, the temple, and palaces, and other sumptuous edifices, were razed to their foundations; “temples and tower went down,” leaving scarcely a wreck behind.

Fifty years after the destruction of the temple, Cyrus, who then filled the throne of Persia, being moved by the prayers of the captive Jews, issued a decree authorizing them to return to Jerusalem to rebuild the house of the Lord; at the same time he addressed a letter to the Governors of Syria, in which he informed them that he had “given leave to the Jews to return to their own country, to rebuild their city, and to rebuild the temple of God at Jerusalem on the same place it was before.”

In consequence of this decree, the Jews repaired in great numbers to Jerusalem, where they first built an altar that they might offer sacrifices according to the laws of Moses. In the following year they laid the foundation of the second temple; but they had made but little progress in the work, when they were compelled to desist by order of Artaxerxes, who was induced by the representation of the Samaritans, to issue this decree in opposition to that of his predecessors. The work was at a stand for fifteen years, when Darius Hystaspes ascended the Persian throne. In the second year of the reign of Darius, Zerubbabel, a prince of the house of Judah, proceeded at the head of a deputation of the council or Sanhedrim of Jerusalem, to the court of the Persian king; and having gained admission to his presence, he prevailed upon Darius to abrogate the decree of Artaxerxes, and permit the Jews to proceed with the work.

Zerubbabel returned to Jerusalem, and the work was recommenced, and the temple was finished and dedicated in the sixth year of the reign of Darius, or 511 years before Christ.

The degree of Royal Arch Mason is founded upon circumstances which then occurred, and upon important discoveries made, when the workmen were preparing for the foundation, and Masonic tradition with regard to those discoveries are corroborated by various passages in the sacred Scriptures.

This degree is usually divided into two sections, but, with more propriety, it may be divided into three. The first relating to the opening of the chapter; the second, relating to the circumstances connected with the siege and capture of Jerusalem, and the destruction of the temple; the third, to the building of the second temple, in the reign of Darius Hystaspes.

This degree of Masonry, when properly conferred, is one of great impressiveness and solemnity. It teaches some important truths, of which, without its aid, the world would still have been ignorant, and it inculcates many sublime principles of morality, in a manner calculated to make an indelible impression. In this, as in the preceding degrees, “every utensil of work is an impressive emblem; every ceremony causes an allusion to some historical fact; every jewel is a symbol of moral virtue, and every external ornament or appendage is a silent or faithful prompter of those graces and virtues which should adorn the inner man.”

In passing through the ceremonies of this order, the path may be rough, a true representation of the rugged path of life which we are all destined to travel; but the rough places become smooth, and crooked things straight, by the lessons of moral virtue which are sought to be inculcated.—Masonic Record.

Colors of Degrees.

The oldest Masonic writers, in the early part of the last century, applied the colors somewhat different from what is done at present. White seems to have been the color in which the candidate should be dressed, as it was the “representative of external purity and internal truth, embodied in the apron of lambskin—that animal being the personification of innocence.”

“Blue, the color of faith, represents the first degree, because it is an emblem of creation.” Purple, the color of hope, denotes the second degree, as well as the second stage of life, and the pillar of strength. It was royal, and formed the usual clothing of kings and princes. Purple was adopted as the color of a Fellow Craft, which was the highest degree acquired by the Fraternity in ancient times, and even qualified a brother for the office of Grand Master. It also referred to the middle stage of life, through which every one passes in his progress from infancy to old age, or from birth to death.”

To the third degree was assigned the Red; and the reason given for this was as follows: “Charity was represented by the crimson, or rose, which is the color of beauty, and belonged to the closing stage of human life, and the third degree of Masonry. In the spurious Freemasonry of Greece and Rome, the rose was a symbol of death and resurrection, which were imitated in the ceremonies of initiation, and it was used by our Fraternity for much the same reason. An unfailing charity is the ever-burning fire of the heart; and Freemasonry enlightens the mind of the candidate, by opening it to the influence of divine love, and instilling that degree of purity which is the chief end of Masonic regeneration.

“This combination of the three degrees of Masonry, the three colors and pillars of the lodge, with the three ages of man, will fairly place the Free and Accepted Mason, through the medium of Faith, Hope, and Charity, on his way to those celestial mansions which are veiled from mortal eye by a canopy of clouds; and if he shall continue in this effectual walk of faith, he has a promise of shining like the stars forever and ever.”

At the present time, and during the entire present century, blue has been the distinctive color of the third degree, and scarlet applied to the Royal Arch—a degree which was evolved from the third. Still the badge of either is white—a white lambskin, and is trimmed with either blue or scarlet, as it is designed for either the Master's degree or the Royal Arch. The first or second degree, as such, has now no distinctive color; blue is applied to the symbolic degrees as a whole; it is also applied to an intermediate stage in the chapter degrees, and also in some grades of the Scottish Rite.—Review.

Philadelphia.

The celebration of the Semi-Centennial Anniversary of St. John's Commandery in Philadelphia is the great Masonic event of this year. The attendance was very large from all parts of the country, and the processions and exercises were all elegant and orderly. Mayor Fox and the city authorities gave a welcome reception and constant attention to the visitors during their entire stay.

Sir Richard Vaux, Grand Master of Masons, gave the Templars and visitors a cordial welcome, which was responded to by Grand Master Gardner. The principal address was delivered by W. H. Allen; near the close, W. S. Gardner, Grand Master of Templars, addressed the audience as follows:

M. E. G. M. and Sir Knights:—The emotional nature of man, unless governed by an idealistic power, wastes itself in follies. Along the trackway of history, written or traditional, the student is spellbound by the wonderful attractiveness of those ruins which commemorate the triumphs of the emotional conjoined with the ideal. The altar of Abraham's faith at Jehovah-jireh; the pyramids devoted to science or to sepulture; Solomon's Temple, raised in obedience to the prophet and to the glory of God; the Tower of Babel, where impiety and impotence were made memorable; the Temple of Apollo at Delphos; the Parthenon of Pericles, the ruins of the Temple of the Sun at Balbec; the Coloseum; the Mausoleum; the Holy Sepulchre; St. Peter's and St. Paul's; Cloisters; Chathedrals: Castles, are witnesses, outcoming on the horizon of history, to testify to the immortality of idealistic life.

The while, aimless and purposeless enthusiasts have exhausted effort, only to develop the existence of an emotion. Eratostratus, whose fame is founded on the firing of the Temple of Diana, is the prototype of multitudes in all ages, who, lost to reason, are impelled to effort, if it is but to destroy. Iconoclasts are contemporary with the ideal and the emotional, for the passion which overthrows the typical is, by its blindness, made to exult in a supposed substantial good. Civilization is the result of rejecting as valueless whatever fails to present the ideal and the emotional in their practical harmony and utility, by which advancement in arts and science, in laws and knowledge, is attained. The lettered and unlearned alike, though in different degrees, are impressed with the mighty works of the past epochs, which express the union of these components. The pyramids, though the causality of their origin is found in the highest attainments, and while all is not known of their projected purposes, have ever awakened a suggestive inquiry into the combinations sought to be realized in their construction. The ruins which make Greece yet a shrine at which all bow, fill the mind with other thoughts than the architectural progress of ante-Christian culture. The aqueducts and viaducts of Rome are uncontradicted testimony to the union between the most refined tastes and the most practical utilities. Yet the truth and the philosophy which pre-existed those structures developed them into form. The via sacra for triumph and the Appian way for travel brought glory and gold to the Cæsars and the Consuls of the seven hilled city.

From these teachings, the present age has yet much to learn. The real and the practical, with which now the semi-instructed mind is so absorbingly occupied, are derived, be it remembered, from that conjunction of the emotional with the intellectual, from which alone comes the vitality of civilization. Separated, they are powerless for good; in union it may be said that all things are possible with them. The error to be avoided is the higher law which it is the fashion to defy as the attribute of the emotions, and which it claimed to be infallible.

These prefatory thoughts have been suggested by the ceremonies of to-day. They are both appropriate and seemly. They befit such an audience as composes this brilliant assembly. Expectation invites their more direct application to surrounding scenes and present society.

From States and cities the Masonic Order of Knights Templar has convened its members here to celebrate an epoch which these ceremonies commemorate.

The origin of Freemasonry is open to the speculations of the student. The world's wonders are its creation. The virtues, knowledge, arts and sciences of man, are its suggestive teachings. Its power, its perpetuity, and its principles, are the consequences of the perfect union of the ideal and the emotional. It has taught the faith of Abraham, the obedience of the pilgrim before the Delphic oracle, Samaritan charity, the immortality of hope, the virtue of Plato, the silence of wisdom. Freemasonry has thus exercised its prerogatives as an esoteric teacher, secluded from the gaze of the profane, and hidden from the observation of the incredulous. Its rites and ceremonies, its rights and privileges, its usefulness and its benefits are veiled, like its teachings, from the world. Its temples are the depositories of its arcana. Within their walls only can the mysteries be known. There the emotional and the ideal exist always. There, and there only, Freemasonry presents objective evidence of subjective truth.

It is not necessary to refer to the centuries between the crusade of Peter and the last of those eight efforts to redeem Palestine. It is no part of our present purpose to investigate the wrongs and evils, the crimes and consequences which blacken the history of these hundred years. Amid the effects which the worst passions, the most debased motives, excited into frenzied action undoubtedly produced, there was also to be found the noblest sentiment and the most cultivated ideal united to accomplish the teachings of a sacred duty. From Peter the Hermit to Louis of France and Edward of England, it can be demonstrated that the exalted virtues, which redeem the memory of those Sir Knights who, with cross and shield, set out for Palestine, were the very virtues which from the beginning Freemasonry taught, exemplified, practiced and proclaimed. From the sermon of Pope Urban at Clermont, to the final fall of Acre, assuredly there were evidences and examples without number of the purest emotional united with the highest intellectual, stimulating to emulation and impelling to action. It is the endeavor to rescue these Masonic virtues, to defend the effectiveness of these Masonic teachings, to bring them out from the blackness and the darkness which were produced by the mere emotional, the frenzied enthusiasm of the devotees of a blind bigotry, either sacredotal or secular, and to disengage them from doctrines of a political ambition or the wily schemes of State craft, in council, or in arms, that justly claims our present consideration.

The nine Sir Knights who organized to protect the pilgrims in their pious journeys to the Holy City, were obeying the divine lesson taught by the mystery of the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night. It was the lesson of the Israelitish safeguard through the land of the stranger. The service of succoring the sick and the wounded was taught by the Samaritan, who poured oil and wine into the stranger's wounds. The duty of feeding the hungry and bringing bread to those who famished on the way to the Holy Sepulchre, was enjoined on Joseph when he put the cup in Benjamin's sack, the sign of fraternity and recognition. The faith which taught them to devote life and zeal to the task, self-imposed undr a sentiment that the mind approved, was the faith in which Abraham built the altar, on which to immolate his son Isaac.

The love and devotion which animated them in their labor and sufferings were the same love and devotion with which the twelve tribes and the chosen people defended the Ark of the Covenant and the Law, to protect which Solomon erected his wonderful Temple. These are Masonic virtues.

From Sir Hugh de Payens to De Molay, whenever death by martyrdom was the penalty of fealty to the Order of Knights Templar, that martyrdom was accepted as Stephen did his, for God and His service.

It is the highest virtue, the strength of moral conscience, the power of excellence, the practice of moral duties in obedience to and love for God, which in all ages has been the glory of the emotional governed by the ideal. These virtues are Masonic virtues.

You, Sir Knights, are bound together by the ties of a fraternity dedicated to their teaching and devoted to their practice. You are ever on a crusade against error and wrong. Your swords are the typical weapons of a warfare ever going on against evil. You are called upon to lead the seeker after truth to the contemplation of its highest teachings, to guide the pilgrim over the obstacles in his path, to help, aid and assist him against the antagonisms which oppose, and the opinions which oppress; to bid him rest secure in faithful promises which have perpetual fulfillment. Your sign of the cross is your testimony to the mighty power of the mysterious, which from the bow on the cloud till now, has been the expression of God's law and love for man.

Most E. G. M. and Sir Knight:—You are here and now assembled, not as the founders of your Order, to succor or to suffer. You are not engaged in protecting the pilgrim to the Holy Sepulchre, through hostile lands or from the assaults of enemies. Neither are you in arms to defend your castles or your fraternity, nor claiming hospitality for need, nor in sore distress. Under an organization which was unknown to King Solomon; bearing symbols and jewels which were not coeval with the craftsmen of the Temple, you are here having all those virtues which made them glorious. You are here joined by ties that can never be sundered; bound by those esoteric mysteries that can not be known but as you have learned them; You are of the brotherhood which accepts the virtuous and the true. You are Freemasons, and have by its teachings been instructed in obedience, reverence, faith, hope, charity, and the excellence of silence, and taught to love and revere the sublime, the excellent, the illustrious and the eminent. You are welcome. With you, Sir Knights, the emotional is governed by the ideal. This perfect union has given to Freemasonry the power of preserving, cultivating, and conveying its virtues from the patriarchial age to the present time. Your vows are concentrated in the fidelity to duty. Your organization has the duty imposed upon it, of protecting and guarding the ancient mysteries of Masonry, in their pilgrimage to the Sepulchre, from whence deathless, resurgent, triumphant faith will proclaim its own revelation, to be the accepted signification of these mysteries, for all eternity. On the symbol will be written, "by this, conquer." Sir Knights, let the sign of the cross stimulate your devotion, and the sword of the cavalier typify the nobility of your service under the banner of so high a trust.

We give the closing portion of an able address by Hon. Daniel Evans, of LaSalle, at El Paso, on the 24th of June:

Our Institution also, to a thoughtful Mason, gives us what we all ought to have, a pride of ancestry. The people have no book of heraldry—no galleries where the painted faces of their forefathers look out upon them from an unremembered darkness. They have no links to bind them to the past. In England, where heraldry is a science, fed by pride and wealth, a few families only can trace their descent from the times of the conqueror. Even the blood of the Bourbons is lost in the mist of three or four centuries. In our own country, only a few genuine descendants of the passengers in the May Flower can be found. A century or two, at most, wipes out all our liens to the past. But membership of Masonry gives us a corporate immortality looking behind and before, makes us links in an interminable chain that binds the historic ages. Our interest deepens, our sympathies widen toward those who have trodden our mystic ways.

Oblivion may have swept over their names, over their places, like the deep darkness which swallows up the track of the lightning, but we have walked in their steps, they have felt what has thrilled us, and we are lifted into fellowship with them, we become their contemporaries. A great writer of the last century says that a man is great as he is able to transfer himself to what is distant in time or distant in place. How the present dominates us; with what a ruthless tyranny does each day lower over us. We cannot easily escape its empire.

If we make the attempt it is always toward the future. We may fancy what it will be, but to define to ourselves any special epoch of the past—here is the labor. Masonry lends us in no small degree this aid.

I take it that the age of chivalry with all its peculiarities, its tournaments, its knight errantry, its troubadours and palmers, its superstitions, even, that we reluctantly yield to, what is called philosophy, has been more vividly stamped upon the minds of men, or rather of this generation, than any other epoch. There are two causes of this, the inherent romance of the whole story, and the vigorous, imaginative, dramatic pen of Walter Scott. And yet, a rare vision made me conscious how imperfectly I had re-produced to myself the age of chivalry, surcharges as I had been by the graphic pages of Waverly.

In the out-of-the-way places of the old world there linger customs, habits, and superstitions of the oldest times.

Houses begrimed with the dust of three or four centuries; narrow windows crossed with strong iron bars, recalling the violences of the times in which they were built; balconies from which, if a knight errant should look forth, or under which the troubadour should touch his guitar, it would all be in admirable fitness, keep a traveler's thought constantly in the past, especially an American who has no antiquities in his own country, whose very home is most likely to have been a wilderness within his own recollection.

In such a mood, in the outskirts of a tumble down looking village, closed around with the spurs of the Pyrennees, I met a figure of the fifteenth century—I thought it at first an illusion of the twilight of the deep valley, but the sun, whether high or low, was still radiant around the treeless tops of the encircling mountains. But there it was—a real human figure of flesh and blood, stepping forth from the darkness of five centuries, with the palmer's staff, the palmer's dress, the palmer's wreath of scallop shells around the neck, and scallop shells covering the robe. My first impulse was to ask what news from the Holy Land? Is the sepulchre of the Master still in the hands of the Infidel? Have the sainted legions of the lion hearted Richard met the Saracens and rescued Jerusalem from their profane sceptre?

You may remember that Spain had in those days a kind of pocket Jerusalem within its own borders, a pilgrimage to which had been decreed to be as efficacious as the longer one to Palestine, and thousands upon thousands flocked thither in redemption of vows. In the province of Gallicia, tradition assigns the burial place of the Apostle James—and his shrine made the little village of Compostella a place of profound sanctity. The scallop shell was the badge of the pilgrim to this shrine, and before me stood face to face one of them.

I found upon inquiry that the pilgrim—for the sex was indistinguishable by the dress—was redeeming a vow to make a pilgrimage to the tomb of Santiago.

Masonry does for its members in their conception of past epochs, what the palmer did for me, in fixing in definite form the medieval times. It lifts us up out of ourselves into the distant centuries, and reproduces their life to us. In their emblems, and symbols, and ceremonies, we see how the problems of life which perplex us, perplexed them. We can not suppress the rising sentiment of a common brotherhood, we can not hide a willing sentiment of tenderness if we would.

In this rapid sketch we have seen that nations and institutions have days specially honored in their history, that when these days fall into non-observance, the life of the nation and the force of the institution are departing, that the wider celebration of this 24th day of June, betokens an increased vigor in Freemasonry. Surviving the proscription of other ages, both ecclesiastical and civil, and by gathering into its processions the best men of the land, the annointed minister bearing his divine commission, and the patriot tried on battle fields, overwhelms the bigotry that denounces us as unchristian, and the falsehood that we are hurtful to the State. We have seen that Masonry preserved the principles of natural religion when they might have been lost in surrounding fetishism; conserved the arts, and influenced for good each century of its immemorial life.

We have seen that the highest reaches of political civilization of which we can boast, the equality of men before the law as well as in making it, was the vital principle of its action and life in ages of universal despotism.

We have seen how Masons trace the existence of their Order by methods impossible to the uninitiated. We have seen that the existence of just such an institution would be the necessary development of the peculiar conditions of the race in its earliest ages, and that its appearance is what the student would readily infer. We have seen that no two hostile writers have the same idea of the origin of our Order, and that one of them, and he the most learned, acknowledges its derivation from an order of men contemporary with Solomon, and the only body of workmen competent to the construction of the great temple. And that it has an argumentative value in the scientific discussion concerning the primitive state of men, throwing the weight of its tradition and history to the force of the Bible statement.

The man who looks at the Escurial or St. Peters from some exterior point of observation, is apt to be disappointed. The eye does not take in the size. All nature stands around in unconscious comparison, and hills dwarf the largest human structures. It is only when the ghostly echoes of your footsteps sound along the gridiron-shaped corridors of the one, or you wander in the forest of columns, or look up to the skyward dome of the other, see scattered about the inspiration of chisel and pencil, or hear organ peal sounding downward from high arches, as if an angel choir had burst forth from heaven, or human voice borne upward by ascending incense in penitent tenderness, that the marvelous beauty, the sublime grandeur of the structures adequately impress you. And thus it is with Freemasonry. From a point of observation exterior to itself it appears a grand institution of reverend antiquity. Its public ritual recognizes religion and morality, the existence of God and a moral government.

Its charities break forth to view, though the left knoweth not what the right hand doeth. It is seen to be composed of the best elements of society, of men distinguished and distinguishable for every excellence, of the patriot who finds it "sweet to die for his country," and the statesman who lives and labors for his country. In its ranks are seen authors who can trust, like Bacon, their names and fames to future ages and to foreign lands. Reverend men, who serve at God's holy altars, and who illustrate, by spotless lives, the religion they profess, bear the badges of membership, and delight in the business of the lodges. It is known to be vigilant at its threshhold, and to examine well the characters of those who seek admission.

It is known to conceal its decision to reject candidates. Nor can noisy men who have knocked in vain at its doors, and who seek to revenge themselves by denouncing the Order, melt the seal of silence on its lips. But to us, my brethren, who look from the centre outward and upward, it is a circle of lofty duty.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Editor,
IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY
H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

One copy, one year..$1 25

All communications should be addressed to H. G. Reynolds, or The Masonic Trowel, Springfield, Ill.

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for The Trowel.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

Notice.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., AUGUST* 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

Back Numbers of Trowel for Sale.

The publisher has a few copies of the back numbers of The Trowel, which he will send postage paid, as directed, on receipt of price. Those wishing to complete file of Trowel, will do well to procure lost or missing numbers. The quantity is quite limited, and in some cases not more than 5 or 6 of a number. When orders are received for copies which are entirely sold out, the money will be at once returned free of charge.

Volumes 1 and 2 (1862 and 1863), bound together. Price, $4.00. Volumes 5 and 6 (1866 and 1867), in one book. Price, $5.00. Single numbers, 15 cents each. On hand, September, 1863; December, 1864; January, May, June, July, August, and September, 1865; January, March, April, May, June, July, and August, 1866; January, 1867. All the months in 1868; and all the months to date, 1869.

Our Travels.

July 6.—We started from home bound westward, and at Jacksonville we took seats in the nice cars of the Pekin, Peoria & Jacksonville Railroad, which was then just completed to Jacksonville. When the Grand Chapter met at Jacksonville, we used to start with a team, stop the first night at Lewistown, and then, passing through Havana and Bath, tarry the second night at Virginia. Now we find a solid, firmly and thoroughly built road, passing Virginia and Chandlerville, and over the broad bottoms of the Sangamon to Bath, on the Illinois River, and thence by Havana, Forrest City, Topeka, Manito, and Pekin, to Peoria. The cuts and fills from Jacksonville to Chandlerville are very heavy; the rest of the way is very level. The farming region along this road in Morgan and Cass is hard to surpass; Mason is a sandy county along the river, but never fails, in wet or dry, to bring corn, wheat, oats, and fruit.

HAVANA.

When we passed through Havana in 1855, it had about five hundred inhabitants. Now it is a place of 2,500 or 3,000 people, with nice streets, abundant shrubbery, much fruit, a spacious, well kept hotel, court-house, churches, school-houses, and parks. It is an old river town. We took a drive with W. Bro. Wright, and found Bro. Luther Dearborn, formerly of Geneva, but more recently of Minnesota, where he was G. H. P. In the evening we met a large number of the brethren, and in the morning, in company with Bro. Dearborn, we were homeward bound. Havana commands a large business by river and rail.

July 14.—While waiting for the train east, we called on R. W. Bro. Gouley, G. Secretary of Missouri, and found him busy with official and editorial duties.

XENIA.

At 7 P. M. we arrived at Xenia, where we were hospitably entertained by W. Bro. McConnell and his amiable wife. We visited the lodge and found more than thirty brethren present. This lodge, No. 191, is the first lodge established between Salem and Olney; the number at Salem is 130; that at Olney, 140; while Louisville 196, and Flora 204, quickly followed 191. Xenia is a beautiful place; on the morning of the 15th, Dr. Shirley brought out his coal-black horses, perfectly matched, and gave us a ride over the town; a large school-building serves for common schools and a high grade also.

OLNEY.

At noon we found ourselves the guest of Col. O'Kean, formerly in the Senate, who is now keeping hotel at Olney. He knows how to do it, too.

After dinner we visited Olney Lodge, where we had been several times before. There we met Breth. Hayward, Palmer, Mason, and several brethren from Cooper and other lodges. After transacting the business in hand, and exchanging greetings, we started home. Olney has greatly improved since we were there some years ago, and is, we are informed, the largest place in Southeastern Illinois.

July 27.—Started westward for Beardstown and Peoria. Halting at we found Bro. C. E. Broadwell, Secretary of Harmony Lodge No. 3, and were courteously shown the rooms fitted up for the Masonic bodies in the city. They are conveniently situated on the principal street, near the square, the Dunlap House, court-house, and several churches, in the third story of the Gallaher Block, 60 feet front by 100 deep. The hall is in the rear, and is 60 feet east and west by 50 north and south. The main entrance to the hall is near the center on the north, from a large ante-room. On the west side of this ante-room is the entrance from below, a visitor's room, and a candidate's room. On the east side are the banquet-hall and rooms for chapter and commandery.

JACKSONVILLE,

The hall is handsomely seated—cushioned seats and backs, cushioned arm-chairs, and elegant and spacious stations and stands. The letter G is in a silver star with glass prisms, and a circle of glass jets around it. A massive and beautiful chandelier, with 24 burners, graces the center of the room. The carpet is crimson and black, full of emblems, and is the best we have yet seen. All the rooms are carpeted, and finished with oak graining. Additional pedestals are always ready for chapter and commandery use. The desks for Treasurer and Secretary correspond with the other furniture, while an elaborately finished case, complete in separate departments, and designed by Bro. Broadwell, does duty for all the Secretaries and Recorders.

The altar is covered with blue silk velvet. All the rooms are furnished, and every appointment is finished and complete.

The bodies which meet in this hall are Harmony Lodge No. 3, Jacksonville Lodge No. 570, Jacksonville Chapter No. 3, Jacksonville Council No. 5, and Hospitaller Commandery K. T.

BEARDSTOWN.

At Virginia, Breth Read and Dutch took possession of us, and after an easy and pleasant ride of twelve miles, we halted in Beardstown at the home of Bro. Read, where we found his wife, daughter, and Mrs. Metz, of Rushville, all on "hospitable thoughts intent." Our stay was agreeable and pleasant. Cass Lodge No. 23 is an old lodge, and its original and intended number was 12. We met the lodge in large force, and were greatly pleased with its make-up, talent, and worth. Here we met Father Samuel Smith, a worthy veteran, who was born in Dutchess county, N. Y., in October, 1793, and was made a Mason in Solomon's Lodge, in Poughkeepsie, in 1814. He is a Past Master of Clinton No. 19 and of Cass No. 23. Taking leave on the 28th, we went back to and while waiting for the cars we sought out Bro. Hillig, W. M. of Virginia Lodge No. 544, whom we found vigorously at work preparing foundations for the understandings of his fellow-men. The lodge is prospering, and contentment prevails. Virginia has all the appliances of a commercial place, and like its river neighbor, Beardstown, does a large business. We forgot to mention in the proper place that Beardstown is now building a railroad to Chapin, on the T. W. & W. Railway; it is probably completed by this time. It will be built northward to Macomb and southward to Winchester and Alton.

VIRGINIA,

PEORIA.

By the P. P. & J. road we reached Peoria, and brought up at the Peoria House, now kept by Col. Dean. After a short interview with Breth. Brown, Rounsville, and Spalding, and others, of Illinois Lodge, and McDermott, of Temple Lodge, we repaired to the hall and found Temple Lodge No. 46 in session, and were handsomely received by the lodge and welcomed by the W. M. There we found Bro. Tucker, whom we met in the same lodge as Secretary in 1849, and who still fills the same position, as he had for several years before. There is but one other instance of such continuous service in this State—that of Bro. Darius Greenup, of Washington Lodge No. 55, at Nashville. The following day we went to Quincy, of which we will speak in another article. Aug. 3, arrived at and found our old time friends, Bro. Seaman and Dr. Cunningham. At the Verandah we met with Capt. Parker, formerly a pilot and captain on the Mississippi River, and had long chats on matters and things on the Upper Mississippi, familiar to us more than thirty years ago.

LEBANON,

In the evening we met the lodge, No. 110, and were forcibly struck with the intelligence and ability of its members. Lebanon is the seat of McKendree College, under the patronage of the Methodist persuasion. Although a druggist, Bro. Seaman informs us that in his whole life he has never drank or used intoxicating drinks.

Returning, we found R. W. Bro. E. S. Babcock, of Summerfield, who is now furnishing large quantities of trees and plants from his nursery to Arkansas and Tennessee. Waiting at East St. Louis, we visited several brethren, talked over matters Masonic, and then came home.

Aug. 5.—By the T. W. & W. and P. P. & J. roads, via Jacksonville and Havana, we arrived at the nice and thrifty town of and was made the welcome guest of Bro. Sweet, the Master of the lodge. The room was full that evening, and we left the lodge-room very happy. The next morning an early ride on the freight took us to Havana, where we met several brethren, and the regular trains took us home.

MANITO,

For all the consideration shown at these several places we are grateful, and rejoice that in all of them the brethren have good rooms, and facilities for improvement in Masonic rites.

Cotemporaries.

The Masonic Review is catching up. The number for May is at hand. The first article relates to discoveries at Jerusalem, by Lieut. Warren, of the British army, and is meritorious. We are glad to learn that Gen. Arthur St. Clair was a Freemason. His valuable papers are about to be sold. The editor has been to New York, and there visited the "Prince of Orange" Lodge, which is 16 on the roll, and has lately removed into new quarters. Letters are given from M. M. Hay, Grand Master of Massachusetts, Rufus Putnam and Robert Oliver, to Gen. Hull, and T. M. Harris, Cor. G. Sec. Massachusetts, written in 1791, 1802, and 1803, in regard to Masonic matters in Ohio. The balance of the make up is very readable.

The Evergreen is symbolized by the green cover. The number for July has the usual dedications. "Grief," is a story of a slave, by E. T. Guilbert. History of Iowa City Lodge from 1856 to 1868, gives the names of Governor Kirkwood, Z. C. Luse, and J. P. Sanford among the initiates. Past Grand Masters Parvin and Hartsock are members of this lodge. Decisions of Grand Master Mickel are given. He decides that where a brother is summoned to receive a reprimand ordered by the lodge, and he refuses to attend, that he should be tried for disobedience of summons; that is our view also. He also decides that the Master of a lodge, for good cause, can close a lodge for the remainder of his official term. We think a Master can not close his lodge beyond the time of the sitting of the Grand Lodge, and that he should report his action to the Grand Lodge for confirmation and further action. He also decides that where a Mason is suspended or expelled, he is not entitled to a return of his demit, or to anything else to indicate good standing. In this we fully agree. He says that a lodge can not reconsider a vote granting a demit. The Illinois by-laws are explicit; that the vote granting a demit is a severance of membership. He decides that lodges should act independently of courts in the trial of a brother. We qualify this somewhat. Lodges should not act hastily, nor by any action of theirs, prejudice a brother's case in court. We dislike the entire spirit of the leading editorial in regard to Mason Ministers, except in regard to Jewish teachers, who should be placed on the same footing. It is easy to cry out against ministers, but we stake all our character upon the assertion, that ministers, as a class, render as much and as efficient service as any other class in proportion to their numbers. Lawyers and doctors run no risk by being Masons, for where money and health are concerned, men will look for ability and skill, but woe to the minister who has an anti-Mason for a parishioner, for, to our mind, anti-Mason is synonymous with malice, envy, distrust, and evil imaginations. If our brother will carefully review his acquaintances, he will certainly see that his remarks are not just. The editor gives the anti-Masonic mixture at Chicago quite a strong lay-out. He asks us what we know about Rev. Thatcher, of Cambridge. Nothing, only that he delivered a characteristic address upon Masonry full of "anger, malice, and all uncharitableness," at Cambridge, which was effectually squelched by a courteous and classical address by a member of Cambridge Lodge.

The Freemason (St. Louis) for July, has "Equality and Ideal of Masonry" for its leader. "A College of Rites" is the next article. We agree with the editor that Freemasonry is neither an Order nor Hierarchy. In answer to the article "Let us have peace," in the Monthly, the Freemason looms up scornfully and defiantly. The next article is "Negro Masonry," in which the editor gets after his late friends, the Monthly and American Freemason. The language used on both sides is fragrant indeed. "Our trip to the East and what we saw," is a fine and valuable account of the great Templar gathering at Philadelphia. The editor intimates that a certain lodge in St. Louis will be invisible, because some of its officers and members attended a meeting of colored people, who pretend to be Masons. Beyond all question and upon the clearest proofs, the bodies pretending to be Masonic, holding under the authority of the so called National Grand Lodge—sometimes called African—are clandestine; but why not take higher, and, in truth, the only tenable ground, that no body of men can legally meet or convene in Missouri without the authority of the Grand Lodge of Missouri? The matter of color makes a contest; the matter of sovereign jurisdiction is incontestible, and admits neither debate nor evasion.

No. 3 of The American Home Book is at hand.

The Keystone, Philadelphia, comes regularly.

The Mystic Star for July, opens with a notice of Past Grand Master Bayless, of Indiana. We give the comments of Bro. Hanna, in relation to the "Anti-Secret Society" at Chicago, in this number.

The Masonic Monthly for July, is like its predecessors, only a little better. It characteristically assumes much, because it hails from Boston.

The Freemason's Magazine (London) for July 3, heralds a reduction of the magazine from six to three-pence, and that substantial improvements will be made in the paper.

The Masonic Record for Western India for June, has news from several portions of Asia, Europe, and America. Bro. Hoff furnishes an elegant sketch of Bro. Gen. James Ramsay. We reproduce an article in relation to Illinois.

The Voice of Masonry for August has the usual Holy Land contributions, and other original and selected articles.

The London Freemason is published Saturday mornings, at two-pence per number; annual subscription, twelve English shillings. Address Freemason, 3 and 4 Little Britain, C. E. It is a twelve-page sheet, and is an interesting weekly. Nos. 19 and 20, vol. 2, are received.

The Masonic Record, Nashville, for August, has a good story credited to the Missouri Republican, and other matter as usual. This superb magazine is published and edited by John Frizzell & Co. Bro. Frizzell is Grand Secretary, and we suspect the company is the accomplished scholar and writer, Dr. Geo. S. Blackie, formerly of Scotland.

Father Penfield.

An aged gentleman, a tolerant, kind-hearted Methodist minister, who stood the frosts of winter and the scorching heat of summer, as he carried "glad tidings" from place to place, through long years of labor, lately "yielded up the ghost" at Lee Centre, Lee county, amid the sorrowing Christians, relatives, and brethren. When interrogated as he was about to die in regard to Freemasonry, he replied that he was "willing it should be inscribed upon his coffin that he had entire confidence in the principles of Freemasonry." Such is the testimony of a blameless man—Father Penfield. Such was the testimony of the young and gifted Sawyer; of Father Noyes; of Father Young, and the venerable Baptist Minister, Eliab Going. No intelligent man ever renounced Freemasonry on a bed of death.

Wood's Household Magazine.

We seldom indorse a magazine, journal, or publication, without giving them fair examination. Like others, we have sometimes spoken too soon; once or twice. We have submitted the work above named to our "better half." She is at once wife, mother, house-keeper, and a sensible woman, and she says it is a good work, and amply worth the money. It is devoted to knowledge, virtue, and temperance, and has parental, health, young men's, young women's, religious, children's, temperance, story, miscellaneous, scientific, floral, and culinary departments, with joker's budget, life thoughts, editor's notes, &c. It is a monthly, with 48 pages, and is published by S. S. Newburgh, New York, at one dollar a year.

The Tribune Building, Chicago.

The Tribune people have sent us a large and beautiful engraving of their Mammoth Publishing House. They may well be proud of it. It is a massive, handsome, eligible, convenient building, seventy-two feet on Dearborn street by one hundred and twenty-one on Madison, and is fire-proof throughout. Nine rooms on the fourth floor are set apart for editorial business of all sorts. The Tribune structure is a marvel of Chicago enterprise—just one of very many.

"Croquet."

A treatise with full notes and commentaries, by Capt. Mayne Reid.

We are not a croquetist, and are unable to judge of the merits of the work, but we submitted it to a proficient, who pronounces it the best work on "croquet" that has yet appeared. It is beautifully printed on hot-pressed tinted paper, with illustrations, and is neatly bound in muslin.

Literary Notices.

"The Illustrated Annual of Phrenology and Physiognomy," for 1870, by S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway. Price, 25 cents. It contains a calendar, notices of President Grant and Cabinet, of Daniel Huntington, President of the national Academy of Design, William Page, Eastman Johnson, and George Innes, celebrated painters, and a large amount of interesting matter.

"Watson's Art Journal," published weekly by Henry C. Watson, 746 Broadway, New York, at $7.50 per year, or 20 cents per number. A beautiful fashion plate every week, and patterns which can be used. It is having a large run in families situated to do their own work, and desirous of keeping pace with the fashions. It contains a large amount of excellent reading matter, and can not fail to suit those who desire to keep up with the "latest style," and do so in an economical manner.

W. Bro. John E. Dalliba,

Is now located at Marquette, on Lake Superior. Our brethren who attended Grand Lodge some ten years ago, will remember him as a representative in Grand Lodge, and W. M. of No. 33. He came to Springfield to observe the eclipse, and after visiting Oak Ridge and Lincoln's Tomb, we repaired to the foundation of the dome of the new State House, where, in company with Bro. Clark, clerk of the works, and Bro. Merrill Ladd and lady, we took note of the eclipse from the commencement thereof to its termination. Bro. Dalliba has the charge of matters connected with the C. & N. W. R. R. at Marquette. He was one of the ten who first received the degrees of the A. and A. Rite with us, at Chicago, in 1856.

Specimens of Type.

We have received from Geo. Bruce's Son & Co., New York, their "Abridged Specimen Book," containing a great number of specimens of the newest and most desirable styles of Type, Cuts, &c., all of which are elegant in design and finish, and, from the well-earned reputation of the Bruce Foundry, will commend themselves to practical printers. This firm also furnishes everything needed in the "Art Typographic," the product of other foundries at manufacturer's prices.

Quincy.

On the 30th ult. we laid the corner-stone of the new Jewish synagogue. We are indebted to R. W. Breth. Blakesley and Robbins, and several other brethren, for many courtesies and attentions. We tarried at the Quincy House, a good hotel, now kept by Bro. Boon, formerly of this city. For an account of the proceedings, see an article in this number taken from the Quincy Herald.

W. Bro. Geo. S. Blackie, M. D.

We were much gratified to meet this eminent brother, Deputy Grand Secretary Grand Lodge of Tennessee, and a contributor of valuable articles to the Masonic Record, on the 7th inst. Bro. Blackie is a professor of the University at Nashville, and came to our city to observe the eclipse.

Amende.

In our notice of Canton, in the July TROWEL, we said that we tarried at Bro. Thompson's. It should have been "at Bro. MCCALL'S." And it is a good place to stay.

Bro. J. L. Dewey, Masonic Grand Lecturer of the State, and a member of Vesper Lodge No. 584, Galesburg, has been taking our Lodge through a course of instructions for the last week.

Bro. Dewey is a gentleman of sterling worth, and thoroughly posted in the work. We regret that his stay is so short with us. He has gained many warm friends here, and will long be remembered by the members of our Lodge.—Blandinville.

"If forc'd from faith, forever miserable;
For what is misery but want of God?
And God is lost, if faith be overthrown."

In gentle love the sweetest joys we find—
Yet even those joys, dire jealousy molests,
And blackens each fair image in our breasts.
Lyttleton.

Tidings.

Items.

What makes a bushel?—Wheat, 60 lbs.; corn, shelled, 56; rye, 56; oats, 32; barley, 46; buckwheat, 56; Irish potatoes, 60; sweet potatoes, 60; onions, 57; beans, 60; bran, 20; clover seed, 60; timothy seed, 45; hemp seed, 45; bule grass seed, 14; dried peaches, 33.

Delaware.—The Grand Lodge met at Wilmington, June 28. Edwin Horner was elected Grand Master; H. P. Downing, Deputy; John W. Causey, S. G. W.; John P. Allmond, Wilmington, Grand Secretary.

By the Grand Lodge of South Carolina, "Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Grand Lodge, that lotteries (being a species of gambling) can not be held under the sanction of a Masonic body, for any purpose whatever, without violation of the great principles of the Order."

The poet, Fitz Greene Halleck, was private Secretary of John Jacob Astor, and they were both members of Holland Lodge. It is now proposed to erect a suitable monument to his memory.

Rhode Island.—Thomas A. Doyle, G. M.; Lloyd Morton, S. G. W.; Emerson Goddard, J. G. W.; Charles D. Greene, Providence, Grand Secretary.

Benton county, Iowa, has a Tom Thumb by the name of William Dwiggons, fifteen years old, 35 inches high, and weighs 35 pounds.

Gov. Sprague, of Rhode Island, has been giving a talk to the Scituate Masons. In addition to voting for the impeachment of "Andy," he is quite hard on Bro. Colfax. President Blanchard had better inquire into this treachery.

Andrew county, in the Platte Purchase, Mo., presents many inducements for emigration.

The Pledge is a small four-page organ of the Good Templars in Colorado. Published weekly by H. M. Rhoads, and edited by John W. Ratliff, Central City, at $1.50 per year. It is a sprightly, live sheet.

The Heptasoph is the organ of the order known as the "Seven Wise Men," and is published monthly by L. R. Simmons & Co., 56 Camp street, New Orleans, at $1 per year. This order seems to be making considerable progress.

The Landmark is a new weekly puulished by Hill & Wiant, No. 2 Dey St., New York, at $3 per year. It has a Masonic department, and gives attention to Odd-Fellowship, literature, arts, and sciences.

Oregon is agitating for a division into two States.

The old settlers of Lake and McHenry counties are to have a reunion at McHenry, Sept. 8. Hon. Wm. M. Jackson is President.

The appraised value of real estate in Indiana five years ago was $378,287,573; this year, $448,499,653.

The Family and Farm Journal, lately published at Jerseyville, is now The Great Western Family Journal, and is published by Messrs. Hall, Worrall, & Burrenmore, at $1 per annum. It has fine plates of the Methodist Female Seminary, Jacksonville, the college building at Springfield, and of two specimens of blooded cattle, owned by John H. Spears, at Tallula. It can make itself popular as an agricultural paper here, where it is greatly needed, if suitably supported. It is also the organ of the Eclectic School of Medicine.

Chicago has one hundred and nine churches.

The names of twenty-five thousand pickpockets and petty thieves are constantly on the police books of Paris.

Dorchester is annexed to Boston.

The Indians say the Quakers are "heap water; no whisky."

A husband can generally foot the bills of a wife who foots his stockings.

New York is some potatoes. Her crop last year was 26,000,000 bushels. Pennsylvania produces 11,000,000, and Ohio 8,000,000.

Death exposes the inanity of pride, the folly of ambition, and the futility of all human projects.

Brigham Young proposes to confine himself to one woman, when members of Congress do Sharp practice that.

The area of the public lands of the United States undisposed of June 30, is equal to eighteen times the dimensions of Great Britain and Ireland.

The largest tub and bucket manufactory in the United States, is at Moline, in this State.

Minnesota Grand Commandery met at Mankato, June 24. D. B. Porter, Grand Com.; Geo. L. Otis, Deputy; M. W. Getchell, G. Gen.; R. A. Jones, G. Capt. Gen.; D. B. Nickerbocker, G. P.; Chas. Nichols, G. S. W.; E. A. Groff, G. J. W.; H. L. Carver, G. Treas.; G. A. Savoy, Minneapolis, G. Recorder.

A. H. Lee, Esq., of Prairie Du Rocher, who drew the Opera House in Chicago, died recently in Cincinnati.

It is proposed to form a new State from parts of Washington, Idaho, and Oregon, and to add the remainder of Washington to Oregon. We propose the name of Washington for the new State.

Persons desiring to emigrate to the south would do well to correspond with Wm. H. Deitz, Kingston, Roane Co., Tenn.

The corporators of the Belvidere and Ottawa railroad have organized and intend to push the enterprise rapidly to completion.

The railroad from Lewistown west is now completed to Rushville.

The railroad from Peoria, via Pekin, Havana, Bath, Chandlerville, and Virginia, to Jacksonville, is expected to be open the entire distance by the 20th of this month.

The Fort Leavenworth reservation has marble equal to the finest Italian.

There are 536 convicts in the Tennessee penitentiary.

Mississippi has 266 working Lodges and a membership of 12,000.

Geo. Frank Gouley, Grand Secretary of Missouri, has become sole owner of the Freemason (St. Louis).

The ice houses at Crystal Lake, McHenry county, were destroyed by fire, Aug. 11. The loss is very heavy.

There are 700 Quakers in Warren county, Iowa.

It is said that of the public lands in Illinois, only 424 acres remain unsold.

A correspondent says that "the greenest servent he ever saw was entirely black."

If brooks are, as poets call them, the most joyous things in nature, what are they "murmuring about?"

The Illinois State Fair will be held at Decatur in September.

Transactions Examined.

LOUISIANA.

Grand Lodge.—The annual meeting was held at New Orleans, Feb. 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, 1869. Henry R. Swasey, Grand Master.

He mentioned the decease of G. W. Catlett, P. G. M.; W. P. Coleman, P. G. S. W.; Henry Regenberg, P. G. J. W. The Grand Master complained with great propriety of the action of the Grand Orient of France, in recognizing a clandestine body recently resurrected, calling itself the "Supreme Council of the Sovereign and Independent State of Louisiana," and claiming jurisdiction over the symbolic degrees.

The American grand lodges will sustain the Grand Lodge of Louisiana in the following declaration:

1. The Grand Lodge of Louisiana claims the exclusive right to govern all lodges of symbolic Freemasonry in the State. She does not recognize, nor permit her subordinates to recognize, or hold Masonic intercourse with, any clandestine association claiming to be Masonic, either individually or collectively, and considers the recognition of any clandestine body located in Louisiana by a foreign Masonic power a violation of Masonic comity, an act of open hostility against her authority, and an infringement on her jurisdictional rights.

2. The Grand Lodge of Louisiana does not confer the degrees of Freemasonry. She intrusts the making of Masons to her subordinate lodges, requiring that, in this particular, they shall conform to the requirements of the Ancient Constitutions of the Fraternity, viz: that all initiates shall possess the necessary physical qualifications, be free-born and of good report. So long as these landmarks are respected and obeyed, the subordinate lodges have the right to select their own material, and the Grand Lodge has no power to dictate whom or whom not they shall receive.

3. Granting the fullest liberty to all Masons under her jurisdiction to enjoy, as individuals, their own opinions on the political and social questions of the day—only enjoining upon them to be good citizens, to pay due allegiance to the government, and obey the laws under whose protection they live—the Grand Lodge, in its Masonic capacity, takes no cognizance of such subjects. To her has been confided the sacred duty of preserving Masonry pure and unsullied from all extraneous influences, be they what they may; and it will ever be her earnest endeavor to transmit to posterity the principles of our Institution as spotless and untarnished as she received them from our fathers—regardless of foes within or foes without.

Recognizing these greatest principles as landmarks of the Fraternity, your committee can view the recognition of the so-called Supreme Council by the Grand Orient of France in no other light than a violation of Masonic comity and a wanton insult to this Grand Lodge. But the Grand Orient, not satisfied with having given aid and countenance to a clandestine body located in our midst, appeals to our American brethren to "appreciate" its conduct and "imitate" its example. This spirit of propagandism and interference may be in accordance with the teachings of modern "French Masonry," but it is not inculcated in the Masonry which we have received from our common mother, the Grand Lodge of England. This spirit, which seeks to impair the honor and subvert the dignity of this Grand Lodge, will, we doubt not, be properly appreciated by our sister Grand Lodges, and in submitting the following resolution, your committee feel confident that the Grand Lodge will receive from her American sisters the same sympathy and support which they so generously extended to the Grand Lodge of New York, when her jurisdiction was invaded by the Grand Lodge of Hamburg.

Resolved, That all Masonic correspondence and fraternal relations between the Grand Lodge of Louisiana and the Grand Orient of France cease and be discontinued, and no Mason owning allegiance to that grand body be recognized as such in this jurisdiction.

Balance in Treasury, $3,615.89. Samuel M. Todd was elected Grand Master; S. G. Parsons, Deputy; Amos Kent, S. G. W.; John L. Barrett, J. G. W.; Henry R. Swasey, G. Treas.; Jas. C. Batchelor, Lock Box 872, P. O., New Orleans, G. Secretary.

Bro. James B. Scott presented the report on correspondence. The address of Bro. Gorin, in 1867, is favorably noticed at great length, and fair criticisms are made upon our proceedings.

MISSISSIPPI.

Grand Chapter met in Jackson, Jan. 14; J. O. Lusher, G. H. P. He animadverts severely upon the matter of wire-pulling, electioneering, and log-rolling for office. Geo. D. Fee, Oxford, was elected G. H. P.; R. B. Mayes, Yazoo City, Deputy; Geo. R. Fearn, G. K.; W. M. Wells, G. S.; C. H. Bell, G. Chap.; A. P. Barry, G. Treas.; Oscar T. Keeler, Columbus, G. Sec.

Comp. Fee died March 3. Comp. Patton presented the report on correspondence. Illinois proceedings for 1867 and 1868 are handsomely noticed.

Grand Council met at Jackson, Jan. 26; Morris Cook, of Gallatin, elected Grand Master; Oscar T. Keeler, of Columbus, G. Recorder.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Grand Chapter.—The proceedings cover meetings from Dec. 10, 1867, to Dec. 8, 1868.

At a meeting in June a resolution was adopted looking to a dissolution of the General Grand Chapter, or a peaceful withdrawal; but at the October meeting, the delegates gave reasons for not doing so, which we presume, were satisfactory, as one of the delegates was elected G. H. P.

Henry Chickering, Pittsfield, was elected G. H. P.; A. F. Chapman, Boston, Deputy; J. P. Folsom, G. K.; C. H. Norris, G. S.; Thomas Waterman, G. Secretary.

Comp. Chickering presented an excellent repot on correspondence.

St. Andrew's Chapter has 400 members.

THE JEWISH TEMPLE.

Ceremonies at Laying the Corner-Stone.

In accordance with previous notice, the imposing ceremonies of laying the corner-stone of the Jewish Temple, on Ninth street, between Broadway and Spring, occurred on yesterday. We have in a previous number of the Herald given a description of the beautiful temple as it will appear when completed. At 2 o'clock Fourth street, between Hampshire and Vermont streets, and in the vicinity of the old Baptist church (where the procession started from), was one dense crowd of carriages and people. In a short time, under direction of Grand Marshal James Lowe, assisted by Messrs. J. H. Ayers and H. N. Coltier, the procession formed, with Rosenbush's excellent band in the lead. The following order of procession was observed —(the grand officers mentioned were appointed for the occasion):

J. W. Banker, Grand Tyler, with drawn sword.
James Malin and H. Moeker, Deacons.
Entered Apprentices.
Fellowcrafts.
Master Masons.
Past Masters.
W. B. Larkworthy, Grand Architect.
Isaac Abrahams, Grand Standard Bearer.
J. W. Brown, Grand Sword Bearer.
W. M. Avise, Grand Secretary.
A. A. Glenn, Grand Treasurer.
Dr. Roeshlaub, with Bible, supported by F. Drude and John Sylvester, Grand Stewards.
S. S. Hunting, Grand Chaplain.
J. Robbins, Grand Orator.
T. J. Heirs, S. G. W.
I. Benjamin J. G. W.
A. W. Blakesley, D. G. M.
H. G. Reynolds, M. W. G. M., supported by E. C. Selleck, G. S. D., and A. Demaree, G. J. D.
Wm. Harvey, Grand Pursuivant, with drawn sword.

Then came the grand officers, followed by the congregations K. K. B'nai Avrohum and K. K. B'nai Sholem, orators Rev. I. M. Wise, of Cincinnati, Rev. Dr. Meicheal, of Leavenworth, and Rev. Dr. Wetterhahn, then followed the choir under charge of R. E. Letton, the clergy and invited guests, members of the press and citizens in carriages. The line of march was up Hampshire to Fifth street, down Fifth to Maine street, up Maine to Eighth street, up Eighth street to Broadway, up Broadway to Ninth street to the building, where the procession opened to the right and left and uncovered as the brethren passed through. The Grand Master and his officers took position around the corner stone. On the rear of them were the excellent choir, ably assisted by Prof. Hoepling as organist. The procession was fully one-half mile long, and it was three o'clock before the immense audience crowding the yard and street was called to order. Rosenbush's band played the Chapel. This was followed by music by the choir—Psalm 115. "Not unto us O Lord."

Rev. M. Wetterhahn delivered an imposing prayer to the throne of grace. Then followed music by the choir—hymn, "In mercy, Lord, incline thine ear." Rev. S. S. Hunting, as Grand Chaplain, offered up a short prayer, and A. A. Glenn, as Grand Treasurer, then, by command of the M. W. Grand Master, placed under the stone various articles, as follows:

Hebrew Calendar (Luach), A. M. 5629.
Constitution of K. K. B'nai Sholem, January 16th, 1865.
List of members K. K. B'nai Sholem.
List of the Building Committee.
List of members Ladies' Temple Society.
List of members Busy Bees, Hebrew Bible School.
List of members of Choir.
Constitution I. O. B'nai Berith.
Constitution of Grand Lodge I. O. B. B., sixth district.
By-laws of Masonic Lodges, city of Quincy.
Charter of the city of Quincy.
List of the city council and officials, 1859.
Names of President and Vice President of the United States.
Names of Governor and Lieutenant Governor of the State of Illinois.
Name of Sheriff of Adams county.
Copies of the Israelite, Deborah, Jewish Times, and Occident, the leading Jewish periodicals.
Copies of the Daily Quincy Herald, Whig, Tribune, and Journal.
United States copper and silver coins of denominations of one, two, three, five, ten, twenty-five and fifty cents.
United States fractional currency of the denominations of three, five, ten, twenty-five, and fifty cents.
Photograph of the Presidential Cake voted to General Grant at the Fair, October, 1868.
Photograph of elevation of Temple K. K. B'nai Sholem.
List of officers of M. W. Grand Lodge of Masons, State of Illinois.

The corner-stone bore the following inscription on the east side:

ERECTED BY
K. K. B'NAI SHOLEM.
5629 1869.

On the west side was the following inscription also carved:

ROBERT BUNCE, Architect.
LARKWORTHY & BURGE, Builders.
Quincy, Ills.

In the top of the corner-stone was a cavity of 20x20 inches, and 12 inches deep, and the archives mentioned above were deposited in a zinc box sealed up 6x6 inches and 8 inches high. The cap-stone then lowered to its place was carefully cemented, there to remain until age, decay, or fire shall displace or destroy it. During the depositing of the stone, done by three regular motions, of Masonic significance, the band played a tune. When the stone was secured in its place the Grand Master was presented with the plumb, square and level by the grand Architect, who applied them, and after returning them to the G. A. said, "I have tried and proved this stone by plumb, square, and level, and pronounce it to be well formed, true and trusty." D. G. M. Blakesley then presented the Grand Master with a vessel of corn, saying "Most Worshipful, I present you with the corn of nourishment." The corn was scattered on the stone. S. G. Warden, Thomas J. Heirs, then presented the G. M. with a vessel of wine, saying as he did so, "Most Worshipful, I present you with the wine of refreshment," which the G. M. poured upon the stone. Junior Grand Warden, I Benjamim, then presented to the G. M. a vessel of oil, saying, "Most Worshipful, I present you with the oil of joy."

After this ceremony the Grand Master invoked the Deity to bless the inhabitants of this city with all the necessaries of life, to assist in the completion of the building, protect the work and preserve the structure from decay. Also to grant all a full supply of the corn of nourishment, the wine of refreshment, and the oil of joy. Then striking the stone three times, he commanded the brethren to give the public grand honors of Masons three times, which was obeyed.

Grand Master Reynolds then addressed the assembly as follows:

"Men and Bretnren here assembled:—Be it known unto you, that we, lawful Masons, true and faithful to the laws of our country, and engaged, by solemn obligations, to erect magnificent buildings, to be servicable to the brethren, and to fear God, the great Architect of the Universe. We have among us, concealed from the eyes of all men, secrets which can not be divulged, and which have never been found out, but these secrets are lawful and honorable, and not repugnant to the laws of God or man. They were intrusted, in peace and honor, to the Masons of ancient times, and having been faithfully transmitted to us, it is our duty to convey them unimpaired to the latest posterity. Unless our Craft were good and our calling honorable, we should not have lasted for so many centuries, nor should we have been honored with the patronage of so many illustrious men in all ages, who have ever shown themselves ready to promote our interests and defend us from all adversaries. We are assembled here to-day, in the face of you all, to build a house which we pray God may deserve to prosper, by becoming a place of concourse for good men, and promoting harmony and brotherly love throughout the world, till time shall be no more."

An anthem was then sung by the choir—"Thank ye the Lord." Rev. I. M. Wise was then introduced, and delivered an excellent oration. Rev. Dr. Meichael then delivered a brief oration in German, and the exercises were closed by an invocation to the throne of Grace by Rev. I. M. Wise.

All passed off pleasantly, and will long be remembered and treasured by the Jewish congregations, the Masonic Fraternity, and all who were present. On the return of the procession, M. Levi, of the firm of Lesem Bros. & Co., took charge of the excellent choir, and escorted them to Duckworth & Bugbee's confectionery, where they were regaled with excellent ice cream and cake. The music furnished on the occasion by the choir was admirable—and that but faintly expresses our idea of its excellence.

From the Freemason's Magazine.

Moses Thatcher.

NEWPORT, Rhode Island, 3d July, 1869.

BROTHER CHAS. W. MOORE:—From my childhood up, your ever welcome magazine has been one of the most eagerly perused of the various periodicals which my respected father, N. H. Gould, has had in his library, and even more dear to me has it become since I have taken upon me the various obligations of some fourteen degrees of Masonry.

From it I have gleaned many a truth of ethics and morality, and to it I have ever referred when in doubt on any point of Masonic law. Now, however, I appear before you, not as a gleaner, but as a dispenser of light in regard to one who has, by his own confessions, become an impostor and renegade from the noblest Institution ever instituted by man. I refer to the Rev. Moses Thatcher, a clergyman of the Methodist Church, and a former member of the Masonic Brotherhood in Providence, R. I.

The Providence Press of June 14, 1869, thus notices him:—"The Rev. Moses Thatcher, of Cambridge, Ill., was a speaker at the Chicago Christian Convention, in opposition to secret societies, and described the secret of his initiation as a Freemason."

The next day, (16th June, 1869), the same paper contained the following supplement to the above notice:—"In our telegraphic summary, yesterday, we announced that the Rev. Moses Thatcher, of Cambridge, Ill., spoke in the Chicago Christian Convention in opposition to secret societies, and professed to describe the proceedings of his initiation into the Masonic Brotherhood. There was a Rev. Moses Thatcher, who belonged to the Masonic Brotherhood of this city, years ago, but he was expelled from the Fraternity for conduct unmasonic, unchristian, and in violation of the civil law. If this is the same man, his evidence will not prove of much value for or against any moral institution."

On reading the above I made inquiry among the older Masons in Providence, R. I., and learned that the Rev. Moses referred to was tried and found guilty, and duly expelled from Masonry. A few days afterwards, chancing to pick up a copy of the Providence Journal, I found the following item:—"We learn by the papers that Rev. Moses Thatcher, formerly of Wrentham, Mass., has been addressing religious societies somewhere out West, on the baleful influences of secret societies generally, and the Masonic Order particularly, giving, in illustration, his experience as a member thereof. Our appreciation of anything about which the Rev. Moses may choose to talk, is sadly lessened by the unpleasant remembrances which we have of the two hundred and fifty dollars which he sponged us out of in days gone by, and his utter failure to redeem his promise to pay us when we released him from jail in Norfolk county, so that he might return to Wysox, Penn., where he was then settled, and enter upon his labors as a preacher of the Gospel. Our advice to the Rev. Moses is to be honest himself before attempting to show that other men are bad citizens, even when such showing renders it necessary to violate an oath which he admits he took upon himself when admitted to the lodge-room."

The above quotations speak for themselves, nor need the comments of one so young as I am, and I send them to you hoping that you will give them room in your valuable magazine, that the brothers may see who are our enemies, and being conscious of no wrong in themselves, press on in the good work to the end.

Fraternally yours,
STEPHEN GOULD.

America.

Our best thanks are due to M. W. Bro. H. G. Reynolds, Grand Master of Illinois, for a copy of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, at the twenty-eighth grand annual communication, with an appendix, containing the constitution, by-laws, regulations, standing resolutions, and edicts; a synopsis of the numbers, names and post office location of lodges, with names of Masters, Secretaries, time of meeting, and number of members; a list of re-instatements, expulsions, suspensions, and deaths. Not the least interesting portion of this valuable work is a report on Masonic Correspondence, comprising a summary of the proceedings of most of the Grand Lodges of America and Europe, and which forms in itself a brief history of Masonry in those countries.

In October, 1868, there were, under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, 572 lodges, with 30,229 members.

The MASONIC TROWEL, which is edited by M. W. Bro. Reynolds, contains matter of an authoritative, instructive, and interesting nature, and the influence of the Grand Master, who is universally beloved by the Craft, will at all times command the most correct and authentic information. The following is the best compliment that can be paid to that journal:

"Your trowel will teach you that nothing is united together without proper cement; no strict union, nor external polish can be made without it. And, as the trowel connects each stone together by a proper disposition of the cement, so charity, that bond of perfection of all social union (which I earnestly recommend to you all), links separate minds and various interests together; and, like the radii of a circle, that extend from the centre to every part of the circumference, makes each member have a tender regard for the real welfare of the whole community. But as some members will be refractory in every society, your hammer will likewise teach you how to use becoming discipline and correction towards such like offenders. If they will not submit to rule, you may strike off the excrescences of their swelling pride, till they sink into a modest deportment. Are they irregular in their practices? Your hammer will instruct you to strike off each irregularity, and fit them to act a decent part on the stage of life. Do any affect things above their stations? Your hammer will teach you to press them down to their proper level, that they may learn in the school of discipline that necessary knowledge – to be knowledge."—Masonic Record of Western India.

A VENERABLE MASON.—The Hon. Moses Wingate, of Haverhill, in Vermont, was born Oct. 24th, 1769, and is the son of William Wingate, and grandson of the Rev. Paine Wingate, of Amesbury, Mass., (who was born September 10, 1703, ordained at Amesbury, June 26, 1726, and died February 19, 1786, aged 83, having been in charge of that parish sixty years). Mary Wingate, sister of this reverend gentleman, was the mother of the Hon. Timothy Pickering, Secretary of State, U. S., etc. The Hon. Moses Wingate is a nephew of Judge Wingate, of Stratham, N. H. (who was born May 14, 1789, and died March, 1838). The family has been remarkable for longevity.

Merrimack Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons was organized in 1802, and the Hon. Moses Wingate was admitted to it in 1803, was Secretary in 1804–5, Senior Warden 1807 to 1812, Master 1813–14, and was made an honorary member in 1825. His mind is unimpaired, and though infirm in body, he might have been seen a few weeks since, sickle in hand, assisting and directing a gardener employed in trimming the hedge in front of his home. He was present at a meeting of the Merrimack Lodge in his 97th year.

The interesting question is, is there a man so old in Massachusetts, or in the United States, who is a Freemason; and is there one who has been so long a member of the Fraternity.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—ISA. 8, 20.

DECISIONS BY THE GRAND MASTER.

58. Question.—An Entered Apprentice removes from the jurisdiction of another grand lodge to this; must he wait twelve months before he can apply for the other degrees?

Answer.—The 38th section of the Grand Lodge By-Laws confines the twelve-months rule to candidates for initiation; Entered Apprentices and Fellow Crafts may apply for advancement as Master Masons for affiliation, so soon as they become residents and can show that they are in good standing.

59. Question.—Is not the G. Master bound to issue a dispensation for a new lodge, in any city where three or more lodges exist, upon the recommendation of any three lodges therein?

Answer.—In such cases, the recommendation of three lodges is indispensable to enable him to issue a dispensation; but, even then, the G. Master is invested with discretionary power, and should use it wisely and cautiously.

60. Question.—Lodge 10 rejects a candidate for initiation; soon after, Lodge 615 is formed and chartered; the candidate lives within the jurisdiction of 615. Which lodge has jurisdiction over him?

Answer.—Both, but that of 10 is precedent. That is, 10 can not receive the petition for want of territorial jurisdiction; neither can 615 act upon his petition without the unanimous consent of 10.

61. Question.—W. T. resided in Illinois several years; removed to another State, was absent two or three years, and returned to and settled in the same place in Illinois where he formerly resided. How long must he reside in Illinois before he can petition?

Answer.—One year.

Miscellaneous Reading.

THE GREAT SOLAR ECLIPSE.

Arrangements for Observing its General Appearance.

INTERESTING FACTS, ETC.

From the State Journal.

The announcement made by astronomers that a great solar eclipse would take place on Saturday, the 7th of August, also that Springfield was near the center of the great belt of total obscuration, brought to our city a very large number of persons from the East, West, North and South, for the purpose of seeing the grandest phenomenon ever witnessed by mortals. Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Indiana, Missouri, and several other States were well represented on that day.

At an early hour of the day the people from the adjoining towns began to come in, and by noon our streets presented the appearance of some great public occasion, every one being anxious to see the great eclipse. Everybody seemed to be excited over the great coming event; some mounted the cupola of the State House, some the cupola of the Leland Hotel, others sought the roofs and highest accessible points in the city, and still others in carriages and on foot made their way to the reservoir and the grounds around the observatory. The reservoir from base to top was covered with ladies and gentlemen, while the space between the observatory and the reservoir contained a crowd of persons numbering many hundreds, every one being supplied either with a piece of smoked glass, an opera glass or a small telescope. The scene at the reservoir and the adjoining grounds, just previous to the commencement of the eclipse, was highly interesting, and worthy the pencil of an artist. The stores and State offices in the city were all closed during the eclipse, every one being determined not to miss the grand scene.

PARTY OF OBSERVATION, ETC.

The party of observation at this point, consisted of Prof. Benjamin Pierce, formerly of Harvard College, now successor of Prof. Bache as Superintendent of the United States Coast Survey, Messrs. Charles A. Schott, L. Pourtales, of the United States Coast Survey, J. W. Black, one of the most celebrated artists of Boston, also E. P. Seaver, C. N. Fay, J. B. Warner, R. A. McLeod and W. P. Montague. Prof. Charles A. Schott, Chief of the Computing Bureau of the Coast Survey, had charge of the general arrangements, and with a powerful telescope observed particularly the form of the protuberances, etc. L. F. Portales, first assistant, made special observations in connection with the photographs; J. W. Black, Esq., photographer, with three assistants, viz.: R. Fitzgerald, T. Sexton, and C. S. German, attended to the photographic department. E. P. Seaver had charge of the camera, R. A. McLeod had charge of a "trinocular" marine glass, C. M. Fay observed the transit, W. P. Montague, a graduate of Harvard College this year, was detached to note the time by the chronometer.

The arrangements were perfect in all respects, and the place excellent for the important duties before the party of observation. The observatory, which consisted of a small building, contained the photographic instruments necessary to obtain the views of the different phases of the eclipse, also a large clock which was connected by wires with the camera, and with a curious instrument which correctly registered the number of photographic views, and the exact time in which they were taken. The registration was made with red ink upon a cylinder covered with paper. The whole process was novel and ingenious, and could only be explained by some one better acquainted with the matter than we.

It was highly interesting to witness the operations of the scientific gentlemen during the continuance of the eclipse. With paper before them and pencil in hand they noted everything of interest. One thing is particularly worthy of note in this connection, Mr. Montague, who had been detailed to observe the chronometer, watched the instrument through the time of the eclipse, never once taking his eyes from the instrument, an act of heroism and devotion to science worthy of more than a passing notice. He gave his time and attention to his important duties while one of the grandest phenomenon the world ever witnessed was taking place—an event which he might never again have an opportunity to witness. Prof. Peirce spoke in admiration of the labors of Mr. Montague.

THE ECLIPSE.

The great eclipse of the sun came off on Saturday afternoon, the 7th inst., precisely at the time predicted. The sun, after two whole days of almost total obscuration by clouds, accompanied by rain, rose on the morning of the 7th bright and beautiful, and Nature appeared in her loveliest garb for the occasion. Not a cloud of the size of a man's hand appeared in the sky during the whole day, and the atmosphere was all that could be wished. We have never witnessed a finer day in many years.

At four o'clock four minutes thirty-five and five-tenths seconds, the cry was heard from a hundred throats, "There it is! The eclipse has commenced." The excitement visibly increased until the half of the sun was obscured, when a strange stillness seemed to suddenly fall upon the people, and mute admiration and surprise took possession of the thousands who were looking at the sun as it was by degrees being shorn of its glory. As the moon gradually advanced the light faded away, not like the setting of the sun, but as though the bright luminary was being blotted out from the world of space. The color of the sky begins to change from the dark blue to a yellowish green tinge. The trees assume a deeper, darker green, shadows appear upon the grass sharply cut in outline. These shadows deepen by degrees, and finally disappear as the light fades away. The peculiar gloom which spreads itself over the landscape like a great pall, needs to be seen to be understood. The tints of the sky are continually changing, from deep leaden hues, gradually assuming a darker and deeper shade, until all above us is darkness, and the horizon is tinged with a sickly, yellowish light. As the crescent of light became less and less, the feathered tribe manifested considerable uneasiness, and began seeking their places of rest; the fowls sought their roosts, and the cows roaming upon the prairie, a short distance from the city, began to make preparations for their homeward journey, but with an air that spoke as plainly as language 'what means this?' Every thing seemed unnatural, and man felt the influence.

As the total phase approached, the stillness was intense, and a deep awe seemed to creep over the assembled multitude: the stars began gradually to creep out, when suddenly at five o'clock five minutes twenty and seven-sixtieths seconds the total took place. The change from a partial to a total eclipse was like a flash, and created universal surprise. The first impulse seemed to be to note the degree of darkness. Many seemed to suppose that total darkness would ensue and continue during the total phase. Such persons were very much disappointed. Others were surprised that the darkness should be so great. The sight which met the eye when directed to the moon and sun, was most sublime, awe-inspiring and beautiful. The black, dense body of the moon was surrounded with a glory from the sun which was unusually brilliant and splendid. The protuberances or refractions near the western limit of the moon were unusually large, as we are informed by Prof. Schott, and well defined. These protuberances are supposed to be clouds in the sun's atmosphere, and have been seen at other times than during eclipses. The rays from the corona were unusually brilliant, and the protuberances well defined. The clouds in the horizon assumed a pale, yellow tinge, while the sky was darkened and gloomy toward the meridian, gradually deepening, until, just as every one was enraptured with the unusual sight, the sun's light burst out from behind the dark moon, and flashed the light of day upon the thousands of upturned faces, dazzling the naked eye, and bringing again into use the smoked and stained glasses. For a few moments the people gazed at the beautiful spectacle, but the total phase had taken place, and the interest gradually subsided, and then came the comparing notes and observations.

The bright spot on the lower limb of the sun which appeared so intensely bright, and which some supposed was a star, we are informed is a protuberance or floating cloud, the estimated height being from 80,000 to 100,000 miles.

During the total obscuration the stars—Mercury, Regulus, Venus, Saturn and Arcturus, were plainly visible.

An Effective Lesson.

The following narrative of a practical joke is told by Grace Greenwood, of a certain Doctor Elliot, a noted character, of a noted old Connecticut town:

Late one dark night, being summoned to a patient in a neighboring parish, Dr. Elliot went for his horse to his barn, which was at some distance from the parsonage. Just as he was about to enter, he heard some one coming out, and immediately concealed himself behind a large bush in the lane, hiding his lantern under his cloak. Presently the wide barn-door swung open, and a man appeared, bending beneath an immense load of hay bound together by a rope. Through loops of this rope he had thrust his arms, and he carried the huge mass like a peddler's pack.

The doctor suffered this thieving Atlas to pass him; then, taking the candle from his lantern, he crept softly forward and set fire to the hay, then again concealed himself. In a moment that moving haycock was one great, crackling blaze, and the thief, with wild cries, was frantically flinging it from his head and back. He succeeded in extricating himself without help, and then ran as though pursued by fiends across the snowy fields.

Some months after this there came to the doctor's study a pale, thin, melancholy looking man, who, after much painful hesitation, expressed a desire to make a confession of sin. With a serious and sympathetic manner, yet, with, I suspect, a sly twinkle in his eye, the minister set himself to listen.

"I've had a dreadful load on my conscience, doctor, for a consid'ble spell; and it does seem as ef 'twould kill me. I'm eeny most dead now."

"Ah! is it possible? What can you have done? You are a respectable man and a church member," replied the Doctor, in seeming surprise.

"Yes, I jined the church thirty year ago," replied the old farmer; then, sinking his voice to an awsome confidential tone, he continued: "But I'm a dreadful sinner, for all that, doctor; and, bein' a church member, my sin, you see, was of too much account to be winked at, and judgment follered close arter it. O, dear, O!"

"Pray tell me your trouble. brother."

"Well, doctor, it consarns you."

"Indeed!"

"Yes. One time last winter, I got a leetle short of fodder, and I thought to myself as how you had more'n enough for your critters; and so one night the devil tempted me to go over to your barn, and tu—O, dear, O!"

"To help yourself to a little of my surplus hay, eh?"

"Yes, doctor, jes' so! But I never got home with that are hay. The Lord wouldn't let me du it. I had a load on my back, and was a carryin' it away when all tu once it burst into a blaze about my ears!"

"Struck by lightning?"

"No doctor, it was a clear night. I've jest made up my mind that fire dropped down from heaven and kindled that are hay. 'Twas a judgment and a warnin', and I'm afeared a sort of forerunner of the flames of hell. I hain't had no peace of mind sence, nor felt like eatin' a good meal of vittals. At last I thought I might feel a little better ef I'd jest own up to you, an' ask your pardon an' your prayers."

To the astonishment of the poor penitent, the minister laughed out right merrily. Then he said: "Be comforted, neighbor; your little thieving operation was hardly of such consequence to heaven as all that. It was I who caught you at it, and set fire to the hay from my lantern; and I must say you yelled lustily and ran briskly, for a man of your years. Why didn't you tell me if you wanted hay? Now go home in peace, get well, and steal no more."

"You, doctor? You? Be you sartin sure you sot fire to that bundle of hay?"

"Yes, quite sure; that was my own little bon-fire. I hope it didn't scorch you much. I noticed, when you came to meeting the next Sunday, that your hair was a little singed. As for the flames of hell, neighbor, that's your own lookout. I trust there is time to escape them yet."

"So, so! 'twas you did it all! The Lord be praised!" exclaimed the farmer, fervently. "It raly is an amazin' relief, an' my old woman was right; for she says: 'Go to the minister an' confess,' says she, 'an' that'll lift the biggest heft of the sin off your conscience, an' be better than doctor stuff,' says she. An' so you did it! Well, folks say you're a master man for a joke; but this 'ere one was more solemn than a sermon to me, an' more effectooal, doctor, I do believe."

So saying, the farmer departed in peace; and the parson kept the secret of his name, even in his own family, always, I think.

Old Don.

Once upon a time, a horse hearing a strange, sad cry in the stable, pricked up his ears—pawed a little meditatively, twitched at his slender halter, and then refreshed himself with another bite of delicious provender.

Another cry, then a low grieved moan; the faithful creature could wait no longer. Snapping by a sudden jerk the slight cord about his neck, he moved carefully, now here, now there, poking his cold nose into odd corners and by-places, stopping now and then to listen, I suppose, until he found a little creature so small that the weight of his foot could have crushed it—what do you think he did? why, he took hold of its ragged garments, and lifting it with his strong teeth, put it in a stall filled with soft hay, the very next to his own special pantry. There was no partition between, so while he refreshed himself with his delicate night lunch, he could also, you see, have an eye to the new-comer, "the wee bit baby girl."

"But mother, how did anybody know that he put the baby in the manger?"

That was easily seen, for a part of the baby's ragged dress was found on the floor, trodden on by a heavy foot belonging to her preserver, and a shred of the calico, faded and soiled, was in the morning taken by his proud master from between his big teeth; that's the way, Guy, that the story came out, and pretty strong evidence it was.

The baby must have been very restless; and the guardian, discouraged, no doubt, by his inability to quiet it, began to think what could be done next.

It was a little after midnight, Mrs. Elvy said, that she heard a strange noise at the bed-room window, a sort of plaintive whinny, that seemed to her, half awake, like the sighing of the trees before a storm; so she turned again to slumber. But Don, getting impatient, and worrying about the crying baby, presently made a desperate effort to awaken his master by a loud, shrill neigh. It had for a long time been a fashion of his to do this when he demanded any special attention; he had been greatly petted by the family, and little Fred, when sick in the summer, had been allowed to feed him from this very window. "Lunch-bell" was a familiar sound to his ears. If in the meadow enjoying a substantial meal, juicy and dew-laden, and the merry jingling from Master Fred's hand was heard, lo, the wise and discreet charger was immediately seen trotting towards the house; a leap over the bars, an intelligent poke at the big gate, and in a jiffy the lively nag was resting his long glossy head upon the window sill, the great brown eyes entreating that attention due to invited guests. Then Fred would feed him with dainties, and often, while the boy's slender fingers caressed the glossy mane and supple ears, the mammoth pet fell into pleasant slumber.

Don knew what it was to be in genteel society, he appreciated kindness, and knew where friends were to be found; so, when the baby in the stall moaned with cold and hunger, and a great need to be "cuddled up" by motherly arms, Don, gradually comprehending the situation, concluded to arouse the family.

A low side door, always left lightly fastened—for Don had a sentimental vein, and not unfrequently nibbled and meditated by moonlight—made the way easy; so putting this and that together, the big brave heart just shouldered the responsibility of the desolate baby; and as I said, made known at the familiar window the urgency of the case.

Mrs. Elvy, somewhat out of patience at being awakened in this unceremonious fashion, said rather testily, "Don, do go to your manger. No lunch-bell rang, and your little master is in bed."

But Don, not discomfitted, bravely held his ground, alternately neighing and turning his head towards the barn, until the suspicions of the good house-mother were aroused, and wakening her husband, she begged him to examine the premises and see what the matter was.

"And so he found the baby, mother?"

Yes, so he found her, sure enough; poor little creature, it was shivering and moaning, and was so tender that unless a rescuing hand had prevented, it must have died before morning. When Don saw his master, lantern in hand, ready to follow him, he joyfully led the way, kicking up his heels as if wild with delight; he trotted to the side door, turning his head every minute or two to see if he was understood; then bounding over the threshold, hurried to the stall, poking his cold nose down into the hay, to see if the small guest was still there; when he saw it safely in his master's arms, and was himself patted and praised, he uttered a strange cry of joy and satisfaction, and settled down to his oats, contented and happy with a 'Don't thank me, I've only done my duty, sir,' both touching and ludicrous.

Nobody ever claimed the child, and she was such a little sunbeam that Fred said her name must be Joy. There grew up a wonderful affection between "Joy" and "Don;" he seemed never to forget that she must have tender nursing, and when she was old enough to toddle about, installed himself her protector-in-chief, and no guardian, be she maid or mother, was ever more faithful to duty. When she tumbled about on the grass, he stepped lightly, lifting his great cumbrous feet in a most considerate way. Once an ugly dog frightened little "Joy" sadly. For a few minutes Don protected her as well as he could; then, seeming to feel the need of such guardianship, lifted her carefully by her dress—as he did, no doubt, when he placed her in the manger—and greatly alarmed Nora, who sat sewing by the kitchen window, by dropping Miss Joy directly into her lap, looking the anxiety he could not speak.

"Aunt Joy! Oh, mother, was it her? Now I understand about the picture she had framed so beautifully on Christmas, and the brown watchguard she wears, with 'Don' marked on it. I should like to have built him a splendid stable, and have had everything elegant for him, but then people never do such things for horses when they do great deeds."

Not often, Guy; but I can tell you of one person who showed great attention to a favorite horse, but I do not remember that it was for anything the creature had done. Caligula, a Roman Emperor who lived about 37 A. D., a very cruel man, had a horse which he greatly petted; and, while he thought nothing of sentencing to a horrid death scores of aged and infirm men and women, he paid this horse all the attention one would bestow upon a beloved friend. For this pet, named Incitatus, he claimed greater respect and reverence than is accorded to the wisest mortals. He built him a stable of marble, and a manger of ivory, and some where I have read that he was fed with golden oats and drank from a golden cup. He also appointed for Incitatus a house, furniture, and a kitchen, in order to a respectful entertainment of its visitors. He frequently invited his four-footed friend to the imperial table, and entertained serious thoughts of conferring upon the animal the honors of the consulship.

"What a silly fellow, if he was an Emperor!" said Guy, with a republican curl of the lip. "I think 'Don' was far more worthy of respect than Incitatus or his horrid master!"

And so do we all, Master Guy.

The Deadly Foe of the Snake.

Attack and defence call forth, perhaps, some of the most beautiful combination of effect and passion which can be conceived; as for instance, in the secretary bird and the snake. In an instant the former circumvents its intended prey; its escape is hopeless. It instinctively feels itself in the presence of its deadly enemy, and for the preservation of life prepares itself for the fearful encounter. Half erect with gleaming eye, and its body coiled or straightened to meet the exigency of the moment, it faces its ever active foe; it writhes and sweeps the ground with the convulsive movements of its tail, and like the skillful fencer, acts on the defensive till the opening for the fatal lunge presents itself; but the wary bird allows no such advantage, for dropping its wing, shield like, before it, repels every attack by prostrating the serpent by the powerful action of its pinion, and leaping rapidly behind it, secures the victory and its prey by a well directed blow on the skull. This is a beautiful picture; the issue of life in the struggle, of which nature is the prompter, and in which the energies and passions of both creatures are worked up to their highest pitch. Dreaded by every other living creature, the snake here encounters its mortal enemy, ordained by the hand of Providence to keep its race within the limits.

Tom Thumb's Courtship.

The General met us at the depot in Bridgeport on Saturday morning, and drove us to my house in his own carriage—his coachman being tidily dressed, with a broad velvet ribbon and silver buckle placed upon his hat, expressly for the occasion. Lavinia was duly informed that this was the General's "turn out;" and, after resting half an hour at Lindencroft, he took her out to ride. He stopped a few moments at his mother's house, where she saw the apartments which his father had built expressly for him, and filled with the most gorgeous furniture—all corresponding to his own diminutive size. Then he took her to East Bridgeport, and undoubtedly took occasion to point out in great detail all the houses which he owned, for he depended much upon having his wealth make some impression upon her. They returned, and the General stayed to lunch. I asked Lavinia how she liked her ride; she replied:

"It was very pleasant, but," she added, "it seems as if you and Tom Thumb own about all of Bridgeport!"

The General took his leave and returned at five o'clock to dinner, with his mother. Mrs. Stratton remained until seven o'clock. She expressed herself charmed with Lavinia Warren; but not a suspicion passed her mind that little Charlie was endeavoring to give her this accomplished young lady as a daughter-in-law. The General had privately asked me to invite him to stay over night, for, said he, "If I get a chance, I intend to 'pop the question' before the Commodore arrives." So I told his mother I thought the General had better stop with us over night, as the Commodore would be up in the late train, adding that it would be more pleasant for the little folks to be together. She assented, and the General was happy.

After tea Lavinia and the General sat down to play backgammon. As nine o'clock approached I remarked that it was about time to retire, but somebody would have to sit up until nearly eleven o'clock, in order to let in the Commodore. The General replied:

"I will sit up with pleasure—if Miss Warren will remain also."

Lavinia carelessly replied that she was accustomed to late hours, and she would wait and see the Commodore. A little supper was placed upon the table for the Commodore, and the family retired.

Now, it happened that a couple of mischievous young ladies were visiting at my house, one of whom was to sleep with Lavinia. They were suspicious that the General was going to propose to Lavinia that evening, and in a spirit of ungovernable curiosity, they determined, notwithstanding its manifest impropriety, to witness the operation, if they could possibly manage to do so on the sly. Of course this was inexcusable, the more so as so few of my readers, had they been placed under the same temptation, would have been guilty of such an impropriety! Perhaps I should hesitate to use the testimony of such witnesses, or even to trust it. But a few weeks after they told the little couple the whole story, were forgiven, and all had a hearty laugh over it.

It so happened that the door of the sitting-room, in which the General and Lavinia were left at the backgammon board, opened into the hall just at the side of the stairs, and these young misses, turning out the lights in the hall, seated themselves upon the stairs in the dark, where they had a full view of the cosy little couple, and were within easy ear-shot of all that was said.

The house was still. The General soon acknowledged himself vanquished at backgammon, and gave it up. After sitting a few moments he evidently thought it was best to put a clincher on the financial part of his abilities; so he drew from his pocket a policy of insurance, and handing it to Lavinia, he asked her if she knew what it was.

Examining it she replied, "It is an insurance policy. I see you keep your property insured."

"But the beauty of it is, it is not my property," replied the General, "and yet I get the benefit of the insurance in case of fire. You will see," he continued, unfolding the policy, "this is the property of Mr. Williams, but here, you will observe, it reads 'loss, if any, payable to Charles S. Stratton, as his interest may appear.' The fact is, I loaned Mr. Williams three thousand dollars, took a mortgage on his house, and made him insure it for my benefit. In this way, you perceive, I get my interest, and he has to pay the taxes."

"That is a very wise way, I should think," remarked Lavinia.

"That is the way I do all my business," replied the General, complacently, as he returned the huge insurance policy to his pocket. "You see," he continued, "I never lend any of my money without taking bond and mortgage security, then I have no trouble with taxes; my principal is secure, and I receive my interests regularly."

The explanation seemed satisfactory to Lavinia, and the General's courage began to rise. Drawing his chair a little nearer to hers, he said:

"So you are going to Europe soon?"

"Yes," replied Lavinia, "Mr. Barnum intends to take me over in a couple of months."

"You will find it very pleasant," remarked the General, "I have been there twice; in fact I have spent six years abroad, and I like the old country very much."

"I hope I shall like the trip, and I expect I shall," responded Lavinia, "for Mr. Barnum says I shall visit all the principal cities, and he has no doubt I will be invited to appear before the Queen of England, the Emperor and Empress of France, the King of Prussia, the Emperor of Austria, and at the courts of any other countries which we may visit. Oh! I shall like that, it will be so new to me."

"Yes, it will be very interesting, indeed. I have visited most of the crowned heads," remarked the General, with an evident feeling of self-congratulation. "But are you not afraid you will be lonesome in a strange country?" asked the General.

"No, I think there is no danger of that, for friends will accompany me," was the reply.

"I wish I was going over, for I know all about the different countries, and I could explain them all to you," remarked Tom Thumb.

"That would be very nice," said Lavinia.

"Do you think so?" said the General, moving his chair still closer to Lavinia's.

"Of course," coolly, "for I, being a stranger to all the habits and customs of the people, as well as to the country, it would be pleasant to have some person along who could answer all my foolish questions."

"I should like it first rate, if Mr. Barnum would engage me," said the General.

"I thought you remarked the other day that you had money enough, and was tired of traveling," said Lavinia, with a slightly mischievous look from one corner of her eye.

"That depends upon my company while traveling," replied the General.

"You might not find my company very agreeable."

"I would be glad to risk it."

"Well, perhaps Mr. Barnum would engage you if you asked him," said Lavinia.

"Would you really like to have me go?" asked the General, quietly insinuating his arm around her waist, but hardly close enough to touch her.

"Of course I would," was the reply.

The little General's arm clasped the waist closer as he turned his face nearer to hers, and said:

"Don't you think it would be pleasanter if we went as man and wife?"

The little fairy quickly disengaged his arm, and remarked that the General was a funny fellow to joke in that way.

"I am not joking at all," said the General, earnestly," it is quite too serious a matter for that."

"I wonder why the Commodore don't come?" said Lavinia.

"I hope you are not anxious for his arrival, for I am sure I am not," responded the General, "and what is more, I do hope you will say 'yes,' before he comes at all!"

"Really, Mr. Stratton," said Lavinia, with dignity, "if you are in earnest in your strange proposal, I must say I am surprised."

"Well, I hope you are not offended," replied the General, "for I was never more in earnest in my life, and I hope you will consent. The first moment I saw you I felt that you were created to be my wife."

"But this is so sudden."

"Not so very sudden; it is several months since we first met, and you know all about me and my family, and I hope you find nothing to object to in me."

"Not at all; on the contrary I have found you very agreeable, in fact I like you very much as a friend, but I have not thought of marrying, and—"

"And what? my dear," said the General, giving her a kiss. "Now, I beg you, don't have any 'buts' or 'ands' about it. You say you like me as a friend, why will you not like me as a husband? You ought to get married; I love you dearly, and I want you for a wife. Now, deary, the Commodore will be here in a few minutes—I may not have a chance to see you alone—do say that we will be married, and I will get Mr. Barnum to give up your engagement."

Lavinia hesitated, and finally said:

"I think I love you well enough to consent, but I have always said I would never marry without my mother's consent."

"Oh! I'll ask your mother, May I ask your mother? Come, say yes to that, and I will go and see her next week. May I do that, pet!"

Then there was a sound of something very much like the popping of several corks from as many beer bottles. The young eaves-droppers had no doubt as to the character of these reports, nor did they doubt that they sealed the betrothal, for immediately after they heard Lavinia say:

"Yes, Charles, you may ask my mother." Another volley of reports followed, and then Lavinia said, "Now, Charles, don't whisper this to a living soul: let us keep our own secret for the present."

"All right," said the General, "I will say nothing; but next Tuesday I shall start to see your mother."

"Perhaps you may find it difficult to obtain her consent," said Lavinia.

At that moment a carriage drove up to the door, and immediately the bell was rung, and the little Commodore entered.—P. T. Barnum, in Packard's Monthly, for July.

◆

About Babies.

In one of the street-cars of the metropolis, a few evenings since, was a lady with a baby. One of the blue-eyed, crowing, happy babies, disarranging its white robes and rumpling its blue ribbons with all the abandon of a baby that is secure in ever fresh supplies, both of love and clothes. The mother was evidently a stranger to the other ladies in the car; yet all of them smiled when they looked in her direction, and many of them spoke to her, and seemed to love her, for the sake of the beautiful child.

The opening instinct of woman-hood seems to be the love of babies, and the girl must be a very little one who does not want a doll to which she can play the sweet part of mother. The depth and purpose of the instinct are revealed to us in the petition of the little Miss of five years, who happened to be an only child: "Mamma, I want a baby to play with; a meat baby, Mamma!"

No kinder blessing was ever bestowed than in the close of Fanny Fern's letter to the then newly-married Princess Royal of England: "And when, brightest of all others, the crown of maternity shall descend upon your youthful brow, God grant you that nicest of all places on earth to cry in—a mother's bosom!"

Yet, while the instinct of maternity is peculiar to woman, and marks her sex more plainly than rounded limbs or gentle manners, it is not to woman and girls alone that the love of babies is confined.

It was once the lot of the writer to dwell in the white tents of Camp Harrison, in Georgia, in that lower part of the State, where families are always far between, and much more so in war-times. For long weeks we had not seen a woman or a child.

At last the railroad through the camp was repaired; and in the first train there was a lady, with just such a wide-awake looking baby as the later one of the metropolis. Some hundreds of rough soldiers were around the cars, and Captain Story, of the 57th Infantry, was the biggest and roughest among them, if we judge of the tree by its bark.

The lady, with the baby in her arms, was looking from a window, and he took off his hat, and said, "Madam, I will give you five dollars, if you will let me kiss that baby." One look at his bearded face told her there was nothing bad in it, and, saying, with a pleasant laugh, "I do not charge anything for kissing my baby," it was handed over. The little one was not afraid, and the bushy whiskers, an eighth of an ell long, were just the play-house it had been looking for.

More than one kiss did the captain get from the little red lips, and there was energy in the hug of the little round arms. The other voices said, "Pass him over here, Cap!" and, before the train was ready to move, half a hundred men had kissed the baby. It was on its best behavior, and crowed, and kicked, and tugged at whiskers, as only a happy baby can. It was an event of the campaign; and one giant of a mountaineer, who strode past us with head like a mammoth, but with tear-dimmed eyes and quivering lips, said, "By George, it makes me feel and act like a fool; but I've got one just like it at home."

Other lands have owned the power of this young immortality, and the Hindoo hails the little stranger with the words, "Young child, as thou hast entered the world in tears when all around thee smiled, so live as to leave the world in smiles while all around thee weep."—Appleton's Journal.

◆

Little May Hedges.

BY ROSELLA.

"You are all little cousins alike, and it will be so strange and nice to play together in the very same old barn that your mothers romped and played in when they were little children as you are now."

"Why, I couldn't think of anything more like a pretty story—the kind we read in books." And good Aunt Nannie bundled up the pinky ears under hoods, and the funny little dimpled hands that would double up into fists she put in warm mittens, and the capes and shawls over fat shoulders, and with a joyous twittering like spring swallows they set off in a group for Uncle Alick's barn.

There was Hattie, and Lily, and Susie, and Louise, and last among the girl cousins, but not least, was a little visitor from Pittsburg, May Hedges.

I guess there would not have been all this noise and merriment, only May was a new cousin, and they wanted to please her and make her visit a happy one. Of the boy cousins, there was Harry and Lute, and Norman, and a little fellow who walked with two crutches, Jack.

Oh! but Uncle Alick's house is a good place for young ones to visit. In the attic they find old letters and picture-books, and funny bonnets and coats, and queer things to play with; in the wide roomy cellar are cream and apples, and between the attic and cellar are cheerful rooms, with books, and plants and pictures, and good dinners, and everything to make people glad and happy. The porch opens into an orchard, and beyond it lie breezy woodland hills, with grape-vine swings anywhere.

No wonder the child cousins hurried little May Hedges from the depot up to Uncle Alick's.

May was an only child, and somewhat spoiled. You could see that by the curl of her red lip, as she looked at the plain white kerchief neatly pinned across Aunt Nannie's bosom, and then down at her own dainty furs and fine clothing.

But the cousins were sensible little folks, and they loved May right off at first sight.

They all ran, hop, skip and jump, down the bank, then out into the road, past the big walnut tree, and were so cunning and sprightly they looked just like little faries.

Suddenly May stopped and tipped her head sidewise, just for all the world like a blue jay when she looks sharply up into the far-off sky, and said to Louise: "Now, see here, Weesie, it's too bad to have that boy you call Jack going with us; why, the patches on his old breeches are all swinging loose like shingles in the wind! You can see his red legs all bare, and not half look; let's make him go home."

The little girls all stopped and stood still. May could have ruled them like a queen. There were the boys ahead of them. Jack's lisping voice loudest of all, and his round ruddy face sweet and bright and beaming with joy.

Oh! what a noble thing it is to be brave and true, and courageous enough to stand up for the right.

"Why, May Hedges?" said Weesie, with a wonderful wise, long face, her blue eyes deeper and tender and womanly as she came by and put her arms around May, and her lips down till they almost touched her new cousin's cheek—"why, that boy we call Jack is our own cousin, and his mother is a widow who weaves and washes, and works very hard, and his pa is a shot man—a dead soldier; you ought to be sorry. And then poor Jack is a cripple, too, and all the boy they've got!" and Weesie nodded her head every time she added a new item to the pitiful story.

"Oh! oh!" said May; making the roundest mouth and the roundest eyes, "I am so sorry for poor Jack! I don't care how ragged he goes now; if that's so, I'll just be real good to him! Ho, Jacky! hold on there!" said she, and away she ran and caught up with him and linked her arm in his saying, "We two'll go together! I'll show you the nicest hiding places and won't tell on ye, and you must not tell on me!"

Jack looked on the little sprite and smiled admiringly, as much as to say: "You're a darling, that's what you are, May Hedges!"

Lilly told me afterward that it nearly made the tears come in her eyes when she saw poor Jack on his crutches, hopping along beside the light-footed little queen of a cousin, her crimson merino playing in the winds with his fluttering rags, and her bright, intelligent face close beside his.

Not many children would have stood up bravely and honestly as did the hero, 'Weesie. That is the kind of stuff good men and women are made of.

Oh! they did have the most fun in Uncle Alick's barn.

Old bats and spiders were brushed by curly heads and flying drapery from their dusky hiding places; and the mother-birds, that had called in on their journey southward to look good-by at their summer nests, sat on the rafters and drooped their wings, and wondered what all this noise meant.

"Yeep! yeep!" Jack would pipe out from the bottom of the wheat-bin, where no one had thought of looking; and peep! would May Hedges chime, as fine-voiced and clear as a katydid's, from the dusty old beam overhead, on which she was lying flat on her face, her clothes all tucked closely about her.

Uncle Rube came in, and forgetful of his ripe years, romped and played hide, and helped hide the others, and made their fun a great deal funnier, because he knew so many cunning tricks and ways of hiding little folks.

He tied Weesie up in a sack, and stood it among a lot of sacks that were full of grain, and there she stood, looking just like a sack of wheat waiting to be hauled off to the Mill. She got so tickled hearing all the cousins wonder where she was, she could not stand it any longer, so the sack tumbled over and rolled about, and laughed out loud, and that was Weesie.

◆

Riddle.—I have about me:

	Answers.
Two fine buildings,	Temples.
A foreign coin,	Crown.
Part of a bell,	Tongue.
A garden vegetable,	Pulse.
A barren tract of land,	Waist.
Part of a saw,	Teeth.
A rainbow,	Iris—of the eye.
An isthmus,	Neck.
An article used for spinning,	Toe (Tow).
What a physician does,	Heels.
The summit of a hill,	Brow.
A South American animal,	An Ape.
An artist's utensil,	Palate.
An English library,	Bohn's.
What every one likes to have over his head,	Roof—of the mouth.
What is in every one's closet or household,	A skeleton.
Adam's first loss,	A rib.
What is necessary to all stringed instruments,	A bridge—of the nose.

◆

Medical Hints.

1. If a man faints, place him flat on his back and let we him alone.

2. If any poison is swallowed, drink instantly half a glass of cold water, with a heaping teaspoonful each of common salt and ground mustard stirred into it; this vomits as soon as it reaches the stomach; but for fear some of the poison might remain, swallow the whites of one or two raw eggs, or drink a cup of strong coffee, these two being antidotes for a greater number of poisons than any dozen other articles known, with the advantage of their being always at hand; if not, a pint of sweet oil, or lamp oil, or "drippings," or melted butter or lard, are good substitutes, especially if they vomit quickly.

3. The best thing to stop the bleeding of a moderate cut instantly, is to cover it well with cobweb, flour, and salt, half and half.

4. If the blood comes from a wound by jets or spurts, be spry, or the man may die in a few minutes, because the artery is severed; tie a handkerchief closely around near the part between the wound and the heart; put a stick between the handkerchief and the skin, and twist it around until the blood ceases to flow; keep it there until the doctor comes; if in a position where the handkerchief can not be used, press the thumb on a spot near the wound, between the wound and the heart; increase the pressure until the bleeding ceases, but do not lessen the pressure for an instant before the physician arrives, so as to glue up the wound by coagulation or cooling of the hardening blood.

5. If your clothing takes fire, slide the hands down the dress, keeping them as close to the body as possible, at the same time sinking to the floor by bending the knees; this has a smothering effect upon the flames; if not extinguished or great headway gotten, lie down on the floor and roll over; or better, envelope yourself in a carpet, rug, bedcloth, or any garment you can get hold of, always preferring woolen.

6. If the body is tired, rest; if the brain is tired, sleep.

7. If the bowels are loose, lie down in a warm bed, remain there, and eat nothing until well.

8. If the action of the bowels does not occur at the usual hour, eat not an atom until they do act, at least for thirty-six hours; meanwhile drink largely of cold water or hot teas, and exercise in the open air to the extent of a gentle perspiration, and keep this up until things are righted; this suggestion, if practiced, would save myriads of lives every year, both in the city and country.

9. The three best medicines in the world are warmth, abstinence, and repose.—Hall's Journal of Health.

◆

Impostor--Pass Him Around.

A man by the name of "SAMUEL ARMSTRONG," hailing from Afton Lodge No 360, N. Y., is a regular cheat and swindler; has deserted a wife and seven small children, at North Harpersfield, N. Y.; has passed for a Mason at this place for some time, but has suddenly decamped for parts unknown, with eight hundred dollars money belonging to his partner.

Said man is about 40 years old, 5 feet 8 inches high, dark hair, slightly gray, retreating chin; wears a big square and compass; dresses well; calculated to deceive.

By order of Dallas City Lodge No. 235.

JONATHAN RICE, Sec.

July 24th, 1869.

Married.

At Corning, Missouri, the 3d inst., by the Rev. A. Nolty, Bro. H. Grebe, Sec. of Savannah Lodge No. 71, to Miss B. Wilbur, daughter of Bro. I. U. Wilbur, of Charleston, Ills.

Died.

In Philadelphia, on the 27th ult., of cholera infantum, LELIA WRIGHT, aged 4 months, daughter of George F. and Elina Wright.

Chicago papers copy.

At Cincinnati, on the 23d of July, Bro. A. H. LEE, of Prairie du Rocher, Ill., aged 49 years and 10 months.

Bro A. H. Lee was a member of Polar Star Lodge No. 79, of this city, and was one of the purest and best Masons who ever lived. The principles of Freemasonry were to his heart the realization of man's noblest existence, and he lived up to them. He was loved by the poor and needy wherever he was known. In the midst of a useful existence he has been stricken down, mourned by a very large circle of friends. On the 26th his lodge received his remains, and performed the lodge services in his memory, and immediately after the funeral rites of the Episcopal church were peformed by Bro. and Rev. Ed. F. Berkely (rector of St. George's church), in the large room of Freemason's Hall. On the 27th the lodge accompanied his earthly remains to his late residence in Illinois, and paid the last honors of the Fraternity. He will be recollected by many as the one who drew the Crosby Opera House in Chicago, and with his usual Masonic zeal he loaned the Masonic Hall Association of St. Louis $140,000, at a reasonable interest, on long time. He also donated to his lodge, for the widows and orphans, $5,000 worth of stock of said association. May his soul reap the reward of the just, and may his remains lie in peace beside those of his beloved wife, whose death we mentioned a short time ago.—Freemason (St. Louis).

ST. CLAIR NURSERIES,
SUMMERFIELD - - ILLINOIS,
ESTABLISHED IN 1856.

I offer to Planters and Dealers a large and well grown stock of

FRUIT AND ORNAMENTAL TREES,
Hardy Native Grape Vines,
EVERGREENS, ROSES, SHRUBS, &C.

The stock offered for sale the coming fall, owing to a favorable season, has made a fine growth, and will, I think, give satisfaction to all.

The attention of Dealers is specially invited to my unusually fine stock of STANDARD APPLES, consisting of all the leading

WESTERN & SOUTHWESTERN SORTS.

Wholesale and Retail Catalogues, now out, and forwarded to all applicants.
7v8-3t E. F. BABCOCK.

TRANSCENDANT CRABS.

St. Clair Nurseries, Summerfield, Ill.
I have a large stock of Transcendant, Large Red, Yellow, and Cherry Crabs, low headed and well branched, 4 to 6 feet high, $20. per 100, $180. per 1000. No charge for packing.
v8-7 E. F. BABCOCK.

R. ORENDORFF,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Business Solicited in the State and Federal Courts.
4v8-6m*

The Latest Sensation
The question
"Where shall I Buy Pianos and Organs?"
ANSWERED.

IF you want to buy the most beautiful in style and finish; the sweetest and purest toned; the most durable and in every way the Best Instruments, then buy of

A. BOWER,
SOLE AGENT IN ILLINOIS FOR
SMITH'S AMERICAN PIANOS,
IN EIGHT STYLES,
New and beautiful, indorsed by the best men of the nation.
CARPENTER & COLEMAN'S
CELEBRATED & UNEQUALED ORGANS,
In 31 Styles, and Melodeons in 25 Styles.

Good Agents wanted. Send for terms and price-lists. Address all letters to

A. BOWER, Brimfield, Ill.

N. B.—One-tenth of the net profits given to the Sunday-School cause. 6v8-3t.

VIRGIL PRICE
MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Manufacturers of all kinds of
Masonic Materials, Swords,
BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.,
No. 144 GREENE STREET,
NEW YORK.

Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO
KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.

Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords. 1v8-1y

H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.,
25 SOUTH FIFTH ST.,
SPRINGFIELD, - - ILLINOIS,
Dealer in
Masonic Manuals of all Kinds.

MASONIC, HISTORICAL,
and
LITERARY WORKS.

DIPLOMAS,
for all
Branches of the Order.

BLANKS & BLANK BOOKS
For Every Possible Use in LODGES, CHAPTERS, COUNCILS,
and
COMMANDERIES.

ALL KINDS OF
OFFICIAL JEWELS,
OFFICIAL AND DRESS REGALIA,
FURNITURE, CHARTS,
and
PICTURES
FOR LODGES & CHAPTERS.

Knight Templar Equipments,
&c., &c., &c.

PRINTING & BINDING,
OF ALL KINDS,
DONE TO ORDER,
At as Low Rates,
AND IN AS NEAT STYLE,
as done by any
PUBLISHING HOUSE
IN THE WEST.

CATALOGUES,
Containing Prices and Descriptions, sent free, by mail, to any address.

STEREOTYPING.

I am prepared to do
STEREOTYPING
Of all kinds, at as low rates and as good style as it can be done in Chicago or St. Louis.

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, SEPTEMBER 15, 1869. NO. 9.

Poetry.

Thoughts suggested by reading "Infelicia," by Adah Isaacs Menken.

Poor, tortured heart, why did'st thou feel
  The gates of Heaven 'gainst thee would close
That naught of hope and trust remained,
  No grain of comfort or repose?

Sinful and erring was thy life,
  And darkly crossed by self-disgust;
God's pitying eye is over all;
  He can remove all dross and rust.

Though "the world," for sins, condemn thee,
  Could it all thy anguish know,
Then how soon, with true compassion,
  Pity to thy name 'twould show.

Thrilling words of truth and beauty
  Thou hast left recorded here:
And, for every sinful error,
  Made atonement with a tear.

Here thy vision was obstructed;
  Doubtful clouds loomed up before;
While behind, grim memory's pathway
  Seemed to bar the heavenly door.

Gone beyond us, through the darkness,
  Into the dim forevermore,
We may hope, through God's deep mercy,
  Thou'st landed on the heavenly shore.

SAVANNA, ILL., Feb. 6, 1869. M. A. B.

Only Charlie.

What is coming? Something bright;
It fills the doorway with its light;
It thrills the room with music sweet
Of laugh and prattle and little feet;
It makes it bloom like a garden bed
With white and blue and yellow and red,
It covers the wall with pictures made
Of every moment's light and shade,
And heightens all the sunlit air
With dancing eyes and flowing hair,
Bidding our hearts sing out with joy—
And yet it's only a little boy,
  Only our little Charlie.

Why this heartache? Troubles throng,
All the world has lost its song;
All the flowers have turned to gray;
All the sunlight passed away;
All the pictures turned to shade,
By a random thought that strayed.
Heaven be praised! 'Twas fancy, then,
All the world is bright again.
How he rules—the little king!
Crown and sceptre we meekly bring,
Owning his royalty undefiled—
Yet he is only a little child,
  Only our little Charlie.

Our Cotemporaries.

Numbers 3 and 4, Mason's Home Book, by Leon Hyneman, at hand.

The August Masonic Monthly came promptly. It devotes nearly six pages to notices of Masonic papers. We come in for full one-sixth of the Editors' "Hash." When we were Grand Secretary, that office was filled by nuisances, according to the Monthly and its correspondents. Now the self-assumed classical editor and his friend Jacob, are after Grand Masters, especially William, James, and Harman. We are not ashamed of our company. The editor admits that we have sense enough to escape the reputation of being a donkey, or a genius. We would like to return the compliment, if we could. He says Dr. Mackey gave our plain TROWEL some character; we well remember when the editor was anxious that the Doctor should do the same thing for the Monthly. We also get some credit for common sense, but the editor claims that we do not mystify our readers or weary their patience with fine writing or classical compositions. Of course, no one does that out of Boston, no, not even the American Freemason, nor the Magazine either, although a Boston affair. He classes the editor of the (St. Louis) Freemason among the fighting men, and says that the St. Louis editor never thinks until he is done with controversy. The editor of the Monthly does not intend to grant any interval for reflection to the St. Louis editor, who gets a gentle reminder that his admissions in favor of northern Scotch Masonry is contrary to the rules of the ring, and says that the piety of the northerners is cant. The editor of the Monthly is in no danger of any such suspicion. Rant, however, is as bad as cant. Of the first, the Monthly has a plenty.

The leader is an abusive article of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, and a patronizing support of Grand Master Gardner, over the left, and is evidently intended to embarrass him in his labors for Masonry in the Old Commonwealth. The Monthly is well up in modern "Hub" ideas, and because it is fashionable to be an unbeliever, it follows the fashion. It would never do for the Monthly to sustain the Grand Master of Christian Knighthood; oh no! it don't believe in it; Jacob Norton don't believe in it; we presume the Am. Freemason don't, either, and in that respect the three are alike. And fearing that Grand Master Gardner may do something which the Monthly has so long been clamoring to have done, it evidently intends to rally its friends to join the old fogies and prevent him.

Jacob Norton has an article on American Grand Masters. We have never seen this brother. We do not know what sort of clothes he wears. He sets himself up for a genius. He speaks ex-cathedra. He knows it all. Like the king's clown, there is no appeal from him. Laws, constitutions, and usages are only so much waste paper, and the Grand Masters who regard them are only so many fools, villains, or despots.

With him Christianity is bigotry, religion is fanaticism, and modern Masonry innovation, and Judge Gibson, of New York, a poor Grand Master. Some one attempts to be classical over the Montagues and Montacutes. Possibly it may give the Monthly a title to a classical reputation. A plain common sense character it never claimed. It is above that level. It shoots at higher game. Jurisprudence, practical Masonry, and things which men of common sense can understand, are beneath its plane. Believing nothing, planning nothing, looking for nothing, it is constantly soaring into regions where such men as Palmer, Drummond, Gardner, Lewis, and their like, can see nothing.

The New York Dispatch has a large Masonic department, edited by Past Grand Master Holmes, who is an able writer, and a discriminating editor.

The New York Courier continues its Masonic department, but it has none of its former vim or ability.

Western Masons will gladly learn that the former Masonic editor of the Courier, Bro. Fitzgerald Tisdall, is now editing the Masonic columns of Pomeroy's Democrat. Long may he wave.

The Landmark, a Masonico-Odd-Fellowship-Literary affair, comes regularly.

The Keystone is regular and welcome. We find in it an article from the Mystic Star, which escaped our notice in reading that paper, in relation to Mt. Moriah Lodge, at Salt Lake. It is alleged that the lodge received instructions from Bro. DeBell, as Grand Master of Montana. That Bro. never was Grand Master of Montana, but was Grand Master of Nevada, and issued the dispensation for said Lodge and subsequently gave the instructions mentioned.

The Masonic Review, for June, has an article on the birth-place of Masonry in Ohio. Marietta has the honor of having the first, American Union. Gen. Rufus Putnam and Capt. Jonathan Heart, companions of Gen. Washington, and Rev. Daniel Storey, pastor of the first church organized at Marietta, were among the early Masters.

The Masonic Record of Western India, for July, has made a quick trip to our sanctum. So much for the Pacific Railway. Mrs. Hopkins, wife of Bro. J. G. Hopkins, presented the Lodge of Emulation with a nice cushion for the volume of the Sacred Law. Masonry, in various departments, is flourishing in Bombay, in Bangalore, Lanowlee, and the Central Provinces.

The Evergreen, for August, has a "Detective's Story," written in the peculiar slyle of the author. Father Adoniram is a readable correspondent. Of our Presidents, he says that only Washington, Jackson, Polk, and Buchanan were Masons. To these he may add, Jefferson and Johnson, and we are quite certain both Madison and Monroe.

Bro. Penick, of St. Joseph, Mo., corrects the statement of Bro. Mitchell, in the Evergreen, in regard to the status of a brother under charges of unmasonic conduct from 1844 to 1853. We have long been of the opinion tha Bro. Mitchell is not sufficiently careful in his statements, and we have the best of reasons for saying that Bro. Penick is usually fortified in what he says.

"The Scotch Rite vs. The Grand Commandery of Missouri," is one of the editor's best articles, and now, being so well stated, and of course so well understood, we hope the matter may drop out of discussion, for while that continues, our Missouri Templars will be liable to stand their ground; but with a fixed position by our Scotch Rite brethren, supported by nearly all the Templars in the S. J., silence will bring reflection, reflection wisdom, and a recantation of the discourteous enactments of our respected Missouri Templars.

Considering the unprovoked attack of the Monthly upon the Evergreen, the editor replies to him temperately, forcibly, and candidly. The idea, however, that the editor of the Monthly would "enjoy life decidedly better" by being "just toward his cotemporaries," is mirth-provoking. We shall look for Satan to rebuke sin, when that event comes around.

We rejoice to hear, from the Evergreen, that Grand High Priest Wright is about to make the the acquaintance of his wife.

This number is the best of all the Evergreen issues we have seen.

The (London weekly) Freemason comes regularly. It seems to run with the editor of the American Freemason, while its competitor, the Magazine, takes to its bosom that editor's erewhile associate of the Kentucky Freemason of years ago.

The February number of the Freemason's Magazine is at hand.

The (St. Louis) Freemason. The editor is again exercised in regard to the Scottish Rite, and is especially sharp on the editors of Pomeroy's Democrat and the Evergreen.

"Mercenary and Malicious Rejections" is our article, although credited to the Token.

We rejoice to see, by the Freemason, that Grand Master Vincil has appointed P. G. Master Turner, Representative near our Grand Lodge.

The (London) Freemason's Magazine is essentially an organ and a news receptacle. It brings up the news, in condensed form, from all the British dominions.

The Masonic Record, for September, has an address by H. P. Keeble, followed by the following articles: Worshipful Master—Life—French Women—Concerning Doctors—Masonic Orphan's Home—Wearing Masonic Jewelry—Ancient Arabian Poetry—Temperance, a Masonic Tenet—Masonry in India—The Mason's Estimate of the Bible—Tidings from the Craft—The Rose Croix—A Well Regulated Lodge—Historical Memoranda of Cumberland Lodge—What a Volcano Can Do—Our Musical Friends, the Notes—New Books—Waring's Courtship—Hugh, the Hunchback.

We came pretty near missing the August Kentucky Freemason, which came too late for notice last month. The proceedings of grand chapters and grand lodges receive leading notice; the discussion between John T. Walsh, of Newborn, N. C., and John A. Williams, President of the College at Harrodsburg, occupies a prominent place, and the paper abounds in rare literary selections. "The Door Tyled" is one of the editor's best Masonic articles;—the general make up can not be excelled.

Freemason's Magazine for September—Contents: Origin of the Scottish Rite in America—Memoranda of the History of Knights Templar in Scotland; an article showing great research—Laying a Corner-Stone at Carleton, New Brunswick—Grand Lodge of British Columbia—The Labarum—Royal Arch Masonry; the Innovations of the American System—Sir Christopher Wren—"A Prince has Fallen in Israel;" Gen. Thos. P. Auguste—Anti-Masonry, from THE TROWEL—The Rite of Memphis—Grand Lodge of Iowa—Freemasonry in Portugal—Knights Templar in Camp—Antiquity—Constitutions Supreme Council 33°—Our decisions—President Monroe; his reception, as a Mason, by Cumberland Lodge, at Nashville—The word "Selah"—The Burning Bush; the Mission of Moses—Freemasonry and Abd El Kader—Extract from our address at Lewistown—Miscellaneous—Chit-Chat. By C. W. Moore, Boston; $2.50 per annum.

Voice of Masonry for September.—Contents: Holy Land Article—Proceedings Supreme Council—Copy of an English Masonic Notice—The Grand Lodge of Illinois and the Grand Master; an article, which ought not to have been written—Extract from the Report of Ill. Bro. Goodall, on Foreign Correspondence, in Supreme Council—Maasters of Lodges U. D., from TROWEL—Romanism and Masonry; Now and Then—The Oldest City in the World—Laying of the Corner-Stone of the Hall of the Turnverein, at Freeport—Our decisions—From Labor to Refreshment—Rhetoric of Masonry—Monthly Record of Daily Occurrences—The Bright Side—Editor's Drawer and Quarry. By J. C. W. Bailey, 164 Clark street, Chicago: $2. per annum.

Our Travels.

August 11.—By the C. A. & St. Louis, Ill. Central, and C. R. I. & Pacific roads, we reached

SENECA,

LaSalle county, at 2 P. M., Thursday, August 12. At Ottawa we were joined by R. W. Bro. W. S. Easton, D. D. G. M., and W. Breth. Burgess and Gondolf, W. Masters of Occidental and Humboldt Lodges. About twenty members of Seneca Lodge assembled, and a full interchange of ideas and views ensued, and the lodge closed in good order.

Returning, we tarried a few hours at

OTTAWA,

and found ourself a guest at the Clifton House—the best in its arrangements, cuisine, structure, and finish that we have seen, outside of Chicago and Springfield, in this State. In company with Bro. Easton we repaired to the hall, where Occidental Lodge No. 40 and Humboldt Lodge No. 555 were awaiting our arrival. We were soon waited upon by R. W. Bro. Wade, W. Breth. Nash and Gondolf, and were introduced, and welcomed with the grand honors in an elegant manner. Music followed, and then several, with ourself, spoke of matters Masonic, and the Masonic choir discoursed excellent music, both vocal and instrumental. We have visited Ottawa when we were sad; this occasion was joyful and pleasant.

At low twelve we were westward bound; at 4:30 A. M., Friday morning, we landed in Peoria, and at 5:30 we were speeding over the C. B. & Quincy to GALESBURG.

A short visit to Breth. Lanphere, Carson, Price, Stewart, Craig, and others, and by the same road we were soon in

MACOMB.

The following day was to be, and was, a noted day in the history of McDonough county. The corner-stone of the new Court House was to be laid, the old settlers were to organize, and a convention was to be held.

On Saturday morning, August 14, we were treated to a fine shower, which cooled the air and laid the dust.

At the appointed hour, brethren assembled from Macomb, Kyle, Picket, Blandenville, Golden Gate, Industry, Tennessee, Plymouth, Avon, Bardolph, and Augusta Lodges, and the Grand Lodge was opened in the spacious and convenient hall of the local lodges, and, assisted by R. W. Breth. J. B. Kyle as Deputy, ——— as S. G. Warden, R. D. Hammond as J. G. Warden, Judge Simmons as G. Marshal, with a full corps of other officers, we repaired, about two hundred strong, and with good music by the Quincy band, to the foundation of the new Court-House, where we found the old settlers, and an immense throng of men, women, and children. The stone was laid with the usual ceremonies and in good order. Rev. Bro. Reynolds officiated as Grand Chaplain. Bro. E. E. Myers, of Springfield, filled his proper position as Architect. This talented and educated gentleman has made his way, by the force of his own energy, talents, and industry, until his position among the ablest architects in the West is no longer a problem. His library is worth from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars, and from penury he is fast acquiring both fame and wealth, and business is flowing in to him from every hand.

At Macomb we were the guest of Dr. Kyle, and the recipient of many attentions from Dr. Hammond, Judge Simmons, and other brethren.

In the evening we went to Quincy, where we spent the Sabbath, and at low twelve we were home again.

August 27.—By the Toledo, W. & Western we left Springfield at 10:30 A. M., arrived at Tolono for dinner, and proceeded by carriage to

CHAMPAIGN.

Here we met R. W. Breth. Ashley, Hoag, Cunningham, and Hartman, with brethren from Tolono, Urbana, Sadorus, Mahomet, Pera, Rantoul, Paxton, Sidney, Homer, and Bement. Dr. Faulkner, Master of the lodge, with his Wardens, brethren, and many ladies, and Bro. Hess, with his committee of arrangements, were busy as Time in getting ready for a success, and most admirably did they succeed.

We found a bountiful supper at the Railroad House, with good attendance and hospitable treatment.

Early in the evening, those who were to act in Grand Lodge assembled at the old hall, and were formed by W. Bro. A. T. Darrah, of Tolono, Grand Marshal. We were assisted by R. W. Bro. J. O. Cunningham, D. D. G. M., as Deputy; R. W. Bro. Rodney Ashley, D. D. G. M., as S. G. Warden; W. Bro. G. W. Hartman as J. G. Warden; R. W. Bro. Wilson Hoag as Grand Architect, and a full compliment of other officers.

The procession marched to the new, elegant, and spacious hall of Western Star Lodge No. 240, where we found it crowded to its utmost capacity with beautiful ladies, citizens, and brethren.

The music, both instrumental and vocal, was elegant, choice, refined. The hall was dedicated amid profound silence and attention. But now came the event of the evening—a speech from General Charles Black, lately of Danville, but now of Champaign.

In ordinary appearance the speaker would pass for a modest, courteous gentleman—nothing more. Like Douglas, Baker, Hardin, Campbell, and Knowlton, he would not be selected as an orator upon sight. We have heard Foote, of Vermont, in his towering flights; Judge Prentiss, with his compact, plaintive, and logical appeals; we have listened to E. D. Baker until we were on fire, and to many other eloquent men, but have never been so taken by surprise as by the masterly, magical, and musical eloquence of General Black. It is impossible to do justice to it by any words of ours. Brave soldiers, gallant men, and elegant, well-bred, beautiful women, all alike honored the scarred and chivalrous soldier with a hearing, silent, attentive, spell-bound, and such as few can win.

The banquet would have been an honor to the best taste in Chicago or St. Louis.

In company with Brother Hutchinson, behind his splendid matched blacks, we sped over the prairies to Tolono, and at 6:10 we were home.

ADDRESS,

DELIVERED BY REV. O. SPRINGSTEAD,

On the Presentation of a Watch to Phillip Hiett, W. M. of Cheney's Grove Lodge No. 468, of A., F. and A. M.

Worshipful Master:

I have a sentiment to offer, for the benefit of the brethren, on those blessed words that a few moments ago fell from your lips with such expressive tenderness. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." From that unhappy hour, when the first born of Adam imbrued his hand in his brother's blood, until now, man has been a foe to man. Those high in authority have used their power to lead mighty armies into the field, deluged the land and stained the seas with blood, caused the very earth to reverberate and the heavens to echo with the cry of anguish that has gone up from the bosom of suffering humanity.

But alas! How are the mighty fallen! Like him who, on that memorable night in Babylon, committed sacrilege, "The hand of the Invisible has inscribed upon the wall" their irrevocable doom. Where is Thebes? Where is Athens? Where is Palmyra, Carthage, Priam, ancient Rome, and the cities of the plain? Each, in their turn, enjoyed a brief imaginary immortality, pierced the very clouds with monuments, reared to perpetuate their fame through coming ages. They and their lofty monuments now moulder in common dust, and the owl hoots in the habitations of ancient kings, while the blessed Fraternity of A., F. and A. M. traces back its origin through the long period of five thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine years. She has stood unharmed amid the wrecks of empires and the overturning of nations, because of their blessedness of brotherly love. Let it continue. "It is like the precious ointment upon the head; as the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion: for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for ever more." I am my brother's keeper, has been the watchword of our Order through the lapse of the ages, in which all the thrones and dynasties of earth that have uttered the opposite sentiment, that fell from the lips of Cain while his hands were yet reeking in innocent blood, have crumbled and passed into oblivion. The lights of the Masonic altar never, since their first glimmerings illumed the pathway of man upon the darkened shores of time, shone so brightly as now.

Worshipful Master:—from the first opening of this lodge in Cheney's Grove, you have been ever with us; your assiduous labors are appreciated by the brethren.

By their request, and in their name, I bear to you this simple token of their regard, which I pray you to accept, not so much for its intrinsic value, as the Masonic sentiment it expresses and the kind feelings in which it is donated.

A beautiful hunting-case watch; the working of its parts concealed from common observation, like the mystic working of our Order, till "He who seeth in secret shall reward you openly."

Touch this spring; the dial opens and discloses three faithful monitors of time, that, like the three lights in Masonry, leads, by regular successive steps, this worshipful lodge to the grand worshipful assembly, in the presence chamber of the Great Worshipful and Adored.

Another opening discloses many parts, each locked into an embrace with the other, and all moving in harmony to consummate the design of its author. In like manner may we live and act, to consummate the grand designs of the author of our being, till the light of Masonry, which for so many thousand years has cast its beams upon the dark shores of sin cursed earth, are lost in the bright effulgence of His regal splendor whose right it is to reign.

Here, in finely engraved lines, you behold the signet of the donators, which will bear blessed memories while life lingers in your clay tenament, and will be a rich legacy to your children, when your form is lost to mortal vision and your bones are mouldered into dust.

Some Ideas of the Origin of Freemasonry.

Ragon, in his excellent work, Orthodoxie Maçonnique, assigns the origin of the Freemasonry of the present day to the year 1717. He says that the corporations of builders, sent by the Roman Senate into Gaul, established no initiatory colleges; that they were strangers to the mysteries of the secret doctrine; and that they possessed nothing which resembled either the ancient philosophic doctrine; which they had no mission to propagate, nor the Freemasonry of the present day, which then did not exist. He says that the constitution of working Masons of the year 926, contained no regulations for a philosophic society; that these working Masons were not *Free*masons—the Masonry of York was not *Free*masonry; and that the associations of Masons of Scotland, the hereditary patronship of William St. Clair, and the letter of James VI., protector of those Masons, written on the 25th of September, 1590, to Patrick Copelund, by his title of Superintendent of the art and trade of Masonry in the district of Aberdeen, Banff, and Kincardin, had no connection at all with Freemasonry.

He gives the following account of the real origin of Freemasonry, as it now exists and is pracoioed:

In the year 1646 the celebrated antiquary, Elias Ashmole, a great alchemist, who was born at Litchfield in 1617, and died in 1692, founder of the museum at Oxford; and Col. Mainwaring, were admitted into the society of working Masons at Warrington, into which persons who knew nothing of the art of building were beginning to gain admission.

In the same year a society of Rose Croix, framed upon the ideas of the New Atlantis of Bacon, met at Freemasons' Hall, in London. Ashmole, and several other brethren of the Rose Croix, thought the time had come for abandoning the formulas of reception used by these workmen, which consisted only in certain ceremonies very like those used by all other associations of trades and professions. They substituted in their place, by means of the oral traditions of which they made use with their aspirants to the occult sciences, a written mode of initiation based on the ancient mysteries and on those of Egypt and Greece; and the first initiatory degree was thus framed in almost the same shape which it now has. This first degree being approved by the initiates, the degree of Fellow Craft was framed in 1648, and that of Master soon afterward; but the beheading of Charles I. in 1649, and the part which Ashmole took in favor of the Stuarts, caused great modifications in this third and last degree, which then became biblical, while it still retained as its basis that great hieroglyphic of nature symbolized towards the end of December. At the same period arose the degrees of Secret Master, Perfect Master, Elu, Irish Master, of which Charles I., under the name of Hiram, was the hero; but the degrees of political cliques were nowhere professed, though afterwards they became ornaments of Scottish Masonry.

In 1650 the non-working members, accepted in the corporations, made it secretly assume, especially in Scotland, a political tendency. The Chiefs (Protectors) of the Scottish workmen, partisans of the Stuarts, secretly labored to re-establish the throne overturned by Cromwell. They availed themselves of the isolation that protected the meetings of the Freemasons, to hold in their places of meeting cabals, in which their plans were concerted in security. The beheading of Charles I. was to be avenged. To effect that, and to be able to know one another, these partisans proposed a Templar degree, in which the violent death of the innocent Jacques de Molai called for vengeance. Ashmole, entertaining the same political opinions, then modified his Master's degree, and substituted, in place of the Egyptian doctrine which made of it and the two first degrees one consistent whole, a biblical vail, incomplete and incongruous, as the Juistical system required the initiates of the sacred words of the three degrees reproducing those of the names of the Grand Master of the Templars. This is why ever since that period, the initiates have always regarded the degree of Master, the completion of Freemasonry, as a degree to be remodeled; and it was, no doubt, after this reform, that the two columns and the words of the first degrees also received biblical names.

In 1703 the Freemasons publicly admitted into the association at London, persons who were unacquainted with the art of building. The philosophic masons, styled accepted, long before then intermingled with the actual working Masons, had now become strong enough publicly to bring about the desired transformation.

In 1717, he says, the four lodges at London met in February, adopted the three rituals drawn up by Ashmole, threw off the yoke of York, and declared themselves independent and the governing power of the Fraternity, under the title, "Grand Lodge of London."

Communications.

Editor of Trowel:

DEAR BROTHER:—I notice in your excellent paper for June several articles on the recent assembing of our so-called "Christian" calumniators, and right glad I was to notice the treatment they received at your hands. But thinking there may be some honest persons who may be led to believe this canting crew, is it not our duty to show up the prominent movers of this anti-masonic crusade in their true light?

If the brethren in different parts of our country will only inform us when they are acquainted with these Quixotic crusaders, I am convinced we shall hear much less of their tirades than we do now.

One of this "Convention," I see by the papers, says he was regularly initiated, etc., as a Mason, and, furthermore, proceeds to give his account of his initiation. He pretends to go quite fully into the particulars of his Masonic experiences; but why he turned against the Institution he seems to have forgotten.

Amidst the manifold cares and perplexities of his religious duties (for he has Rev. before his name), the little incident which led him to turn away from the "wrath which is to come," and denounce the Masonic Brotherhood, has apparently slipped his mind. But these little facts are oftentimes of the greatest importance, and as I happen to have the documents within reach, I will jog our Rev. canter's memory.

Not many years ago the Rev. Moses Thatcher, for this is our hero's name, "officiated" in an adjoining town as a minister of Christ. His conduct, however, was very peculiar for one holding so exalted a position, and finally led to an investigation; the result was endeavored to be kept private, but being known, he was tried by the lodge under whose jurisdiction he then was, on the charge of gross and unmasonic conduct, and regularly found guilty of the crime of adultery, and forthwith expelled from all the rights and privileges of Masonry. This one charge was not the only one which might have been sustained by evidence given at the trial, but it served the purpose of the lodge, viz.: to rid our noble Institution of a worthless pretender and wicked man, and so was the only charge reported on the record of the proceedings.

I inclose below three items from our local papers which substantiate my remarks.

Fraternatly yours,
STEPHEN GOULD.

From the Providence Press, June 15.

The Rev. Moses Thatcher, of Cambridge, Ill., was speaker at the Chicago Christian Convention, in opposition to secret societies, and described the secret of his initiation as a Free Mason.

From the Same, June 16.

In our telegraphic summary, yesterday, we announced that the Rev. Moses Thatcher, of Cambridge, Ill., spoke in the Chicage Christian Convention, in opposition to secret societies, and professed to describe the proceedings of his initiation into the Masonic Brotherhood. There was a Rev. Moses Thatcher, who belonged to the Masonic Brotherhood of this city, years ago, but he was expelled from the Fraternity for conduct unmasonic, unchristian, and in violation of the civil law. If this is the same man, his evidence will not prove of much value for or against any moral institution.

From the Providence Journal, June 19.

We learn by the papers that Rev. Moses Thatcher, formerly of Wrentham, Mass., has been addressing religious societies somewhere out West, on the baleful influence of secret societies generally, and the Masonic Order particcularly, giving in illustration his experience as a member thereof. Our appreciation of anything about which the Rev. Moses may choose to talk is sadly lessened by the unpleasant remembrances which we have of the two hundred and fifty dollars which he sponged us out of in days gone by, and his utter failure to redeem his promise to pay us when we liberated him from jail in Norfolk county, so that he might return to Wysox, Penn., where he was then settled, and enter upon his labors as a preacher of the gospel. Onr advice to the Rev. Moses is to be honest himself before attempting to show that other men are bad citizens, even when such showing renders it necessary to violate an oath which he admits he took upon himself when admitted to the lodge-room.—Pawtucket Gazette.

◆

Green Bay.

There are few summer resorts in the West that enjoy a more enviable reputation than this watering place. The town of Green Bay is situated on the extreme southern point of the bay of the same name, in the State of Wisconsin, about one hundred and forty miles north of the Illinois line. It has direct connection by railroad with Chicago, and by water with all points on the lakes, and has a daily line of fine steamers running down the bay to Escanaba, and from thence passengers can take the peninsula branch of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad to Marquette and other summer resorts on Lake Superior. Fort Howard, the terminus of the Wisconsin branch of the C. & N. W. R. R., is a part of Green Bay in everything except the name. Almost the entire business of the two cities seems to be connected with the pine lumber trade in some way. While in Green Bay we were parties to several pleasant and some ludicrous events, such as do not always happen to "ye knight of the quill" while traveling around in search of items.

We had expected to join a party of friends and go with them to Marquette, but we tarried on the way with a brother Bohemian, with whom we had traveled in summer lands, where the orange tree blooms and the fervid rays of the Southern sun cover the earth with the gorgeous and never dying vegetation of the tropics. We arrived in time to find that our friends had gone on a bear hunting expedition (it was a bare hunt), and so we started out to see the sights. We soon came to the conclusion that Green Bay was the neatest, cleanest city we had ever been in, and we think so yet. Visited the office of the Green Bay Advocate, made the acquaintance of Mr. Charles Robinson, the editor-in-chief. Mr. Robinson has recently returned from an extensive tour in Europe, and with renewed health and energies he will give new life to his popular and influential journal, and prove himself a vigorous partisan in political contests. Personally speaking, long may he wave; the same to his able and gentlemanly assistant, Mr. ——.

At the wharf we found two parties bound on a pic-nic on the bay, in sailing boats. While meditating over our lonesome condition, and wishing we could take a ride, and indulging in a feeling of general disgust, we were invited by a gentleman present to join his party. We readily accepted the invitation. We embarked on a beautiful little yacht, the Star of the West. Rapidly we sped over the beautiful green waves, the refreshing breeze infusing new life into our travel-worn frame, and with merry songs and jokes the hours flew quickly by; sailing sometimes in the teeth of the wind and sometimes with it on our backs; sprinkled at times with a playful shower of spray, causing us to send forth peals of laughter, we arrived at a long, sandy peninsula named Point Sauble, about ten miles from our starting place; here we stopped for dinner. The first one ashore was a young gentleman, who made a grand jump from the boat and landed dry-shod. Fired by his noble example, and recollecting the deeds of our ancestors, we tried to imitate his example, but didn't, and waded ashore, feeling about as heavy as Sampson did while carrying off the gates of Gaza. The other gentlemen, a little wiser, waded ashore barefooted, and carried the ladies "on der baxs" to dry ground. The scenery from this point is very fine. On the one hand the government lighthouse and the bold outstanding shore; on the other, the wide expanse of waters and the long, rolling waves beating on the shores, and proclaiming aloud the might of the Great Creator.

We forgot our present surroundings, and, in imagination, we were on the prairies of Illinois, anon looking at the lovely Falls of Minnehaha; now floating on the bosom of the Father of Waters; viewing with awe and reverence the works of God in Mammoth Cave, or standing on sunny southern shores by the "deep blue sea." But a summons to dinner sent our fine thoughts "a winging away" and ourselves to a very substantial meal, for which the keen breezes had prepared us. We returned to the city about dusk, and here, in taking leave of our new found friends, we return them our sincere thanks for the generous entertainment which they gave us. Nowhere have we ever enjoyed ourself more, whether in the "crowded saloons of fashion," the busy marts of commerce, or in the wilderness. We spent two days in the timber with the before-mentioned hunting party. Found them camped by a little stream—the Pensaukie. They attempted to fish, but only got mosquito bites; they hunted vigorously, and killed a porcupine, although deer were so plenty that we scared them up from the road-side when driving past in a carriage. Bears were very plenty, and wolves came within three hundred yards of the camp at night. The Wisconsin timber roads are admirable; they generally have a deep rut on one side and a high stump or a log on the other. You hire a carriage, team, and driver, to take you to some fishing place about twenty miles away, and you walk one-half of the way, because the horses can not pull you through the sloughs, and walk the other half because they can not haul you over the big logs that lay across the road.

Wisconsin trees always fall across a road if possible; if not, they fall on a fence. We saw one gigantic fellow that had managed to block up a road and "smash" two fences. We very gravely lifted our hat and gave the conqueror a military salute.

And now, reader, if ever you visit Green Bay, don't lay around your hotel or go camping out, but take good long rides on the bay, both in sail and rowboats. The fresh breezes and exercise will soon restore your health and appetite.

WANDERER.

◆

Letter from Nova Scotia.

HALIFAX, NOVA SCOTIA, June 25, 1869.

To the Most Worshipful Harman G. Reynolds, Grand Master of Illinois:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I had the honor to receive, through the Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Nova Scotia, your notification of my appointment as representative of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Illinois, dated Springfield, 10th May.

On my admittance to the Grand Lodge of Nova Scotia and reception with grand honors, on the 23d instant, I returned thanks in the name of the Grand Lodge of Illinois for the cordial welcome which had been granted to your representative, with the expression of a hope that the harmony, which their action proved to exist between the two Grand Lodges, might never be disturbed.

I believe it to be my duty now to acquaint you, for the information of your Grand Lodge, that the District Grand Lodge of England and the Provincial Grand Lodge of Scotland, which for some time past had each been claiming independent jurisdiction here, did both, yesterday (Saint John's Day), cease altogether to exercise Masonic functions in the province, and have, with the free consent and hearty approval of every subordinate lodge within our limit, become amalgamated with and absorbed into the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Nova Scotia, with the honorable Alexander Keith at its head, whose installation, together with that of the other grand officers, took place on the day named; the happy event (which entirely removes all differences that existed) being subsequently celebrated by a public procession of the brethren and a banquet, at which some five hundred of the Fraternity and their guests were present.

In thanking you and the Grand Lodge of Illinois for the distinction conferred upon me by this appointment, allow me to say that I shall always endeavor to show myself worthy the confidence reposed in me.

I am, dear sir and brother, yours, most fraternally, John Scholfield.

Publications Received.

The Western Rural, a weekly for the farm and fireside, is published at 113 Madison street, Chicago, and 192 Jefferson avenue, Detroit, by H. N. F. Lewis, at $2 per year, weekly. It is a very large paper and has a very great variety of useful matter.

We are in receipt of The Masonic Wreath, from J. W. Avery & Co., North Brookfield, N. Y. The Wreath is a beautiful oval. In the centre are the following: "Faith, Hope, Charity—Faith in God, hope in immortality, charity to all mankind. The greatest of these is charity; for our faith may be lost in sight, hope end in fruition, but charity extends beyond the grave, through the boundless realms of eternity." Surmounting the whole is the All-seeing eye. At the base is the Mosaic pavement, altar, Bible, square, and compasses, gavel and rule, and on the borders are the beehive, G. and trowel, charter, keys, pens, book of constitutions, pot of incense, acacia, triangle, sun, moon, stars, comet, anchor, plum, square and level, &c. Address publishers.

The Western Monthly, published by Reed, Browne & Co., at 18 Tribune building, Chicago, is at hand for September. A very handsome engraving of Schuyler Colfax faces the leading article, which is a notice of him.

"The Man Under the Bed!" Don't read it. Harriet Beecher Stowe is sensational, and the chit-chat is a good museum of wit and humor.

Colman's Rural World comes regularly. It is a plain, common sense journal, such as should be welcome to every housekeeper, farmer, mechanic, horticulturist, and family.

The New Age, the organ of Odd Fellowship in California, and one of the best literary papers that come to our table, dons a new dress.

Packard's Monthly, for September, has a better make-up than usual. It is a very readable journal. Published by S. S. Packard, at 937 Broadway, New York, at a dollar a year.

Good Health, for September, can be had of Western News Company, Chicago. The article on "Sleep," in a former number, has been very useful to us. The September number is full of good articles.

Watson's Art Journal, published at 746 Broadway, New York, weekly, at $7 50 per year, is always accompanied by a beautiful fashion plate and a pattern, making fifty-two plates and carefully prepared patterns a year.

The Western Musical Review is published by H. L. Benham & Co., No. 1 Martindale's block, Indianapolis, Ind., monthly, at $1 per year. Musical people say it is worth the money richly.

Home Circle and Temperance Oracle comes regularly. Its temperance is unusually temperate.

Captain Mayne Reid's Onward, for September, is very rich and entertaining, both in its new and continued matter. Its position is stable, and the editorials display judgment, tact, combined with genuine wit, which makes every part of this fine magazine a rich treat for all classes of readers.

The Entomologist comes to us doubled in the size of its pages, with a beautiful cover, and full of insect engravings of the most costly and useful character. When one sees the havoc made with our fruit trees and fruit, and their rapid deterioration yearly, scientific investigations become highly important. The publisher does not include us in his published list of exchanges, although the journal comes to us regularly.

Oliver Optic's Weekly Magazine comes freighted with good things. "Our Boys and Girl" go for it in dead earnest.

The Mother's Journal.—Contents: A Mother's Treasures; a beautiful picture of mother, little girl, and babe—China and the Chinese—Ripe Wheat—Childhood's Home—Letter to Mothers—American Housewife—Gates Ajar—The Science of Going Up Stairs—Ethnological Speculations, continued from July—Only Ask—The Old Man's Farewell—Mary Melrose—The Rainy Dress—The Widower and the Motherless—Chats About Caged Birds, No. 2—Susie's Visit to the Country—Editorial—Domestic Department—Literary Notices. Edited by Mrs. Mary G. Clarke, 8 Cobb's building, Chicago; $2 a year.

These things are "Evident Tokens of Perdition."

From the Mystic Star.

So general has the objection to secret societies become among some of the religious sects, that we frequently hear them alluded to by clergymen in some discourteous language, either directly or indirectly, or in conversation spoken of dishonorably, to satisfy themselves of having done their duty to preach and talk against them.

Not many Sabbaths since, at a church where I have long attended, and love to attend—where I have heard the sacred truth proclaimed a multitude of times, with so much force that it has raised my desponding spirits through the weeks and months that followed—the above words was the object of discourse.

The evidences of perdition then mentioned were many, and were brought to mind so vividly, that they may have been words fitly and timely enunciated. One evidence was, that membership of a secret society, supporting their institution, and making a sacrilegious use of the Bible, by falsely construing its meanings.

I love to attend divine worship, and should feel it a punishment if I were deprived of so great a privilege. Notwithstanding all this, if I am a Freemason, is it an evidence of perdition? I may love and support the church, and work for it; I may have surrendered to its service, making all my efforts subordinate to its welfare; yet, because I belong to the order of Freemasons, and love to attend their meetings, all this makes no difference; it is an evidence of perdition. Then, if I have opportunities to work for the upbuilding of the church on earth, among those whom I could not reach were they not members of the Order with me, and take advantage of it, because I have used this as a means for doing it, it is all to be rejected. How many there are to be cast off because of it!

An incident occurred while our army was camped in front of Petersburg, which I wish to relate in connectton with this subject, as I believe it has not yet been recorded in print. Picket-firing had become so general on both sides, that many lives were being uselessly sacrificed every day. The officer of the day of the Union forces resolved to try and put an end to this method of warfare, and accordingly met the officer of equal rank of the enemy half way between the lines, for that purpose. On greeting him he at once found him to be a Mason. It led to that cordiality of feeling which we are ever taught to manifest towards all, and the interview was long and friendly. The question of picket-firing was discussed freely and cordially, and a plan for stopping it was adopted, and each returned to put an end to it, if possible, and commenced operations to accomplish their object. In a brief time, as the result of their influence, picket-firing was almost, if not entirely, done away with in that portion of the army. If these two officers had not met under the peculiar circumstances which they did, this vastly important end might not have been reached at all, and hundreds more of valuable lives been lost needlessly, and only revengefully. Was this act of humanity, originating in the beneficent mind and carried out by the energy of the will for the good of those around them, an evidence of perdition? So say many of the present day who know nothing of the internal workings of this Order, and will not look at any of its outward manifestations, but only to the short-comings of those members who dishonor it. H. A. B.

Not the Right "Scentin' Stuff."

A long, lean, gaunt Yankee entered a drug store:

"Be you the drugger?"

"Well, I s'pose so; I sell drugs."

"Wal, hev you got any uv this here scentin' stuff as the girls put on their handkerchers?"

"O, yes."

"Wal, our Sal is goin' to be married, and she gin me a ninepence and told me to invest the whole amount in scentin' stuff, so's to make her sweet, if I could find some to suit; so if you've a mind, I'll just smell round."

The Yankee smelled around without being suited, until the druggist got tired of him, and taking down a bottle of hartshorn, said:

"I've got a scentin' stuff that will suit you. A single drop on your handkerchief will last for weeks, and you can't wash it out; but to get the strength of it you must take a big smell."

"Is that so, mister? Wal, just hold a minute, till I get my breath, and when I say neow, you put it under my smellers."

The directions were of course followed, and the Yankee was nearly knocked off his pins; recovering himself, he exclaimed:

"Chain litenin', Mr. Drugger! is the top of my head on? Sal don't want nothin' like that; it would break up a camp meetin' in ten minutes. You haint got the right kind o' stuff."

◆

There is a school-house in Grass Valley, Cal., called the "House of the Holy Angels."

Work of the Ancient Craftsmen.

Many of the achievements of the operative Masons, in the olden times, still remain to attest their skill and mechanical resources. They are the wonder of modern travelers, who pause by the wayside in Syria to gaze in astonishment at the remains of ancient architecture. Among those, the ruins of Baalbec are pre-eminent, and they are most graphically described by our friend, Bro. Rev. Dr. Pilcher, of Michigan, who has been spending a year abroad. In one of his letters to the Detroit Tribune, he gives the following sketch of Baalbec, and of his experiences in Damascus. The good doctors's "rubbing" and "soap-suds" trial was—rich!—Review.

Damascus is a wonderful city, and while it boasts of an antiquity which is lost in the mists of the rolling ages, it has nothing ancient to show. It was a city in the days of Abraham, and how much earlier no one can with certainty say. It is probably the oldest extant city in the world. It has been the theater of many very important and interesting transactions, and has an interesting history. It is wonderful that, while Babylon and Nineveh fell into such utter ruin, their very location forgotten, Damascus, situated in the midst of a desert, so remote from the sea and navigable waters, has flourished under all dynasties, and is to-day the political capital of Syria, and has a population estimated at 150,000, of which 18,000 are Christians and 6,000 Jews; the rest are Mohammedans. It has its Chistian and Jews' quarters, both for residences and for trade. The Christian quarter shows a degree of desolation, it having been almost entirely burned in 1860, by a fearful outbreak of Mohammedan fanatics, who determined to exterminate the Christians, about 6,000 or more of whom were massacred in the streets, and their houses burned. This awful slaughter was arrested by troops being sent on from Beyrout. This massacre has proved to be a dear thing for the Mohammedans, for they have had a tax laid on them to rebuild and restore the houses of the Christians, and an order was issued forbidding them to resist any insult that might be offered them in their Mosque, saying "they must be as shoes under the feet of the Christians." Our guide, who is a Hungarian refugee, said he or any of the Christian party might strike any of them in the Mosque, and they would not dare to resist it. I have given the number of Chistians, which simply means that number of people are believers in the Christian religion, not that they are either experimental or practical Christians. The city is 2,200 feet above the sea.

You have heard of the Turkish bath. Well, they have them in Damascus, and we had the temerity to try one. Having divested ourselves of our clothing and being wrapped in towels, we passed through a succession of rooms, each being filled with a vapor increasing in heat till it became almost scalding, when we were seated on the marble floor and had to wait till well covered with perspiration. Then commenced a process of rubbing and scrubbing. The attendant put on a rough glove, with which he first rubbed the arms, making great rolls come up, which he took delight in showing; then he pulled them, trying to make each joint crack, but they were so stubborn they would not. The rest of the body had to take a like rubbing. After this came the soap-suds from head to foot. This done, next came the "sousings" of hot water, dashed on with no sparing hand, and another rubbing. This done, we had to retire as we came to the dressing room, where we were wrapped in dry towels, when another process of kneadings and stretchings had to be endured. Every finger and toe had to be tried. Coffee was furnished, and the process ended. We had the satisfaction of feeling that we were clean, at least. I suppose one can get so accustomed to this kind of operation as to enjoy it, but to the novice it is anything else than enjoyable.

Returning to Beyrout we had to take the diligence at 3 A. M., and were treated in payment for this inconveniently early start to a glorious sunrise on Lebanon. It was a scene of wonderful beauty, never to be forgotten. I do not much wonder, after seeing it, that the devout Parsee falls down in adoration and worships the sun as if it were God himself.

We reached Stura, the half-way place, in the valley of the Leontes, at 11 A. M., where we hoped to find horses ready to take us to Baalbec. In this we were disappointed, and had to wait till the next morning. At 6:30 we were in the saddle for a six hours' ride, up the plain toward the northeast. This plain, which has no particular name, lies between the two ranges of high mountains known as Lebanon, on the west side, and the Anti-Lebanon on the east side. These mountains are covered with snow, so that, while it was warm, and indeed hot, in the valley, we were in sight of snow on either hand. This is, perhaps, the best watered, most extensive, and fertile plain in Syria. Springs and fountains, fed by the mountain snows, burst out of the sides of the mountains and run off in gurgling brooks, flowing to the center and forming the river. It was along this fertile plain we made our way to one of the greatest wonders of the world—Baalbec. We had been prepared for something wonderful, but the reality far exceeded our expectation. Everything is in ruins, but there was majesty in the ruins, and a magnitude that has puzzled antiquarians and will continue to do so.

The first thing we came to was a small octagonal temple, which consisted of pillars, about twenty feet high, which had been arched over with stone, leaving an open but covered court for the worship. There had been large stone coffers set up on two sides to receive the images. One of these stones was entire, the other broken. A part of the pillars, which were large, were fallen down, and, consequently, the arched roof had all fallen in, and was destroyed. This stood an half hour's ride to the southwest of the main temple, and in the midst of the plain.

After surveying this for some time, we remounted and rode to the quarries, which came next in our course. These quarries are silicious lime, and capable of receiving a good polish, though there are many defects in them. From these quarries were taken stones for the wonderful structures hereafter to be noticed. There is one stone quarrien on three sides and both ends measuring nearly seventy feet in length, over fourteen feet high and fourteen feet thick. The under side is partly excavated, and it is estimated to weigh more than 1,100 tons. It is probable that it was intended to put this stone into the wall of the great temple. Why it was abandoned can not now be determined. There are three stones of nearly equal magnitude with this now in the walls, showing that they had the means of putting this one there. From this we pushed on to the miserable village, where we proceeded to examine the ruins. The first was a circular temple, surrounded by six columns, omitting one in front of the entrance. Some of the columns are still standing and a part of the walls. The stones in it are all large, and the workmanship was fine. Next we wandered off through the crooked, dirty lanes of the village, to see a marble statue of a female figure in a sitting posture, having had a winged lion with a female head and breast on each side of her chair. One lion had been broken off, as also the head of the woman and the other lion. What this was intended to represent or where it originally belonged (for it had been moved from its place), we could not exactly determine. Probably, it was designed to represent the goddess of plenty. The workmanship was excellent. Next, we walk to the great temple, or rather a series of temples. The ground entrance seems to have been at the east end, and was a hexagonal hall through which one passed to the great court. This court was a quadrangle, having thick walls about sixty or seventy feet high from the platform of the court, with semi-circular recesses, having niches for the reception of images. These recesses were arched over with stones. These stones were exquisitely carved on the under side so as to make a fine finish embracing fruits and flowers. The greatest wonder is that they were able to make an arch over a semi-circle, and that, too, of enormous stones, for some of them must weigh many tons. But it was done, showing a knowledge of the principles of mechanics, equal to anything we have now. At the west end of this court is the Temple of Jupiter, which was a parallellogram having columns on all sides, fifty-four in all, each being over seven feet in diameter at the base and seventy-five feet high, including the base and capital. The shaft is in three pieces, of twenty feet each. They were so nicely fitted that it was difficult to see the junction when standing. Most of them were fallen. A little to the north of this, and included in the general wall, is another temple of nearly the same dimensions, surrounded by forty-two columns of like size. The space between the columns of the wall was covered with stones of immense size, carved and polished most elaborately. These temples stand on a raised platform, which is supported by arches running in different directions. I am glad I did not see this till after I had been in Egypt, as I am better prepared to appreciate it. There is more elaborateness of workmanship in the temples of Egypt, but this far exceeds any of them in the massiveness of the stones. Night came and we had to desist. At 4 o'clock in the morning we started for Stura, which we reached in five hours, and had to ride in the rain a good deal of the way. By diligence we reached Beyrout at 5 o'clock P. M., and stopped again at the Hotel d'Orient, kept by a native, but an honorable man. We most cordially recommend all our friends coming this way to call on him. He is building a new hotel, and will have the finest public house in the place.

◆

Freemasonry in Ireland.

The following is an extract from the first Book of Constitutions ever printed in Ireland, bearing date 1730:

"Nor must we forget the famous kingdom of Ireland, which according to Cambrensis, was inhabited before the flood. But be that how it will, of this we are certain, that about three hundred years after the flood, and one hundred and forty-six after the confusion of Babel (An Mundi, 1956, Ante Ch., 2048), Bartholan, son of Sera, of the offspring of Japhet, came and planted a colony here; and afterwards Nemethus, a Scythian, with his four sons, came and planted colonies in this island, but in short time was expelled by the inhabitants aforesaid; and about two hundred years after his expulsions, the five sons of Dela, from Greece, of the posterity of Nemethus, brought new colonies into Ireland, and having subdued it, divided the kingdom amongst them.

"About three hundred and seventy years before the birth of Christ, the four sons of Milesius, the Spaniard, with a fleet of sixty sail, came to Ireland, subdued the kingdom, settled themselves in several parts of it, planted colonies, and erected lodges.

"And in short time after many famous schools of learning were erected in Ireland, to which the Britons, Saxons, and Gauls resorted for learning. See Bede's Eccl. Hist., Lib. 3, 27; Alcuni[illegible] Lib. 7, 4, &c.

"When Christianity reached this island (Anno Dom. 432), Masonry began to be much in request; for when St. Patrick was sent to Ireland, he converted the natives to the Christian faith, and founded the Cathedral of St. Patrick at Ardmagh, which was rebuilt by Patrick Scanlin, Archbishop of Ardmagh, Anno Dom. 1262, and the Priory of St. Dabeoc, or Avog, in Lough Derg, was founded by St. Patrick and St. Dabeoc, nigh the famous cave commonly called St. Patrick's Purgatory.

"The ancient and principal Seat-Royal of the kingdom, for a long time, was Parah, in the county of Meath, where their solemn feasts and royal assemblies were held at certain seasons; and there (Anno Dom. 455) King Lagarius kept their royal seat. Small remains of that ancient and noble building are to be seen at this day.

"The church of St. Mac Nisius, in Connor, was founded by Engus Mac Nisius, about A. D. 490, and St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Down, was founded by St. Cailan, Anno 500.

"The abbey of St. Coman, in Roscommon, was founded by Coman; and the Cathedral of St. Finian, in Clonard, was founded about the same time (Anno Dom. 550) by St. Finian, a man eminent for piety and learning.

"The present church of the Blessed Trinity, commonly called Christ's Church, in Dublin, was built by Sitricus, a Dane, and Donatus, Archbishop of Dublin, Anno 1038.

"Roderick O'Connor, King of Connaught, was an excellent Mason; who, among his other works, built (Anno Dom. 1161) a stately stone castle, at Tuam, which was called by the Irish the Wonderful Castle.

"The priory of St. John the Baptist, at Kilmainham, was founded by Richard Strongboro' Earl of Pembroke, Anno Dom. 1174; and the Cathedral of St. Bar, or Finbar, was built by St. Bar, at the same time.

"John De Courcy, Earl of Kingsail, was an excellent architect; he built the present St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Down, and the priory of St. John the Baptist, St. Mary's Abbey of Innis, and the Priory of Neddrum, with many others, Anno Dom. 1183; and the Priory of St. John the Baptist, without Newgate, in Dublin, was built by Alured C. Palmer, a Dane, Anno Dom. 1188.

"The present St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Dublin, was built by John Comin, Archbishop of Dublin, Anno Dom. 1190. The Priory of St. John, in Kilkenny, by William Marescall, Earl of Pembroke, Anno Dom. 1211; and Felix O'Ruaden, Archbishop of Tuam, rebuilt St. Mary's Abbey, in Dublin, Anno Dom. 1230, and covered it with lead. It was first founded by the Danes, in Anno 984.

"Nor must we forbear to mention Hugh de Lacy, Earl of Ulster, who was likewise an excellent Mason. He founded Carrickfergus, built a friery in Down, Anno Dom. 1232; the famous Castle of Trim, the Priory of St. John the Baptist, in the territory of Ards, and also several other abbeys and castles, which would be too tedious here to mention. Let the curious but examine the histories and antiquities of Ireland, and they will find it to vie with most kingdoms in ancient abbeys and venerable Gothic buildings, according to the architecture of the times wherein they were built. And now in this present age there are many curious buildings erected, and many now erecting throughout the kingdom, after the manner of the Augustan style; and the city of Dublin is supposed to have as curious and stately buildings, both public and private, as any one city in the world.

"As a catalogue of those curious and stately buildings would be too tedious here to insert, so it would be a crime not to mention the two famous Master Masons and curious Architects, in whom centers all that was truly ingenious in Vitruvius, Palladio, Inigo Jones, Sir Christopher Wren, &c., viz: Thomas Burgh, Esq., Engineer and Surveyor-General of His Majesty's fortifications and buildings in Ireland; and Capt. Edward Lovet Pearce, the contriver and protector of that strong, well-contrived, noble pile, the Parliament Hall, whose first stone was laid at the south side on February the 3rd, 1728–9, by the Lords Justices, together with several of the nobility and members of Parliament, attended by the yeomen of the Guard, a detachment of dragoons, and another of foot. In the body of which stone were laid two silver medals, with the effigies of their present majesties, King George and Queen Caroline, and over the medals was laid a plate of copper, on which is engraved the following inscription:

"Serenissimus et Potentissimus Rex
Georgius Secundus,
Per Excellent Dominum
Johannem Dominum Carteret Baron de Hawnes
Locum tenentem
Et per Excellent. Domines.
Hugonem Archiepm. Armachan.
Thomam Wyndham Cancell.
Guliel. Conolly Dom. Com. Protocul.
Justiciarios Generales
Primum hujusce Domus Parliament, Lapidem
Posuit
Tertio Die, Februar. Anno Dom.
MDCCXXVIII.

"And their excellencies, the Lords Justices, were pleased to leave on the stone a purse with twenty-one guineas, which the aforesaid Capt. Pearce, the architect, distributed among the Craftsmen, to drink towards the healths of their majesties, the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the royal family.

"And now under his present majesty, King George II., (a Mason king, whom God preserve) while arts and science flourish, while noblemen, gentlemen, clergymen and learned scholars of most professions and denominations have frankly joined to take the charges and to wear the badges of Free and Accepted Masons, let all Freemasons so behave themselves as to be accepted of God, the Grand Architect of the Universe, and continue to be, as they have ever been, the wonder of the world; and let the cement of the Brotherhood be so well-preserved, that the whole body may remain as a well-built arch."—London Freemason.

Beautiful.

The following is the prayer of Rev. S. S. Hunting, at the laying of the corner-stone of the Jewish Temple in Quincy, July 30th, 1869:

O Lord God Almighty, Maker of the Universe, God of Israel, there is none like thee in heaven above or in earth beneath, who keepth covenant and mercy with thy servants. Heaven is thy throne, and earth is thy footstool. Yea, the heaven of heavens can not contain thee, and how much less this house which thy servants would build to thee. Yet, O God, wilt thou have regard to the prayers and supplications which thy servants offer this day? May thine eyes be open towards this house, night and day, even as towards the place of which thou hast said, "My name shall be there." Hear then the prayers of thy servants, the people of Israel. Hear thou in Heaven, and when thou hearest, forgive. As thou didst talk with thy servants in the olden time, so dost thou speak to us here to-day. May thy voice be heard and thy face seen. As Jacob set up a pillar, even a stone, in the place where thou did'st talk with him, and poured wine and oil upon it in tokens of joy and gladness of his heart, and called the place Bethel, so do we consecrate here this temple to be thy house. May this be indeed thy house, and the gate of heaven to thy people. Here mayest thou dwell as in thy Zion, and thy name be praised with thanksgivings. As thou did'st go before their fathers as a light in the wilderness and through the sea, so mayest thou go with this people through this wilderness of trial and the sea of trouble, till they reach the Canaan of their hopes, the promised land of their faith. May this be a corner-stone in Zion, even the head stone of the corner, and the light of the Lord be the joy of this house. As the hills were round about Jerusalem so may the Lord be round this people, and may they worship Him in the beauty of holiness. Here may the Messiah come in truth and love and in goodly fellowship, and this people live to the honor of the Lord our God. Amen.

Extract.

From an address by Maj. Geo. D. Reynolds, of Tyrian Lodge, Springfield, Ill., delivered June 24th, at Potosi, Mo.:

Paul, the great expounder, traveling to Athens, found an altar with the inscription, "to the Unknown God." At that altar had probably knelt Plato, Socrates, and all the great minds who illuminated Grecian art, philosophy, and literature. From it had ascended incense, offered by Jew and Greek, by the Latin barbarian. The stones around it had been pressed by the knees of strangers from every land, and searchers after the Unknown God from every clime. And now knelt there the great Apostle and expounder of the new religion. As his feet pressed the steps of the altar, and as his voice went forth to that vast throng, think you that no thought of the others who had worshiped there, crossed his mind? Do you imagine that he thereby lost his Christian character? that he was lowered in his Christian faith? Did it not rather elevate his thought; did it not lessen his feeling of isolation, that thought, that back of him stood an altar around which all heathendom might kneel? That at that altar had probably been offered prayers and sacrifice, by the greatest and best and purest in the earth! Did it not add power to his voice, new light to his words, with his hearers, that he, a stranger preaching a new-fangled doctrine, could yet kneel at their alter, and reach his God from it? Such an alter Masonry erects; not inscribed to an unknown God, but to the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob; an altar at which all who recognize His existence and strive to do His works, may kneel and together lift their voices to His throne of grace!

Masonry represents no particular sect, or denomination. We unite in our Brotherhood men who agree upon the great doctrines and fundamental principles that underlie morality, godliness, charity. We say to our initiates, believe in these; beyond that we do not go; on all other and non-essential matters, follow the dictates of your own reason; obey your own conscience. It matters not to us whether one brother believes in the infallibility of the Pope, and another regards him as anti-Christ; whether one clings to Christian perfection and another to total damnation; whether one holds to infant baptism and another condemns it; whether one talks of an apostolic succession and another of a universal ministry. We say to all, have faith in God; hope in immorality; practice charity to all men,—this is our Alpha and Omega.

Such, in outline, are our principles. The uninitiated often express surprise at the devotion of our brethren to the Craft, and speculate upon the great secret which can so fascinate men known in the community as practical, earnest workers. I reveal no secret, when I say that the outer world has invested us with more mystery than we claim, or even practice. All our carefully guarded secrets and mysteries are merely such as are necessary to enable us to recognize each other at all times, and under all circumstances, such as enable us to keep out the unworthy, to guard against imposture, and to control our charities. The great attraction of our Order, to my mind, is that we leave at the door of the lodge all sectarian feelings, partisan animosities, and personal spites and bitterness, and meet as the brothers of a great family, around our father's table. Those only can know, who have experienced it, the feeling of rest, of security and of peace which fills the soul of each and every Mason, as, clothed in his spotless apron, emblem of innocence, he enters and bows before the altar of his God.

It is our aim to have our principles, not empty, high-sounding names, but actual realities. For this we strive. In sorrow and humility I acknowledge, few of us come up to our standard—many fall, far, far below it! We all know that in our Order, as in all others composed of human beings, many are unfaithful, some even a cause of reproach. Think not, you who are uninitiated, that our Brotherhood looks upon these transgressors with an unconcerned eye. Many a silent reformation is wrought in your midst; many an erring brother reclaimed, through the silent working of our Order. But, with our principles of charity and brotherly love, we are long-suffering. If our brother sins and repents, we strive to forgive, yea seventy times seven. Our order is not prone to wield the sword of the executioner, to lop off and destroy—rather would she strive to win from error and transgression, by kindest and tenderest sympathy. But when justice must strike, though mercy may stand by in tears, heavy the stroke, terrible the punishment.

Thus constituted, thus organized is our Brotherhood. "Its temple is the emblem of wisdom, of which discretion is the base, charity the crowning stone, liberty the device, equality the support, into which the spirit of domination has never entered, and into which no such pretensions can be admitted."

It has existed for centuries. Persecution and bigotry have attempted its existence, the anathemas of churches have been hurled against it; friends, even chosen brothers, have attempted to betray it. The ties that bind us, have been tested through wars, foreign and domestic, but it still stands. Civil war, that like a besom of destruction, swept over our land—tearing asunder churches, and kindred and families, destroying and trampling down the friendships and affections and ties of years, only made us the stronger, only bound brothers of our mystic tie closer and more firmly together. The proudest nations of aniquity have sunk into oblivion; cities, once teeming with their hundreds of thousands, have disappeared, the grandest and loftiest columns and domes are masses of shapeless ruins, religious systems have disappeared, but Masonry still lives; lodges may cease to exist, brothers may prove traitorous to their vows; our altars may be overturned and our fires extinguished; we ourselves may fall by the relentless hand of persecution and bigotry; but Masonry, itself, will live forever. Its principles are founded in truth, in mercy, in justice, and are buried deep in the heart of humanity. While man lives, while a merciful God reigns and endows man with a perception of his attributes, and fills him with love for his fellows, so long will true Masonry exist.

Ladies and gentlemen, I fear I have wearied you. I know it is usual to approach this subject in terms of high-sounding eulogy, with glittering generalities, with the adornments and attractions of brilliant rhetoric. Even had I the power so to please you, I feel now, felt when contemplating my subject, something of that spirit of awe, of veneration, of solemnity steal over me, in view of its magnificent grandeur and solemn majesty, and I would not, even if I could, speak more as the orator, less as the preacher.

Brothers! "every round of our theological ladder is a teacher of divinity; every round in it utters its precepts, and every member of the starry firmament has a voice, and the beautiful panorama of earth and of heaven, the host of traveling angels, and all seeing God, all! all! call out in sweetest harmony, come up hither, up! up! higher!"

As our brothers, the operative Masons, first exercised their high calling by building temples to the living God, so may we, as speculative Masons, sanctify our work, glorify our Brotherhood, by rearing our bodies, living temples, and our souls their immortal inmates, to the glory of that self-same God. May we have wisdom to choose this course, strength to pursue it, then will our work be beautiful in the sight of God and man.

The Masonic Trowel.

This little bi-monthly, unpretentious in appearance and modest in its claims, is one of the most interesting of our exchanges. Of its teachings we can only say if the Fraternity live up to them the millenium can not be distant, for the Masonic Brotherhood are in numbers almost sufficient to control the world, and their influence for good would be great indeed. Published by Harman G. Reynolds & Son, Springfield, Ill., at $1.25 a year.—Home Journal.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Editor,
IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY
H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

One copy, one year..$1 25

All communications should be addressed to H. G. Reynolds, or The Masonic Trowel, Springfield, Ill.

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for The Trowel.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

Notice.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., SEPT. 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

Back Numbers of Trowel for Sale.

The publisher has a few copies of the back numbers of The Trowel, which he will send postage paid, as directed, on receipt of price. Those wishing to complete file of Trowel, will do well to procure lost or missing numbers. The quantity is quite limited, and in some cases not more than 5 or 6 of a number. When orders are received for copies which are entirely sold out, the money will be at once returned, free of charge.

Volumes 5 and 6 (1866 and 1867), in one book. Price, $5.00. Single numbers, 15 cents each. On hand: September, 1863; December, 1864; January, May, June, July, August, and September, 1865; January, March, April, May, June, July, and August, 1866; January, 1867. All the months in 1868; and all the months to date, 1869.

Positive Masonic Injunctions.

The peculiar and sacred duties of Masons to each other are such that they can not neglect them without sinning against clear light and breaking solemn and binding promises. These duties are so familiar that they scarcely need explanation. To neglect any duty we owe to a brother, whether in the way of relief, counsel, admonition or information, implies indifference, or what is worse, no respect for solemn covenants.

The covenants between Mason and Mason reach all relations of life, comprehending all the details of business, the words we utter, the meditations of our hearts, and what our hands find to do, and especially when there is reason to apprehend danger.

We sincerely hope that our brethren will seriously reflect upon this, for none of them can devise or be knowing to and acquiescing in any project to the injury of a brother, in his business, reputation, or family, without deserving the severest Masonic discipline.

The Freemason who would build himself up on the ruins of a brother, take advantage of his necessities or misfortunes to increase his wealth or advance his fortunes, or even cherish thoughts of injury or wrong to a brother in his power, is a base and unworthy Mason, who would take advantage of a trusting friend and repay his kindness with infamous crimes. We have known Masons who (unthinkingly, we hope) have disregarded solemn vows. Let such think carefully upon their engagements, and henceforth endeavor to live up to them.

Often, too, Masons feel themselves aggrieved by the conduct of others, and are moved to do unmasonic things, or utter unjustifiable words in a spirit of resentment or retaliation.

Nothing can be more unmasonic. One wrong does not justify another. Unmasonic conduct in one should inspire reflection, coolness, and caution in the breast of another. Hasty, irritating or hot words from one Mason should be the most potent of all admonitions to guarded words fitly spoken, or discreet silence. Wrong-doing by any should be a spur to all other Masons to "learn to do well."

Even if one knows a brother to be wrong, he is not to parade it before the world, unless his obligations to the laws of the land demand it; nor even to his lodge, unless it be a case demanding discipline. We counsel every brother to remember that there are many cases where good counsel, gentle reproof, or tender admonition, may win a brother from his errors and produce a reformation. It is a dastardly act in any man to convey secret charges, rumors, and insinuations against his fellow man, under cover of secrecy and darkness, by which character is destroyed without any chance to repel or defend. In a Mason it is a crime. It admits of no excuse. It is a sin against society, against morality and religion, and an abominable wrong in the eye of God.

Freemasonry frowns upon all such doings. It abhors malice, evil speaking, and mercenary conduct.

Let all who transgress the laws of the land be brought to justice in a legal manner. It is the duty of a Mason to see a transgressor of the laws prosecuted and punished, and to see that it is done according to the laws, so that justice may be done, the law vindicated and made honorable.

Let no Mason go surmising, whispering, and insinuating about, or openly parading faults before the world; but in a manly and Masonic manner let him either visit the erring brother, or bring his case before the lodge or legal tribunals, as conscience and duty may require.

And we especially urge that until all hope of reformation has ceased, or the lodge has sent a brother out under its sentence of expulson or suspension, he is to be treated and regarded as a Mason; and even then the doors of repentance and mercy should ever be open.

Let us all seek to govern our practices by those just and equitable laws we have so solemnly promised to obey, ever bearing in mind that to do unto others as we wish them to do unto us, is the very spirit of Freemasonry.

A Tissue of Slanders.

We received September 15th a copy of The Mystic Star for this month. Owing to an unavoidable accident, our own paper, The Trowel, usually issued promptly, has been delayed beyond the usual time of publication, and thereby gives us a chance to defend ourselves immediately. On page 91, Bro. William Rounsville opens out with an article entitled "Short Sessions of Grand Bodies." We will only answer that part which concerns us personally. Bro. R. says: "Another point upon which a little economy would tell considerably, is that of the Grand Lodge printing. Let it be done by contract, or by the reception of proposals, and hundreds of dollars could be saved—perhaps thousands."

Herein Bro. R. is misinformed. The last G. Lodge proceedings were furnished entirely on contract, both labor and material. Advertisements for bids for printing and binding the proceedings were published in the Springfield paper (I do not now recollect the exact time). Four bids from responsible firms were offered in answer to the advertisement.

After a long and careful examination of the bids we were awarded the contract—and lost money on the job. I do not believe Bro. R. would have done the work for the price that I received. Usually the "proceedings" contain the main bulk of the G. L. printing. On pages 106–7–8 and 9 there is a calumnious article, entitled "The Springfield Monopoly," written by "J. S. Hanna." It is unworthy of a Christian, a Freemason, or a gentleman. He intimates that my father, brother and myself are connected in business. My brother and I have never been in business together in any form whatever. My father has no connection with my present business, excepting The Trowel, and that only as editor. Bro. J. S. H. says "the friends of the Trowel have made its proprietors a present of a press (we congratulate them)." This is true—in December 1863, our brethren and friends presented to us a press, type, and other printing materials valued at $742.56, and $60.44 in money; total, $803.00. For this we have ever felt thankful to them, and have in return given in charity to needy Masons, their families, or lodges in distress, $1,742.65, from January 1st, 1864, to September 1st, 1869. I have thus paid back the $803.00 which was presented to my father, and also at the rate of 25 per cent. per annum on it ever since it was presented, and I expect to keep doing this as long as I am in my present business, and indeed as long as I can do so. I have taken from my business $16.80 every month, charged in my cash account as a personal expense, and paid it out where I thought proper, to persons needing Masonic relief. I have never before mentioned this fact to any person, not even to my father, and I would not do so now, did not Bro. Hanna's ungenerous attack compel me to do so in self-defence.

Bro. H. gets angry because I am engaged in printing, book binding, stereotyping, (not electrotyping, Bro. Hanna), blank book manufacturing, &c. I have yet to learn that it is a crime to do honest work, in neat, workman-like style, and at reasonable prices. He gives me "fits" because I deal in "general Masonic literature," and advertise my books for sale, and says "what fair chance can a brother have in a small town, with a few standard Masonic works upon his sparsely filled shelves, by the side of such an attractive quasi-official advertisement." I have given away, to such dealers, Masonic books to the value of $433.61. I sold them the books on credit, the purchasers were poor brethren, hard times and sickness pressed them sore, I tore up the account against them, and gave a receipt in full for the amounts owing. Their expressions of gratitude have more than paid me.

Bro. H. says I refused to publish the advertisement of a worthy regalia dealer in Chicago, through fear of competition. This is a falsehood. We have published in The Trowel advertisements for Bro. H. R. Cabery, of Chicago; Pollard & Leighton, of Boston; Masonic Publishing and Manufacturing Company;

Clark & Maynard, of New York; and now publish the advertisements of the Virgil Price Manufacturing Company. of New York, and Parsons & Co., of St. Louis. There is a respectable dealer in regalia in Chicago who, since September 17th, 1866, has been indebted to me $14 for advertising in The Trowel. I refused to advertise for him any more until he paid up. I have written to him three times for the money, but received no answer.

The "gist" of this whole matter lies in a nutshell. The proprietors of the Mystic Star and their clique wish to get possession of the G. L. treasury, printing, official positions, and salaries, thereby making a "fat thing" for the ring. In order to do this it was necessary to bring down odium upon the present Grand Master, Grand Secretary, and our well-known and beloved Grand Treasurer, Brother Harrison Dills. Now, it would not do to attack these brethren in the August number of the Star, because, forsooth, my father would answer them in the September Trowel. Shrewd "Hanna" concluded to wait until the last minute, and then "pitch into them," thinking he could not be answered until the October Trowel was issued, which would be after the Grand Lodge had adjourned.

The owners of the Star are envious of The Trowel and its success. The Star has been published in Fort Wayne, Ind., then in Chicago, then in Indianapolis, and now in Chicago again, where we suppose it will stay as long as the owners' credit is good at the printer's. The Star publishes, in twelve numbers, matter equal to 77 square feet and 16 square inches, which costs $2.00. The Trowel publishes, in twelve numbers, matter equal to 94 square feet and 6 square inches ; price, $1.25. Now, in order to make the publications equal in value, the Star should publish 150 square feet 6 square inches for $2.00, equal to 76 pages per month of its present size, instead of 40 pages, which it now publishes. And now, brethren, if you think this article is too rough, you must consider that is written by one who is not an editor. My father is absent from home, and will not return in time to answer Brother Hanna's slanderous article. I have been compelled to drag before the public my private charities of years gone by, and disregard one of the teachings of our Order, that our assistance to those having Masonic claims upon us should be given in secret.

Fraternally yours,

H. G. Reynolds, Jr.

Railroad Connections.

Passengers who intend coming to Grand Lodge can make connections as follows:

By Chicago & Northwestern and Chicago, Alton & St. Louis.—Leave Freeport, 9:20 A. M.; Rockford, 10:50; Belvidere, 11:35; Elgin, 12:25 noon; Fulton, 9:13 A. M.; Dixon, 10:35; DeKalb, 12:03 noon; Harvard Junction, 11:12 A. M.; Woodstock, 11:43; Crystal Lake, 12:08 noon; Chicago, 8:50 P. M.; arrive at Springfield, 4:10 A. M.

By Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, and Chicago, Alton & St. Louis.—Leave Rock Island, 7:50 A. M.; Port Byron Juuction, 8:10 : Geneseo, 8:52; Pond Creek, 10:11; LaSalle, 12 noon; Ottawa, 12:37 P. M., arrive at Joliet, 2:26; leave 10:30 P. M.; arrive in Springfield, 4:10 A. M.

By Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw, and Chicago, Alton & St. Louis.—Leave Burlington, 6:35 A. M.; Monmouth, 7:47; Galesburg, 8:40; Vermont, 7:00; Lewistown, 8:45; Yates City, 10:27; La Harpe, 7:55; Bushnell, 8:57 P. M.; Canton, 10:20 A. M.; arrive at Peoria, 11:50 A. M.; leave Peoria, 12:00 noon; Washington, 12:26; El Paso, 1:40; arrive at Chenoa, 2:30 P. M.; leave, 12:59 night; arrive in Springfield, 4:10 A. M.

By the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis, and the Toledo, Wabash & Western.—Leave Allin at 2:43 A. M.; Delevan, 3:35; Mason City, 4:16; Petersburg, 5:01; and arrive at Jacksonville, 6:30; leave, 8:45, and arrive in Springfield 10:25 A. M. Leave Jerseyville, 8:06 P. M.; Carrollton, 8:46; Whitehall, 9:15; Manchester, 9:41; arrive at Jacksonville, 10:25; leave, 10:20, and arrive at Springfield 12:10, night.

By the Jacksonville Branch and the main line Chicago, Alton & St. Louis.—Arrive at Bloomington, 2:50; leave Bloomington, 3:15 A. M.; arrive at Springfield, 5:45 A. M. Arrive at Monticello, 6:20 P. M.; leave, 7:10 P. M., and arrive at Springfield 10:20 P. M.

The Bureau Valley Railroad passengers, who choose, will arrive in Peoria at 4:15 A. M.; leave by the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville at 6:00 A. M.; arrive at Jacksonville at 11:00 A. M.; they can then take the accommodation train at 3:00 P. M., and reach Springfield at 7:00 P. M.; or they can take the passenger train at 10:20 P. M., and reach Springfied at 12:10, midnight. Those who choose will arrive at Bureau Junction at 10:50 A. M.; Joliet, 2:26 P. M., and at Springfield, 4:10 A. M.

By the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis, from the North.—Leave Dunleith at 4:40 P. M.; Galena, 5:49; Freeport, 8:15; Dixon, 9:49; Mendota, 11:10; LaSalle, 12:00, midnight; Wenona, 12:45 A. M.; El Paso, 1:57, and arrive at Bloomington at 2:35 A. M.; leave at 3:15 A. M., and arrive in Springfield at 5:45 A. M. The connection is made at Bloomington, not at Normal. Passengers have forty minutes to go from the Central station to the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis station. Those who take the day train make close connections at Normal.

By the Illinois Central and other roads from the North.—Passengers on the Western Union, from the east will reach Freeport at 4:00 P. M.; from the west, at 1:15 P. M.; from the east on the C. & N. W. at 3:45 P. M., and leave at 8:15 P. M.

Passengers on the C. & N. W., by Geneva, Dixon, and Fulton, arrive at Dixon from the west at 2:20 P. M.; from the east at 8:45 P. M., and leave at 9:49 P. M.

Passengers on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, from the east, will reach Mendota at 8:55 P. M.; from the west, at 3:35 P. M.; and leave at 11:10 P. M. All arrive at Bloomington (not Normal) at 2:35 A. M., and leave by the Chiago, Alton & St. Louis at 3:15 A. M., and reach Springfield at 5:45 A. M.

By the Illinois Central, from Chicago, and Other Roads, to Tolono, and thence West.—Passengers from the Milwaukee road reach Chicago at 4:15 P. M.; from the Janesville road, at 7:15 P. M.; from the Galena road, 3:45 P. M.; from the Dixon road, at 6:50 P. M.; from the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, 7:25 P. M., and leave at 8:35 P. M.

Passengers on the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw, from the east, reach Gilman at 12:25, noon; from the west, at 4:40 P. M.; leave Gilman at 11:37 P. M.; and all reach Tolono at 1:47 A. M., and leave by the Toledo, Wabash & Western at 2:18 P. M., and arrive at Springfield at 6:05 A. M.

Passengers on the T. P. & W. would make about the same time via Chenoa. On the day train they make close connections at Chenoa.

By the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Toledo, Wabash & Western.—Leave Mendota at 4:25 A. M. (Monday); Wyanett, 5:43; Galva, 7:00; Galesburg, 8:48; Bushnell, 9:50; Macomb, 10:19, and arrive at Camp Point at 11:58 A. M.; leave Hamilton at 5:00 P. M.; Carthage at 5:40, and arrive at Clayton at 7:25 P. M.; leave Quincy at 6:30 P. M., and all leave Clayton at 7:25 P. M.; leave Bluffs at 9:31 P. M.; Jacksonville at 10:20; arrive at Springfield at 12:10, midnight. By this arrangement it will be seen that C. B. & Q. passengers tarry at Camp Point over seven hours. They can go to Quincy, have six hours, and lose no time. Another arrangement is the following: Leave Mendota at 8:55 P. M. (Sunday or Monday); Wyanet, 10:10; Galva, 11;20; Galesburg, 12:45, night; Bushnell, 1:55 A. M.; Macomb, 2:27, and arrive at Camp Point at 4:00 A. M., and leave by the T. W. & W. at 6:02 A. M., and arrive in Springfield at 10:25.

By the Ohio & Mississippi, the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis, and Other Roads.—The following arrangement will bring passengers here Monday noon: Leave Vincennes at 4:25 P. M.; Olney, 5:46; Xenia, 7:10; Odin, 8:35; Sandoval, 8:45, and arrive at East St. Louis at 11:20 P. M. Leave East St. Louis in the morning, at 7:25; Edwardsville Junction, 8:09; Alton, 8:35; Monticello Junction, 8:50; Carlinville, 9:59, and arrive at Springfield, 11:40.

The Central arrives at Odin at 8:15 P. M. from both ways. The Indianapolis & St. Louis arrives at Alton Junction at 7:09 A. M.

By the following arrangement, passengers will reach Springfield at 10:20, way express, or 11:40, lightning express, at night: Leave Vincennes at 6:40 A. M.; Olney, 8:05; Xenia, 9:25; Odin, 10:45; Sandoval, 10:55, and arrive in East St. Louis at 1:30 P. M. Leave East St. Louis, by way express, 5:30 P. M.; Edwardsville Junction, 6:10; Alton, 6:55; Monticello Junction, 7:10; Carlinville, 8:25, and arrive in Springfield at 10:20—this train stops at all stations. Leave East St. Louis, by lightning express, 8:00 P. M.; Alton, 8:55; Carlinville, 10:11, and arrive in Springfield at 11:40—this train stops only at Alton and Carlinville.

The Central arrives at Odin at 8:50 A. M., from the south, and 6:45 A. M., from the north, and at Sandoval at 8:45, from the north. The Indianapolis & St. Louis arrives at Alton Junction at 2:36 P. M., or 6:15 P. M. The Jacksonville arrives at Monticello Junction at 5:55 P. M., or 6:20 P. M.

By the Illinois Central from the South, and the Toledo, Wabash & Western, and Other Roads.—Leave Cairo (Monday), 2:40 P. M.; Jonesboro, 4:12; Carbondale, 5:06; Duquoin, 5:58; Tamaroa, 6:20; Irvington, 7:16; Centralia, 7:50; Odin, 8:30; Effingham, 11:00; Mattoon, 12:28, night, and arrive at Tolono, 1:47 A. M.; leave Tolono, 2:18 A. M.; Decatur, 4:15, and arrive in Springfield at 6:10 A. M. The previous train by the Central reaches Tolono after the train to Springfield has left.

Trains by the Ohio & Mississippi from the east reach Odin at 8:15 P. M.; from the west at 6:00. Trains by the Indianapolis & St. Louis reach Mattoon from the east at 7:35 P. M.; from the west at 11:39 P. M. Leave Sandoval at 1.33 P. M.; Vandalia, 2:55; Pana, 4:04; Moweaqua, 4:50, and arrive at Decatur, 5:35 P. M.; leave Heyworth, 4:02 P. M.; Clinton, 4:36, and arrive at Decatur, 5.30 P. M. All leave Decatur at 4:15 A. M., and arrive at Springfield at 6:10.

The Indianapolis and St. Louis trains from the east reach Pana at 2:58 P. M.; from the west, 12:06, noon.

Those who desire an earlier arrungement can leave Sandoval at 1:05 A. M; Vandalia, 2:15; Pana, 3:35, and arrive at Decatur, 5:05 A. M.; leave at 1:33 P. M., and arrive at Springfield at 3:15 P. M.

The Ohio & Mississippi arrives at Sandoval from the east at 8:45 P. M. The Indianapolis & St. Louis arrives at Pana from the east at 3:35 A. M., and from the west at 10:20 P. M.

We have now given, as far as we are able, a full and impartial statement of railroad connections. It is not probable that any material changes will be made between this time and the meeting of the Grand Bodies.

The Ohio & Mississippi return free by St. Louis, after the endorsement of certificate by Chas. E. Follett, General Ticket Agent, opposite Southern Hotel, St. Louis.

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy return such passengers free as come and return via Mendota, Peoria, or Camp Point.

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific will return passengers for one-fifth fare who come and return by Joliet.

Commutations are granted by the Illinois Central; Chicago, Alton & St. Louis, including Jacksonville division; Western Union; Toledo, Wabash & Western; Toledo Peoria & Warsaw; Chicago & Northwestern, and Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville.

The Coming Grand Meetings.

The Grand Lodges, A. F. and A. M., for this State, will assemble in Representatives Hall, in this city, Tuesday, October 5th, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The Grand Royal Arch Chapter will assemble in old Masonic Hall, on Friday, October 7th, at 9 o'clock A. M.

The Grand Council Royal and Select Masters will meet on Thursday, October 6.

The following committees, already appointed, will assemble for business as follows:

HOLDING OVER

On Masonic Correspondence.—R. W. Jos. Robbins, M. D., Quincy; W. John M. Pearson, Godfrey; W. D. A. Cashman, Chicago; Monday, October 4.

On Masonic Jurisprudence.—M. W. Jerome R. Gorin, Decatur; M. W. William Lavely, Springfield; M. W. H. P. H. Bromwell, Charleston; R. W. Wiley, M. Egan, Chicago; R. W. John Bennett, Petersburg; R. W. J. O. Cunningham, Urbana; R.W. O. H. Miner, Springfield.

On Work.—R. W. John W. Clyde, Chicago; M. W. Harrison Dills, Quincy; R. W. Loyal L. Munn, Freeport; R. W. Wm. S. Easton, Ottawa; R. W. Jas. O. Cunningham, Urbana; R. W. Geo. E. Lounsbury, Mound City; M. W. J. R. Gorin, Decatur; Grand Master; Thursday, September 30.

On By Laws, etc.—R. W. Breth. Wiley M. Egan, Chicago; A. W. Blakesley, Quincy; D. P. Bunn, Decatur; Wilson Hoag, Paxton; John N. Ryan, Belleville; Grand Master; Thursday, September 30.

On Finance.—R. W. Breth. James Lowe, Quincy; G. W. Barnard, Chicago; Geo. C. Lanphere, Galesburg; Friday, October 1.

RECENTLY APPOINTED.

On Credentials.—R. W. Breth. Leven W. Shepherd, Springfield; Wm. H. House, Mattoon; Wm. O. Brooks, Galva.

To Examine Visiting Brethren.—R. W. Grand Lecturers Wade, Dorwin, Ashley, Banker, Dewey, L. Church, and DeLancey; Monday, October 4.

On Returns and Work of Lodges U. D.—R. W. Breth. A. W. Cowan, Pontiac; John M. Van-Deren, Chatham; L. W. Faulkner, Champaign; Thursday, September 30.

On Returns and Work of Chartered Lodges.—R. W. Breth. Geo. O. Ide, Princeton; Robert B. Smith, Alton; John C. Reynolds, Springfield; Monday, September 27. The work of this committee requires an examination and careful comparison of the returns of six hundred lodges.

On Appeals and Grievances.—R. W. Breth. Francis Hudson, Amboy; James B. Kyle, Macomb; Geo. Mason, Parkersburg; Arthur R. Atkins, Chicago; Thaddeus Philips, Carlinville, Friday, October 1.

On Mileage and Per Diem.—R. W. Breth. R. D. Hammond, Macomb; John D. Hamilton, Carthage; O. F. Price, Galesburg.—Friday, October 1.

On Discrepancies in Work.—R. W. Breth. Charles Fisher, Springfield; M. D. Chamberlin, Freeport; T. J. Prickett, Carbondale; D. G. Burr, Paris; Thursday, September 23.

TRAGEDY AND DEATH.

R. W. and Hon. Bro. Henry Prather, Decatur.

The citizens of Decatur started out, on Tuesday, August 31, to assist in subduing a fire, as we understand outside of the city. Among them was the Hon. Henry Prather and another gentleman, in a buggy. Close in the rear was another buggy, and all driving pretty fast. In some way, Bro. Prather was thrown from the carriage, and the horses in the rear were instantly upon him, and he was so badly injured that he expired soon after.

On the following day, funeral services were held at the Episcopal Church, of which the deceased was an exemplary and active member; an immense procession, consisting of the Masonic lodge, chapter, commandery, and citizens, more than a mile in length, proceeded to Greenwood Cemetery, where the remains were deposited with Masonic rites by Macon Lodge No. 8, Past Grand Master Gorin officiating as Master, assisted by the Master and brethren of Ionic Lodge. The deceased was in every sense a worthy gentleman, a safe counselor, a true friend, and an upright, honorable man.

His wife is the sister of Gov. Oglesby, and the latter gentleman was for some time under his watchful care, and we understand that the same is true of J. J. Peddecord, Esq., a distinguished and honorable man.

The deceased has long been identified with the material prosperity of Decatur and of Macon county, which he has twice represented in the General Assembly.

The first dispensation issued by Grand Master Jonas, the first Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, was to Macon Lodge, of which the deceased was Treasurer and Secretary. At the first election under the charter, he was elected Master, and at the next session of the Grand Lodge, Junior Grand Warden. It has always been understood of Bro. Prather, that all the elements of his character were substantial; that he had little respect for show, was unambitious of preferment, but that he desired real advancement in solid prosperity, good society, education, and all that tended to make his fellow men wise, happy, and contented. Such is true Masonry; and such was the worthy brother who came to so sad an end.

Supreme Council, A. A. S. Rite.

We acknowledge the favor of a copy of the constitutions of the Scottish Rite, N. J., sent by Ill. Daniel Sickels, G. Sec. Gen. We rejoice that State grand bodies can not be formed, and are pleased that the supreme body has provided for the appointment of Deputies annually, and for councils of deliberation under their control. It requires twelve to petition for a consistory, nine for chapter or council, and ten for Lodge of Perfection. Six is a quorum for lodge or consistory, and five for the other bodies.

The Grand East is at Boston, and there the supreme council must convene once in three years, the archives must be kept, and the Grand Keeper of the Archives must reside.

The next meeting is to be held in Cincinnati.

Ill. Bro. Walter A. Stevens, 121 East Eighteenth Street, Chicago, is Deputy for Illinois.

Fifty years a Mason.

Bro. G. O. Jones, of Cambria, Wis., has favored us with an account of a meeting of Pardee Lodge, at Pardeeville, on the 4th of August, and the presence of the venerable Bro. John Pardee, it being the 50th anniversary of his initiation.

Bro. O. D. Coleman gave the aged brother an address of welcome, which was very handsomely responded to by Bro. Pardee.

His son, Charles J., is the W. M. of the Lodge, and Em. Commander of Ft. Winnebago Commandery, and a glorious good fellow, whose heart and hand are always responsive to the demand of Masonry. Long life and joyous, to both father and son.

Geo. S. Blackie, M. D.

We return our sincere thanks to this eminent brother for a photo of his agreeable face, and rejoice to learn that by the aid of cars and steamers he arrived safely home in Nashville, and that he enjoyed himself in Jacksonville and St. Louis, and met such hospitable attentions from our brethren in those places as would be gratifying to any brother to receive.

As a teacher of young ladies, professor in college, Deputy Grand Secretary, and a contributor of valuable articles to the Record, our brother finds his hands and brain full of hard and useful work. He is the representative of the Grand Lodge of England and Ireland, near the Grand Lodge of Tennesse.

Proceedings Supreme Council.

We are in receipt from Ill. Bro. Sickels, Gr. Sec. Gen., of the first thirty-two pages of the Proceedings Supreme Council, N. J.

The very able address of the M. P. Grand Commander, Hon. J. H. Drummond, occupies twenty-two pages.

We notice that Ill. Breth. Enoch T. Carson, H. L. Palmer, Heman Ely, E. G. Hamilton, R. H. Foss, F. A. Blades, K. H. Van Rensselaer, A. B. Alden, R. W. Landon, D. B. Tracy, John Caven, V. L. Hurlbut, and W. A. Stevens, were present from the West.

We shall give the proceedings a thorough review when received in full.

Exemplification and Work.

The committee on work will meet Thursday, September 30, and we presume that the work will be exemplified on the evenings of that day and of Friday and Saturday.

On Monday evening the first degree will be exemplified, and, if possible, the third degree will be exemplified on Tuesday evening, under the charge of R. W. Breth. Charles Fisher, M. D. Chamberlin, Thomas J. Prickett, D. G. Burr, and such others as may be selected. It is, therefore, desirable that all interested should attend. No per diem, however, will be allowed until Tuesday, except to such as shall be actually employed.

Chapter Returns.

The following chapters have made returns and paid dues:

Nos. 3, 10, 21, 22, 24, 26, 32, 35, 38, 51, 53, 54, 55, 57, 58, 60, 61, 64, 65, 72, 74, 75, 78, 80, 101, 105, 107, 109, 112, 114, 115, 117, 118, 120, 121, 125, 126, 130, 131, 133. Total, 40.

The following chapters have made returns: Nos. 4, 12, 15, 36, 41, 47, 48, 49, 50, 62, 63, 67, 77, 81, 83, 86, 87, 88, 95, 96, 98, 100, 104, 106, 111, 119, 132. Total, 27. Both totals, 67.

Sixty-five returns not made. The returns already in show 3,481 members, and 445 exaltations.

Railroad Facilities.

We are under many obligations to the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis; Ohio & Mississippi; Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw; Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; Western Union; Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville; Illinois Central; Indianapolis & St. Louis; Chicago & Northwestern; Toledo, Wabash & Western; and Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways, for time-tables on their respective roads. ~~It is not probable that these~~ tables will be materially changed before the meeting of the Grand Lodge.

Grand Lodge of British Columbia.

We have been politely favored with a copy of the proceedings of the Provincial Grand Lodge of British Columbia, at its second annual communication, held at the city of Victoria in May last. There was a full attendance of grand officers, together with the representatives of the four lodges under the jurisdiction. The session was opened in an excellent address by the Grand Master, R. W. Bro. J. W. Powell. The Grand Master reports the Order to be in a healthy condition in the province; that during the past year Caledonia Lodge had erected a commodious, secure, and excellent room for lodge purposes; and that Mt. Hermon Lodge, at Barnard Inlet, has errected, at its own expense, "a handsome and commodious hall, filled with all the comforts and attractions of a model lodge room," which had been formally dedicated. Cariboo Lodge, at Barkerville, lost its hall by fire in the early part of the year, but had erected a new one.

The Masonic authority in the province is at present divided between the Grand Lodges of England and Scotland, the first having a district and the latter a provincial Grand Lodge in the territory; but a proposition has been started for the two parties to unite and form an independent body, as in Canada, Nova Scotia, etc.

Grand Secretary's address—H. F. Heisterman, Victoria, B. C.—F. M. Magazine.

◆

We are in receipt of The Masonic Trowel for August. This is one of the very best publications of the kind in the country, and should be in the hands of every Mason in the State. Edited by Grand Master Harman G. Reynolds, and published by H. G. Reynolds, Jr., Springfield, Illinois, at $1.25 per year.—Woodstock Sentinel.

◆

Trifles light as air
Are, to the jealous, confirmations strong
As proofs of Holy Writ.

Tidings.

Items.

It is said that David Smith, son of Joe Smith, is in Salt Lake, and asserts his right to the succession, and preaches against polygamy.

Mexico has a population of 9,000,000.

The mines at While Pine yield bullion at the rate of $500,000 per month.

The temperance people have formed a National Temperance party.

The oldest and best earthly teacher is experience, but its lessons are frequently very costly.

Unless we speak as we think (when we do speak), do as we profess, peform what we promise, and are what we seem, we are insincere.

We received the New Age, published at San Francisco, August 28, on the 4th inst.

The many friends of Col. L. S. Church will rejoice to learn that he is a candidate for the Constitutional Convention, in McHenry county.

Boston has public statues of Washington, Franklin, Hamilton, Webster, Everett, Beethoven and Mann.

Much complaint is made because people sleep in church on Sunday. Is not Sunday a day of rest?

Oregon harvests a million bushels of wheat in excess of any former year.

A well known physician used to say that roast beef, serenity of mind, cold-water baths, and an amiable and pretty wife, would make almost any man healthy, wealthy, and wise.

We tender our thanks to R. W. Bro. Parvin, Grand Secretary of Iowa, for copies of proceedings of Grand Lodge for the use of Illinois Grand Chapter, and for The Trowel

Poor persons suffering from curable diseases of the eye and ear can be treated at the Eye and Ear Infirmary of Chicago, C. V. Dyer, President; E. B. McCagg, Secretary. Patients not able to pay, are treated free, the patients paying for their own board.

Bro. Leon Hyneman will please accept our thanks for prints of Grand Masters French, Williamson, Stewart, and Mitchell, and of Albert Pike.

The centennial of St. Andrew's, Chapter R. A. M., will be celebrated at Boston, September 29th. The oration will be delivered by M. E. Sir W. S. Gardner, Grand Master Templar's, U. S. A. The Committee of Arrangements consists of such eminent companions as Richard Briggs, John McClellan, Wm. Parkman, W. W. Baker, and N. B. Shurtleff, the latter being the present Mayor of the city. We acknowledge the receipt of complimentary cards of invitation and admission, and should much like to be present on so rare an occasion.

We are in receipt of commissions as Representatives of the Grand Lodges of Tennessee and Texas, near the Grand Lodge of Illinois. They will be presented to the Grand Lodge in due form.

The Grand Commandery of New Hampshire had an agreeable time in camp, July 18, 19, and 20, at Centre Harbor, on Lake Winnipiseogee. Sir Wm. Barrett presided.

A Canada paper tells of a Freemason born in 1757; made a Mason at Ballenderry, Ireland, 1776, who is now living in Canada. Ninety-three years a Mason! May be. We stick to Father Stiles.

Our Maine Templars have been in camp also, near Portland.

The papers say that an 800 pound nugget of lead ore was found near Warren, in this State. Past Grand Master Dills, of Quincy, recently raised one of 1600 pounds, at his mine in Missouri.

We were politely taken by Bro. Randall through the Chicago tunnel, around Union Park, and into the new and beautiful hall of Union Park Lodge, last week. A full description of the hall will be given in a future number. It is a model, and reflects great credit upon the lodge and Bro. Randall, the Worshipful Master.

Chicago Consistory has expelled Gen. Francis Herron. We feel quite sure that this should not have been done.

Assessment of Sangamon county: Real estate, $10,464,677; railroads, $483,836; personal property, $3,702,096. Total, $14,649,997.

The commissioners have located the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale. What will Pres. Blanchard say to this?

It is said that Montreal has 162,000 inhabitants.

New York has a direct line of ships to Portland, Oregon, which is well sustained.

Truth is sometimes as much outraged by silence as it is by falsehood.

The Grand Lodge of Vermont was organized in 1794.

Gen. Thomas P. Auguste, a noted lawyer in Richmond, Va., and Masonically famous as the author of reports on Masonic correspondence and jurisprudence, died July 31st, in the forty-second year of his age.

The members of Independent Royal Arch Lodge, of New York City, have raised and transmitted to the family of our late Bro. Henry D. Cutting, who was lost at sea, the sum of $2,100. Pres. Blanchard will please "howl" at this.

Returns and Dues Received.

Returns and dues have been received from Nos. 1, 2, 8, 13, 15, 23, 28, 35, 36, 42, 45, 49, 55, 56, 57, 59, 60, 64, 65, 66, 67, 70, 72, 73, 77, 80, 87, 88, 91, 97, 99, 100, 103, 105, 107, 112, 115, 117, 118, 119, 122, 124, 127, 132, 136, 140, 141, 143, 144, 148, 150, 154, 157, 158, 160, 161, 164, 169, 172, 173, 183, 187, 188, 191, 192, 193, 196, 197, 200, 205, 207, 209, 213, 214, 222, 226, 231, 236, 237, 238, 239, 241, 248, 252, 254, 257, 259, 260, 261, 263, 265, 268, 270, 271, 273, 275, 276, 277, 278, 282, 283, 284, 287, 288, 290, 291, 292, 294, 295, 296, 298, 299, 303, 304, 305, 307, 309, 311, 312, 313, 314, 318, 320, 323, 325, 330, 332, 333, 334, 336, 342, 345, 346, 349, 352, 353, 356, 357, 358, 360, 370, 371, 376, 379, 380, 382, 384, 387, 389, 393, 394, 397, 400, 402. 404, 408, 410, 413, 414, 418, 421, 424, 425, 432, 438, 439, 441, 443, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 452, 454, 455, 457, 458, 459, 462, 466, 469, 472, 473, 477, 478, 479, 481, 486, 488, 490, 492, 493, 494, 497, 498, 501, 504, 505, 507, 508, 514, 516, 517, 518, 519, 523, 525, 528, 530, 533, 534, 535, 538, 540, 542, 543, 545, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 554, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 570, 572, 575, 580, 582, 585, 587, 588, 594, 596, 599, 600, 605, 606, 607. Total, 245.

Returns without dues have been received as follows:

17, 19, 20, 24, 26, 29, 34, 39, 46, 50, 51, 54, 58, 63, 69, 81, 85, 86, 89, 92, 95, 102, 104, 110, 113, 123, 125, 129, 130, 131, 133, 139, 142, 145, 146, 147, 149, 152, 162, 170, 175, 177, 179, 180, 183, 190, 198, 203, 216, 218, 219, 220, 221, 223, 224, 227, 228, 230, 232, 234, 235, 240, 245, 246, 247, 250, 253, 267, 272, 274, 280, 286, 293, 297, 317, 327, 328, 331, 335, 337, 339, 340, 344, 348, 354, 359, 361, 362, 364, 365, 366, 368, 374, 375, 378, 391, 396, 398, 406, 407, 412, 419, 420, 431, 442, 453, 464, 467, 475, 480, 482, 483, 487, 489, 499, 510, 511, 522, 526, 527, 529, 532, 537, 553, 556 561, 573, 581, 586, 593, 608. Total, 131. Whole number, 377.

ADDITIONAL.

Received and Paid.—14, 43, 53, 90, 165, 204, 301, 351, 355, 388, 411, 440, 468, 496, 509, 512, 515, 601, 604.

Unpaid.—44, 48, 211, 229, 388, 502, 521. Entire total, 403.

Lodges U. D. Received.—Wadley, Patoka, Basco, Hopedale, Venice, New Hope, Fortitude, Union, Lincoln Park, Anchor, Rochester, Mosaic, H. R. Caberry, Forrest.

There are about 175 chartered lodges that are still to make returns. The following short table shows the condition of a few of our large lodges, from which a fair approximate estimate can be made for the whole:

No.	Initiations.	Members.	Increase.	Loss.
1	4	136	14
8	9	143	1
15	26	214	15
42	13	138
43	9	166	6
46	11	141	6
51		100	4
57	12	156	15
63	7	136	1
66		100	1
78		120		4
90	33	183	16
97	2	104	3
102	9	149	8
112	17	108	8
141	34	165	12
160	17	193	12
170	11	133	15
175	4	132	15
209	23	192	26
211	43	349	33
240	2	109	16
246	6	106	7
254	15	114	12
271	13	182		4
284	3	100		3
311	28	233	2
332	11	102	12
333	8	102	8
411	23	135	11
478	15	129	14
508	8	120	31

◆

Transactions Examined.

IOWA.

Grand Lodge met at the Burtis Opera House, in Davenport, June 1. Reuben Mickel, Grand Master. Past Grand Masters Humphreys, Parvin, Cotton, Hartsock, and Guilbert were present. One hundred and forty-five lodges represented.

Under the head of "Applications for Membership," the Grand Master takes strong ground that "every brother ought to belong to a lodge." Such is the law, and every brother in a voluntary state of non-membership is living in violation of a law which he has covenanted to obey.

The Grand Master made the following remarks in regard to a clandestine lodge of Masons:

> Some time during the last fall I received a letter from a brother living at Boonsboro, informing me that some parties had organized at that place a clandestine lodge of Masons, into which they were initiating candidates and pretending to confer upon them the first three degrees of Masonry. I requested him to ascertain at once all the facts possible in the case, as well as the names of the parties engaged in this disreputable business, and communicate the same to me. Not hearing anything further from the brother, I concluded that perhaps he had been misinformed or that the organization had been abandoned. In this, it seems, I was mistaken. Some time in March I was officially informed by responsible and worthy Masons residing at Boonsboro and Montana, that it still had an existence, and that they had already inveigled into their organization some otherwise respectable men, and many of indifferent character, and were holding themselves out to the world as a Masonic body. They also furnished me with a list of the names of the members as far as they could be ascertained. It seems strange to me how any really good and respectable man could be induced to take part in such an illegitimate enterprise, or be induced to join such a clandestine and irregular organization. Therefore, for the purpose of cautioning the public, and for the protection and government of our lodges and brethren, I issued a circular, bearing date April 3d, 1869, giving the facts so far as I had been informed, and also the names of those connected with this transaction. A copy of this circular is herewith submitted:
>
> "CLANDESTINE LODGE OF MASONS AT BOONSBORO.
>
> "WHEREAS, The Grand Master has been officially informed that there exists in the town of Boonsboro a clandestine lodge, into which some good and many bad men have been inveigled. Therefore, for the government of our brethren, and as a caution to the public, we have caused to be issued this circular.
>
> "The persons engaged in this work style their body the "A., F. and C. M. Society," and are said to have existed some five months, and include some thirty or more members.
>
> "The names of the following persons have been obtained and are herewith published for the Craft, viz.:
>
> "Wm. R. Adams, William Austin, S. H. Bell, Jacob Black, John W. Boggs, D. W. Bushnell, Lewis Davis, Scott De Wolf, Benj. Franklin, Geo. M. Haskell, E. L. Hammond, H. M. Hamilton (rejected by 159), L. F. Hilton, F. W. Huxford, Geo. E. Jones, County Treasurer, John Johnston, M. M. King, County Judge, L. S. Kutzleb, Charles Logan, Oliver Logan, Eli T. Mills, S. G. Moffatt, Dep. Co. Treas., William Moore, John C. Robinson, A. L. Thompson (said to be W. M.), J. H. Waters, H. R. Wilson (County Clerk).
>
> "The officers of particular lodges are enjoined to be very strict in their examinations and cautious in admitting visitors, and are further enjoined to keep a 'visitor's book,' in which each applicant for visitation shall be required to write his name before examination, stating the lodge from which he hails, and his residence. Of all of which you will take due notice and govern yourselves accordingly.
>
> "Given under my hand and the seal of the Grand Lodge, at Jefferson, this 3d day of April, A. D. 1869.
>
> "REUBEN MICKEL, Grand Master.
>
> "Attest: T. S. PARVIN, Grand Secretary."
>
> This is the first case of the kind we have ever had in this jurisdiction, and I hope it may be the last. However, for the protection of the Craft from imposition, I would respectfully recommend that the Grand Lodge adopt a general regulation requiring every particular lodge to keep a VISITOR'S BOOK, in which every visitor shall be required, before an examination is had, to register his name and residence, and name, number, and location of his lodge. Such a regulation, strictly enforced, might prevent many lodges from being imposed upon by the unworthy, as well as enable the lodges to follow up and detect impostors.

The decisions of the Grand Master were referred to in the last nnmber of THE TROWEL, in our notice of the Evergreen.

The debtor side of the Grand Treasurer's report shows $14,141.80; credit, $5,000.54 cash, and $3,450 U. S. bonds in hand.

The Grand Secretary, in his report, mentions the death of R. W. Simi Rose, Grand Secretary of Georgia, and mentions that of the cotemporaries of Bro. Parvin in 1844, Bro. John Dove, of Virginia, elected in 1840, and Joseph H. Hough, elected in 1843, now survive.

M. W. Bro. John H. Brown, formerly Grand High Priest of Iowa, and now Grand Master of Kansas, was announced and received with the grand honors. The delinquencies, mistakes, and errors of lodges in making returns are dealt with unsparingly. Bro. J. J. Burtiss tendered to the Grand Lodge a permanent lease, free of cost, of the Burtiss Opera House Hall and rooms, for the use of the Grand Lodge and its library. The matter is referred to the lodges, and will probably be adopted.

John Scott, of Nevada, was elected Grand Master; William P. Allen, S. G. W.; W. J. Ross, J. G. W.; John W. Jamison, G. Treas.; and Theodore S. Parvin, of Iowa City, Grand Secretary. Eighty-three lodges made incorrect returns.

Bro. W. E. Miller presented an able report on correspondence. Our proceedings are courteously noticed. Bro. Parvin is the chairman of that committee now.

MAINE.

Grand Lodge met at Portland, May 4; Timothy J. Murray, Grand Master. Past Grand Masters Washburn, Thompson, Drummond, and Preble, were present.

One hundred and thirty-one lodges represented; 15 unrepresented. The address was excellent, and the Grand Master prayed relief from further service.

The debit side of the Grand Treasurer's account showed $6,297.01; balance in treasury, $758.49. The Grand Lodge also has $15,600 in stocks and loans.

John H. Lynde, of Bangor, was elected Grand Master; David Cargill, Dep.; T. R. Simonton, S. G. W.; John W. Ballou, J. G. W.; Moses Dodge, G. Treas.; and Ira Berry, of Portland, Grand Secretary. Past Grand Master Asa L. Brown, of Washington Territory, was introduced and welcomed. Past Grand Master Drummond presented the report on correspondence.

It was our fortune to prepare the report for Illinois last year, but our duties kept us out of Grand Lodge nearly the whole session, and the report was presented by our Deputy, John C. Reynolds, and Bro. Drummond took it for granted that he was the author of the report, and says that John is a "chip of the Old Block," only a little more so. Pretty well for John, specially as Bro. Drummond soon found that the report was ours. This much, though, for the chip; he can work every degree in symbolic, capitular, cryptic, Templar, and Scottish Masonry! Bro. Drummond discourses thus of anti-Masonry:

> The attempted war upon Masonry seems to have reached its climax, and to be upon the ebb. It was started by certain persons who, so far as we can learn, were desirous of acquiring notoriety, and, having failed to do so in every manner in which they had attempted it, finally were foolish enough to believe that they could build up for themselves a reputation upon the ruins of Masonry! The success they have met with may be inferred from the statistics we have given. The fact is, the warfare has not been as strong as we desired. A healthy opposition would be beneficial to us. It would tend to make us more cautious in the admission of new members, more prompt to reclaim or discipline those who go out of the straight path, and better examples to the Craft. But it is so feeble that it may have the opposite effect.
>
> There are in this country more than a million members of secret societies of one kind or another; a majority of the whole community are numbered in the ranks of these members or those intimately connected with them. And, so far as our observation goes, the opponents of "secret societies" are generally men who are so afraid of doing anything in secret, that they parade their alms-giving, &c., before the world, as if (in the language of a quaint old divine) they "would not trust God with a single penny except before witnesses, lest haply he should deny the receipt!"

KANSAS.

Grand Commandery.—We are in receipt of a pamphlet containing the proceedings at organization of the first annual conclave.

The first meeting was held at Lawrence, Oct. 21, 1868, by delegates from Leavenworth, Washington, Hugh De Payens, and De Molay Commanderies. After taking the preliminary steps, the convention adjourned, and met again Dec. 29, and by virtue of a dispensation from Grand Master Gardner, a Grand Commandery was formed. William O. Gould was elected Grand Commander; John L. Philbrick, Dep.; E. A. Smith, G. Gen.; O. A. Bassett, G. C. G.; M. S. Adams, G. Prel.; J. M. Price, G. S. W.; A. T. Dorwin, J. G. W.; Christian Beck, G. Treas.; E. T. Carr, G. Rec.; R. R. Rees, G. St. B.; C. S. Wheaton, G. Sw. B.; J. A. Chase, G. W.; Fritz Magers, G. Sent. The next meeting will be held at Leavenworth, Oct. 18.

CONNECTICUT.

The Grand Chapter met at New Haven, May 11. James L. Gould, G. H. P. He gave a fair account of the meeting at St. Louis.

The Grand Chapter refused to give consent to making P. G. H. P.'s permanent members of the General Grand Chapter; to any change in the Past Master's degree, or to any more tinkering with the General Grand Constitution.

Benjamin Beecher was expelled for embezzling the funds of the Grand Chapter. John H. Barlou was elected G. H. P.; C. W. Stearns, Deputy; W. W. Lee, G. K.; S. T. Bartlett, G. S.; George Lee, G. Treas.; J. K. Wheeler, Hartford, G. Sec.

Twenty-seven Chapters have 3,415 members; average, 126. Pythagoras Chapter, at Hartford, has 393 members.

Comp. Wm. Storer presented the report on correspondence. In reference to the remarks of Comp. Lininger upon the subject of intemperance, he says:

> We honor our M. E. Companion for the advice he gave in the case of the drunken engineer. An habitual drunkard has no business in the Masonic ranks. Unless he can be speedily reformed, cut him off. He should not be allowed to stand in the way of the promotion of worthy men. Let our lodges and chapters be purged of every vestige of intemperance and profanity, and Masonry will stand higher than ever before in the estimation of all good men. Too many men of intemperate and profane lives are tolerated in our Masonic fraternities, and it is time for our Grand Masters and Grand High Priests to speak out on this subject. The lodges and chapters can not too soon or too persistently engage in the work of purgation. Freemasonry should be kept as pure, morally, as the Christian Church; and a licentious, intemperate, or profane man has no more right in one organization than in the other.

WISCONSIN.

The Grand Lodge assembled at Milwaukee, June 2; M. W. Harlow Pease, Grand Master.

Past Grand Masters Palmer, Bouch, Alden, and Young were present, and one hundred and fifty-six lodges were represented. The address was an able one. We give the following extract in regard to an aged veteran whose name was familiar to Western Masons some years ago:

> Especial notice seems due to him who has been truly called the Father of Masonry in Wisconsin. I refer to P. G. M. and P. G. Secretary, Bro. Wm. R. Smith, who died on the 22d day of August, last. In the year 1840, "Far West Lodge," of Galena, Illinois, received a charter from the Grand Lodge of Missouri, and was duly constituted and its officers installed by Bro. Smith, who was P. D. D. G. M of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, under authority from the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Missouri. Bro. Smith then resided at Mineral Point. Actuated by a desire to promote the interests of the Fraternity in the Territory of Wisconsin, Bro. Smith on his return sought with diligence for a competent number of brethren to form a lodge. The territory was, at that time, sparsely settled, but the brethren were at length found, though, in several instances, residing more than thirty miles from a common center. A dispensation was granted on the 26th day of July, 1841, Mineral Point Lodge was duly opened with Bro. Smith as W. M. February 15th, 1843, Mineral Point Lodge was constituted under a charter from the Grand Lodge of Missouri. During the same year, Melody Lodge at Platteville, and Milwaukee Lodge, at Milwaukee, were established, and on December 17th, 1843, the representatives of these Territorial lodges convened at Madison, framed and adopted a constitution, and formed and constituted the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin, whose first Grand Communication was held at Madison, January 17th, 1844. During those early years, Bro. Smith bore an active and responsible part. Afterwards he served two years as Grand Master, and ten years as Grand Secretary. He was faithful in the discharge of official duties—always affable and kind in his intercourse with the Fraternity, and in all the relations of life was remarkable for his genial disposition and uniform good nature. He died at the advanced age of 83. Like a shock of corn fully ripe, he was gathered to the fathers in the harvest of eternity. It may not be amiss to quote from his letter to the Grand Lodge in 1858, declining further service as Grand Secretary. He said: "It is time that I laid down the pen which has so often written up the records of other men, and await that hour not far distant when the pen will be used to write up mine. Three-score-and-twelve claim their exemption from further labor in tones which can not be disputed. I bid you, in an official capacity, farewell. Never will I forget the body of men whose companionship has rendered verdant so many of the days of the winter of my life—nor while I have health will I ever cease to implore the common Father to have you in his tenderest keeping."
>
> "One last request permit me here:
> When yearly you assemble a'
> One round—I ask it with a tear—
> To him, your friend, that's far awa."

The report on correspondence, by P. G. M. Bouch, occupies just three pages.

The report of the Grand Treasurer shows a balance of $8,453.29. Past Grand Master Guilbert, of Iowa, was introduced and received with the grand honors.

Gabriel Bouck, of Oshkosh, was elected G. M.; John Turner, S. G. W.; D. C. Lamb, J. G. W.; W. H. Hiner, G. Treas.; and W. T. Palmer, G. Sec.

The report on returns shows 8,551 Master Masons, and 1,079 initiations.

Two hundred dollars was appropriated for the benefit of David Stiles, who is now 103 years old; was born in Woodbury, Litchfield Co., Conn., May 21, 1766, and made a Mason in Lodge 16, Toronto, Canada West, Dec. 27, 1797, when Wm. Jervis was Grand Master, and of course has been nearly 72 years a Mason. He is a worthy old gentleman, poor and dependent, but a polished stone for the Master's use.

A revised constitution was adopted.

Thirteen lodges have 1,710 members. The new constitution has many features that are new so far as fundamental law is concerned, and which may require change, and would be more appropriate, in our judgment, in the ordinary laws of the law-making power. But, either as constitutional or general law, the provisions are excellent, and the Grand Lodge did a wise thing in electing the framer to be Grand Master, so that he may give the true construction to the provisions of his own work.

MISSISSIPPI.

We are in the receipt of the proceedings of the Grand Chapter of Mississippi from its organization in May, 1846, until January 11, 1855. Comp. B. S. Tappan officiated as G. H. P. two terms; Walter Brooke, one; Charles S. Spann, one; Abner V. Rowe, two; Wm. S. Patton, one; W. R. Cannon, one. Comp. Wm. King officiated as Grand Secretary one term; Wm. H. Campbell, one; David N. Barrows, six; R. McInnis, one; R. W. T. Daniel, one. The latter companion served several years after that time.

Swindling Advertising.

We caution our brethren of the press to beware of advertising on credit for one "J. T. Lloyd, 23 Cortland street, New York." We helped him a little "on tick," and could not get any pay for it.

Triumphs of Masonry.

From the Keystone.

There is scarcely a great cause that has ever claimed the attention of mankind, that has not, during some stage of its career, been subjected to a baptism of blood. From the cause of Christianity in the first century all have been tried and purified by this apparently necessary mode in the human economy. At times their enemies have deemed them doomed; but, Phœnix-like, they have arisen to renewed life. Not only the blood of the martyrs has been the seed of the Church, but the blood of the dying in every cause, no matter what each may have been, has lent to it lustre, and temporary, if not lasting, renown. Perhaps no Order has ever had more bitter enemies than Freemasonry, and none has been more persistently, and in every nation on the face of the earth, persecuted. In Catholic Italy and Spain, in Mahommedan Turkey, in Presbyterian Scotland, and in Protestant Switzerland and the United States, the blind rage of political hostility or or religious bigotry has sought to wipe Mason and Masonry out of existence. No religion or form of government can boast of freedom from this charge; all are alike guilty; and yet no one of them exists, or has existed, that has not owed some portion of its stability to the teachings of the very Order it has sought to annihilate. "In ancient times," our constitutions inform us, "Masons were charged to comply with the religious opinions and the usages of the country or nation where they sojourned, yet it is now most expedient that the brethren in general should only be charged to adhere to the essentials of religion, in which all men agree; leaving each brother to his own judgment as to paricular forms, or as his conscience might dictate." This disposes of the charge that Masonry is inimical to any church or religious belief. So the statement of such eminent men as George M. Dallas, Samuel H. Perkins. Josiah Randall, Francis R. Shunk, James Page, and many others, accompanied by their solemn affidavits, "that they do not know and do not believe that Freemasonry enjoins upon, or sanctions in its members, any conduct incompatible with the strictest and purest citizenship, with the most absolute obedience to the laws of their country as paramount to all voluntary rules and regulations, and with the fairest administration of justice; that they do not know and do not believe that Freemasonry is, or can be made an engine of political party, or of religious sectarianism," which was publicly made in the year 1836, in our own State, disproves either any political or religious bias in Masonry. Yet in the face of both of these testimonies, a convention of men, of otherwise intelligent men, in this year of grace, could be found in the city of Chicago, inveighing against Masonry as immoral, sectarian, and political! If the light of the nineteenth century be not sufficient to illumine their darkened minds, neither will the light of any future century suffice to penetrate the noddles of some portion of the human family. They will have their successors in all ages—men who can't see because they won't, or who, in the language of Scripture, "have eyes and not see." They are well designated, in Masonic language, "profane." They dishonor themselves, their country, their age, and their God.

Although it has never been denied that secresy is a virtue, the secrets of Masonry have entailed upon our Order the envy, reproach, and persecution that have ever followed it. An apprentice may righttully preserve the secrets of his master, the lawyer of his client, the Senator of his constituent body in secret session, but not the Mason of his lodge. Yet, by our very constitution, we are disarmed inthe presence of our enemies; although innocent, the brother of the Mystic Tie must keep the proof of his innocence locked within his own bosom.

Only in one way may "the profane" satisfy themselves of the purity of Masonry: none are excluded from the fullest view of our secrets who duly apply and are duly received into the Order. A striking proof of this was made in Holland, in the year 1735, when occurred one of the first persecutions to which Masonry, in its present organization, was subjected. Then the States-General, yielding to popular clamor, denounced and prohibited the meetings of the Craft, and the Masters and the Wardens were publicly arrested. They, in order to exculpate themselves in the eyes of their enemies, freely offered to receive and initiate any person in the confidence of the magistrates, and who could only give information upon which the StatesGeneral might depend, relative to the true designs of the Institution. The proposal was acceded to and the towns-clerk was chosen. He was immediately initiated, and Dr. Mackey tells us his report so pleased his superiors, that all the magistrates and principal persons of the city of Amsterdam became members and zealous patrons of the Oorder.

Masonry is pure in its purposes, honest in its offer to prove its innocence in the only possible manner, and it must flourish in the future with a vigor all unknown in the past. One lodge existed for thirty-one years in Russia without any one outside of the Order knowing it; it exists to-day in the "Eternal City," in spite of the Papal bull and anathema. It is the result of civilization, and while its lamp continues to shed abroad the rays of knowledge and truth, Masonry will co-exist with it. It fears not the light, because its office is to dispense light; it shuns not the truth, for it is the champion of truth; its real enemy is not without, but within—the unworthy brother, who has professed what he did not believe, who has promised what he does not intend to perform.

Miscellaneous Reading.

Chicago & Alton Railway.

In drawing the special notice of the traveling public to the ample arrangements made by this line, under its new time schedule (herein published), for the convenience of its patrons, we think it advisable to preface our remarks by a brief review of the annual report for year ending December 31st, 1868, which shows that under its present able management the Chicago and Alton Railway must become one of the most remunerative western lines. Running through a section of Illinois which may justly be considered the richest in agricultural and mineral products, it commands a local business ample of itself to pay a handsome dividend upon the capital stock and bonded debt; but its earnings are increased materially by the large amount of through traffic which is attracted by the superior equipment characteristic of the Chicago & St. Louis route.

The capital stock and funded debt of the company are as follows:

Common Stock	$ 5,141,800
Preferred	2,425,400
Preferred Sinking Fund Bonds	402,000
First Mortgage Bonds	2,400,000
Income Bonds	1,100,000
	$11,469,200

In addition to this, the company are liable for the interest and dividends of the stock and bonds of the Joliet & Chicago Railway, viz., the 8 per cent. upon $500,000 mortgage bonds, and 7 per cent. upon $1,500,000 of stock, and have guaranteed a minimum rental of $240,000 per annum to the St. Louis, Jacksonville & Chicago Railway Company, whose line, 151 miles in length, was leased in perpetuity during 1868, and is now operated as a division of the Chicago & Alton Railway. The board estimates that the fixed charges upon earnings amount to $717,440 per annum, but the large receipts, as shown below, are fully adequate to defraying these large charges, improving the road and equipment, and providing a large surplus for extra dividends. Earnings during 1868 were:

From Passenger Traffic	$1,305,570 16
From Freight	2,953,629 39
From Express Freight	127,290 65
From Transportation of Mail	47,753 96
From Miscellaneous sources	74,398 81
	$4,508,642 97

Operating expenses during the same period were $2,463,182.64, showing a balance to net earnings of $2,045,460.33. The treasurer's report shows that, after paying out of this surplus interest, rent, dividends, Government tax, etc., in addition to $635,766.07 expended upon permanent improvements, there was a balance of $984,667.37. An English paper, in alluding to these results, and comparing them with the statistics of railways in that country, says justly: "They are truly remarkable, and it is only to be hoped, for the sake of the stockholders in the road, that a similar prosperity will be enjoyed to the end of the chapter." Of the permanent success, which is in store for the Chicago & Alton Railway, there can be no doubt in the minds of those are acquainted with its location, the country through which it runs, and the faithful application of earnings to permanent improvements, which has characterized the management during the past few years. It may be noticed in this connection that fifty-one per cent. of the whole amount of bituminous coal received by rail in Chicago during 1868, came over this road, and the tonnage has increased from 6,000 tons in 1866 to 166,986 tons in the past year. The company have recognized the paramount necessity of double tracking the line, or, at any rate, such portions of it as are cumbered with numerous and heavy freight trains, and have, consequently, constructed eight miles of additional track between Wilmington and Braceville, and eight miles between Dwight and Odell. During the current year the distance between Braceville and Dwight will also be constructed in the same manner, thus giving the road the use of about 30 miles continuous double track. The same policy, if pursued, will eventually result in the completion of a double track between Wilmington and Bloomington, where there is the greatest movement of trains.

The correct policy of educating their own officers, and advancing to important positions of responsibility and trust their own employees, can not be better exemplified then by the success which has attended Mr. McMullin's administration, and which reflects credit on those who made the deserved selection. Young in years, yet old in experience, and endowed with those faculties which render a superintendent popular with his subordinates and the outside public, Mr. J. C. McMullin possesses a knowledge of the road's resources, and its requirements, which no stranger could have acquired without much pecuniary loss to the company; and the candor with which he acknowledges the efficiency and fidelity of his associates is a distinctive trait of character which must strike a sympathetic chord in the minds of all railway employees; and there are few general superintendents who can look forward to a more certain future than the one who now regulates the Chicago & Alton line.

Special attention has always been paid on this railway to the condition of motive power and rolling stock, hence it is not surprising to notice in the report that out of a complement of 97 engines, only six are incapacitated from doing duty on the road, and out of nearly 2,000 freight cars only 275 are reported as being in a second rate condition. Those who have traveled in the luxurious palace and hotel cars (Pullman's) running between Chicago and St. Louis, can corroborate our statement that a journey is robbed of all its annoyances by the comfort and convenience therein supplied; and we may safely say that the money thus expended in catering for the public wants, has produced a rich harvest of patronage, and has advertised the line more successfully than any other medium. But the Chicago and Alton managers having demonstrated in the past their progressive ideas about passenger equipment, have now determined to compete for through business on the ground of quick time; and we have no doubt that a flattering increase of revenue will be coincident with their new schedule, by which passengers are transferred between New York and St. Louis faster than by any other line, at any rate, by the train leaving Chicago 8:50 P. M. A traveler leaving New York 9 A. M. by the Allentown and Pennsylvania railways, 8 A. M. by the New York Central or Erie Railways, arrives in Chicago 8 P. M., St. Louis 8 A. M., an average rate of twenty-five miles per hour for forty-seven hours. The same time is made on the eastward bound train leaving St. Louis 7:30 P. M. The public are so well acquainted with the thorough manner in which running arrangements are carried out on the Chicago & Alton Railway, that no fear need be entertained of their ability to fulfill literally their advertised programme; and we can cordially recommend the route either to tourists or business men.—Travelers' Guide.

◆

The Young Apple-Tree.

"Now that is too bad," said little Marianne, as she looked out of the window, with a sorrowful face, and saw the dripping trees in the garden. "Papa said at breakfast that this is the last of January, but it does not look like winter out of doors; everything is wet and muddy. It is awful weather."

"What do I hear this little girl say?" asked some one behind her, who had a rough voice, and when Marianne turned round, she saw there was actually in the room another person besides herself. Klaus, the old gardener, had just come into the room with a basket of beautiful flower-pots, and stood by the front window to put them in a proper place, and to take out the withered flowers. He had been at least twenty years in the house of Marianne's father —Baron Witkoff—and, as he was an old and faithful servant, he could take the liberty of asking such a question of his employer's little daughter.

Marianne now went up to him, looked at him while he was engaged in his work, and then said in a sad tone:

"You see, Klaus, that if the weather remains wet, as it is now, grandmamma cannot come to my birthday the next day after to-morrow. The doctor has told her not to expose herself to dampness, lest the pains in her feet become greater. And ever since Christmas, I have had such a nice time thinking about my dear grandmamma coming to my tenth birthday.

"Yes, yes; your grandmamma is always welcome to us all," said the old gardener, bowing his snow-white head; "and, besides, it is always an encouragement to me, after the long cold winter, to see the first rays of the sun shine down on my flowers in the conservatory. But my little mistress should not scold at the rainy weather, even though the good weather might bring so much joy to us all. God gives us rains and sunhine, and he knows better than we do what we need. Rainy weather is not bad just at this time, and we gardeners have always great reason to be thankful for the heavy rains which come just about the last of January."

"Now, Klaus, what good can rain do a gardener at this time? There is nothing out of doors that it can do any good to; the flowers are all under cover, and rain is perfectly useless."

"Quite right," said Klaus; "but has Miss Marianne not thought of her beautiful apple-tree?"

"Of course I have; don't I see it before me at this very time? It was planted on my sixth birthday, and, though I have attended to it very well, it has not yet borne fruit; yet I am very anxious to eat some of the first apples from my beautiful tree."

"Well, now, if you wish your beautiful tree to bear apples, there must be some heavy rains to make the sap go all through the tree."

"What is that you say, Klaus? What good can rain do unless the sun has already been warm?"

Klaus laughed heartily, for he knew that Marianne did not know what was necessary to make trees grow, and that the heavy rain she was looking at was actually necessary, not only to make her own beautiful apple-tree grow, but all the apple-trees in the garden. Then he said:

"I am not a learned man, but I know that this is just about the time in the year that the sap begins to come into the trees. All through the stock of the tree there is a multitude of small passages and pipes, which can scarcely be seen by the naked eye, and which are hollow and dry in winter. Away under the roots it is also dry, and no moisture can get into the stock of the tree, and ascend clear up to the outermost branches, until the rain has thoroughly moistened the earth. If it keeps on raining as it does now the moisture will soon get into the roots, and then up into the tree, and by-and-by the tree will blossom and bear fruit. And who knows but your beautiful tree is just making this preparation for fruit?"

Marianne still stood at the window and looked at her tree. She had expected the previous year to eat the first apple from it, but she said to herself: "If such terrible weather can only make my apple-tree bear beautiful apples next summer, I suppose I have no right to complain. Mamma has often said that I must learn how to control myself, and now I will certainly make a beginning."

By-and-by Marianne's birthday came, and with it many very pleasant surprises. A multitude of beautiful gifts lay on her birthday table—pictures for albums, books, a portfolio, chocolate-candy, flowers, gloves, belts, a summer-hat, umbrella, and all sorts of nice things that a little girl likes to use. But Marianne endured the disappointment of her hopes much better than anybody expected, and her mother would not have been surprised at any moment to see her burst into tears. Her grandmother was not there, and that was a disappointment which she could not forget, but which she was very patient in bearing.

About noon there came a letter from her grandmother. But there was no box full of presents, which Marianne had hoped would come. But the old lady wrote that she would come in May, and bring Marianne's gifts with her at that time. Now, this was another hard thing for her to bear—to wait until May for her grandma's gifts. But her mother had already given her great credit for self-control, and she now felt that it would be spoiling all if she fell into her old mistakes of impatience and sadness. The little girl looked out of the window at the apple-tree, and said: "By-and-by May will be here, when I hope to see the blossoms on my tree, and then autumn will come, when I hope to eat the fruit."

April came, with its warm, sunny days, and Marianne's apple-tree commenced to put forth little buds, and one morning, when she looked out of the window, she saw it almost covered with rosy blossoms. Not long after that, she noticed that the blossoms began to lose their color and beauty. And then she ran out and asked old Klaus if her apple-tree was going to die. "A little patience," he said, "just a little patience; all the blossoms must fade before you can have any fruit. Just a little patience, just a little waiting."

The old man had scarcely uttered these words before a splendid carriage, with two gray horses, made its appearance through the front gate. It was Marianne's grandmother, and the little girl knew her too well to suppose that she would come without bringing her some nice presents. Of course, there was great joy in the house, but there was no one who was so glad as Marianne, who led her grandmother into the garden to show the beautiful apple-tree to her. They both went up and down the garden-paths, and looked at all the flowers. Suddenly the old lady stopped, and said in a friendly way:

"I hear, to my great joy, that my dear Marianne does not yield so much to bad temper, and is not so impatient as she used to be. I expect your governess has had a good deal to do with it, and I will certainly thank her heartily for it."

Marianne looked down on the ground, with a blush upon her face, and then took her grandmother's hand and kissed it, and said:

"No, grandma, my governess has not so much to do with it, as our old gardener, Klaus, or, rather, my birthday apple-tree, for it was the means of teaching me patience on my last birthday, when I was hoping you would come and visit us, as you had always done before."

"Indeed! Can an apple-tree do anything? I am certainly surprised to hear that an apple-tree can do something which your mother had never been able to do." Then she drew her granddaughter close up to her, and embracing her, said:

"My child, it is a duty which you owe to God to strive against your faults, and to lay off every besetting sin that you have. He has crowned you with good things from your birth to the present time. You have made a good beginning; but, if you would progress, and finally triumph altogether, you can never do it by your own strength, but must do it by asking the Saviour to help."

That evening Marianne's grandmother took her up stairs into the large bedroom which she always occupied when she visited the family, read a psalm to her, and then took out of her trunk a large and beautiful apple, which she presented to Marianne.

Marianne was atonished that, at that time of year, there should be such splendid fruit; but, as she took the great apple into her hand, she observed that it was only made of papier-mache.

"Now, I suppose," said the grandmother "that you are very curious to know what is in it; it is my birthday gift for you, and you have certainly waited long enough for it."

Marianne turned the apple around on every side, but she could not tell how it was to be opened. At last her grandmother had to show her. She pulled the stem of the apple just a little, and then the apple fell right apart in the middle, and there stood before her a beautiful little carriage with two black ponies, all made of ivory. Marianne thought that it was the most wonderful thing she had ever seen, yet she did not know what to do with such a present; for she was a little too old to play with such a thing, and it did not seem to have any use. As she looked in wonder at it, her grandmother said to her:

"I must now explain to you my strange gift. You once said that it was your greatest wish to have a little carriage with two ponies, and I determined I would fulfill your wish as soon as ever I had learned from your mother that you had learned to control your passions, and had ceased to cry at every little thing that happened which did not please you. It seems to me as if you have now reached that object, in a great measure, and, until you have reached it altogether, this little carriage must serve you as a picture of what the reality is to be. As soon as the apples have ripened on your beautiful tree, I will ask your mamma and your governess, and perhaps the old gardener, to decide whether or not you are ready for the live ponies and the big carriage, to take the place of the little ivory ones that you have now."

Marianne's joy was indescribable, and she could not cease to thank her good grandmother over and over again for the lesson which she had taught her in the little gift which she had now presented. Then she said:

"On the first day that I drive out with my little ponies and carriage, after you have decided that I am worthy to have them, I must go to the house of old Klaus first, and then I will present him a basket of apples and a beautiful apple-cake, for he is the person to whom I owe most for having learned the useful lessons."

Marianne has now grown to be a young lady, and she still keeps the beautiful little ivory carriage and ponies upon her dressing-table. It is a lesson to her, for every time she finds that she is overcome, in a measure, by her passion, she goes and looks at it, takes out a ten-cent piece, and drops it into the little trunk behind the coach, and says: "Now, that is the little penalty I must pay in remembrance of the lesson that I have learned. All the money which I give this way, shall be spent to provide Christmas-trees for poor children."

The apple-tree in the garden has now become very large, and has borne a good deal of beautiful fruit, but the most beautiful apple that has ever shone upon its branches is not half so beautiful as the precious fruit which it has been the unconscious means of bearing in Marianne's heart. She thanks God daily for having made the apple-tree an instrument of helping her to overcome her faults.—From the German, in the Methodist.

Specimens of Natural Memories.

Among all the specimens of wonderful natural memories, there has not been one possessed of the power of universal memory, i. e. memory capable of retaining all kinds of facts. Some have had a memory whose power could be applied but to the retention of names; others to the retention of insolated words only; others could learn nothing but prose; others poetry; and finally, some could apply their memory but to the acquirement of languages, while others could use it only in the operations of mathematics or extemporaneous calculations.

MEMORY OF NAMES.

It is recorded in Genesis, chapter II, verses 19 and 20, as follows:

"And the Lord God having formed out of the ground all the beasts of the earth, and all the fowls of the air, brought them to Adam to see what he would call them, etc.

"And Adam called all the beasts by their names, and all the fowls of the air and all the cattle of the field," &c.

Without attempting an interpretation of the manner by which Adam acquired the knowledge of all those names, we must admit that in order to remember so many hundreds of thousands of names, varied as were those distinguishing all the animals living on the surface of the earth, he must have necessarily been endowed with a memory of names, more prodigiously developed than any of which the history of mankind has kept the record.

From Adam we come down towards the fall of Babylon, or the end of the first captivity of Israel, before we meet with a "memory of names" worthy of being placed in parallel with that of the father of mankind, and it is in the providential liberator of Israel himself that we see it.

Pliny says that Cyrus had a memory so prodigious that he knew by heart the names of all the officers and soldiers of his armies; and we well know that the armies of the great Cyrus were not composed of insignificant handfuls of men.

The same author relates that Cyneas, the ambassador from King Pyrrhus to the Roman people, having been introduced to each member of the Senate on the day of his arrival, the next morning when he met them in the Senatorial Palace, after explaining the object of his mission, saluted every Senator by his proper name and surname, without committing a single error, to the amazement of the Senate and the people.

Several authors have related that the Emperor Otho, the successor to Galba, in a great measure, owed his accession to the empire of the world, to his prodigious power of memory for retaining names. He had learned the names of all the soldiers of his army when he was their companion as a simple officer, and he used to call every one by their proper name. The soldiery, flattered at what they thought a mark of sympathy from Otho, persuaded themselves that if ever elevated to the supreme power, such an Emperor could not forget, in the distribution of his imperial favors, any one of those whose names he remembered so well. In consequence of this seemingly wise reflection, as soon as Otho raised the standard of rebellion against Galba, they all declared in his favor, and opened to him the path to universal sovereignty, by helping him to overthrow his competitor to the throne. But it appears that the Emperor Otho had not a memory very tenacious; for we learn that three months afterwards, his soldiers perceiving, doubtless, that he was beginning to forget them, abandoned him to his fate, when Vitellius, in his turn, attempted to tear from his grasp that scepter, which, 95 days before, he had himself snatched from the hand of Galba.

A similar kind of memory has also been possessed by Mithridates, the famous Parthian King, and Adrianius, the "locomotive Emperor," (his long reign was but a perpetual journey; he continually traveled, visiting all parts of the Roman dominions, etc.,) as he is called by Lampridius. It is related that they knew by heart the names of all their soldiers! Plutarch asserts, and Pliny after him, that Lucius Scipio, surnamed Asiaticus, could call every Roman citizen by his name, and that Themistocles also could do the same thing with regard to the citizens of Athens, which ability had been to him, as in the case of Otho, a most valuable title to popular favor.

Now in the time of Themistocles, Athens numbered about 30,000 active citizens; and in the time of Scipio Asiaticus, according to a census taken in the year 192 B. C., Rome contained no less than 243,704 citizens capable of bearing arms!

Such are the principal examples of a powerfully retentive faculty for names of which there is any mention in history.—New Age.

Eminent Blind Men.

Blind poets, since the days of Homer, have been numerous enough. Amongst others, we may mention Milton; Delille, the translator of Virgil; Blacklock, the Divine; Avisse, Kozlor, Louis Egloff, and others.

The elder Disraeli, towards the close of a useful and laborious life, suffered from an ophthalmic disease, which checked him in the prosecution of his literary labors.

Saunderson, the mathematician, lost his eyesight when only a year old, but contrived to acquire a remarkable proficiency. "He is not," says the author of the "Pursuit of Knowledge," "the only blind mathematician on record. The writer of his life mentions Diodotus the Stoic, Didymus of Alexandria, Eusebius, and Nicasius de Voerda." The Count de Pagan, the "father of the modern science of fortification," lost his left eye before he was seventeen, and was totally deprived of sight when but thirty-eight. Euler, the celebrated mathematician, was struck with blindness in his fifty-ninth year, but continued to calculate and to dictate books as actively as ever. Prescott, the author of the "Conquest of Mexico," and other works, long suffered from a painful affection of the eyes. Orestes A. Brownson, the great American reviewer, had to get out the last published numbers of his Review by the aid of an amanuensis. Augustine Thierry, the distinguished historian of the "Norman Conquest," was blind, paralyzed, incapable of movement.

Saunderson, to whom we have already alluded, is perhaps the most remarkable of those blind men who made themselves a name for scientific excellence. He lost his sight in 1683—when only one year old—after a severe attack of the small-pox. But, in spite of his complete blindness, he gave himself up to the assiduous duty of the sciences, and finally lectured at the University of Cambridge, on mathematics and optics with wonderful success. His sense of touch was exquisitely fine. Thus, in a collection of Roman medals, he could distinguish the genuine from the false, although the latter were often so admirably counterfeited as to deceive those who examined them with their eyes. By the different feeling of the air on his face, he could tell when an object was placed before him. And his hearing was so accurate in seizing and appreciating the slightest sounds, that he could determine the height of any chamber into which he was introduced, and his distance from the wall!

There have been blind warriors, who have not the less controlled the motions of their armies. Such were Henri Dandalo and Jean Ziska. The first, a Doge of Venice, was one of the leaders of the Latin army which captured Constantinople in 1204. Jean de Troczow, better known as Ziska—the Bohemian for one-eyed, a name he received after losing, while yet a child, an eye in childish sport—was the instigator, the life, the soul, of the terrible Hussite war, which lasted more than half a century. He lost in 1420, at the siege of Kaby, his remaining eye; but it was after this terrible accident that "Old Blind Dog," as he called himself, gained his most brilliant victories.

"After he lost his sight," says L'Enfant, his biographer, "They were accustomed to place him in a chariot near the principal standard, and explain to him the order of battle, the situation of places, the valleys, rocks, mountains, hills, forests, and, according to these instructions, he arranged the disposition of the forces, and gave them his orders."

One evening, when he was about to give the signal for battle, his attendants informed him that the darkness would prevent his soldiers from fighting. Immediately he had fire set to a neighboring village to afford light to his army, which then, according to custom, was victorious.

He died of the plague at the siege of a town called Przibislaw, in 1424.

Historical students will recollect the glorious death of John the Blind, King of Bohemia, who fell in the fight at Crecy, 1346. Being informed that the battle was lost, he bade his knights conduct him into the thickest of the fray. "And," says quaint old Froissart, "he rushed so bravely on the enemy that at each sweep of his sword down went a foeman, and those who attended him fought, so that on the morrow their bodies were found piled around their Lord, and their horses all close together."

A considerable number of blind princes is furnished by the history of the Greek empire and the Mussulman states, where the hideous punishment of putting out the eyes was very common.—Western Monthly for September.

◆

How Squire B—— Got His Verdict.

J. M. D—g—s, the able and efficient president of one of our most important railroads, in early life hung out his shingle in Galena, a place which has since been so prolific in public men. Among his first clients was a well-to do farmer, whose land contained a valuable "lead of mineral," on which a miner had "squatted." While the rights of the proprietor were clear and unquestionable, the sentiments of the miners in those "diggings" were with the trespasser, and the farmer found it necessary to resort to the law to reinstate him in his property. Suit was instituted and the trial came off. The court.house was filled by an audience of miners, whose sympathies for the defendant were so emphatically expressed that the jury were overawed, and brought in a verdict in accordance with the popular sentiment. But the court, on application, regarded the verdict as so contrary to law and equity, that it at once granted a new trial.

After these proceedings were had, 'Squire B—ks—e, who still lives in the neighborhood in the enjoyment of a green old age—and "long may he wave"—stepped up to D—g—s and remarked:

"Young man, I have fellow feeling for you. In this trial you haven't had a fair shake. When it comes off again I will see that you are righted."

At the next term the court-house was filled with spectators as usuals; but, just before this case was called they were observed to issue in a steady stream out of doors, until no one but the officers of court, the jury, lawyers, clients, and witnesses were left. The case was tried, and the jury brought in a verdict for the plaintiff.

D—g—s was at a loss to account for this sudden exodus; but when he came to go out he found that 'Squire B—ks—e had opened a faro bank near the court-house steps! This attraction was too powerful to be resisted.—Western Monthly for September.

◆

A clock-work apparatus, for working sewing machines, has just been devised in Germany, which will run for three hours when wound up.

◆

Expelled.

MURPHYSBORO, Ills., Sept. 7th, 1869.

Masonic Trowel, Springfield:

DEAR SIR—At a special meeting of Murphysboro Lodge No. 498, A. F. and A. M., on Monday evening, 30th ult., Bro. JOHN QUIGLEY was expelled from all the rights and privileges of Masonry, for violation of obligations, and unmasonic conduct. He is an Irishman, about 6 feet high, light complected, dark hair, usually wearing no beard, his avocation is that of a railroad contractor. A knowledge of his whorebouts would be gladly received by his creditors of this vicinity. Please request other Masonic journals to publish.

Yours fraternally,
E. M. PHILLIPS, Sec.

By order of Lodge.

By Shipman Lodge No. 212, Mr. JOHN HAMILTON, gross unmasonic conduct. Published by order of the lodge.

E. P. FORD, Sec.

Married.

At St. Paul's Church, in Springfield, August 30, by Rev. Dr. Pierce, THOMAS C. SMITH, Esq., Deputy Grand Master of H. A. Johnson Grand Lodge of Perfection, to Mrs. SARAH E. VAN VEGHTEN, all of this city.

Died.

Of consumption, at Fort Harker, Kansas, in the fall of 1868, Bro. JOSEPH W. HART, a member of Shipman Lodge No. 219, at Shipman in this State.

The deceased was in the employ of the government at the time of his death, and in all his life continually exemplified the tenets of Masonry by his industry, consistent morality, and active charity.

The lodge passed the usual resolutions.

Moneys Received for Masonic Trowel,

FROM JULY 13TH, TO SEPT. 4TH, INCLUSIVE.

$1.25 each.—T. J. Basket, J. J. Butler, Henry Betterman, C. L. Bartlett, W. H. Brown, J. Clark, Jos. Cook, L. M. Cleaver, C. E. Cobb, J. T. Chandler, R. Clary, W. H. Callender, W. L. Davis, Jas. Douglas, J. L. Dewey, E. W. Dysart, J. L. Dewey, S. J. Dodds, Jos. Doyon, J. W. Green, Anna Gitz, A. H. Gambriel, W. H. Hahn, L. M. Hillyer, C. H. Howard, L. W. Hess, L. H. Hall, S. W. Hays, S. Johnson, M. Jackson, J. A. Mason, W. F. Mulkey, R. McCoy, J. H. McGrath, J. A. Mason, J. H. Moore, S. Noyer, J. S. Quinn, C. H. Russell, M. L. Read, G. P. Randall, F. E. Stauff, W. C. Snyder, C. P. Sargent, J. P. Smith, S. Smith, M. Shield, A. J. Sawyer, D. Shaid, S. O. Stillman, J. R. Smith, H. R. Torrey, Chas. Wilson, W. A. Westrope, P. E. Williams, J. Workman.

Other sums.—G. W. Albin, $2.00; J. Assman, $1.10; W. W. Austin, $1.35; J. A. Brown, $2.00; S. C. Buckman, $1.00; J. F. Benner, $1.00; H. J. Blanck, $1.00; J. H. Bouve, $2.50; L. E. Boyd, $8.75; J. H. Baker, 15cts.; W. Benny, $2.00; J. L. Connelly, $1.00; A. W. Cowan, $3.75; same, $1.00; Leo Canman, $10.00; J. L. Dewey, $37.50; A. Dickerson, $2.50; H. Deming, $2.50; P. Eskins, $2.50; W. B. Fonda, $3.00; H. Gibson, $1.00; J. B. Gillespie, $1.00; C. T. Hill, $2.50; J. B. Hollister, 15cts.; A. Hass, $1.00; H. N. Hogan, $1.00 C. Hoepefner, $11.25; G. O. Jones, $2.50; Koberlin, $1.00; W. Lapham, $2.50; W. Lewis, $3.60; W. Lockstone, $2.50; G. E. Monk, $1.00; C. E. Munger, $2.50; J. B. Newman, $1.00; J. W. Osborn, 50cts.; W. S. Perse, $1.00; J. W. Page, $1.50; W. J. Parker, $7.25; D. C. H. Rothchild, $3.75; A. B. Russell, $5.00; N. M. Rickard, $1.20; G. P. Randall, $3.80; T. W. Shimmin, $2.50; J. R. Smith, $3.00; H. J. Scoles, $2.00; G. W. Seaman, $1.00; R. B. Smith, $2.50; stranger, 10cts.; W. S. Vail, $1.00; W. Workman, $9.00; A. J. Wood, $2.20; A. W. Waters, $1.00; D. C. Webb, $1.10; J. Webber, $2.00; J. Hypes, $1.00.

MASONIC FURNISHING HOUSE,
PARSON & CO.,
816 N. Fourth St., and 819 Broadway,
ST. LOUIS, MO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Masonic Clothing of all Kinds,
Jewels, Working-Tools, Lodge Furniture, Charts, Seal Presses, Books, Blanks, Diplomas, Swords, Banners, Baker's Low-Twelve Bell, and everything wanted for
LODGE, CHAPTER, OR COMMANDERY

Being the oldest Regalia Manufacturers in the United States (having had thirty years' experience), we feel confident of giving perfect satisfaction. Regalia for all secret and benevolent societies, and FLAGS and BANNERS of all kinds made to order on short notice.

Price lists furnished on application. Gold and Silver Trimmings, wholesale and retail. 9v8-1y*

ST. CLAIR NURSERIES,
SUMMERFIELD - - ILLINOIS,
ESTABLISHED IN 1856.

I offer to Planters and Dealers a large and well grown stock of
FRUIT AND ORNAMENTAL TREES,
Hardy Native Grape Vines,
EVERGREENS, ROSES, SHRUBS, &C.

The stock offered for sale the coming fall, owing to a favorable season, has made a fine growth, and will, I think, give satisfaction to all.

The attention of Dealers is specially invited to my unusually fine stock of STANDARD APPLES, consisting of all the leading
WESTERN & SOUTHWESTERN SORTS.

Wholesale and Retail Catalogues, now out, and forwarded to all applicants.
7v8-3t E. F. BABCOCK.

TRANSCENDANT CRABS.
St. Clair Nurseries, Summerfield, Ill.
I have a large stock of Transcendant, Large Red, Yellow, and Cherry Crabs, low headed and well branched, 4 to 6 feet high, $20. per 100, $180. per 1000. No charge for packing.
7v8 E. F. BABCOCK.

R. ORENDORFF,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.
Business Solicited in the State and Federal Courts.
4v8-6m*

VIRGIL PRICE
MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Manufacturers of all kinds of
Masonic Materials, Swords,
BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.,
No. 144 GREENE STREET,
NEW YORK.
Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.
PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO
KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.
Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords. 1v8-1y

PRINTING.—We are prepared to do Printing of all kinds, from the largest Poster to the smallest Circulars, Cards, and Hand-ills.

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, OCTOBER 15, 1869. NO. 10.

Our Travels.

Sept. 14—Arrived in Dixon, were taken in charge by R. W. Bro. J. A. Hawley, G. S. W., and the brethren of Friendship Lodge No. 7, and found elegant quarters at the Nachusa House. Dixon has spread out largely since we visited it a few years ago. It is on both sides of Rock River, and is probably the most picturesque of all the towns on that beautiful river. We should think its population would reach from four to five thousand, perhaps more.

It has a full complement of churches, some of them fine buildings; a large literary institute, and two school-houses, one on the north side, the other on the south. Bro. Hawley kindly conveyed us over the town in his carriage, and we took in the views which so enchanted us in 1837, now covered with town and farm. There is more timber now than then, and the hills look grand in their beautiful robes of forest, field, and town. The school-house on the south side is just being completed, and is an improvement in its recitation and study rooms—in its heating apparatus, halls, and private arrangements—upon some of the best school-houses of the present day. Including basement, it is four stories high, and in its finish, structure, and admirable conveniences, is a credit to its projectors, and to Bro. R[illegible], the architect.

A sight of Bro. Hawley's farm contiguous to the city, all reduced to cultivation and in splendid order, filled us with gratitude for his success. An hour with his intelligent lady and blooming children in a charming home, and we hied away to the new hall lately dedicated, got up in admirable taste for lodge, chapter, council, and commandery, with conveniences for all, and all the rooms well furnished, and there found a large assemblage from Dixon, to which were added several brethren from Franklin Grove, Lee Centre, Sublette, Amboy, etc.

We were handsomely received by Bro. Hawley, in the absence of Bro. Levanway, W. M., and had a good talk; afterwards the brethren were communicative, and Bro. Hawley, Father Whitney, and several others, made the time pass very pleasantly. A banquet followed, and good things were discussed and good things said. Father Whitney is one of the institutions in Lee county. Born in Conway, Mass., in 1791, and consequently 78 years of age; was initiated in Oak Orchard Lodge, in Orleans county, N. Y., in 1816, and was subsequently a charter member of new lodges at Barre and Dane's Corners; at the latter place he took the chapter degrees. When Friendship Lodge was formed, in 1838, he was one of the petitioners, and used to attend its regular meetings steadily until Franklin Grove Lodge was started, and now the new chapter there bears his honored name.

Like many others, he endured persecution like a good soldier during the Morgan excitement, and was refused admission to the Presbyterian church because he would not renounce Masonry. Subsequently, the fanaticism died away, and men began to appreciate the patience and piety of the good man, and he was admitted. In the evening of his days, the brethren delight to honor him, and we shall never forget the cheerful plaintiveness of the veteran, as he thanked the brethren for their kindness. May a kind Providence long spare the good man.

We also met the third generation of the McKinneys, who have been marked and enterprising men in the history of Lee county.

All orders of Masonry are flourishing at Dixon, and its membership rank high in society. There is ever a man who leads every where. In Masonry, at Dixon, it is Bro. Hawley. We have often wondered at it, for he is a mild, quiet, unobtrusive gentleman, and rather seems to shrink from notoriety. But we have found it all out. First of all, he is an honorable, high-minded gentleman. Then, he is unselfish, accommodating, patient, and amiable. And what then stamps itself upon all these, is a determined, straight-forward, and persistent character. A proof of all this is his unanimous nomination for the third time for County Clerk.

Sept. 15.—A run to Freeport, and a handshake with Breth. Turner, Munn, and Chamberlin, of whom more will be said by and by, and we returned to Mendota, and thence we traveled towards Henderson. A few words with Bro. Ide at Princeton, and then we met Gov. McMurtry and his nephew, High Priest of Horeb Chapter, and went from Wataga to Henderson. Here for long years was the glorious home of Masonry. Nelson D. Morse—all honor to his memory—came out from the insane persecutions of New York, and, with Col. Finch and others, started a lodge in 1843, and this was soon followed by a chapter, and that chapter is the progenitor of all the chapters in more than thirty counties.

Railroads have taken the starch out of everything in Henderson but its Masonry. The lodge and chapter repose in a hall of their own—the Governor is the patriarch—and the brethren live in unity and peace. His sons and nephews—his old neighbors and their sons, grow up under the ægis of old Hiram No. 26. Its past history is honorable—its present position is comfort, security, and ability.

We gave the brethren a talk, and then followed the reminiscences of old times. A good rest with Major Jackson, an early ride to Galesburg, and in the evening—home.

Sept. 19.—We visited the two lodges at Jacksonville. In the absence of W. Bro. Ellis, Master of Harmony, No. 3, W. Bro. Martin, Master of Jacksonville, No. 570, presided. Here we met the veteran, John Kelsey, who passed through the anti-Masonic fire, in Danville, Vt. A large number were in attendance, and our reception was perfect. A short talk from us, and we were followed by Breth. Broadwell, Hurst, Scott, McLain, Martin, and others. It was a genuine treat.

Sept. 20. - Visited Ionic Lodge in regular communication, Bro. Quinlan, W. M. We were well received, and were pleased with the manner and dispatch of business. After business, we addressed the brethren a few minutes, and were followed by Bro. A. B. Bunn, in one of his square, strong talks, abounding in wit, and full of good things.

Then came Bro. Nelson. For beauty and felicity of expression, he has few equals, and we listened attentively as we know others did, to just views, elevated sentiments, and cardinal principles put in language classical and elegant. Take it all in all, we have had no pleasanter meeting during our year.

Sept. 22.—We found ourselves at Streator, La Salle county. It is a new mining town on the Big Vermilion, and at the present terminus of a road which is to extend to Chicago. It is thirteen miles from Wenona, on the Central Road, has about 1,500 inhabitants, churches, school-houses, public halls, hotels, and a good Masonic hall, finished and furnished complete. The object of our visit was to dedicate it. At El Paso R. W. Bro. Wm. Rounseville came aboard from Peoria, and we gathered up brethren by the way until we reached Wenona, where we met Bro. Fulton, the W. M., and several brethren from Magnolia, Tonica, and other towns, and a large number of Wenona brethren ready to accompany us. At Streator we found the lodges at Ottawa and on the east largely represented, and about twenty-five Templars from Ottawa Commandery, commanded by E. Sir J. F. Nash, who performed escort duty. Their appearance and drill won large encomiums. Breth. Rounseville, Easton, and Wade acted as Deputy and Wardens, and the hall was dedicated in ample form.

From the lodge-room, the brethren repaired to a large hall, where music, speaking, and other exercises followed. Breth. Rounseville, of Peoria, and Estabrook, of Ottawa, made remarks that were eloquent, impressive, and appropriate.

And such a supper; the Masons wives and relatives at Streator can try, but they never, never, in all their future, can beat it. And how the young people enjoyed the festivities of the evening. Pleased and gratified, we got home in time for a two hours' nap, in which we dreamed Streator all over again.

Sept. 24, the finale.—We were again at Jacksonville, and assisted our son John in reconstructing Jacksonville Council, and helped to confer the degrees on fourteen candidates.

◆

The firm of Gray & Lunt, in Boston, is often written Lay and Grunt.

Grand Lodge.

Meeting in Representatives' Hall in the State House, Tuesday, Oct. 5th.

Harman G. Reynolds, G. M.; D. C. Cregier, Deputy; Jas. A. Hawley, S. G. W.; Geo. E. Lounsbury, J. G. W; Harrison Dills, Gr. Treas.; O. H. Miner, Gr. Sec'y; J. C. W. Bailey, Gr. Chaplain, p. t.; Joseph Robbins, Gr. Orator; Geo. W. Staley, G. Pursuivant; G. W. Hartman, Gr. Marshal; W. M. Egan, S. G. D.; S. C. Stearns, J. G. D.; A. R. Robinson and O. N. Stafford, Grand Stewards; I. E. Hardy, Gr. Standard B; I. Benjamin, G. Sword B.; John Ferns, G. Tyler.

Committees for this Grand Communication:

On Masonic Correspondence.—Joseph Robbins, John M. Pearson, D. A. Cashman.

On Masonic Jurisprudence.—J. R. Gorin, Wm. Lavely, E. F. Babcock, Wiley M Egan, John Bennett, J. O. Cunningham, O. H. Miner.

On Finance.—James Lowe, G. W. Barnard, Geo. C. Lauphere

On Credentials.—L. W. Shepherd, W. H. House, Wm. O. Brooks.

To Examine Visiting Brethren.—Grand Lecturers Wade, Dorwin, Ashley, Banker, Dewey, L. Church and Delancey.

On Lodges. U. D.—William Rounseville, John M. Van Deren, Thos. J. Prickett.

On Chartered Lodges.—Geo. O. Ide, R. B. Smith, John C. Reynolds.

On Appeals and Grievances.—Francis Hudson, James B. Kyle, George Mason, A. R. Atkins, J. B. Samuel.

On Mileage and Per Diem.—R. D. Hammond, John D. Hamilton, O. F. Price.

On Library.—Grand Secretary, Levi Lusk, Reuben Cleveland.

On Petitions.—John B. Saye, D. H. Morgan, W. R. Phillips, Henry Little, Henry Hudson.

General Committee.—Geo. H. Holliday, Wm. McMurtry, Milo Winchell.

On Obituaries.—J. C. McMurtry, Simon Quinlan, Sharon Tyndale.

On Address.—J. O. Cunningham, J. R. Gorin, Newton Bateman, Wm. McMurtry, D. H. Morgan.

ADDRESS.

Most Worshipful, Right Worshipful, and Worshipful Brethren of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons:

It has pleased the Beneficent Ruler of the Universe, to permit us to assemble again in Grand Communication. Since we parted here one year since, winter has come and gone; spring has gladdened us with beauty, blossom and flower, and summer is now pouring its profusion into the lap of autumn, to be gathered and garnered for the use and comfort of man.

Pestilence has not invaded our borders; the fear of want is dissipated, and peace prevails in our jurisdiction.

The hand of the relentless tyrant has marked fewer victims than usual, and the eminent men in our Fraternity, with rare exceptions, have escaped his remorseless grasp.

Our beautiful prairie State is making marked and rapid progress in developing her resources in agriculture, in science, and in art.

Church buildings appear everywhere, some plain and unadorned, others ample and pleasant, and still others, magnificent specimens of architecture, and all indicative of devotion to that Being whom we adore.

Our educational structures are worthy of our State, and our system of education is unsurpassed. Our agriculture, the main interest and pursuit of our people, aided by mechanic arts, science, and invention, and fostered by commercial facilities, is fast assuming the leading position in the culture of the ground on this hemisphere.

In all these—in the formation and maintenance of our civil institutions—in the administration and enforcement of our laws, the hands and minds of Freemasons have been predominant.

For all these blessings, privileges and mercies, let us be thankful, and so live, that He who has so signally protected us in the past, may grant us prosperity and tranquility in the future.

DISTRICTS AND DEPUTIES.

In obedience to the order of the Grand Lodge, I divided the State into twenty-four Masonic Districts, and appointed Deputies in each of them, as stated on pages 140 to 175, inclusive, Proceedings of Grand Lodge for last year.

The reports from the first, third, fifth, sixth, tenth, eleventh, sixteenth, eighteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, twenty-second and twenty-third districts, show a commendable harmony, progress and prosperity. I congratulate the Deputies in those districts upon the entire peace that has prevailed in their borders during the past year.

The able report rendered by the Deputy for the second district, shows an unpleasant condition of matters in one Lodge, arising out of objections to the advancement of a candidate. It is hoped that the Lodge will soon resume active work, and recover its former excellent standing. The report also shows the effect of anti-Masonic teachings and persecutions, and I especially desire that the report may be read in Grand Lodge, and that so much as relates to anti-Masonry, may be referred to a special committee, to prepare a report after full inquiry, to be sent to every Lodge in the State.

Sundry cases of discipline, irregularity or violations of Masonic law, have come under the supervision of the Deputies of the fourth, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth and nineteenth districts, but which, I believe, are nearly all disposed of.

In the seventh district, the Deputy called for my intervention in the matter of an improper election, and an indisposition to administer effective discipline. Upon a new trial, proper discipline was enforced.

In the eighth district, the' Deputy adjusted one difficulty, and another remains undisposed of.

In the ninth district, at my request, the Deputy visited Rantoul Lodge, No. 470, and after a full hearing, arrested the charter, which he holds at your disposal. The report is very full and able, and I have placed it in the hands of the Committee on Chartered Lodges.

In proportion to the whole number of Lodges, the Deputies have found less complaints by at least one-half, than in any previous year.

It has been my opinion, for some time, that no more Lodges are necessary for the good of Masonry, in Chicago. The petitions for Union Park and Lincoln Park Lodges came highly recommended, and their respective locations and prospects were such, that I felt constrained to grant the prayers of the petitioners. While in Chicago, a few weeks since, the Worshipful Master of Union Park Lodge, courteously invited me to visit their new Hall, which I found to be a model for convenience, with ante-rooms well arranged for labor or festivals. The whole is a work of beauty and taste. I am informed that Lincoln Park Lodge is quite as well situated, and if so, their enterprise and Masonic zeal entitle both to charters, and to your commendation.

The Grand Lodge, one year since, annulled the charter of Sterling Lodge, No. 202. Bro. M. S. Bowman desired my views in regard to the expediency of asking for a dispensation for a new lodge. I frankly advised him, that for the present, I deemed it for the good of Masonry, that a new lodge in Sterling should be made up entirely of material disconnected with the old lodge, with the belief that the good material would wait patiently, while the bad material would certainly be proven, and that the future prosperity of any lodge in Sterling demanded the scrutiny of the ballot. The new lodge is made up of Masons never connected with Sterling Lodge.

On the 26th day of October last, upon the recommendation of Oriental Lodge, No. 33; Garden City, No. 141; Wabansia, No. 160; Germania, No. 182; William B. Warren, No. 209; Ashlar, No. 308; Dearborn, No. 310; Blair, No. 393; I granted a dispensation, without fee, to W. Bro. George W. Pettee, P. M. of Wm. B. Warren Lodge, No. 209, as W. M.; R. W. Bro. G. W. Barnard, P. M. of Garden City, No. 141, as S. W.; and R. W. Bro. D. A. Cashman, P. M. of Thomas J. Turner, No. 409, as J. W.; and to thirty other Worshipful Brethren, Masters and Past Masters of various lodges in Chicago, to form and open a Masters Lodge by the name of Masters, with authority to hold Lodges of Instruction, to deliberate on landmarks, laws, usages, customs, ceremonies, etiquette, and amenities; to confer the secrets of the chair upon Masters elect; to confer degrees for lodges at request, and to elect Past Masters and Worshipful Masters to membership.

In granting this dispensation in deference to the petition of so many wise and accomplished Masons—so thoroughly recommended—I was careful to grant no powers not already possessed by the great body of Past Masters at large, hoping that by associating in this manner, great improvement and more general information might be the result.

On the 26th day of July last, upon the recommendation of Springfield Lodge No. 4; Central, No. 71; Tyrian, No. 333; and St. Pauls, No. 500; I granted a dispensation, without fee, to M. W. Bro. William Lavely, Past Grand Master, as W. M.; R. W. Bro. Charles Fisher, Past Deputy Grand Master, as S. W.; R. W. Bro. Orlin H. Miner, Grand Secretary, as J. W.; and to fourteen other W. Brethren, Masters and Past Masters of lodges in Springfield, for a Past Masters' Lodge, with powers and restrictions similar to those in the case of Masters' Lodge.

The great respectability of the recommending lodges, and the high character of the petitioners for these two bodies, induced me to forego my own judgment and opinions, and accede to their request, and to refer the matter to this Grand Lodge for its decision. The papers are in the hands of the Committee on Masonic Jurisprudence. It is my opinion that Masters of lodges possess all the powers necessary for the skillful government of lodges, and that in all cases of doubt, reference should be made to the Grand Master in vacation, and to this M. W. body—the only real sovereignty in Masonry—when in session.

I have had complaints presented against four Masters of lodges; two of them were for intemperance and improper conduct. In both cases, I visited the lodges, heard all that the brethren had to say, counseled forbearance, and believe that I so disposed of both cases, that material amendment is the result, and I sincerely hope that I have saved two worthy brethren to their families and to society.

In another case, improper business transactions were charged, and I have had a laborious correspondence with the parties, who live many miles apart. At length I stated by letter to the W. M., what I thought he ought to do. I have heard nothing from either party since.

A case of gross immorality and scandalous conduct was preferred against a Master last autumn. I immediately directed him to surrender his gavel to his subordinate, but as the time of election in his lodge was near at hand. I waited until the new officers were installed, and then ordered that charges be preferred, and that the accused be tried by his lodge.

I have also presided in a trial where it was alleged that the W. M. was interested in the result. I believe that justice was done, and that the lodge was satisfied with the conduct of the trial.

In another case, charges of improper conduct in the management and disposition of a trial were made against the W. M., and several brethren in an old lodge, of high standing. I immediately visited the lodge, and found that ill feeling existed among brethren who had nothing against each other, and I endeavored to bring about a more cordial and moderate feeling, and think that the matter is at an end, as I have heard nothing more from it.

Charges of a gross and repulsive character were made against a brother in another lodge, and upon the trial he was found guilty, and ordered to be reprimanded. The case was examined by the District Deputy, who earnestly solicited my intervention. I accordingly visited the lodge in company with said Deputy and several W. Masters, and had a free conversation with the brethren, and upon the request of the lodge, I set aside the trial and ordered another. Upon the second trial the accused was suspended with but two dissenting votes. This lodge has been in a bad condition ever since its first election under its charter, and at its second election serious trouble arose, and the effects were plainly visible at the time of my visit. Such was the disgust of the community towards the accused, that his continued membership would have made the very existence of the lodge a reproach. I admonished the brethren that the Grand Lodge would never tolerate any such condition of things. I found among the brethren, one well known in this State, and a gentleman of high standing, who has but recently been made a Mason His influence, combined with the honorable exertions of the acting Master and Secretary, has been very salutary, and I am confident that the future of the lodge will be prosperity and peace.

Several cases of discipline have been referred to the Deputies, and the most of them have been attended to, and the difficulties adjusted. Others will be brought before you on appeal.

INFRINGEMENT OF JURISDICTION.

Several cases have been brought to my notice, where candidates within the jurisdiction of one lodge, have been initiated in another. In one case the question rested upon the domicil of the candidate. In all the other cases, I feel assured that no wrong was intended, but that misapprehension existed in regard to actual distance, or the manner of computing it. All the cases were settled by correspondence with the several parties, and by mutual explanations and concessions.

Another case of a similar character was submitted to me, where a chartered lodge had received applications from candidates living within the supposed jurisdiction of a lodge U. D. I decided at once, as the decisions have uniformly been in this jurisdiction, and generally elsewhere, that lodges U. D. hold no jurisdiction as against a chartered lodge.

In the matter of a controversy between Tamaroa Lodge, No. 207, and Cobden Lodge, No. 466, a question had arisen in regard to the residence of a candidate, which I decided upon such proof and statements as I had received, but about which I had grave doubts. Such questions are likely to arise frequently among our lodges in regard to the actual residence of railroad employees. Where the employee has a wife or family, his residence Masonically as in law, is where his family reside. But single men often do business in one place, while they regard another as their home. I have referred the papers in this case to the Committee on Masonic Jurisprudence, and trust that they will report a definite rule on the subject, for the consideration of this Grand Lodge.

REJECTED CANDIDATES.

In one instance, a candidate rejected in one lodge, was initiated in another without asking consent, during the administration of my worthy predecessor. The matter was brought to my notice by the W. M. of the rejecting lodge, and I at once brought the matter to the notice of the other lodge. I then advised the W. M. of the rejecting lodge of the condition of the case, and intimated that I thought the matter had better rest, as I did not wish to review the action of my predecessor. The W. M. replied, that he preferred no charges, but that he considered the matter a plain violation of law. I then named a day for a hearing, and notified both lodges to appear before me. I found that the W. M. of the rejecting lodge had left home on business before my letter was received. I regretted his absence, but the S. W. had convened the lodge, and both parties were ready for a hearing. The Deputy for the district and a Past Master of another lodge, were called to my assistance, and we heard the representations of both parties. The initiating lodge admitted the wrong, and stated that upon the advice of M. W. Bro. Gorin, the lodge had refused to advance the candidate, and that the lodge stood ready for such penalty as might be adjudged. Upon the advice of my colleagues. I accepted the confession of the lodge, and adjudged the payment of the initiation fee to the rejecting lodge, which was then paid to the Treasurer, and the case was dismissed.

Some years since, the by-laws provided that where a candidate had been rejected one year, any other lodge having jurisdiction, might receive and act upon his petition. The result was bad, and the Grand Lodge revived the old law, requiring the lodge having jurisdiction to obtain the unanimous consent of the lodge which rejected the candidate. Several lodges have initiated rejected candidates without consent, upon the supposition that the one year law is still in force. I have been more perplexed as to my duty in cases of this character, than in any other. The readiness of some lodges to act upon the petitions of rejected candidates, is an alarming feature, which demands rigid rules, and their stern enforcement.

OBJECTIONS.

No law is better settled than that providing that any member may object, before or after balloting, to the initiation or advancement of a candidate, and that, too, without giving reasons. This Grand Lodge has especially provided for this, and has declared an objection to be a rejection, until removed.

In several instances these objections have caused much confusion and ill-feeling; and in one instance, I visited a lodge in order to reconcile the difficulty. The attendance was large; I counselled the brethren that the safety and permanent prosperity of a lodge depended upon obedience to and cheerful acquiescence in the laws of our Institution. I found no difficulty in obtaining a pledge that objections should be respected without question, dissatisfied parties made proper explanations, and a complete reconciliation was effected.

A new charter has been issued to Friendship Lodge, No. 7, agreeably to the order of the Grand Lodge.

LIBRARY.

At your last session a committee, of which R. W. Bro. J. C. Luckey was chairman, was appointed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing the Library of E. W. Jones, for the use of this Grand Lodge. The report of the committee is adverse to the purchase.

In the matter of jurisdiction between Rushville Lodge, No. 9, and Cass Lodge, No. 23, it is my opinion that the Grand Master has no power over the matter. The original stipulation between said lodges, and upon which said Cass Lodge was removed from Virginia to Beardstown, is clearly set forth on pages 49 and 50 Proceedings of 1867, and I question the power of the Grand Lodge to interfere, until the jurisdiction of the Rushville Lodge is abridged by the formation of an intervening lodge. My own judgment is entirely against all such arrangements; but stipulations entered into in good faith, and confirmed by the Grand Lodge, should be honestly observed. I have, therefore, declined to act in the matter referred to me at your last communication.

IMPOSTORS AND MENDICANTS.

In November last, I received a letter from one of the District Deputies, stating that recommendations had been given to persons, by which they were enabled more successfully to apply to other lodges for relief. I gave immediate notice that such recommendations are contrary to the laws of this Grand Lodge.

The matters of mendicity and imposture have assumed alarming proportions, and demand a sturdy resistance and stringent measures to prevent them.

I would, therefore, recommend that all Worshipful and all acting Masters be required to enforce the 7th and 15th charges to a Master elect, according to their literal meaning, and that no contributions in money be given to persons representing themselves as Masons, by either lodges or brethren, unless they hold a certificate of membership of recent date from the lodge in which they are members, or upon other indisputable evidence aside from the test and examination. Enough money has been filched from our lodges and brethren within the last five years, to buy farms and homes for our poor, to build seminaries and endow them for the education of our destitute orphan children.

This recommendation may seem to be harsh; perhaps it is, but the emergency is great, and honesty and charity demand that these pests in society be driven from our borders. I have placed the papers in my hands, in the possession of the General Committee.

IMPROPER APPLICATIONS FOR RELIEF.

In the foregoing connection, I desire to call your attention to the matter of applications for relief, made to the lodges and the Fraternity both from within and without the State.

It has been customary, and is right, for the Grand Lodge to remit the dues of lodges which have suffered by fire or other calamity, and for the lodges in their neighborhood to contribute to their relief. It is also highly proper, to contribute liberally to the relief of indigent Masons, their widows and orphans; to extend relief cheerfully and promptly to communities oppressed by general calamity or famine; but the practice of asking assistance in a general way from lodges or brethren, to build or furnish halls in other States, or to grant general relief to brethren who have suffered business reverses, by misfortune or casualty, is not commendable, and should be discountenanced. I would, therefore, recommend that a regulation be made, that no application for general relief shall be entertained by lodges, except in cases of urgent necessity, without the consent of the Grand Lodge or the Grand Master. The papers on this subject are also referred to the General Committee.

IRREGULAR ELECTIONS.

Upon the petition of a respectable number I have granted dispensations to elect a W. M. from members who had not served as Wardens; also to confirm such elections already made. In two instances, I refused to confirm such elections, upon earnest representations, and the former Masters held over.

I am afraid that outside tendencies to combinations in elections find their way into our lodges. All elections in Masonic bodies should be the unbiased and free expression of the members. Every officer should be elected upon his own individual merit and fitness for the station he may be elected to fill. No ticket should be formed, but the merits of any brother for any station should be freely canvassed, without reference to any other office, and all combinations and caucussing should be forbidden, and any election brought about by any such means ought to be set aside.

REMOVALS FROM OFFICE.

I have also decided that a Worshipful Master could remove any officer below that of Treasurer, for good cause, and appoint another in his stead, or hold an election to fill the vacancy. Such has long been the usage, and as the W. M. is responsible for the correctness of the records, and for the proper discharge of the duties of the subordinates under his lawful control, he certainly should be invested with ample authority to secure the efficient discharge of their respective functions, being responsible for the arbitrary or improper use of such authority.

GRAND REPRESENTATIVES APPOINTED.

During the year I have appointed representatives of this Grand Lodge, near the Grand Lodges of other States, Territories and Districts as follows:

M. W. Bro. E. H. English, Little Rock, Arkansas.
M. W. Bro. John Frizzell, Nashville, Tennesse.
R. W. Bro. John B. Hollenbeck, Burlington, Vt.
M. W. Bro. J. Q. A. Fellows, New Orleans, La.
R. W. Bro. Daniel Sayre, Montgomery, Ala.
M. W. Bro. B. B. French, Washington, D. C.
R. W. Bro. Donald W. Bain, Raleigh, N. Carolina.
R. W. Bro. DeWitt C. Dawkins, Jacksonville, Fla.

REPRESENTATIVES APPOINTED NEAR THIS GRAND LODGE.

The following appointments of Representatives near this Grand Lodge, have been made from other Grand Lodges:

By Arkansas, R. W. Bro. John Bennett, of Petersburg.
By Ohio, R. W. Bro. Orlin H. Miner, Springfield.
By Tennessee, Harman G. Reynolds Springfield.
By Texas, Harman G. Reynolds, Springfield.
By Ireland, R. W. Bro. Wiley M. Egan, Chicago.
By Royal York of Friendship Grand Lodge at Berlin, Prussia, R. W. Bro. O. H. Miner, Springfield.

CORNER-STONES.

On the 21st day of May, I granted a dispenation to R. W. Bro. Richard D. Hammond, to lay the corner-stone of the new Baptist Church at Macomb. He made due return that he had performed that service.

I also granted dispensation to M. W. Bro. Thomas J. Turner, to lay the corner-stone of the new Hall of the Turn Veirein Society, at Freeport, which duty was performed with signal success.

Upon my request, R. W. Bro. D. C. Creiger, as acting Grand Master, laid the corner-stone of the Cook County Normal School, on the 16th of September last. This duty was performed so skillfully as to win much admiration, and our R. W. Bro. was complimented by the presentation of a handsome silver trowel.

On the 13th day of July last, assisted by several R. W. brethren at Quincy, and from the neighboring lodges, I laid the corner-stone of a new Hebrew Synagogue at Quincy; the brethren associated with me performed their duties with much ability, the procession was large, and the services of the Hebrew congregation were impressive and dignified. The address delivered in the English language was an elegant and masterly production, and the address delivered in the German languge is said to be fully equal to the former.

On the 14th day of August last, assisted by R. W. brethren at Macomb, and from the neighboring lodges, I laid the corner-stone of the new Court House at Macomb, of which Bro. E. E. Myers, of this city, is the architect. The attendance was very large, and was graced by the presence of more than one hundred old settlers, who have resided in McDonough county more than thirty-three years.

DEDICATIONS.

On the 24th day of June, in the presence of a large concourse, assisted by brethren from Fulton and the surrounding counties, I dedicated the new Hall of Lewistown Lodge, No. 104, in ample form. The dedication was followed by a sumptuous and elegant dinner, prepared by the ladies of Lewistown, after which a procession was formed of a mile in length, which marched to a grove near by, where an oration was delivered and other ceremonies had. On this occasion I was relieved by R. W. Bro. Rounseville, who installed the officers elect in a very happy manner. In 1851 I assisted in forming Lewistown Lodge, and for talent and worth it now has no superior.

On the 26th day of August, assisted by several distinguished officers of this Grand Lodge, I dedicated the new Hall of Western Star Lodge, No. 240, at Champaign, in ample form. An address was delivered by Bro. Gen. Charles Black, which for grace, dignity and power, has seldom been excelled. It was listened to in profound silence and rapt attention by full four hundred ladies and gentlemen. An elegant supper followed, and the occasion was a complete success.

On the 23d day of September, in company with R. W. Bro. Rounseville as Deputy, and assisted by brethren of LaSalle, Putnam, Marshall, Woodford, and Ford counties, I dedicated the new Hall of Streator Lodge in ample form. The town of Streator, in LaSalle county, is a marvel of mining enterprise, and is comparatively less than two years old. It now has fifteen hundred inhabitants, with schools and churches, and a comfortable and well furnished hall, and a growing, healthy lodge. After the dedication services the audience repaired to a large hall, where addresses were delivered by R. W. Bro. Rounseville and Rev. Bro. Estabrook, of Ottawa. The banquet in the evening was a great credit to the lady relatives of the members of Streator Lodge.

VISITATIONS.

In addition to the places and lodges already named, I have visited Harmony and Jacksonville Lodges, at Jacksonville; Friendship Lodge, No. 7, at Dixon; Cass Lodge No. 23, at Beardstown; Hiram Lodge No. 26, at Henderson; Morning Star Lodge No. 30, at Canton; Charleston Lodge, No. 35; Occidental Lodge, No. 40, at Ottawa; Temple Lodge No. 46, at Peoria; Prairie and Paris Lodges, at Paris; Havana, 88; Lebanon, 110; Olney, 140; Delevan and Tazewell Lodges, at Delavan; Xenia, 190; Pana, 226; Mattoon, 260; Kansas, 280; Chenoa, 292; Ionic, 312, at Decatur; Windsor, 322.

In all the Lodges which I have visited, I have been received with the honors due to my station, and have been treated with unvarying kindness and courtesy.

NOTICES IN REGARD TO PETITIONS.

In some of our cities and towns where two or more lodges exist, it has frequently been customary to give notice to all lodges in the same city or town, of the reception and reference of petitions, and when the time will arrive for report and balloting. I think the rule thus voluntarily adopted, should be made imperative. Much evil will be avoided by adopting such a regulation.

LOTTERIES AND GIFT ENTERPRISES.

In April last, I received a letter from the Grand Master of Ohio, setting forth that a law of that jurisdiction, had been violated by a member of one of our lodges, in regard to gift enterprises, and he forwarded to me certain papers in proof of the fact. I instituted an inquiry into the circumstances, and in due time forwarded the documentary evidence in my possession to the W. M. of the lodge of which the accused is a member; charges were preferred, and the accused was found guilty and punished. I communicated the disposition of the matter to the Grand Master of Ohio, who expressed his satisfaction with the result.

Gift enterprises of the very best character have no good traits to recommend them. However fairly and honorably they may be conducted, they are schemes of chance, and are seductive temptations to invest money where there is not one reasonable prospect in fifty of an equitable return. Masonry is a system of morality, and never lends its aid to immoral speculations or demoralizing transactions. Hence, any attempt to give popularity or strength to gift enterprises by appeals to Masons or Masonic societies, or by reference to them in their Masonic character, is entirely wrong, and should be positively forbidden, and any violation of such regulation ought to be followed by expulsion.

CLANDESTINE MASONRY.

A self-constituted organization calling itself the Supreme Council of the A. & A. S. Rite of the State of Louisiana, claiming jurisdiction over the symbolic degrees of Freemasonry, and located at New Orleans, has been recognized by the Grand Orient of France, which is the governing power of Masonry in that country. This is an infringement of the jurisdictional rights of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, and an invasion of its sovereignty which ought to be resisted by all lawful and Masonic means.

I respectfully recommend that all Masonic correspondence and fraternal relations between this Grand Lodge and the Grand Orient of France, cease and be discontinued, and that no Mason owing allegiance to that grand body, or hailing from said pretended Grand Council, be recognized in this jurisdiction.

GRAND LODGE SOVEREIGNTY.

Much discussion has been had in regard to the admission to visit our lodges of sundry persons belonging to spurious bodies claiming co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Grand Lodges in this country. The greater contains the less, and the whole question, without regard to race or color, is at once settled by the positive and well established law in the United States, that but one Grand Lodge can rightfully exist in any State, Territory, or District, and that such Grand Lodge is so far sovereign that no lodge can exist within its jurisdiction without its express warrant, and that all expulsions or suspensions by its subordinates, are expulsions and suspensions in every grade of Masonry. If we desire to preserve the principles of Masonry pure and uncontaminated, grand lodge sovereignty must be defended and preserved at any cost and sacrifice.

Many appeals were made to me in regard to the right of visitation, by men claiming to be Masons, and hailing from spurious bodies, upon which I took the broad ground above stated, and interdicted all recognition of all persons claiming to hail from lodges within the bounds of the United States or of British America, unless said lodges are directly subordinate to the grand lodges in correspondence with this grand body in the State, Territory, Dominion or District from whence they hail. And I respectfully ask that this interdict may be made perpetual.

WORK AND LECTURES.

In 1843, a convention of the most intelligent Masons from every part of the United States, met at Baltimore, and harmonized all discrepancies in work. The manner of opening and closing lodges, and the work and lectures of the symbolic degrees, were distinctly agreed upon. John Barney was a member of that convention. He exemplified the work and lectures in this State, and it was adopted by the Grand Lodge in 1845, and has been the only authorized work in this jurisdiction since that time. John Barney taught that work and those lectures, to R. W. Bro James Fenton, Grand Secretary of Michigan, and to William A. Dickey, of this city. I learned the entire lectures from Bro. Dickey, in 1848, at Rock Island. In January, 1863, the Grand Lodge of Michigan appointed a committee on work, before whom, in April following, by invitation from them, I compared the entire work and lectures, including the opening and closing ceremonies, and they were found to be identical with those taught to Bro. Fenton. In 1865 I visited the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin, and in open session compared the lectures with R. W. Bro. Melvin R. Youngs, then State Grand Lecturer, and since Grand

Continued on page 150.

Continued from first column of page 151.

2. Amend section 5, by striking out the words "Master Mason," and inserting the words "Brother of equal rank."

3. Amend section 7, by striking out the words "first day of each Annual Grand Communication," and inserting "fifteenth day of September, annually."

4. Amend section 10, No. 3, by striking out "three," and inserting "five;" No. 4, by striking out "three," and inserting "seven."

5. Strike out section 16.

6. Amend section 10, No. 7, by adding the following words: "said committee shall make up the orders for mileage and per diem, and issue the same, and may employ such assistance as may be necessary. No orders for mileage and per diem shall be issued until the Grand Lodge is closed."

7. Amend section 35, by striking out the words "lunar month," and inserting "four weeks."

8. Strike out section 42, and insert the following: "When a candidate shall be rejected by any lodge, by mistake or misapprehension, the brother who made such mistake, or voted under such misapprehension, may communicate the same to the acting Master, who shall keep his name and communication secret, but may give notice at the then, or next regular communication, that another ballot will be taken at the next subsequent regular communication.

9. Amend section 49, by adding: "a rejection for the first degree shall operate as a stay upon the candidate for one year."

10. Amend section 49, by inserting after the words "required to vote," the words "by ballot."

11. Amend section 69, by striking out the word "should," and insert the word "shall."

12. Strike out section 71, and insert: "A reprimand shall be given in open lodge, upon a majority vote of the members present."

And said committee ask time until the next Grand Communication to make further report.

W. M. Egan,
Wilson Hoag,
J. N. Ryan,
H. G. Reynolds,
A. W. Blakesley.

W. Bro. Martin (66,) offered the following preamble and resolution, which were ordered to be referred to Special Committee:

To the Grand Lodge of Illinois, A. F. & A. Masons.

Knoxville Lodge No. 66, A. F. & A. Masons, believing that the numerical and financial strength, and the social influence of the Masonic Fraternity of Illinois, warrant the organization of a systematic plan for the relief of the widows and orphans of Master Masons; and believing that plan best which will most effectually place them beyond the need of aid; and that the education of such orphans by the Fraternity, would afford immediate relief to the widow, and would aid the orphan to means of self-support, offers the following resolutions:

Resolved 1st, That this Grand Lodge recognizes the propriety of the establishment and maintenance of an Educational Institution by the Masonic Fraternity of Illinois, having for its primary object the gratuitous education of the orphans of indigent Masons.

Resolved 2d, That this Grand Lodge deems the establishment of such an institution to be in accordance with the spirit and teachings of Masonry, and a proper manifestation thereof.

Resolved 3d, That a committee of three be appointed by the Grand Master with instructions to report at the next annual session of this Grand Lodge, a definite plan for the organization of such an institution, and for securing the requisite funds for its establishment and endowment.

The amendment to the by-laws offered in 1868 removing the Grand Lodge from Springfield to Chicago, was taken up and adopted.

Amendments to section one of the by-law contemplating the removal of the Grand Lodge from Chicago to Springfield, Peoria, Decatur, and Cairo, were introduced and laid over.

Breth. M. D. Chamberlin, Thos. J. Prickett, Chas. Pisher, G. W. Barnard, were appointed the Board of Examiners created by the report of the Committee on Grand Master's address.

The following two amendments to the Constitution were presented and referred to the Committee on Masonic Jurisprudence:

It is hereby ordained by the Grand Lodge of the State of Illinois: That the said State shall be, and is hereby divided into fifteen Masonic Districts, for the time being, to be numbered and comprise the territory as follows: The counties of ——, to constitute District No. one; the counties of ——, to constitute No. two, etc.; which districts shall be determined by the Grand Lodge upon the adoption of these amendments to the Constitution.

2. There shall be established in each of said Districts a District Grand Lodge, with jurisdiction as such, co-extensive with the said District, and to be named and styled "The Right Worshipful District Grand Lodge No. —, Ancient, Free, and Accepted Masons."

3. Each of said District Grand Lodges shall be composed of the following elected and appointed officers and members:

The elected officers shall be a District Grand Master, Senior and Junior District Grand Wardens, District Grand Treasurer, and District Grand Secretary; the appointed officers shall be a District Grand Chaplain, District Grand Tyler, two District Grand Stewards, and Senior and Junior District Grand Deacons. The members, all Masters and Wardens, for the time being, of the several chartered lodges within said District. All elected Past District grand officers of the said District Grand Lodge, except Treasurer and Secretary, and all Past Masters, members of lodges under the jurisdiction of said District Grand Lodge.

4. The District Grand Lodges thus constituted, shall hold stated annual communications, at which time, and on or before the second day of such communication, the District Grand Master, Senior and Junior District Grand Wardens, District Grand Treasurer, and District Grand Secretary, shall be elected by ballot; and all subordinate officers appointed, the District Grand Marshal, Chaplain, Tyler, and Senior Deacon, by the District Grand Master; the District Grand Junior Deacon, by the District Grand Senior Warden, and the District Grand Stewards, by the District Grand Junior Warden.

5. The District grand officers thus elected and appointed, shall be duly installed before the close of the communication at which they were thus elected and appointed, and shall perform their respective duties until their successors in office are elected and installed.

6. No one shall be eligible to the office of District Grand Master, except present and past Grand Masters of regular lodges, under the jurisdiction of the District Grand Lodge in which he is elected.

7. If the Chair of any District Grand Lodge shall become vacant by death or otherwise, it shall be filled by the District Grand Senior Warden; and in case any other office shall thus become vacant, the District Grand Master shall appoint officers for the time being to fill such vacancies.

8. In the absence of the District Grand Master, the District Senior and Junior Grand Wardens, and if neither be present, the present or past Master of the oldest lodge represented, shall each, in the order named, preside at all regular and special communications.

9. The duties of the District Grand Masters shall be the same, within their respective Districts, in the absence of the Grand Master, as Grand Masters now are, except that they shall have no power to grant dispensations for new lodges.

10. The duties of the District Grand Wardens, District Grand Treasurers, Secretaries, Chaplains, Tylers, Marshals, Stewards and Deacons, shall be as described in our Masonic ritual, and such as are provided for in the regulations of their respective District Grand Lodges.

11. In all elections and questions before the District Grand Lodges, the representative or representatives collectively of each subordinate lodge, shall be entitled to three votes, the District Grand Master to one vote, the Past District Grand Masters to one vote each, the District Grand Wardens to one vote each, and the Past Masters of lodges (members of lodges under the jurisdiction of the District Grand Lodge where the vote is offered, and not representatives from a subordinate lodge), to one vote collectively.

12. All elections and questions, unless otherwise provided for in the laws and regulations of the different District Grand Lodges, shall be decided by a majority of the votes thus given.

13. Each District Grand Lodge shall have the power of enacting laws and regulations for the permanent government of lodges and the Craft under its jurisdiction, and of altering or repealing the same at pleasure, except the by-laws of lodges when they are in conformity with the ancient constitutions and landmarks. They shall have power within their respective jurisdictions, to investigate, regu-

Continued on page 152.

Master, and they were again found to be idencal. They are the same that have been taught by R. W. Breth. Wade, Fisher, Chamberlin, our present Inspectors, and our Lecturers generally. I saw the same work wrought in Oriental, William B. Warren, Dearborn, Chicago, and Thomas J. Turner Lodges in Chicago, in September, 1866. Notwithstanding all this, the opinion was wide-spread that there were discrepancies and disagreements. To remedy this, past Grand Master Gorin recommended the appointment of a committee to harmonize and restore the lectures to their original language. Upon comparison it was found that the discrepancies were few, immaterial, and such as could easily be rectified.

But, while the Grand Lodge has not changed or modified the work, nor authorized the same to be done, another impression has gone forth that this Grand Lodge has abandoned its work, and that it actually has none. No impression could be more unfounded. To place this matter beyond all cavil, I appointed R. W. Breth. Fisher, Chamberlin, Prickett, and Burr, a Committee of Lecturers on discrepancies, myself acting as umpire. The result of all these labors will be laid before you by the committee raised upon your order, and I urgently recommend that efficient measures be ordered to disseminate the work and lectures among all the lodges in this jurisdiction.

BUSINESS AND LENGTH OF SESSION.

Complaint is made of the shortness of our sessions, and our mode of doing business is criticised. A short review of this matter, and which will be familiar to our older members, is important at this time. The mileage and per diem system was adopted in 1851. It was done to induce a general attendance, to equalize the burden between the nearer and distant lodges, and to prevent centralization. It accomplished the purpose intended, and wrought a revolution in Masonic matters in Illinois, which anti-Masons behold with terror. At the same time it demolished our Grand Charity Fund and emptied our treasury. In 1858, the revenues derived from Grand Lodge dues was about $7,000, while the mileage and per diem and current expenses exceeded that sum. A committee to frame a new code of by-laws had been appointed, and to meet expenses without resorting to an increase of taxation, the present mode of appointing committees was resorted to, and the sessions reduced from four and five days to two or three. The system has worked well. All business in grand bodies everywhere, as well as in legislative bodies, is perfected by committees. The grave charge that the committees are always the same persons is not true. New members combined with those having experience are appointed, and new men come in every year. The number in each committee is limited by law, but necessity has compelled the Grand Master to enlarge both the committees and their time, to enable them to complete their business in good order. Of course the entire body of committees is small compared with the whole number of members. These committees transact their business unimpeded by a large body of friends and acquaintances, and the business is certain to be presented with more completeness than could possibly be the case in other circumstances.

This system is now obtaining largely in other grand lodges and other branches in Masonry. But the case is far different now from what it was eleven years since. The lodges then in existence, instead of paying $7,000 probably pay double that sum, and their membership is increasing from year to year, and there is no good reason why the Grand Lodge should not be in session three days, or longer if neccessary.

But in order to be entirely independent, it ought to meet alone, and not be interfered with by the meeting of any other body. I have long been anxious that such should be the case, and I think there is far more necessity for it now than ever.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS.

I have made the following decisions:

1. In case of rejection, the money of the applicant should be returned to him.
2. If the Secretary or other brother, retains money belonging to the lodge, or subject to its order, after proper demand, he is liable to Masonic discipline.
3. An applicant for the honors of Masonry petitions for membership as well as for the degrees, and when raised to the third degree he is a member of the lodge which elected him. Signing the by-laws is an important act of identity, but is not indispensible to membership.
4. It is unmasonic to ridicule any or all of the great lights in Masonry, and a Freemason guilty of such an offense is unfit to be installed Master of a lodge.
5. Every candidate, before initiation, must solemnly avow a belief in God; a subsequent sincere avowal of a disbelief in God, is a practical renunciation of Freemasonry.
6. Disbelief in the Divinity of Jesus Christ does not in any sense effect Masonic standing.
7. Upon a trial, the votes taken were as follows: Guilty, 7; not guilty, 2; for expulsion, 4; against, 5 for indefinite suspension, 5; against, 2. A question arose whether the vote should be recorded.

Decision.—The law specifies that the vote shall be upon the separate questions of guilt and punishment, and it is not sufficient to state the vote in general terms, but the actual vote should be recorded above, so that the record may show at any time or for any purpose, whether the law has been complied with.

8. An expelled Mason reinstated, is not liable for dues during the period of his expulsion.
9. A Master elect cannot be lawfully installed until he is invested with the secrets of the chair.
10. Objection by a member of Lodge A., to the initiation or advancement of a candidate in Lodge B is not imperative, but is entitled to full consideration.
11. The 33d section of the by-laws applies only to candidates for initiation.
12. Persons under sentence of suspension for non-payment of dues by an extinct or dormant lodge, can be restored only by the Grand Lodge, upon the payment of all arrearages to the Grand Secretary.
13. No brother can be lawfully elected and installed W. Master, without previous service as Master or Warden, except by dispensation.
14. An objection to the advancement of a candidate, made in open lodge or to the W. M., must be respected until removed or waived.
15. If the Master elect declines installation, the old Master holds over, unless a dispensation be obtained by common consent to elect another.
16. Dedication of halls, constitution of lodges, and installation of officers may be public or private; when public, it is not necessary to open a lodge.
17. In trials, where the accused cannot be served with notice, the record should set forth that his residence is unknown.
18. Entered Apprentices, who by their own neglect have failed to apply for advancement within one year after their initiation, must petition and be recommended anew for the second and third degrees, and pass through all the forms of reference, report and ballot. The same rule applies to Fellow Crafts.
19. Charges can be preferred against a brother in the lodge of which he is a member, or in the oldest lodge in the jurisdiction of which he resides.
20. Lodges U. D. cannot admit members nor try them. Its only additions while U. D., is by way of the degrees.
21. Objection to the advancement of a candidate before or after election, without reasons, in either degree, is a permanent rejection until the objection is removed or waived; and until then, the lodge cannot advance the candidate, nor give consent to any other lodge to entertain his application.
22. After the lapse of a reasonable time for objections to be waived or withdrawn, notice of rejection should be given as in other cases, and the money accompanying the petition should be returned.
23. Ballotings take place at regular meetings only, except in cases of dispensation or in trials. Examinations as to proficiency may be held in open lodge, at any time before or after balloting.
24. Every candidate for initiation must have the limbs, members, and senses that a man ought to have. The fixed and unchangeable landmarks of Masonry regard neither the manner, time, place, or cause of dismemberment, disfigurement, mutilation, or disability. The fact, alone, like the law, is to govern a Mason.
25. All pretended lodges of Masons, working anywhere in the State of Illinois, without regard to race or color, which do not hold a dispensation or charter from the Grand Lodge of Illinois, A. F. & A. M., together with every member of such lodges, are declared to be clandestine, and all intercourse with such clandestine lodges or Masons, is strictly prohibited.
26. Lodges should be opened and closed in the first, second, and third degrees at every regular communication.
27. The oldest lodge in any city or town may receive charges against a non-affiliated Mason, or against a member of a lodge elsewhere, who may reside within its jurisdiction.
28. No brother can be suspended or expelled, without charges, notice (if to be found), trial and conviction.
29. A lodge has a by-law that a member shall not be entitled to vote who is in arrears for dues; a brother in arrears votes at an election; is it a subject of charges?

When an election of officers occurs, every member should be notified of the time of election, and the amount of his arrearages, and that in default of payment he will not be entitled to vote. Before proceeding to election, the names of delinquents should be read; any brother remaining delinquent and voting, after such notice, is guilty of a violation of the by-laws, and should be punished.

MY LABORS.

I have devoted an average of twelve hours per day for the past year, to the affairs of Masonry. At least three-fourths of that time has been in your service. I intended to visit the lodges all that I could, in March, April, and May, but serious indisposition prevented. From the few visits I have made, I am satisfied that an official visit from the Grand East, in most of our lodges, would be highly beneficial, and would tend greatly to the advancement of the moral and financial interests of this Grand Lodge.

I have received more than two thousand letters and communications; have written more than three thousand letters; have made more than one thousand decisions, interdicts, decrees, or orders. In all cases of complaint, I have notified the accused, whether lodge, officer, or brother, of the nature of the complaint, and have given full opportunity for answer, defence, apology, or amendment, before proceeding to a hearing. I have labored hard to do and obtain full and substantial justice, and have tempered the whole with that charity which always remembers that man in his best estate, is subject to error, weakness and frailty. I have tried to remember that I, too, am a man, and like all my brethren, am amenable to another and higher bar. I have exposed no lodge or brother in fault to the gaze of the world, to the Fraternity, or even to you, unless exposed before. I have traveled nearly ten thousand miles, and have spared neither time or pains to promote your interests and your fame. How far I may have succeeded, is not for me to say. But after a year of hard labor and honest endeavor, I bring back to you the authority, the gavel and the jewel, which you so generously gave me, and leave them in your hands.

OUR FRATERNAL DEAD.

A few days since, the subtle and silent lightning told us that the angel of death had summoned Past Grand Master F. M. Blair, from the scenes of earth. Of his illness and death I have no account, save that he died suddenly.

In 1855 he was elected a member and Master of Prairie Lodge No. 77; represented the lodge in 1856, and was elected Junior Grand Warden; was elected Senior Grand Warden in 1857, and confirmed by the Grand Lodge, be appointed, who, with the Grand Master, shall critically examine all applicants for commissions as Grand Lecturers, and appoint none who are not thoroughly conversant with the work of this State.

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of said examiners to hold a meeting immediately after each session of the Grand Lodge for the examination of lecturers; that at the first session they shall, in some proper manner, cast lots for terms of office, which shall be for one, two, three, and four years; that at the next and succeeding annual sessions of the Grand Lodge, the Grand Master shall likewise nominate some fit person to fill the vacancies then occurring who shall hold their office for four years.

Respectfully submitted.

J. O. Cunningham,
Wm. McMurtry,
J. R. Gorin,
D. H. Morgan.
Committee.

In the afternoon of the first day the election took place resulting in the election of the following grand officers:

H. G. Reynolds, of Springfield, Grand Master; D. C. Cregier, of Chicago, Deputy Grand Master; James A. Hawley, of Dixon, Senior Grand Warden; George E. Lounsbury, of Mound City, Junior Grand Warden; Harrison Dills, of Quincy, Grand Treasurer; O. H. Miner, of Springfield, Grand Secretary.

All these were re-elections. Rev. J. I. Davidson, of Decatur, was elected Grand Chaplain; M. W. H. P. H. Bromwell, of Charleston, was elected Grand Orator; and Bro. John P. Ferns, Grand Tyler.

The following appointments were made:

W. Bro. John C. Reynolds (333), Deputy Grand Secretary; W. Bro. George H. Raymond (5), Grand Pursuivant; R. W. Bro. John W. Ross, (104), Grand Marshal; Bro. E. E. Myers (71), Grand St. Bearer; Bro. John Evans, Grand Sword Bearer; R. W. Bro. Wiley M. Egan (211), Senior Grand Deacon; W. Bro. Samuel C. Stearns (175), Junior Grand Deacon; W. Bro. O. N. Stafford (4), Grand Steward; Bro. A. R. Robinson (4), Grand Steward.

Charters were granted as follows:

Sheldon, No. 609; Union Park, 610; Lincoln Park, 611; Rock River, 612; Patoka, 613; Forrest, 614; Anchor, 615; Wadley, 616; Milan, 617; Basco, 618; Berwick, 619; New Hope, 620; Venice, 621; Hopedale, 622; Locust, 623; Dubois, 624; Melrose, 625; Putnam, 626; Union, 627; Mosaic, 628; Old Time 629; Walpole, 630; Cabery, as Morton, 631; Ridge Farm, 632; E. F. W. Ellis, 633; Buckley, 634; Rochester, 635; Peotone, 636; Burlington, 637; Fortitude, 638; Keystone, 639.

Dispensations were voted to Cregier and Apollo Lodges at Chicago.

Accompanying the report of the Committee on Lodges U. D. was a resolution disapproving of the use of names of living men for new lodges, which was adopted.

The dues of Nos. 389, 212, and 416 were remitted.

A resolution recommending lodges to keep their property insured, was passed.

The fourth amendment to the by-laws, offered in 1868 (page 267, proceedings 1868), was taken up and lost.

The committee appointed in 1868 to take into consideration the propriety of purchasing the library of E. W. Jones, reported adversely, and the report was adopted.

The Committee on Work, appointed in 1867, reported and their report was received.

On the evenings of the 5th and 6th the committee exemplified the work, when it was re-affirmed as the work of this jurisdiction by a large vote.

A resolution, contemplating the appointment of a Grand Lecturer for the German lodges, was passed.

R. W. Bro. Egan (211), from the Committee on Constitution, Manual and By-Laws, made the following report, which was accepted:

To the M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois, A. F. & A. M:

The Committee on By-Laws, respectfully submit the following amendments:

1. Amend section 1, by striking out "October" and inserting "December."

concur in the recommendation that the wholesome practice thus adopted take the form of positive law.

Your committee most heartily concur in the remarks of the Grand Master condemning all attempts to enlist Masonry in aid of gift and gambling enterprises; believing that as a conservative element, its influence should always be on the side of sound morality and legitimate traffic among men.

The subject of Masonic charity in all its phases, from that which "suffereth long and is kind," to that of professional begging in the name of Masonry, has long claimed and received the earnest attention of the Craft; your committee feel, however, that it is a duty they owe their brethren to call the especial attention of this Grand Lodge, its officers of every grade, and its constituent lodges, to this subject and the remarks of the Grand Master thereon. It is, in the opinion of this committee the highest duty of Masons, and ought always to be their pleasure, to lend a helping hand to distressed worthy brethren, their widows and orphans, when such subjects fail, in the exercise of all reasonable efforts within their power to provide themselves with the necessaries of life; in performing which they should under no circumstances encourage a relaxation of the sentence of labor laid upon us, by our common Father. We are taught that "to relieve the distressed is a duty incumbent upon all," and believe that the true interpretation of distress, as here and elsewhere in our rituals used, is physical and not financial distress. Interpreting our duty as Masons, then, by these rules, your committee are of the opinion that no man or body of men have the right to approach a Mason or a lodge of Masons in the holy name of Masonic charity, and ask assistance to build mills, stores, or lodge halls, even though a similar article of property may have been lost by fire, tornado, or other casualty; and that such acts ought to subject the brethren or lodge guilty of it, together with all accessories, to the most rigid discipline. The greater portion of the lodges in this State hold their meetings in rented halls, and the greater portion of Masons procure their bread by the exercise of some industrial avocation, or live in the enjoyment of a competency obtained by their own industry; then what a mockery of Masonic charity is it to demand in its holy name, that aid be given to subjects possessed of the same facilities as themselves for obtaining property?

The question of grand lodge sovereignty is likewise one which, in the present and prospective condition of society in this country, is likely to cause much discussion, and unless correct conclusions are now arrived at, one which is likely to effect the integrity of Masonry for many years to come. Your committee, therefore, admonished by the great difficulties in other jurisdictions, growing out of the discussion of questions of social science and rival grand lodges, concur in the well-taken ground of the Most Worshipful Grand Master in his address, that this Grand Lodge should steadfastly refuse to recognize as legitimate any person claiming to be a Mason who is not recognized as such by the Grand Lodge in correspondence with this Grand Lodge, holding jurisdiction over the territory upon which such person received his degrees or holds his membership leaving to society and the civil power to solve all questions of social science which may arise in our ordinary intercourse with such persons. We believe that a departure from this rule will be productive of the worst of consequences.

Believing that, upon the preservation of our esoteric rituals intact as taught and recognized in this jurisdiction for many years, depends the preservation of the harmony now existing in our State, your committee recommend, as an additional precaution against its corruption, that all persons be prohibited from teaching it except such lecturers as may be appointed in pursuance of authority from this Grand Lodge; and that no lecturer be appointed until he shall have passed a satisfactory examination before a board of examiners, composed of skillful and well informed brethren appointed by this Grand Lodge.

In concluding this report, your committee offer the resolutions hereto appended, as a formal expression of its conclusions, and recommend that the earnest thanks of the Fraternity in Illinois be extended to our Most Worshipful brother, Harman G. Reynolds, for his devotion to the interests of the Craft over which he has presided with such distinguished ability and devotion during the year just closed.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That this Grand Lodge views with abhorrence any attempt on the part of lodges or members of lodges to give the aid of Masonry, in organized or individual form, to any lottery or gift enterprise; and that it will sustain any lodge in any reasonable punishment inflicted upon its members for such an offense.

Resolved, That in towns and cities in this jurisdiction where two or more lodges exist, upon the presentation of any petition to any lodge in such town or city either for membership or for the degrees notice shall at once be given to each lodge in such town or city of the presentation of such petition, and of the time when the same will be due.

Resolved, That no lodge in this jurisdiction shall recognize as a Mason any person claiming to be such who has received his degrees or holds his membership in any lodge in any of the United States or in British America, unless said last named lodge at all be recognized as regular by the Grand Lodge of such State, Territory, or Dominion, in correspondence with this Grand Lodge.

Resolved, That a board of four examiners, to be nominated by the Most Worshipful Grand Master

Deputy Grand Master in 1858, 1859, and 1860, and Grand Master in 1861 and 1862.

At the time of his death he was in business in Indianapolis, and was publishing the Home Advocate, a Masonic Journal. His paper, of a recent date, stated that he had made a partnership arrangement which placed it on a firm basis; how suddenly changed. He was a courteous brother, a good companion, and an amiable man.

And, without warning, another, identified with our early history, has also passed away. Hon. Henry Prather, of Decatur, was the first Secretary and Treasurer of Macon Lodge No. 8, the first Master under its charter, and was elected Junior Grand Warden in 1841. I think he has not been in Grand Lodge since that time, but he was ever identified at home with all the measures adopted to forward the interests of Masonry. The people sent him twice to the Legislature, and he labored hard to build up his beautiful city. He was a courteous gentleman, an enterprising man, and a Christian.

The intelligence of the death of Bro. Geo. W. Teel, will sadden all who knew him. He served his lodge as Master, and his county as Sheriff and Circuit Clerk, with rare ability.

The deaths of Brethren Prather and Teel leave a void in Decatur and Charleston, which will long be felt.

It will be the duty of the Committee on Obituaries, to make more elaborate mention of our late brethren here noticed, and perhaps others.

And now, brethren, I earnestly invoke the blessing of God upon our labors, hoping that He may so guide all our minds and thoughts, that there may be harmony and brotherly love in all our deliberations; and, that all our doings may result in the advancement of our beloved Institution to a still higher position, in the good of society, and the welfare of common humanity everywhere.

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS.

The following report on the address with the accompanying resolutions were adopted:

To the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Illinois:

Your committee to whom was referred the address of the Most Worshipful Grand Master, would respectfully beg leave to report that they have endeavored to give the same, and the matters therein contained, the consideration due to a document at once so able and of so much importance, and emanating from so dignified a source, and find therein much to commend and to encourage the Craft.

Your committee feel that to the great industry and application of the Most Worshipful Grand Master to the interests of the Craft in this grand jurisdiction, is due in a great measure the harmony and growth of Masonry in Illinois; and that like zeal, forbearance, and intelligence exercised on the part of each member of this Grand Lodge will in time place Masonry in this jurisdiction in a position where the assaults of its enemies will fall harmless at its feet.

Your committee believe from their own observation and the information communicated in the address of the Most Worshipful Grand Master that the system of appointing District Deputies, in various portions of the State, who in matters of minor importance may represent the Grand Master, thus relieving him of much onerous labor, and the Grand Lodge of much expense, has, after two years' trial, proven itself valuable, and therefore concur with the recommendation of a like committee at the last annual communication, that the proposed additional by-law, No. 1, be adopted.

Your committee concur in the suggestions of the Most Worshipful Grand Master that all elections in all Masonic bodies should be free and unbiased; and that all attempts at controlling the action of voters by the formation of "tickets," "slates," or "rings," should be discountenanced by this Grand Lodge as inconsistent with the spirit and teachings of Masonry; believing that true worth will assert itself without the aid of such appliances.

In relation to the suggestions of the address upon the subject of the notice by lodges in towns and cities where two or more lodges exist, of the application of candidates for the degrees, your committee late, and decide all matters relative to the Craft in general, to particular lodges, and to individual brethren ufon appeal; which they may exercise by themselves, or by such delegated authority as in their wisdom and discretion they shall appoint. Provided, that the power of granting dispensations for new lodges, and chartering the same, is hereby reserved to the Grand Lodge. And, provided further, that the ancient landmarks are preserved. And, provided further, that all such powers and jurisdiction shall be exercised subject to and in conformity with the permanent authority of the Grand Lodge, its constitution, laws and regulations; to which such District Grand Lodges shall, in all things, be strictly subordinate.

14. At the last annual communication of the District Grand Lodge, prior to the meeting of the Grand Lodge, there shall be elected five delegates to the Grand Lodge, who shall be at the time members of some lodge in said District, and presen tor past Masters ofregular lodges under the jurisdiction of the said District Grand Lodge, and who, with the three first officers in said District Grand Lodge, shall constitute the representatives of said District in the Grand Lodge.

15 There shall be paid, on or before the first day of September, biennially, to the Grand Secretary, by the different District Grand Lodges, for the use of the Grand Lodge, the sum of twenty cents for each Master Mason belonging to any regular lodge within the jurisdiction of such District Grand Lodge, and no representatives from any District Grand Lodge shall be entitled to seats in the Grand Lodge until such dues have been paid.

16. Upon the adoption of this amendment to the Constitution, the Grand Lodge shall have power to determine the manner and mode in which said District Grand Lodges shall first be organized and set to work.

Also the following:

Resolved, That the following amendment to the Constitution be submitted to the lodges, and that they be required to vote upon the same, as one entire proposition before the first day of March next, and to make return thereof immediately to the Grand Secretary.

Amend No. 1, by striking out "elected and appointed." After the words "Senior and Junior Grand Wardens" insert "District Deputy Grand Masters," "District Grand Wardens;" after the "the word members," insert "District Representatives."

Insert after No. 9, the following:

"The State shall be divided into fifteen Masonic districts, having regard to the number of Lodges, affiliated Masons, and territory. The lodges in each of the said Districts shall hold a communication at some time, to be fixed by the Grand Master in the months of September, October, or November, in each year. The Grand Master shall preside in person, or by Deputy; said District Grand Lodges shall elect a District Deputy Grand Master and Senior and Junior Grand Wardens annually. The Grand Treasurer and Grand Secretary shall attend upon said District Grand Lodges in person or by proxy, and annual returns and dues shall then be made. Nine representatives to the Grand Lodge shall be selected from the Masters of lodges each year, and from year to year, and from every lodge until all are represented in turn. The District Grand Masters, Grand Wardens, and Masters of lodges in said District Grand Lodges, shall be entitled to mileage and per diem as now is, or may hereafter be provided by law. No communication of said District Grand Lodges shall exceed four days in length, and said District Grand Lodges shall possess no legislative or judicial powers. The work of the Grand Lodge shall be thoroughly exemplified at each Annual Communication. The state shall be re-districted every five years."

Strike out No. 10, and insert:

"In all elections and questions in Grand Lodge the Grand Master, Deputy Grand Master, Grand Wardens, Past Grand Masters, District Deputy Grand Masters, District Wardens, and District representatives, shall each be entitled to one vote, and together with the other Grand officers, shall be entitled to mileage and per diem. No other persons shall be allowed to vote, or be entitled to mileage and per diem.

Amend 1st Article of the Constitution so as to read as follows:

1. "It is hereby ordained: That the Grand Lodge of Illinois shall be composed of the following elected and appointed officers, and members:

"The elected officers shall be a Grand Master, Deputy Grand Master, Senior and Junior Grand Wardens, Grand Treasurer, Grand Secretary, Grand Chaplain, Grand Orator, and Grand Tyler. The appointed officers, a Grand Pursuivant, Grand Marshal, Grand Standard Bearer, Grand Sword Bearer, two Grand Stewards, Senior and Junior Grand Deacons. The District Grand Masters and Senior and Junior Grand Wardens of each District Grand Lodge and five Representatives from each District Grand Lodge."

Amend Section Two of the Constitution by striking out the word "Annual," and insert the word "Biennial."

The following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That this Grand Lodge hereby interdict all recognition of all persons claiming to hail from lodges within the bounds of the United States, or of British America, unless said lodges are directly subordinate to the Grand Lodges, in correspondence with this Grand Body, in the State, Territory, Dominion, or District, from whence they hail.

J. R. Gorin,
W. Lavely,
E. F. Babcock,
W. M. Egan,
J. O. Cunningham,
Jurisprudence Committee.

Resolutions of thanks to the several railroads which granted concessions in fare, and to the State officers for the the use of Representative Hall, were passed; also to the Illinois State Journal for copies of their daily paper.

Amendments to the By-laws were introduced as follows, all of which lie over:

Whereas, Masonry teaches the universal Brotherhood of all men upon the common level of Masonic manhood: therefore,

Resolved, That Section 81 and Section 82 Grand Lodge By-laws, are in direct violation of the true spirit and teachings of Masonry, and are hereby repealed.

Amend Section 1 of By-laws, by striking out the words "in the city of Chicago," and inserting after the word "October," the following." "At such place as may be selected at previous annual communication."

Proposed amendment to By-laws to repeal Section 42 of the By-laws.

Resolved, Thas all visiting Brethren in, and belonging to this jurisdiction, shall before examination produce a diploma or certificate of membership.

◆

Grand Chapter.

Having declined to be Grand Secretary of the Grand Chapter any longer, the papers and proceedings passed into the hands of our successor, who has taken them to Chicago for record and publication. Until published, we must content ourselves with giving the names of the Grand Officers.

John M. Pearson, Godfrey, Madison county. Grand High Priest; A. A. Murray, Decatur, Deputy; James A. Hawley, Dixon, Grand King; James C. Luckey, Polo, Grand Scribe; James H. Miles, Post Office drawer 5862, Chicago, Grand Secretary; Harrison Dills, Quincy, Grand Treasurer; Thos. Moore, Metropolis, Grand Chaplain; Geo. E. Lounsbury, Mound City, Gr. Capt. of the Host. From Principal Sojourner to Master First Veil, we are not informed, and shall be obliged to wait until the next number. S. H. Claspill is Steward, and A. R. Robinson, Grand Tyler.

◆

Cotemporaries.

Magazine and Mirror, London—Contents for Adg. 28.—Organization in Freemasonry. The conflict of Jurisdiction. Masonic Discipline. Reformation Theory of the Origin of Freemasonry. Fraternity. Masonic Notes and Queries. Corrrespondence, seven articles. Metropolitan, Provincial, and Cape of Good Hope Lodge Meetings. Literature, Science, Music, Drama, and the Fine Arts. Knowledge is Power; or what is Masonry? Christian, a term of wide Significance. Miscellaneous articles. Poetry.

Lodge 863 at Cape of Good Hope, had a sermon by Rev. H. I. Johnson on the 24th of June, after which the officers were installed, two candidates were initiated, and the English Feast was duly honored.

The Freemason, London—Contents Aug. 28.—The Prince of Wales and Freemasonry. Reviews. Masonry and the Ass. Hospitallaria. Reports of Masonic Meetings. Obituary of Col. Peter McLennan. Give us More Light. Editorial. Notes and Queries. Knight Templar Jottings. Correspondence, six articles. Miscellaneous.

Masonic Review for July—Contents.—Mark Master's Degree. The Land of the Sea, poetry. Within the Lodge. Numbers. The Mother and Sons. The old Roof Tree. No. 5. Under Jerusalem. We are Brothers all, poetry. The Future of Masonry. Interesting Masonic Narrative. Masonry along the Ages. The Master is come, poetry. The Book. A Masonic Incident. Masonry and Civilization. Northwestern Corner. Traveling Craftsmen. Tidings. Editorial. The Old Chair. Obituary.

Dear Review, do catch up!

We can only mention such of our Masonic exchanges as have been received since our last issue.

The (London) Freemason of Sept. 4, 11, 18, and 25; The (London) Freemason's Magazine of Sept. 4, 11, and 18; Masonic Record of Western India; Keystone, for Sept. 18, 25; The Masonic Home Advocate, for Oct.; The Michigan Freemason, Evergreen, Kentucky Freemason, for September; Record, and St. Louis Freemason, for October; The Visitor, a new paper published at Newbern, N. C.; The Landmark, The Masonic Review, Mason's Home Book.

Exchanges with Masonic departments: The New York Dispatch, Dixon Telegraph, New York Courier, Woodstock Sentinel, Pomeroy's Democrat, The New Age.

Other exchanges received.—Colman's Rural World, Clinton Public, Centralia Sentinel, Carlinville Democrat, Canton Register, McLean County Democrat.

Oliver Optic's Magazine—Our Boys and Girls, October 9th and 16th.—Brake up—a continued story by Oliver Optic. The Martyr of Philanthrophy—an interesting story translated from the French of a physician of Marseilles who sacrificed his life in a successful attempt to stop the pestilence in his native city. Patsy—a home story. Sea Things—the Remora. The Orator. Original Dialogue. Notes on Base Ball. Puzzles, Reubuses, Riddles. Answers to correspondents, Editorials, &c.

Onward for October comes out quite an interesting number. The Doomed Sappers. A night in Vicksburg during the investment—an interesting story by an ex-confederate officer. Byron—was he a bad man. Gundalier—a poem. Three days at Cherbourg—by an English Naval Officer. A Plebian Prince—an anti-monarchial political article. Songs of the French Revolution. The Authors of America—How the young ones are strangled by the old ones. Shot by a Sweetheart. A death Presentiment. The Valley of Yomori—a poem of the conquest of Honduras in 1525 by the Spaniards. Almost an amputation. A treatise on Umbrellas. Chronicles of Saratoga—a continued story. Chancellorsville—a critical review of the battle by General J. Watts De Peyster. Choosing my colors. The Author—Publisher Question. The Lost Sister—a tale of the Gran Chaco of Buenos Ayres, continued. Expected Home—a poem. Editorials, Political, Literary, &c, ably written.

The Western Monthly is worthy of a place in every household. Contents for Oct.: David Atwood—Private Dwellings of Pompeii—A glance at Florida—In camp at Yosemite—The German Turnfest—A Western Utopia—These foreigners again—The old bachelor's story—Retail trade as a medium of distribution—Master singers of Germany—Current notes—Reviews of books—Chit-Chat—Poetry.

No. 18, Tribune building, Chicago; $3 per year.

◆

A Georgia boy, twelve years old, perfectly well and healthy in other respects, is able to breath only about four times a minute. His case puzzles the doctors.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Editor,
IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY
H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

One copy, one year..$1 25

All communications should be addressed to H. G. Reynolds, or The Masonic Trowel, Springfield, Ill.

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for The Trowel.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

Notice.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., OCT. 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

Errata.

Owing to changes in our office, the confusion always succeeding the meeting of the Grand Bodies, and our lengthy absence, serious errors have marred the first two thousand copies, and in order that such as receive them may understand them, we insert this errata. The other copies, with one exception, are in good order.

On page 146 the Committee on Masonic Jurisprudence was omitted, they are: J. R. Gorin, Wm. Lavely, Wiley M. Egan, E. F. Babcock, John Bennett, J. O. Cunningham, O. H. Miner.

There were several typographical errors in the first and second columns—in the third column for amnesties read amenities.

On the 150th page, second column, after the close of the first paragraph, there is an omission of the last two paragraphs under the head of Business and length of Session, and of the matter headed Judicial Decisions, My Labors. and of Our Fraternal Dead, to the words "to the legislature." These omissions will be inserted in the November number.

On page 151, in the corrected copy, the first column should be the third, and the third column should be the first.

On page 151, in the first two thousand copies, third column, it reads, the following was ordered to be submitted to the lodges; amend the Constitution by adding the following articles. It should read The following two amendments to the Constitution were presented and referred to the Committee on Masonic Jurisprudence.

In the first two thousand copies, a small portion of column one, and all of columns two and three again appear of necessity, on page 152, as corrected. Our office has been for years in the hands of an accomplished foreman, and we have given ourselves no concern about the arrangement of matter; hereafter the matter will have our personal attention, and no such mortifying mistakes will again occur.

Lectures.

By an arrangement with the examiners, we are relieved from the duty of examining candidates for lecturing. Those desiring commissions must receive the certificates of three of the Board.

We shall issue and send an encyclical letter to the lodges about the 10th of November. The Districts and Deputies will then be announced.

Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite.

The bodies of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite will hold sessions at the Chapter Hall, in Springfield, commencing Tuesday the 16th day of November next, commencing at two o'clock, P. M., for the purpose of conferring degrees from the 4th to 32d grade inclusive. All Master Masons in good standing are eligible. The Perfection degrees will be conferred on the 16th and 17th; Princes of Jerusalem and Rose Croix on the 18th, and the Consistory degrees on the 19th. Application may be made to O. H. Miner, H. G. Reynolds or George Carpenter.

O. H. Miner, 32°, Grand Commander.
L. W. Shepherd, 32°, M. W. & P. Master.
Chas. Fisher, 32°, M. E. S. P. G. Master.
H. G. Reynolds, 33°, T. P. G. Master.

This Number.

Owing to the large amount of Grand Lodge matter, and an absence from home more than ten days, we are short of our usual editorial and miscellaneous articles. We hope to give a pleasing and profitable variety in the November Trowel, and in good time.

Schools of Instruction.

If three or more lodges desire a thorough course of instruction and lectures, and will provide the means for compensation and expenses, they can correspond with the Grand Master or Grand Secretary, at Springfield, and provision will be made as soon as practicable to meet their wishes.

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Messrs. Parson & Co., on the last page of The Trowel. Having been in the Masonic Furnishing Business for thirty years, they are known, by reputation, in pretty much all the Masonic organizations of the United States.

It is our purpose, if health permits, to visit the Craft pretty generally during this year. As it will be impossible to visit every lodge, it would be well for three or more lodges, contiguous to each other, to meet in mass. Early requests are desired, so that suitable arrangements may be made.

Dec. 27th and June 24th.

Our Lewistown brethren were three months ahead with their invitation last June. About fifteen invitations were afterwards declined. If our presence is desired on either of the above dates let them speak in time.

Honey.

Our thanks to W. Brother Miles H. Wilmot, W. M. of Illiopolis Lodge, for a box of fine honey.

Hawthorne Dale.

The above is the title of a charming and meritorious book, by Mrs. William H. Tucker, widow of our late Brother and Companion William H. Tucker, Esq., a member of the lodge and chapter, at La Crosse, Wisconsin, and who was an attorney in that city of fine standing. In his last sickness, he came with his family to Chicago, and there, after exhausting all his means, fell a victim to the relentless hand of death. Alone, with four little children in Chicago, the widow felt the anguish of bereavement, destitution, and desolation. The Fraternity came to her rescue, and the remains of her husband received honorable attention and decent sepulture agreeably to the forms of our Institution.

Of her, we can personally re-assert the uniform testimony of her friends and of our brethren in Chicago, that her gentle "modesty bespeaks her worth." Educated, talented, and cultivated, her refined and agreeable manners, are accompanied by a sweet simplicity and dignity which repel all impropriety and impurity, and inspire respect and esteem.

This lady is endeavoring, by her labors as an authoress, to support and educate her children. Direct contributions are her last resort, and what she craves is the purchase of her admirable work, founded on facts, with names and places only concealed. Her book of 391 pages, on fine paper, for $2.00, is just such an one as brethren might buy for their own pleasure and instruction, or for their families. Winter is at hand, living is costly in Chicago, yet there she must live to make her authorship available. Let the purest sympathy animate our brethren in aiding a noble widow and mother, and in ministering likewise to their own enjoyment and that of their wives and children.

Address, Mrs. William H. Tucker, or Messrs. Kellogg & White, 163 Dearborn street, Chicago, and enclose $2, and the book will be immediately forwarded.

We personally solicit the aid of our brethren in this matter.

Publications Received.

Western Musical Review—Contents.—The dent in the organ pipe—Correspondence—Humorous—Editorial—Music—Bright things can never die—Red Rose Waltz—Sacred Chorus—Art and Literature Department—Poetry—Selections—Odds and Ends. By Benham Brothers, Indianapolis. $1 per annum.

Petersen's Musical Monthly for September has 46 pages. Contents: The Captain's Return. The Story of the Opera of Hamlet. Four Letters of Czerny to a young Lady. Review Table. New Music. Pieces: Jessie. Down in the Valley where the Grass Groweth. At Home Thou art Remembered still. Drum and Fife. Congenial Hearts. Morning-glory Mazuaka. Holy, Holy is God our Lord. A Mothers' Group. Take me Home. Miscellaneous. Review of Music.

Colman's Rural World for Sept. 11—Contents: Agricultural Department, eight articles; Apiary, two articles; Horticultural Department, three articles; The Vineyard, three articles Editor's Table, four articles; Home Circle, four articles.

Watson's Art Journal.—Fashion pattern and plate accompanying. Contents of Sept. 4: Thorvalsends Triumphs. Musical Memory. Poetry. Correspondence. Editorial. Reviews, &c.

The Little Corporal.—Bobby's Bedtime, a poem. How a Tyrant lost one Slave. Mother's Choice. A School-Girl's Revenge. A Boy on Broadway. A Year at Riverside Farm, a continued story. Ellen Mooney's Story. My Little Parisians. Land of the Blest, song and chorus, with notes. Crystal Mountains. The Little Weatherman, translated from the German. Letter from China. Private Queer's Letter. Lake Minnetonka. Humming Birds. The History of a President's Note. Prudy's Pocket.

Dr. Joseph Blanchard, at Brimfield, in this State, has realized 4,200 pounds of honey from forty swarms of bees.

Moral Influence of Masonry.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

The moral influence of Masonry is unquestioned by any thinking man who has had the opportunity, and has taken the trouble to investigate the subject. Such a man knows, as well as he knows that the sun enlightens and fructifies nature, that the benign influences that are gathered around the Order, warm, purify, and enlighten the heart that receives them. Those who are acquainted with the facts, the inner workings of the system, know that it is just as impossible for an individual to be placed within the scope of these influences and not be, to some extent purified and refined, as it would be for the seeds of grain planted in a rich soil to respond to the life-giving rays of the vernal sun. It is only those who have had no opportunity; or, having had the opportunity, have not improved it; who pretend to believe that Masonry does not exert a healthful and regenerating moral influence.

And yet all over the land we have the charge brought against our Institution, that its is of immoral tendency. And most singular it is that, when those making it are called upon for proof of the truth of the allegation, they invariably say that the lodge includes immoral individuals. We name this a singular proof, because it is just as weighty against all other associations as it is against Masonry. It is a common one, but it is singular in that it appears to us as being of no form whatever. The most moral literary society ever organized has exhibited the same phase of imperfect human nature that is charged upon us. The church has wicked men within its pale, and even the original "church of the twelve," harbored a Judas. Facts show that most churches since that time, have had a greater proportion of unworthy members. Unworthiness frequently desecrates the holy altar at which devout Christians kneel, and hands stained by crime break the bread, and present the wine that symbolizes the body and blood of a crucified Redeemer. Scarcely a day passes that the shortcomings of a shepherd of the flock are not laid bare to the public gaze, to the scandal of the church, and the grief of all true Christians, and we apprehend that these incidents stain the history of the Christian congregation much more frequently than they do the annals of Masonry.

Then, if we conclude that Masonry is unworthy of support and confidence because immorality among its devotees, let us be consistent, and also denounce Christianity because there also is found the trail of the serpent—the evidence of man's imperfection. He who brings this charge against Masonry should not be so inconsistent as to be a Christian churchman. If he will not be a Mason because of the infirmities of its members, neither should he consort with professing Christians because they are imperfect. He should hold himself aloof from fraternal communion until he finds that perfect, and virtuous, and faultless harmony of which poets have sung, and for which religious enthusiasts have prayed, where human imperfections are unknown, and all the virtues in the moral calendar bud, bloom, and bear fruit in perennial and ever-enduring beauty.

But we say that this charge comes with still greater force against the church. That is recognized as a divine institution. Its laws and precepts; its judgments and its sanctions; its rewards and beatitudes come from the Divine hand. The Supreme Architect of the Universe planned it. His infinite wisdom dictated its statutes. His mercy ordained it as the best means to reconcile a lapsed world to himself, and to reclaim his wandering children from the wildering labyrinths of sin. But even this system, issuing from the throne of the Infinite and the Unapproachable, in a thousand cases fails to keep the human pilgrim in the narrow path of virtue, and suffers him to imbrute his nature by accepting the specious offers of vice. Surely if anything ought to have a perfect work in the regeneration of a world lying in wickedness, this should be the successful engine of moral reformation. But it fails—fails in thousands and millions of instances, and poor, weak, human nature plunges into the mases of sin in spite of all its warnings and invitations.

Masonry is a human institution. It claims no divine origin any farther than the principles upon which it is founded, one inherent in nature, and a part of the radical machinery of the universe. It was not delivered to Moses amid the thunders and the lightnings of Sinai. Neither was it promulgated by the Son of God. It did not even have the sanction of priest or prophet. It grew out of the necessities of mankind. Kings who loved their subjects and labored for human welfare, took it under their protection, and hands embrowned by exposure and hardened by toil reared its bulwarks and brought forth its cap-stone. And now that there are bad men among all these countless Craftsmen, we are stigmatized as members of an immoral institution. While we thought we were contributing something to the morality and virtue, and consequently to the happiness and perfection of mankind, we are met with the objection that we have bad men among us. We sorrowfully admit the fact that our members are not all as good as they should be. They are not as virtuous as we desire them to be. They are not so free from sin as they might be. All these are facts, but they do not touch the main question. That question is: "Are not our members better men than they would be were they not Masons?"

For what was the Christian religion instituted? Was it to make men perfect while on earth? If so, then it has most signally failed in the object for which it was ordained. Of all the millions who have lived and died in good standing as members of the Christian church, not one is accounted perfect. The best of them have been subject to the frailties and weaknesses of human nature. Peter denied his Lord and Judas betrayed him, and from that day to the present, the biography of the church would be little more than a sad recital of Christian imperfection. So if it was designed by the founder of the Christian religion, that it should make men perfect, the system has not performed, and in this world never will perform its mission. In general and in particular it has most egregiously, on that hypothesis, failed.

Why should we wonder then, that Masonry, not a divine, but a human institution, should also come short of perfecting the virtue and righteousness of its members? Shall we look for perfection in the earthly, where the heavenly fails? Can we reasonably demand that the invention of man should be more potent for good than the decrees of the Divinity? Where Christianity fails, shall Masonry be censured for imperfection? When the mandates of Jehovah are disobeyed, shall we quarrel with a human institution because it cannot enforce its edicts? These questions need but to be asked to receive a correct answer. They are susceptible of but a single reply.

We go one step further, and say that Christianity was never intended to make men perfect in all the attributes of a moral life. Of course we now speak only of the present state of existence. What may hereafter be wrought in us is not pertinent to the present subject. The Christian system was made perfect and unapproachable for a good purpose, but it was never expected, designed, or desired that it should give perfection to the human subject. The system may be regarded as perfection itself. It was so stated by an inspired writer when he said: "The Law of the Lord is perfect." It is far above human attainment. But every one may make good progress in that direction. Like the hill of science, embellished with a splendid temple on the summit, it may be approximated but may not be reached. The slowest may make some progress, and the most active may climb very near the cloud-covered temple, and all shall receive reward according to their progress, but in the Infinite only is perfection. When we are "like God," we may pass the threshold and "see Him as He is."

Now, what is conceded for Christianity in this regard, we demand for Masonry; that it shall be judged by its fruits, and not by any imaginary and impossible standard of perfection. As we do not expect, and do not ask that Christianity shall so perfect and regenerate and re-create human nature, so as there shall be no recreant members among them; so we claim that Masonry should not be expected to perfect all its members in the moral virtues. We may reasonably demand still further concessions from our opponents. We may ask that Masonry shall not be held responsible for the acts of its members up to that perfection required by its laws. Or, in other words, we should no more be condemned as a body, when our members fail to reach that standard of morality which our Order has instituted, than Christianity should be denounced when its members fail to reach the perfection which the system teaches. If our members fall short of the beautiful moral teachings of our ritual, it should be remembered that Christians also fall as far behind that advanced state of goodness which their system contemplates.

But why can we not attain perfection? Why are we called upon for such an exhibition of moral goodness, when perfection is not to be reached? Both in Christianity and in Masonry, the standard is raised high, that man may be better than is demanded by them. A college faculty which should establish a course of study which could be mastered by a Sophomore, would hardly be considered competent to discharge their duties. Or should they establish a course in which every one could become perfect, they would be held as little less than incompetent. The object is to bend the pupils as far forward as possible. Some come much nearer perfection than others, but none are absolutely perfect. All strive to arrive as near to perfection as possible, and to that end are the exertions of teachers and pupils directed. And who does not know that every pupil advances farther towards the goal by his hope when the standard is elevated, than when it is depressed?

Judged by the same rules as are applied to other institutions, we do not fear for the character of Masonry. It does not pretend to the impossibility of making its members perfect, but it does claim that it makes its members better; more observant of the moral law; more careful of the rights of their neighbors; more generous to the needy; more attentive to all those social observances that have such an important bearing on the sum of human happiness. All this we claim, and for proof that the claim is well founded, we refer to the Fraternity everywhere. We have immoral members, we grieve to say, but the great body of our membership is made up of the moral, the virtuous, and the benevolent portion of the communities in which they reside. We possess in goodness of which to boast, but we do not shun comparison with any body of men in the universe. We are not as moral as we ought to be, but we are more moral than we should be without the aid of Masonry.

Hence we know that Masonry is a valuable moral institution, because a tree is known by its fruits. Profanity may, in spite of the lessons of Masonry, pollute the lips of a member, but Masonry forbids it. It is not one of its fruits. Inebriation may overtake a Mason, but the Institution enjoins sobriety and temperance, and the Lodge is no more responsible than the church, when a member goes astray. Judge us by our fruits and we are content. Look with equal commiseration upon the vices of our members, that is bestowed upon those who fall out from other societies, and we will not complain. Make due allowances for the imperfections of human nature, and charge those imperfections to their true source, and never again shall we hear of the immorality of Masonry.

Masonry inculcates morality in every charge, lecture, and ritual. Not in a single instance does it give countenance to vice. Everywhere does it impress upon the mind of the neophyte the duty of practicing charity and benevolence, of being governed by the rule of right in all the business and social concourse of life. Doing this, the influence which it exerts over its members, could hardly be other than salutary. Thus we come to the conclusion, from the various points of view which we have occupied, that Masonry is pre-eminently a moral Institution, and as such, worthy the confidence of all moral and virtuous men. With their aspirations for good it sympathizes, and in many cases it fulfills their fondest hopes of congenial association. To such we recommend it as a school of virtue.

Transactions Examined.

Pennsylvania — Grand Commandery. — The Grand Commandery K. T. met at Erie, June 8. The attendance was very large, and the address very full. Grand officers elected, James H. Hopkins, Pittsburg, G. Com.; H. B. McKean, Dep; C. M. Howell, G. Gen.; Rev. J. R. Dim, G. Prel.; Fitz James Evans, G. S. W.; Nathan Smith, G. J. W.; A. O. Kerr, G. Treas.; Alfred Creigh, Washington, Grand Recorder.

Sir J. R. Dim delivered a splendid address. Sir James H. Hopkins presented the report on correspondence, in which Illinois was courteously noticed.

Tidings.

Items.

Marion Lodge No. 130 has removed to a new hall, and is in a prosperous and harmonious condition.

F. Zeigfeld, Room No. 2, Crosby's Opera House, Chicago, graduate of Leipzig Conservatory of Music, proposes to take thirty young ladies with his family, and spend nine months in study at Berlin, and three months in traveling on the European continent. Terms, two thousand dollars in gold; he to defray all expenses except clothing.

Three distinguished men, Gen. Rawlins, Secretary of War, Senator Fessenden, formerly Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Senator John Bell, formerly Speaker, died within five days of each other.

The Swedes in Knox county remit, on an average, $4,000 per month to the old country.

Mr. C. B. Laning recently married a daughter of the late Hon. T. L. Harris, of Petersburg.

Chicago claims 350,000 population.

Rome has 220,532 inhabitants, of whom 7,480 are priests, monks, and nuns.

A diamond was recently found at the Cape of Good Hope valued at $400,000.

The people of Montana have voted to locate the capital at Helena.

Truth is violated by falsehood, and it may be equally outraged by silence.

Married at Sunbury, by the Rev. Mr. Blackberry, Mr. Nehemiah Cranberry, to Miss Catharine Elderberry, all of Strawberry.

The Erie Railroad bought a few acres of land, awhile since with water privileges, at Hoboken, for freight purposes, for $1,600,000.

A tunnel on the Marietta (Ohio) Railroad, is cut under a well of excellent water. The well is as good as ever, and not a drop leaks through.

Russia is busily preparing for the universal exposition next year at St. Petersburg. The Crystal Palace is the model for the edifice which is to be gigantic, and will cost $2,000,000.

Queen Victoria's father, the Duke of Kent, was made a Mason in Geneva, Switzerland.

Canada.—A. A. Stevenson, G. M.; James Seymour, Deputy; Thomas Bird Harris, Hamilton, Grand Secretary.

New Jersey—Grand Chapter.—D. S. Batty, G. H. P.; M. Higginbotham, Dep.; W. H. Jeffreys, G. K.; T. H. R. Redway, G. S.; John Wolverton, Trenton, G. Sec. Grand Council.—J. V. Mattison, G. M.; T. J. Corson, Trenton, G. Rec. Grand Commandery.—John Wolverton, Grand Commander; T. J. Corson, Trenton, Grand Recorder.

The corner-stone of the Humboldt Monument, in Philadelphia, was laid on the 13th of September, M. W. Grand Master Vaux, presiding.

The (Ark). State Gazette brings intelligence of the death of John W. Wright, a relative of Grand Secretary Blocher. The deceased was a talented young lawyer, and an able writer.

Impostor.

Hall of Benjamin Lodge No. 297,
A., F. & A. M., Camp Point, Ill., Oct. 1.

At our regular communication on Thursday, Sept. 30. the Secretary was ordered to expose an impostor who gave his name as H S. Case, hailing from Reedsburg Lodge No. 157, of Wisconsin.

He is about 5 feet 9 inches high, dark hair and moustache, and represented himself as agent for selling the right of a patent wheel for sharpening mill saws. He is a very fluent talker, good-looking, and is well posted. Look out for him.

Yours fraternally,
S. L. Morse, Sec.

A Pathetic Appeal for Money.

The anti-Masonic organization of the United States must be getting short of cash. At their meeting in Chicago they appealed to the faithful to come up to the scratch and give them twenty thousand dollars to support the cause; it seems they did not get that many cents. Next comes Oberlin College, having driven away all their Masonic patronage, and fooled away their money in circulating lies about Masonry they are frantically beseeching their friends to contribute forty thousand dollars to pay off the indebtedness on the institution. Anti-Masons as a class never were notorious for being liberal either in mind or money, consequently it is doubtful if Oberlin College gets out of debt very soon. At last, out comes the leaders asking for help to keep the party shot-gun in ammunition. The "Christian Cynosure" proprietors find that publishing a paper for glory is up-hill business, labor and material must be paid for with the filthy lucre and the fanatics have not got it. Now the publishers of the "Dog's Tail," (See Websters Dictionary for the word Cynosure,) being a business man, and knowing by experience that it is no use to appeal to the "antis" for help, and well knowing the liberality of Freemasons as a class, sends out the following circular:

"MURDER AND TREASON NOT EXCEPTED!

"Masonry, as an institution, is opposed to Christ!

"It will not pray in his name. It keeps its proceedings so far as possible secret and hides its good deeds—if there are any—in the darkness of the lodge.

"The Masonic Order is Treasonable in its constitution! If a man is guilty of no crime but treason, he cannot be expelled from the lodge, and his relation thereto remains indefeasible. Masonry disturbs the equality of society which God has established. It stays the arm of the law, makes the name of justice a mockery, and will unless abandoned, destroy any good government!

"It is opposed to Republican Institutions, as any one can see from the aprons its members wear and the windy titles they assume, such as Kings, Princes, Sovereigns, etc. It has also Masters. Right Worshipful and Grand; but in America there are no slaves, and we want no masters.

"Masonry is a False Religion! A religion, because she pretends to save men and a false religion because she rejects Christ who is the only meditator between God and man. It is the dishonest man who dreads investigation, the one who is upright will be glad to have his character known. If Masonry is right, she will gain by a discussion of her principles, if wrong, the Christian members of the lodge ought to know it and leave the Order. We ask therefore every Freemason to send one dollar to E. A. Cook, 88 Lasalle St., Chicago, for which they will receive the Christian Cynosure, opposed to secret societies."

Of course we will send him a dollar, we would as soon give a dollar for filthy literature such as we used to see in camp while soldiering, and circulate among our boy acquaintances of the present day, as to help support the "Dog's Tail." What use would it be for us to discuss our prinples when opposed by fanaticism and ignorance. We might just as well give our money to support a distillery if a liquor dealer were to send us a circular saying, "you do not know whether or not whisky will hurt you until you try it, now if you will give me ten dollars to support my distillery I will make you drunk every week for one year." Imagine the result. Masonic Review.

The Masonic Register for India.

We are indebted to Bro. H. H. Avron of Bombay, for a copy of the above mentioned work. From it we ascertain the names of the Masonic lodges, chapters, commandries and bodies of the A. & A. Rite with their officers in Hindoostan, Burmah, Bengal, Arabia, Ceylon, Andaman Islands and Singapore. Judging by the names of the officers many of the Masonic bodies seem to be composed entirely of the native inhabitants of their respective countries, thus furnishing another proof of the universality of Masonry.

By F. G. Tisdall.

Portrait Gallery of Living Masons.

CHARLES WHITLOCK MOORE,

Editor Freemason's Monthly Magazine, Corresponding Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, and the senior active member of the Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the 33° for the Northern Masonic Jurisdiction of the United States, was born in Boston, March 29, 1801, in which city he received a liberal education, and has since permanently resided, with the exception of a short sojourn in the State of Maine.

The exalted opinions which Brother Moore entertained of the Masonic Society, caused him to be extremely anxious to be permitted to receive Masonic light on the evening of his twenty-first birth-day, and, with that object in view, he solicited and was proposed for the degrees in Massachusetts Lodge, in February, 1822; but, having been in the interim, called to the State of Maine, he obtained the recommendation and permission of Massachusetts Lodge, to deceive the degrees in Kennebec Lodge, in that State, and was initiated, &c., in April or May following.

In the fall of the same year he returned to his native city, and in October affiliated with St. Andrew's Lodge, and the following month was placed in office, and continued serving it in various stations until 1832, when he was elected Master. Having been elected Recording Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts in 1832, he felt himself under the necessity of resigning the office of Master, the two offices being held by the same brother being incompatible—but was the same evening elected its Secretary, which place he held for sixteen years, when he resigned. He uninterruptedly held the office of Recording Grand Secretary for thirty-four years, when, in 1867, he became Deputy Grand Master, and in 1868 Corresponding Grand Secretary. He was Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Grand Charity Fund, and a member and Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Masonic Hall, in which latter position, if his views had not been overruled by a majority of his associates, not nearly so large a debt as now exists, if any, would have been incurred.

In Capitular Masonry, Brother Moore was advanced and exalted, in St. Andrew's Chapter, Boston, in 1825, and having satisfactorily filled most of the offices in that body, was elected its High Priest in 1840. In the Grand Chapter of Massachusetts, after having acceptably occupied nearly all the subordinate offices, including that of Grand Lecturer, he was elected Grand High Priest. At the Triennial Convocation of the G. G. Chapter of the United States, at Hartford, Conn., in September, 1856, he was proxy for the Deputy Grand High Priest of Masssachusetts, and Chairman of the Committee on Doings of G. G. Officers.

In Cryptic Masonry, he received the degrees of Royal and Select Master, in 1832, in Boston Council over which he subsequently presided for more than ten years. In the Grand Council he held nearly every office.

In the Chivalric Order, he was created and dubbed Knight Templar, in Boston Encampment, in or about the year 1839, and having served most of the offices therein, was elected Eminent Commander in 1837. He has also been Eminent Commander of De Molay Encampment, of Boston. In the Grand Encampment of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, he was elected Grand Master in 1841, and held that exalted station three years. In the Grand Encampment of the United States, he was elected Grand Generalissimo, in 1853, and at Hartford, in 1856, was a prominent member of the Committee on Jurisprudence.

In Ineffable Masonry, Brother Moore ascended, through intricate paths, along fearful precipices, and bewildering acclivities, until he reached the 33° in 1848. Was for several years prior to May, 1861, the Grand Secretary General of the Holy Empire of the Northern Supreme Council; from that period to May 1867, its Grand Standard Bearer, and is now the senior active member of the same.

The many and eminent services which this venerable and distinguished brother has rendered Masonry for the past forty-three years, in various stations, and also as an editor and writer, can by us merely be glanced at. They would fill a volume. When, in 1833, he assumed the Secretariat, anti-Masonry was raging with its atmost fury, and his first official act was to attest the memorial of which he was the author, surrendering to the Legislature the act of incorporation of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. The idea originated with him, and he may with honest pride look back upon it as one of the most beneficial performances of his eventful Masonic career. Our brother was the author of the "Declaration of the Freemasons of Boston and Vicinity," issued to the public December 31, 1831, signed by one thousand four hundred and sixty-eight of the leading citizens, in their capacity as Masons—one of the most able, next to the Declaration of American Independence, ever published, and drawn forth by the persecution of the Masons at that period. It concluded as follows: "Should the people of this country become so infatuated as to deprive Masons of their civil rights, in violation of their written constitutions and the wholesome spirit of just laws and free government, a vast majority of the Fraternity will still remain firm, confiding in God and the rectitude of their intentions for consolation uuder the trials to which they may be exposed."

Brother Moore's services to the Craft have been acknowledged, both at home and abroad, by his election to honorary membership in several Masonic bodies, grand and subordinate. In 1023 he established the Masonic Mirror, in Boston, and continued it until 1835, and in its columns gallantly fought against anti-Masonry. So terrific were his onslaughts that, 1834, he was prosecuted for libel by the leader of anti-Masonry. and, although he overthrew his adversary, his health was injured and his means impaired. In 1841 he commenced the publication of the Freemason's Monthly Magazine, the oldest Masonic journal now extant, which from that period to the present time, has been uniformly conducted with signal ability. He is also the author of the "Masonic Trestle Board," originally prepared by the order of National Masonic Convention, held at Baltimore, Md., in 1843, first submitted to the Fraternity in that year, and which has since passed through several editions.

Brother Moore is evidently a profound thinker as he certainly is a logical reasoner. His sentences are classically elegant, and if he has as a Masonic writer, one failing, it is on the safe side, ultra Masonic conservatism. In manner Brother Moore, to the stranger is apparently distant, but to those who have long enjoyed his acquaintanceship his genial and social qualities show to advantage, and are fully appreciated.

◆

The Masonic Grand Bodies.

Annual Assemblies.

The annual assemblies of the Masonic Grand Bodies of Missouri are just concluded, and the various branches of the fraternity were represented as being in a prosperous condition throughout the State. The general attendance was unusually large.

The Grand Commandery of Knights Templar held its annual conclave on Tuesday, October 5th. Ten commanderies were represented, and four new ones chartered. The total membership of Templars in the State is about six hundred. A list of the officers elected has already been published in this paper.

THE GRAND CHAPTER.

The Grand Royal Arch Chapter met in its annual convocation on Wednesday, October 6th, thirty-four chapters being represented. There are fifty-two chartered chapters and four continued under dispensation, and a total membership of 2,500.

On Thursday, 7th, the election took place, and the following-named officers were elected and installed, which business closed the session:

John F. Houston, Richmond, G. H. P.
Wm. E. Glenn, Rolla, D. G. H. P.
Wm. M. Rush, St. Joseph, G. K.
Alex. M. Dockery, Chillicothe, G. S.
John D. Daggett, St. Louis, G. T.
Geo. Frank Gouley, St. Louis, G. S.
John D. Vincil, Macon, G. Chaplain.
D. N. Burgoyne, St. Louis, G. C. of H.
Allan McDowell, Greenfield, G. R. A. C.
Geo. Frank Gouley, Con. F. C.
T. E. Garrett, G. Lecturer.

The following district lecturers were appointed for Masonic districts—two north and two south of the river:

1st District—Allan McDowell, Greenfield.
2d " James E. Carter, Jefferson City.
3d " Sam'l Russell, St. Joseph.
4th " Robert Grove, Gallatin.

GRAND COUNCIL.

The Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters met on Friday, October 8th. There are seven Councils in the State, and all were represented. The whole membership is about 375. The following grand officers were elected and installed:

Martin Collins, St. Louis, M. P. G. M.
John G. Fass, Hannibal, D. G. P.
Joseph M. Fox, Sedalia, D. T. I.
John Glenny, St. Louis, G. P. C. W.
J. E. R. Miller, Weston, G. C. G.
D. T. Wainright, Monticello, G. Chaplain.
Wm. N. Loker, St. Louis, G. Treasurer.
Geo. Frank Gouley, St. Louis, G. Recorder.
Robert L. Fisher, Kennett, G. Marshal.
John F. Houston, Richmond, G. Steward.
John Geekie, St. Louis, G. Sentinel.
Geo. Frank Gouley, Com. F. C.
T. E. Garrett, Grand Lecturer.

THE GRAND LODGE.

The M. W. Grand Lodge of Missouri met in Freemason's Hall on Monday, October 10th, there being an unusually large attendance and full representation. Most of the business transacted had reference only to the internal regulations of the Craft in the jurisdiction, and was of no particular public importance. One matter, however, relating to the property known as Freemason's Hall, of great interest to the Fraternity generally, was adjusted. The Grand Lodge assumes the payment of the bonded debt on the property, amounting to about $200,000, and assessed an annual tax of one dollar on each lodge member in the State for this purpose. This payment, it was ascertained, could be accomplished in eight years, and give the Grand Lodge the controlling interest at the end of that time.

There were 160 lodges out of 300 represented at the Annual Convention, and twenty-seven new charters were granted. Nine dispensations for new lodges were ordered, and six were continued.

There is now a membership of 16,500 in the grand jurisdiction of Missouri, including the Territory of New Mexico. The business of the Grand Lodge was closed on Thursday night by the installation of the following officers elected for the Masonic year.

Wm. D. Muir, Booneville, M. W. G. M.
Thos. E. Garrett, St. Louis, R. W. D. G. M.
Alex. M. Dockery, Chillicothe, R. W. S. G. W.
Sam'l H. Owens, California, R. W. J. G. W.
Wm. N. Loker, St. Louis, R. W. G. T.
Geo. Frank Gouley, St. Louis, R. W. G. S.

APPOINTED OFFICERS—GRAND CHAPLAINS.

F. R. Holman, Boonville.
Thomas M. Finney, St. Louis.
Richard Holt, Canton.
P. M. Pinckard, St. Louis.
J. B. Mitchell, College Mound.
W. P. Renick, St. James.
W. E. Whiting, Kansas City, S. G. D.
James A. Adams, St. Joseph, J. G. D.

GRAND MARSHALS.

Martin Collins, St. Louis.
Wm. A. Hall, Liberty.
A. F. Frainor, Montgomery City, G. S. B.

GRAND STEWARDS.

John B. Best, Palmyra; J. W. Dunn, Lamar.

GRAND ORATORS.

John D. Vincil, Macon City; S. W. B. Carnagy, Canton; John Geekie, St. Louis, G. Tyler; G. Frank Gouley, St. Louis, Com. F. C.; James A. H. Lampton, St. Louis, G. Lecturer.

DISTRICT D. G. MASTERS.

1st District—Theo. E. Shepherd, La Grange.
2d District—John Ure, Hannibal.
3d District—John Ralls, New London.
4th District—J. H. Alexander, St. Charles.
5th District—B. O. Austin, New Bloomfield.
6th District—F. D. Evans, Columbia.
7th District—H. L. Gaines, Brunswick.
8th District—L. K. Myers, Brookfield.
9th District—W. T. Baird, Kirksville.
10th District—Geo. W. Hubbell, Trenton.
11th District—D. J. Heaston, Bethany.
12th District—Willis Griffin, Hamilton.
13th District—Elias Parrott, Cameron.
14th District—Samuel Russell, St. Joseph.
15th District—Hiram Patterson, Forest City.
16th District—John W. Luke, St. Louis.
17th District—S. C. Griswold, New Haven.
18th District—Wiley Lane, Libertyville.
19th District—Wm. B. Wilson, Cape Girardeau.
20th District—J. H. Bethune, Charleston.
21st District—Robert L. Fisher, Kennett.
22d District—J. W. Baldwin., Poplar Bluff.
23d District—B. Shepherd, Ironton.
24th District—A. L. McGregor, Arlington.
25th District—R. P. Faulkner, Rolla.
26th District—
27th District—James E. Carter, Jefferson City.
28th District—Josiah Ivey, Lebanon.
29th District—
30th District—M. J. Hubble, Springfield.
31st District—M. S Street, Granby.
32d District—J. C. Gaston, Carthage.
33d District—Allen McDowell, Greenfield.
34th District—H. J. Church, Stockton.
35th District—
36th District—N. M. Given, Harrisonville.
37th District—J. V. Allee, Versailles.
38th District—W. J. Wyan, Belleair.
39th District—J. W. Petty, Cambridge.
40th District—Geo. R. Hunt, Warrensburg.
41st District—R. Frank Green, Santa Fe, New Mexico.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

His House and Habits in Philadelphia.

A while since, in looking over a Philadelphia directory for 1797, my heart gave a great bound as I came upon this entry:

WASHINGTON, GEORGE, 190 HIGH STREET.

To the disgrace of Philadelphia, that house, second only to Independence Hall, was many years ago demolished. But, for a few charmed hours of a midsummer evening, that mansion has stood again before me, and Washington has walked before my eyes "in his habit as he lived;" and yet the only memory of a gracious old man, who, in his early childhood, was a neighbor of Washington, his parents living, I believe, on Sixth street near High.

At the house of a friend in Philadelphia, I was so fortunate as to meet Robert E. Gray, a man past four-score, but wonderfully well preserved—looking much younger than his years—a gentleman of the old school in courteousness of manner, in elegance and neatness of dress, stately in figure, with a fresh and handsome countenance. In person and demeanor, he reminded me strongly of Walter Savage Landor, as I saw him in his 81st year. When I asked this noble relic of the past for his recollections of Washington, he said: "Bless you, I have little to tell. I was so very young at the time when I knew him, that I have only childish recollections, mere trifles, which will scarcely interest you." On my assuring him that these were just the things I wished to hear, he talked modestly and with much questioning, of the old days of Philadelphia, and of the great President and his household.

In his childhood, he said, the place where we then were, on Tenth street, near Arch, with the roar of the great city about us, was quite in the rural districts. He remembered going to bathe in the little pond, near the corner of Sixth and Arch streets, a secluded and shady spot. High street, the fashionable avenue, was only paved as far up as Ninth, but it was planted with rows of the Lombardy poplar nearly out to the Schuylkill, and, was the favorite Sunday promenade of the citizens.

"Washington's house," said Mr. Gray, "was thought a very fine mansion. It was what was called 'a house and a half,' that is, the hall was not in the middle, but had two windows at the right and one window at the left. It was two stories and a half high, with dormer windows. It was rented for the President, of Robert Morris, but originally belonged to Galloway, the tory."

"Was Washington the stately and formal personage he has been represented?"

"Yes, he was a very dignified gentleman, with the most elegant manners—very nice in his dress, careful and punctual. I suppose he would be thought a little stiff now-a-days."

"Did you ever hear him laugh heartily?"

"Why, no, I think I never did."

"Was he always grave, as you remember him, or did he smile now and then?"

"Why, bless you, yes, he always smiled on children! He was very popular with boys. When he went in state to Independence Hall, and with postillions and out-riders, and when he set out for and returned from Mount Vernon, we boys were on hand; he could always count on us to huzza and wave our hats for him, and he used to touch his hat to us as politely as though we had been so many veteran soldiers on parade."

"Were you ever in his house as a child?"

"Oh, yes; after his great dinners he used to tell the steward to let in the little fellows, and we boys of the immediate neighborhood, who were never far off on such occasions, crowded about the table and made quick work with the remaining cakes, nuts, and raisins."

"Washington had a habit of pacing up and down the large front room on the ground floor, in the early twilight with his hands behind him; and one evening a little boy, who had never seen him, in attempting to climb up to an open window to look in upon him, fell and hurt himself. Washington heard him cry, rung for a servant, and sent him to inquire about the accident—for, after all, he was very soft-hearted, at least toward children. The ervant came back and said: "The boy was rying to get a look at you, sir.' 'Bring him in,' said the General; and, when the boy came in, he patted him on the head and said: 'You wanted to see General Washington, did you? Well, I am General Washington.' But the little fellow shook his head and said: 'No, you are only just a man, I want to see the President."

"They say Washington laughed, and told the boy that he was the President, and a man for all that. Then he had the servant give the little fellow some nuts and cakes, and dismissed him."

I asked Mr. Gray if he remembered the Custiss children.

"Yes," he said, "I often saw them at the windows, or driving out with Mrs. Washington in her English coach."

They did not seem to have left a very humane impression on his memory. With their fine clothes and company manners, they must have seemed very strange, inaccessible, and unenviable little personages to all the happy, free, and easy children of the neighborhood.

"Do you remember Washington's levees, and Mrs. Washington's drawing-rooms?" I asked.

"Yes, I remember hearing about them. All the evening parties were over by 9 o'clock, and the President's house was dark and silent by 10. They were great affairs, but I was too young to know much about them. I attended his horse levees. I was very fond of visiting his stables, early in the morning, at the hour when he went always to inspect them. I liked to see him at the work, for he seemed to enjoy it himself. Like President Grant, he was a great lover of horses. I can almost think I see him now, come striding out of his house across the yard to his stables, booted, spurred, bareheaded and in his shirt-sleeves."

"Washington in his shirt-sleeves!"

"Yes, madam, but he was always Washington. The grooms stood aside, silent and respectful, while he examined every stall and manger, and regularly went over every horse—I mean, he passed over a portion of its coat his large, white hand, always looking to see if it was soiled, or if any loose hairs had come off on it. If so, the groom was reprimanded and ordered to do his work over. Generally, however, Washington would say: 'Very well. Now, John, get out Prescott and Jackson,' his white chargers. 'I'll be ready by the time you come round.'

"Did he ride at so early an hour?"

"Yes. Generally between 5 and 6 o'clock of a pleasant morning, he was off; and he almost always rode up to Point-no-Point, on the Delaware, a little above Richmond. He was a fine horseman, and being a long bodied man, looked grandly on horseback. It was a sight worth getting up early to see."

"These things were told of him, but I never heard a rough word from him, or saw his face, when it was not peaceful and pleasant."—Grace Greenwood, in Hearth and Home.

◆

Is all Animal Food Unhealthy?

By no manner of means. Still, there is no class of men that enjoys better health, or has a more vigorous body, than some who live wholly upon vegetable substances. This is especially the case with the Greek carriers or servants, who rarely taste meat. The late Dr. William A. Alcott, during the last thirty years of his life, informed the writer that he had not eaten any animal food, and yet enjoyed better health than he did before he adopted this course. His son, now professor in one of our colleges, whom I saw two years since, while preaching at Cohasset, told me he had never tasted meat; yet he was full grown, strong and healthy. Those of us who can look back thirty or forty years, will recollect how much was then said about living on a vegetable diet. I have now in my library two volumes of Sylvester Graham's Lectures against the use of meat, and poor Graham died of chagrin, because his book, which he verily thought would become a text-book in all our colleges, fell "still-born" from the press.

Still, some animal food taken in connection with vegetables, is better than a diet composed entirely of vegetables. We give this as our medical and personal experience. Many patients have improved upon more animal food than they had formerly taken, and personally we have eaten such food every day, and have not been sick for thirty years. We are aware that all this is no demonstrative proof of the truth of our general remark, because these patients might have been of that class whose cases peculiarly required meats, and we might not have been sick if we had lived on a vegetable diet. Still, in our opinion, some animal is preferable for health, to a diet wholly vegetable.

At the same time, we have not a doubt but more animal food is taken generally than rebounds to the health of the community.

We are frank, also, to acknowledge that a diet wholly vegetable would be preferable to one wholly animal.

No person should live on animal food alone, because it destroys his energy, renders him dull and heavy, produces too much blood, augments its circulation, and over-stimulates the system. It lays a foundation for inflamatory diseases, tends to produce a putrid diathesis, and to bring on putrid diseases. It also has a bad effect upon the mind, producing peevishness, fretfulness, and an irritable disposition.

Something, too, depends upon temperaments and constitutions. Some can bear the stimulus of meat much better than others. It is very much in this respect, as it used to be with the effects of taking alcoholic spirit,—we say used to be designedly, because in this day of "extending liquors," all are poisoned. Some could drink for years, and live and enjoy health; a great ancestor of ours lived to ninety, and always seemed better when he had liquor, while others could endure it but a short time. So it is with meats; some are much benefitted when they eat them freely, others are injured by a very free use of them.

Then, the use of animal food depends much upon climate. In a cold climate it is much more necessary than a tropical one. An East India-man would give more for an orange, or an apple, than for a pound of flesh, while an Icelander would not touch the apple or the orange, but eat his sea-blubber, and drink his train oil, with the utmost zest. The colder the climate, and the more oxygen we breathe, the more animal food we require, just as the more fuel is consumed, the more fire we have. This accounts for the fact that we require more food and more meat in winter than we do in summer. The lungs consume more oxygen, and the furnace of digestion must have more fuel to support the flame.—Good Health.

◆

To God's KIngdom.

King Frederick, of Prussia, was once traveling in his dominions, and passed through a pretty village, where he was to remain an hour or two.

The villagers were delighted to see their king, and had done their utmost in preparing to receive him. The school-children strewed flowers before him, and one litle girl had a pretty verse of "welcome" to say to him. He listened most kindly, and told her she had performed her task well, which pleased her very much. He then turned to the schoolmaster, and said he would like to ask the classes a few questions, and examine them in what they knew. Now, there happened to be a large dish of oranges on the table close by. The king took up one of these, saying, "To what kingdom does this belong, children?"

"To the vegetable kingdom," replied one of the little girls.

"And to what kingdom this?" continued he, as he took from his pocket a gold coin.

"To the mineral kingdom," she answered.

"And to what kingdom do I belong, then, my child?" inquired he, expecting, of course, that she would answer in right order, "To the animal kingdom." But she paused and colored very deeply, not knowing what to say. She feared that it would not sound respectful to the king that he belonged to the animal kingdom, and she puzzled her little brain for a reply.

Remembering the words in Genesis, where it says that "God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he him," she quickly looked up, and said, "To God's kingdom, sir."

The king stooped down and placed his hand upon her head. A tear stood in his eye. He was moved by her simple words. Solemnly and devoutly did he answer, "God grant that I may be counted worthy of that kingdom."

◆

Centralia has 349 school boys, and 495 school girls. Nearly three girls to two boys.

Michigan has 3,984,181 sheep; Indiana, 2,882,176; Illinois, 2,736,431; Iowa, 2,591,379. Total, 12,194,167.

From th Chicago Republican.

DEDICATION OF UNION PARK LODGE NO. 610.

Installation of Officers--Oration by C. C. Bonney, Esq.

Address by Grand Master Reynolds.

Last evening the splendid Masonic dedicatory services and the impressive installation ceremonies were performed at the new Union Park Lodge No. 610, A. F. and A. M., on Lake, near the corner of Wood street. The lodge was crowded to repletion by a brilliant audience of ladies and gentlemen, among the latter being several of the prominent brethren of the Fraternity of the city. The audience was so great that notwithstanding the commodious and ample accommodation of the lodge-room, which is 50x70 hundreds of people were crowded out into the hallway and ante-chambers, where they stood upon chairs and benches to catch a glimpse of the grand procession and ceremonies within. Many, however, went away unable to gain admission even into the ante-rooms.

Promptly at the appointed hour the Most Worshipful officers of the Grand Lodge formed in a procession, and, to the music of a good march played upon the organ, proceeded into the lodge-room. The following are the names of the officers of the Grand Lodge:

Harman G. Reynolds, G. M.; DeWitt C. Cregier, D. G. M.; G. H. Gibson, acting S. G. W.; G. W. Barnard, acting J. G. W.; Reuben Cleveland, acting G. T.; Judge J. B. Bradwell, acting G. S.; C. C. Bonney, acting G. O.; Rev. J. McLeish, acting G. C.; Wiley M. Egan, acting S. G. D.; John C. W. Bailey, acting J. G. D.; L A. Hamblin, acting G. S. S.; W. H. Dobson, acting G. J. S.; David A. Cashman, Marshal.

Under the guidance of the Grand Marshal the procession entered the lodge, and thrice circumambulated the lodge room, after which the Public Grand Honors were given, and a quartette choir, consisting of Miss Mays, soprano; Jos. E. Lynn, tenor; T. J. H. Bourke, bass; and L. Colton, alto; with John McCurdy presiding at the organ, performed appropriate music with fine effect. At the conclusion of usual dedicatory ceremonies, which were interspersed with some excellent music, the charter of the lodge was read, containing the names of the charter members, which are as follows: G. P. Randall, J. T. Holt, W. U. Thwing, J R. Wilkins, G. A. Philbrick, A. V. Pitts J. W. Hatfield C. Bung, W. H. Bryan, H. Love, I. Frazee, D. Adams, C. L. Linsley, A. White, R. W. Wilson, A. Chandler, J. Clark, J. D Bishop, P. Adolphus, J. S. Hunt, S. W. Adkinson, H. P. Galpin, E F. Colby, B. C. McClure, D. Barclay, J. J. Smith, E. P. Haven, C. H. Slack, B. Maxwell, A. Blair, A D. O'Neill, J. A. Hutchins, J. A. Havitt, A. Williams, A. D. Anguera, M. D. Verey, J. G. Carpenter, J. Livingston, J. L. Pitts, W M Pratt, J. B. Bradwell, W. Williams, A. H. Held, D. Escher, P. T. Burtis, J. W. Fay, W. R. White, J. S. McFarland, A. H. Foskett, B. G. Gill, F. H. Sleeper, L. Bingham, A. L. Hale, A. B. Kellogg, B. F. Clark, W. Coe, G. C. Randall, A. W. Chambers, G. F. Leetz, A. Isabell, W. A. Knox, C. F. Decatur, R. D. Hildreth.

The impressive installation ceremonies then succeeded, and the following gentlemen were installed officers of the lodge by G. M. Reynolds: Gurden P. Randall, W. M.; John T. Holt, S. W.; W. U. Thwing, J. W.; G. A. Philbrick, Sec.; J R Wilkins, T.; J. J. Havill, S. D; C. F. Decatur, J. D.; A. White, S. S.; A. T. O'Neill, J. S.; W. H. Coe, Tyler.

The Grand Master then introduced the Grand Orator, C. C. Bonney, and referred pleasantly to their early intercourse and long friendship.

Mr. Bonney then addressed the audience, saying that the time, the place, and the occasion of the assembly, were alike promotive of pleasing and peaceful reflections. The magnificent month of October now covered the glad earth with autumnal glory, and the breezes that bore the breath of bounteous harvests, were musical with echoes of domestic life. Referring to the progress, prosperity and beauty of the neighborhood in which the lodge has been established, the eloquent orator said that the beautiful Union Park—a garden among gardens—appropriately furnished a name for the lodge itself. At such a time and to such a place they came together to dedicate a lodge of Freemasons to the Holy spirit of St. John—to him whose baptism of the Messiah was authenticated by the visible opening of the heavens, the descent of the Holy Spirit and the voice of the Supreme Architect himself.

Referring to the harmony of the degrees and ceremonies of a Masonic lodge, he compared it to the wonderful temple erected by King Solomon at Jerusalem. It was the object of all the labors of the lodge, to build up the principles and affections of the Mason's mind into a temple within whose sanctum sanctorum the Spirit of the Divine Law Giver should abide, beloved as a Comforter and adored as a King In the dedication, the elements of consecration— corn, wine and oil—represented the grand orders of natural, spiritual, and celestial life, in which Freemasons sought advancement. The Great Light of Masonry was the Holy Bible. In its supreme effulgence, the masters of the mystic art taught brotherly love to all mankind; the relief of the distressed, wheresoever its cry for help might be heard, fidelity in all things to the truth, temperance in the exercise of all the faculties; fortitude in the endurance of such trials as the Divine Providence might deem it best for man to bear; prudence in the performance of all undertakings, justice in the fulfilment of duties to fellow-men, and faith in God as the Creator and Supreme Governor of human affairs. Masonry was thus the friend and supporter of the holy religion—not its opponent on the one hand, nor on the other the usurper of its place.

The speaker continued at some length to eulogize Freemasonry as the patron of the arts and sciences, and referred eloquently to the grand structures whose architectural beauty grace so many lands. It inculcated the study of grammar, rhetoric and logic, mathematics, music, and astronomy, by its teachings and its literature.

But it might be said by some that Freemasonry did not realize all the excellencies that he had declared. Let it even be granted; yet the army must be organized before it could make campaigns, and must be equipped before it could fight. The past of Masonry in this country has been the era of organization—the future should, with the blessings of the Supreme Grand Master, be the age of Masonic achievement. He referred to the rapid increase of Masonic bodies and places of assembly. The very members of the lodge they had met to dedicate proved this. More than 600 Masonic bodies in the State of Illinois alone, indicated the extent and power of the Institution in the New World. A power that inspired the respect of the community, the friendship of the Church, the favor of the State, the gratitude of the weak and the defenceless, and the love of the prosperous and happy. A body of men so great in strength that they would constitute a mighty army, had been enrolled in the ranks of Masonry. If the work they should accomplish was at all commensurate with the means employed, the achievements of the Fraternity would not fail to be imposing both in magnitude and character.

But this was emphatically an age of utility, and "what was the use of it?" was the question that would be asked. Freemasonry could not, if it would, escape this question; and, indeed, it was the transcendant question of the union, for the end of all creation was use.

It was not enough that Freemasonry was an ancient and beautiful system, and that its displays were gratifying to the cultivated taste—that it promoted morals and encouraged benevolence—for these things were but a preparation and a beginning of the grand work which fraternity should accomplish in this new age. It should now go forward until it should become the acknowledged Chief Almoner of learning and charity everywhere.

As a patron of the arts, the lodge should provide its members and their families with annual courses of lectures on the leading topics of the age. The art of music might, too, be invoked in vocal and instrumental concerts to refresh the mind after the labors of the day. Thus the lodge-room would be made attractive and beneficial not only to the member, but to his family, and his absence in the evenings at lodge work would be cheered by kindly recollections and anticipations of evening of literary and scientific recreation.

Referring to the example of benevolence which the Fraternity should set, he said it should be a guide and counseller to the State in its charitable undertakings, and thus aid in perfecting the systems of public charity and plans for the relief of that long suffering and patient want, which shrinks from notoriety and feels the blush of sacred shame at the offer of alms. In great cities like Chicago they could be particularly useful, for the absolute freedom of Masonry from all theological controversies and political complications, commend it in the strongest manner to the confidence and favor of the public authorities. The moral power of such an institution must necessarily be extremely great. Its mere good will would be a potent influence, its desire an efficient agency, and its determination almost a guarantee of success.

In conclusion, the orator appealed eloquently to the officers of the lodge to make themselves worthy of their grand trust, and drew a beautiful illustration from an allusion to their name, urging them to surround their lodge with a garden of moral beauty, in which all the charms of the pleasant place from which they took their name should find a counterpart. They should beautify it with a green pasture of peace, the delightful verdure of faith, and make around it the flower-bordering paths of righteousness, and to protect it with the thorn-guarded edges of the law, so that no wolves should break in. And thus they would secure the blessings of the poor and the approval of their Grand Master in Heaven.

At the conclusion of the eloquent oration, the immense assemblage, led by the choir and accompanied by the organ, united in singing to the air of "America" a grand Masonic hymn

H. G. Reynolds, Esq., the Grand Master of the State, then congratulated the brethren of Union Park Lodge, and the whole community in the neighborhood, at the successful establishment of their lodge, and the auspicious opening. In a brief speech he referred feelingly to his active connection with the Masonic Fraternity, for over twenty years, and announced his purposes of resigning from further active service at the end of the year. This was the last time perhaps he should ever participate in his official capacity at such a solemn ceremony, and he felt sad as he said farewell to his brethren. He continued at some length, with considerable emotion, to speak of his past connection with the body, and closed by congratulating the W. M., G. P. Randall, and the other officers upon the responsible positions to which they had been raised by their brethren, and the lodge upon the possession of such efficient officers.

After the benediction by the acting G C. Rev. J. McLiesh, and an announcement from the W. M. that the regular meetings of the lodge would be on Saturday, and the special meetings on Tuesday evenings, the assemblage was dismissed; but a large number remained in social intercourse, and enjoyed the hospitality of the lodge until a late hour.

DESCRIPTION OF THE HALL.

The Hall of Union Park Lodge is in the third story of the O'Neil Block, on Lake, near Wood street, and, together with its ante-rooms, covers an area of 44 by 80 feet.

The lodge-room proper is 29½ by 50 feet, and 18 feet high. It is a plainly finished room as regards form, but is rendered exceedingly neat and tasteful in appearance by having both walls and ceiling papered in panels in a variety of pleasing forms and colors representing fresco.

This room has a rich and beautiful carpet of body Brussells, and a complete set of furniture made to order and of appropriate design. It it well lighted through windows by day, and by gas brackets on the walls by night. Beside the main hall, there is a large Tyler's room, a banquet hall and kitchen, store rooms, a fine parlor, two committee rooms, a preparation room, water room, with water closets, etc., all exceedingly well arranged for convenience, and appropriately furnished.

The entire expense of the furnishing was about $5500, and while other lodges may have expended more money in architectural display and gaudy trappings, there are few if any in this jurisdiction that will compare, either for neatness and perfect adaptation to the uses for which it was designed. The building was built by O'Neil Bros., one of which, A. D. O'Neil, is a charter member of the lodge, and is leased by them to the lodge for a term of years, thereby securing a permanent home for its members until it shall be able to build for itself. The lodge is in an exceeding prosperous condition, and commences its work under a charter with sixty-four members.

A Masonic Incident.

When the rebellion raged the fiercest, and men's hearts were hardened to the wretchedness and misery of war's doings, it happened, one night, that on board a Sound steamer, from New York to Boston, were about fifty soldiers, hungry and wounded, on furlough, hoping to reach home to die, or recover from injuries received on the battle fields of Virginia and Mississippi. The night was cold, dark and stormy. The soldiers were on the deck where freight and baggage were piled, but without beds for shelter excepting their blankets. A distinguished Mason, a brother whose kind heart and generous disposition are well known, was on the boat, and saw the condition of the men who had been fighting for the Union. He went to the captain of the steamer, and asked if the soldiers could not be allowed sleeping berths.

"No," was the answer. "The government will not pay transportation of that kind."

"Will you furnish the men berths if they are paid for?" asked our Masonic brother.

"Yes, gladly," was the reply.

"Do you know me?" asked the man.

"Yes, quite well. You are General William Sutton, of Salem."

"Right. Now let the soldiers have berths, and I'll pay for the same."

"They shall have them, General."

"But first give the men a good supper, and I'll also pay for that."

"They shall have it."

"And please do not mention my name in connection with the matter;" for the General is as modest as he is good.

The captain promised, but we fear he did not keep his word, for after General Sutton had seen that the grateful soldiers were well fed, and then comfortably berthed, he retired to his state-room to sleep. But sleep was out of the question. The passengers heard of the General's kind acts, and they assembled near his room, and were determined to have him out; and they succeeded in so doing. The captain introduced the General, and they shook hands with him, and a jolly night they made of it; and this we have called a Masonic incident, and we wish we had more of them to record. The above, however, is only one act of goodness in the eventful life of General William Sutton, of Salem, who will be much surprised when he sees it in print.—Flag of our Union.

NOTE.—We may add that Gen. Sutton is one of the old and true Masons of Massachusetts, and has long been on our books as a subscriber to THE TROWEL.—ED. TROWEL.

MASONIC CELEBRATION.

Laying of the Corner-Stone of the New Temple in the West Division.

Procession and Ceremonies—The Banquet—Description of the Temple.

The corner-stone of a Masonic temple, to be erected on the corner of Halsted and Randolph streets, by the West Chicago Masonic Benevolent Association, was laid on the 12th inst., with ceremonies more than usually impressive. The occasion served to draw out a large number of the Masonic Fraternity, among whom were many of the highest in the State.

THE PROCESSION.

The members of the lodges participating assembled in front of their respective halls, and marched to La Salle street, the point of rendezvous. The procession comprised nearly 1,000 men, and was very imposing. Its course was marked by the gathering of thousands of spectators. The following was the order of march:

FIRST DIVISION.

Escort of Police, under Capt. Miller and Sergt. Moore,—36 men, 12 from each precinct.
Aid, L. B. Shepherd. Aid, Chas. E. Chase.
Chief Marshal, Geo. Gardner.
Captain of the Guard, L. K. Osburn.
Great Union Band.
Apollo Commandery of Knights Templar—100 men.
Joliet Commandery Knights Templar—32 men.
Assistant Marshal, Col. L. Shaffner.
Three Tylers, with Drawn Swords.
Two Stewards.
Master Masons.
Stewards.
Junior Deacons.
Senior Deacons.
Secretaries.
Treasurers.
Junior Wardens.
Senior Wardens.
Worshipful Masters.
Royal Arch Masons.

SECOND DIVISION.

Aid. Assistant Marshal, H. F. Milligan. Aid.
Captain of the Guard.
Great Western Light Guard Band.
Chicago Commandery of Knights Templar—84 men.
R. W. and Eminent Sir W. M. Egan, President West Chicago Masonic Benevolent Association.
Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Illinois, A. F. & A. M.—27 men in the following order:
Grand Marshal, R. W. J. W. Clyde.
Grand Tyler, with drawn sword, W. John P. Ferns.
Grand Pursuivant, W. G. Chas. Smith.
Grand Stewards, with White Rods, W. Wm. Lapham, W. L. A. Hamblen.
Principal Architect, with Square, Level, and Plumb, W. G. P. Randall.
Grand Secretary, R. W. Edwin Powell.
Grand Treasurer, R. W., Henry C. Ranney.
Master of a Lodge, with the Holy Bible, Square and Compasses, supported by two Stewards.
Grand Orator, M. W. H. P. H. Bromwell.
Grand Chaplain, R. W. and Rev. J. McLeish.
Five Orders of Architecture.
Grand Junior Warden, with Silver Vessel of Oil, R. W. C. H. Brenan.
Grand Senior Warden, with Silver Vessel of Wine, R. W. A. R. Atkins.
Deputy Grand Master, with Silver Vessel of Corn, R. W. D. C. Cregier.
Master of the Oldest Lodge, carrying Book of Constitutions, W. Geo. H. Gibson.
Grand Junior Deacon, with Black Rod. W. Chas. E. Hyde.
Grand Senior Deacon, with Black Rod. W. Geo. McElwain.
Hon. Harman G. Reynolds.
M. W. Grand Master.
Grand Standard Bearer, W. Theodore Merense.
Grand Sword Bearer, with Drawn Sword, W. D. A. Cashman.
Two Stewards, with White Rods.

ROUTE OF PROCESSION.

The procession formed on La Salle street, the right resting on Madison, and at 11 A. M. marched south on La Salle to Van Buren, east to Wabash avenue, north to Lake street, west to Desplaines, south to Washington, west to Sangamon, south to Adams, east to Halsted, and north to the temple, where the column halted in open order, and the Grand Lodge passed through to the platform, when the ceremonies took place.

CEREMONIES.

The ceremonies were under the direction of the Grand Master.

Having arrived at the site of the ceremonies, the Grand Chaplain, Rev. J. McLeish, offered an appropriate and fervent prayer, after which there was music by the band.

The Right Worshipful Grand Treasurer, H. C. Ranney, next read a list of the contents of the box to be placed in the corner-stone. This list was as follows:

List of directors and officers of the West Chicago Masonic Benevolent Association, as follows:

Directors—W. M. Egan, George H. Gibson, G. P. Randall, A. M. Bennett, R. Cleveland, L. B. Shephard, Clark Lipe, Jos. Harris, M. W. Powell, George F. Letz, H. A. Pundt, N. W. Huntley, A. G. Lull. Officers—W. M. Egan, president; Clark Lipe, vice president; George H. Gibson, Treasurer; Charles E. Chase, Secretary. Building Committee—W. M. Egan Joseph Harris, M. W. Powell. Architect—Gurdon P. Randall. The constitution and by-laws of the association; photographs of distinguished Masons; copies of the Times, Tribune, Republican, and Staats Zeitung, for Oct. 12, and the Journal and Post for Oct. 11. The Grand Lodge proceedings for 1868; also, proceedings of Grand Chapter and Grand Commandery for same year; the by-laws of Cleveland and Hesperia Lodges; Washington Chapter, and Apollo and Chicago Commanderies; United States coins—Silver dollar, half dollar, quarter dollar, ten cents, five cents, nickel five cents, three cents; copper two cents, and cents of different dates; a five-franc piece, taken from the steamer Erie, which was burned off Silver Creek, Lake Erie, in 1844, and was raised in 1854, accompanied with a manuscript history, by George O. Vail, of Buffalo, N. Y.; a specimen of the different denominations of fractional currency for 1869; photographs of the building as it will appear when completed; Edwards' Chicago City Directory for 1869; a copy of each of the Voice of Masonry, Masonic Trowel, and The Mystic Star, published in Chibago; list of officers of the Grand Lodge of Illinois; copy of the seal of the association; a check "good for one ride" on the horse-cars of the North Chicago City railway; statement and business papers of banks, insurance companies, and the Western Telegraph Company; various papers and private contributions, and a full list of the contents of the box.

The box was then sealed and placed in its receptacle in the stone, and while the band played an air, the corner-stone itself was lowered into position.

The usual Masonic ceremonies were then performed, concluding with the pouring out of the elements of consecration, the corn, oil, and wine.

The stone upon its eastern face has the following inscription:

West Division
Masonic Benevolent Association,
A. L., 5869, A. D. 1869.

MR. BROMWELL'S ORATION.

The band then played America, after which the oration was delivered by H. P. H. Bromwell, of Coles county, Ill. The oration occupied more than an hour in its delivery, and was replete with matters of deep interest. He elaborately described the places of love, wisdom, and use, or charity, faith, and works, and explained many of the symbols of Masonry, as well as the mystic number three which pervades it from the first steps of the Order to the crowning degrees.

A benediction was offered by the Chaplain, and the various Masonic bodies re-formed and marched to Martine's hall, on the corner of Jefferson and Randolph streets, where the Chicago Commandery offered their hospitalities in the form of an excellent dinner to their brothers from abroad. The banquet was prepared and served in the best style of the art by Mr. William Palmer, proprietor of the Union house. The guests consisted of the following:

Apollo Commandery, No. 1, 101 strong, under command of Benj. F. Patrick, pro tem.; Joliet Commandery, No. 4, 40 in number, under command of C. E. Munger; Muskegon Commandery, No. 6, under command of C. T. Hills.

The stewards of the banquet, to whom is due the most perfect success of the entertainment, were as follows: W. W. Kennedy, the general superintendent of police; E. H. Plummer, L. B. Shephard, John Whitley, J. C. Fuller, A. H. Buck, A. J. Close, W. H. Woodbury, and J. G. Smeal.

The officers of the Chicago Commandery who had the general charge of the banquet were as follows: A. M. Bennett, E. C.; George F. Letz, Generalissimo; Charles MacFarland, C. G.; John C. Fuller, Prelate; E. C. Hubbard, S. W.; A. G. Lull, J. W.; George H. Gibson, Treas.; John Whitley, Rec.; T. W. Steele, Standard Bearer; James Irons, Sword Bearer; W. H. Woodbury, Warder; Silas Peabody Crumb, Captain of the Guards.

THE TEMPLE.

The Times has already published a description of this fine building. The following is a condensed statement of its character and dimensions:

The cost of the building will be about $60,000. It will have a frontage of 77 feet on Randolph street, and 100 feet on Halsted. The main floor will have two steps above the side-walk, and the clear height of the stories are to be as follows: Basement, 8 feet; first story, 14 feet; second story, 13 feet; third story, 14 feet; fourth story, 14 feet.

On the first floor there will be one store 100 feet deep, one 22 feet deep, one 51 feet deep, and also a fine banking-room 28x60 feet, at the principal corner. The entrance and stairway to the upper floors will be at the Halsted street front. The second story will be divided into offices, and the third and fourth floors into apartments for the use of the Masonic societies, for which they have been specially arranged. In the third story will be the reception-room, 24x24 feet; the council room, 20x32; the armory, 18x58, and the lodge-room, 40x58, with various smaller rooms and offices.

In the fourth story are the banqueting hall, 24x60, with ample kitchen and closets, and the drill-room, 29x58. The lodge-room will have an ornamental ceiling 25 feet from the floor, a recess which will be supplied with an organ, and the room will be thoroughly ventilated.

The walls of the superstructure will be faced with pressed brick, with Illinois marble trimmings, and will be surmounted with iron cornices.

The North Missouri Railway.

The North Missouri Railway merits the distinction, in view of its recent extensions and multiplying connections, which we once conferred on it, in terming it The Northwestern of Missouri. It is to St. Louis what the Chicago & Northwestern is to Chicago; while, by reason of Chicago extensions and connections referred to in another article, and others to which reference will be made in this, its relations to Chicago commerce are scarcely less direct and important.

We were, happily, among those composing the recent Kansas City Excursion party, who returned to Chicago via the North Missouri Railway; and we were by no means alone in being impressed at every stage of the journey with the admirable character and excellent management of the road, and with the populousness and high cultivation of the uninterrupted fertile and beautiful country through which it runs.

The road has been in operation to Macon, on the Hannibal & St. Joseph, 168 miles, for about ten years. This portion, from Moberly north, is known as the Northern Division, and is running to Bloomfield, Iowa, 255 miles from St. Louis; and will be completed this fall 20 miles farther to its terminus, Ottumwa, connecting there with the Des Moines Valley Railway, of whose rapid progress towards Fort Dodge (intersecting the Chicago & Northwestern and Dubuque & Sioux City Railways) we have recently informed our readers. The importance of these connections with the Upper Missouri and Upper Mississippi railway "systems" may be inferred from the fact that they shorten the distance by railway between St. Louis and St. Paul more than 100 miles.

Its Western Division, over which the excursion party passed to Kansas City—Moberly to Kansas City, 126 miles—has been in operation since January 1st, and gives nine miles the shortest route between St. Louis and Kansas City.

A branch is in operation from Centralia to Columbia, 22 miles, of considerable prospective importance, on account of its proposed extensions to the Missouri River, perhaps at Jefferson City.

The road crosses the Missouri River at St. Charles, 20 miles above St. Louis, the cars being at present transferred by boat. A railway bridge is, however, building at this point, by a company composed partly of citizens of St. Louis, partly of officers of the North Missouri management, of which C. Shaler Smith is the Engineer, and Wm. McPherson, Managing Director of the N. M. R., is President. This structure—a high bridge, of iron, on stone piers resting on rock—will be completed in twelve months.

The entire length of the company's lines is 422 miles, running through sixteen counties, rich in alternating wealth of prairie and forest and river. Its extension opened to investment a region only less rich in unimproved lands than improved farms, where values must appreciate very rapidly during the coming two or three years, in which the immigration movement promises to be unprecedented in magnitude and character.—Chicago Railway Review.

"In Memoriam--Isadore."

Under this title comes to us the subjoined touching tribute to the departed daughter of brother Albert Pike. Our readers will remember that we alluded to her death in our last issue. The sentiments of this prose poem, as well as those contained in Lowell's well-known lines—"After the Burial"—will commend themselves to every parent whom the "Insatiate Archer" has bereft of an inmate of the home nest. It reads thus:

"The words that follow were written for others who sorrowed, long before she fell asleep.

"As we grow older we live more with the dead, and less with the living; for we make few new friendships, and are more impatient of human infirmities. We miss those who have gone away from us into the country beyond the river, more and more, far from becoming used or reconciled to our loss; especially if, dying at a distance, they lived for us until we heard the sad story long after the mourners had wept over their graves.

"O for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!"

is a cry that comes often wailingly up out of the depths of every human heart.

"How the dead preach unto us peace, patience and resignation!—and truly most of us can count our dead during the last few years, and there are vacant seats in many of our households. "Fecit Deus," say the Scriptures, "hominem similem umbræ post solis occasum;" "God has made man like unto a shadow after the setting of the sun." Life, as we look regretfully back over the past, seems to us too short for dissensions and disputes; and in the presence of the thronging memories of the dead our hearts are sanctified and softened towards the living.

"As those who are dear to us become fewer, we the more love and value those whom God still leaves to us; and although the loss of each, as one by one they vanish, leaves a blank void that is never to be filled. But their memories remain, and after a time our sorrows are calmed and softened by the inexpressible tenderness of our fond affection. After all, they only go away to a distance from us; and by by we shall follow them. The stars set, but they rise again.

"When, in the sad autumn of our lives, we meditate upon the toils and trials, the disappointments and reverses of life, the faces of the dead that were dear to us look lovingly and pityingly upon us from the shadowy corners of our room, and we live over and over again the happier hours of the days that are no more, and feel how true it is that our hopes and projects are like a shadow upon the water, that fleeth away, and presently is no more.

"There are many, many hearts that will sadly respond to the following poem, for it is a cry of that agony which is wrenched from the heart that trembles and palpitates, when one dearly loved, idolized, worshipped, has gone away from it into the thick darkness, out of which, in response to all our prayers and longings, there comes back no voice from the departed. It is a cry like that which a broken limb extracts from the body utterly overcome by the pain too great to be borne.

"Aye, she is immortal, and therefore so much the farther beyond the reach of the soul of him to whom she was all the world: "Immortal away from me!"—most sad and despairing of all the cries of the human heart. Of more worth to the human heart "the thin, worn locket, with its beauty of deathless hair," "the little shoe in the corner," the old letter full of love, the least thing that her use or touch had hallowed, than all "the splendid conjectures" of the spirit. That "narrow ridge in the graveyard!" what a value it has to us, beyond that of all the assurances of faith and the promises of religion!

"There can be no communion with the spirits of the dead. From that unknown realm into which they pass when they go away from us, no voice nor even a whisper ever comes back to us. That fruitful source of insanity, modern spiritualism, juggles with us when it pretends to bring us messages from the dead. If any reach us from a world not cognizable by the senses, they come from malicious demons who personate the loved ones that we have lost, in order to delude, deceive and madden us. If the spirit of one beloved could return to us, what need of a medium? It would come to our bedside in the still, solemn watches of the night when we pray and implore it, with tears and sobs, and in the agony of our grief, to come to us, and to say that it forgives us for all that we may have done amiss, in consideration of what it now knows to have been our great love. It is this life that is made dark by the setting of the star we adored; and the rays of that star never shine upon us from the other world.

"ALBERT PIKE.

"June 7, 1869."

After the Burial.

BY J. R. LOWELL.

Yes, faith is a goodly anchor;—
When skies are sweet as a psalm,
At the bows it lolls so stalwart
In bluff, broad shouldered calm.

And when over the breakers to leeward
The tattered surges are hurled,
It may keep our heads to the tempest,
With its grip on the base of the world.

In the breaking gulfs of sorrow,
When the helpless feet stretch out,
And find in the deep of darkness
No footing so solid as doubt.

Then better one spar of memory,
One broken plank of the past,
That our human hearts may cling to,
Though hopeless of shore at last!

To the spirit its splendid conjectures,
To the flesh its sweet despair,
Its tears o'er the thin-worn locket,
With its beauty of deathless hair!

Immortal? I feel it and know it;
Who doubts it of such as she?
But that is the pang's very secret—
Immortal away from me!

There's a narrow ridge in the graveyard,
Would scarce stay a child in its race;
But to me and my thought it is wider
Than the star-sown vague of space.

Your logic, my friend is perfect,
Your morals most drearily true,
But the earth that stops my darling's ears
Makes mine insentiate too.

Console if you will; I can bear it;
'Tis a well-meant alms of breath;
But not all the preaching since Adam
Has made death other than death.

Communion in spirit! Forgive me,
But I who am earthly and weak
Would give all my incomes from dreamland
For her rose-lief palm on my cheek!

That little shoe in the corner,
So worn and wrinkled and brown—
Its motionless hollow confutes you,
And argues your wisdom down.

—Evergreen.

Ill. Bro. L. W. Shepherd contributes the following selection:

"She died in beauty like the dew,
From flowers exhaled away;
She died in beauty like a star
Lost on the brow of day."

Moneys Received for Masonic Trowel,

FROM SEPTEMBER 5TH, TO OCT. 20TH, INCLUSIVE.

$1.25 each.—D. H. Brush, J. H. Burgesser, M. S. Bowman, Wm. Billington, C. A. Bradshaw, John Bowman, John Bennet, H. Baugh, J. O. Cunningham, H. Cadwell, C. Capp, C. Cohen, M. Calton, E. K. Conklin, M. D. Chamberlin, C. M. Carpenter, G. A. Camp, T. G. Davis, H. D. Dement, H. W. Dyer, H. W. Duncan, J. S. Duncan, S. J. Dodds, M. E. Eurer, G. W. Evans, J. T. Evans, W. W. Evans, J. A. Florentine, I. B. Geer, J. Gormley, A. Haas, O. H. Hazerd, H. J. Hodges, J. Haggart, T. W. Hay, H. W. Hubbard, J. W. Hall, P. Holman, W. H. House, A. W. Hitchcock, J. S. Kosier, S. M. King, Dr. A. N. Lodge, A. B. Mathews, A. A. Marcy, A. B. Maples, J. F. Moore, R. W. Morse, C. Miner, J. T. Moulton, W. McKay, J. T. Nash, C. Nenninger, H. M. Powel, A. Pierce, Dr. E Powel, M. J. Potts, J. S. Patchin, J. Ryan, E. R. Ranney, W. H. Reid, W. G. Swan, J. Sutton, J. Smith, G. M. Snyder, J. Sherer, J. Stewart, E. F. Swift, J. C. Smith, N. S. Turner, A. Trome, J. Trimble, J. Thompson, C. F. Tenny, H. R. Torrey, T. Van Hogue, S. O. Vaughan, O. A. Wright, L. P. Wood, M. Winchell, O. Wilson.

Other sums.—A. F. Ashley, $2.50; W. Bennie, 50c.; J. W. Banker, $3.75; L. Bullard, $15.00; C. L. Bartlett, $12.50; H. Bradshaw, $3.75; J. Cook, $6 25; M. A. Cline, $3.75; S. Corsett, $5.00; J H. Drummond, $1.50; A. R. Davison, $7.50; W. G. Eaton, $5.00; J. P. Ferns, $8.75; H. C. Greeley, $2.50; J. H. Hough, $1.50; R. Heyford, $5 00; G. N. Houghton, $18.75; M. S. Hillyer, $21.00; H. S. Jacob, $3.75; J. A. Mason, $3.75; W. Melvin, $3.75; A. H. Moody, $1.50; L. Martin, $2.50; E. R. McDowell, $3.75; Dr. A. J. Patchen, $2.50; D. Rowe, $1.15; J. H. Roberts, $10.00; J. A. Robinson, $11.00; C. P. Swift, $2.50; T. J. Stevens, $2.50; N. Spicer, $2.50; J. S. Waters, $1.00; J. Whitley, $2.50; J. Walker, $2.50.

MASONIC FURNISHING HOUSE,

PARSON & CO.,

816 N. Fourth St., and 819 Broadway,

ST. LOUIS, MO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Masonic Clothing of all Kinds,

Jewels, Working-Tools, Lodge Furniture, Charts, Seal Presses, Books, Blanks, Diplomas, Swords, Banners, Baker's Low-Twelve Bell, and everything wanted for

LODGE, CHAPTER, OR COMMANDERY

Being the oldest Regalia Manufacturers in the United States (having had thirty years' experience), we feel confident of giving perfect satisfaction. Regalia for all secret and benevolent societies, and FLAGS and BANNERS of all kinds made to order on short notice.

Price lists furnished on application. Gold and Silver Trimmings, wholesale and retail. 9v8-1y*

ST. CLAIR NURSERIES,

SUMMERFIELD - - ILLINOIS,

ESTABLISHED IN 1856.

I offer to Planters and Dealers a large and well grown stock of

FRUIT AND ORNAMENTAL TREES,

Hardy Native Grape Vines,

EVERGREENS, ROSES, SHRUBS, &C.

The stock offered for sale the coming fall, owing to a favorable season, has made a fine growth, and will, I think, give satisfaction to all

The attention of Dealers is specially invited to my unusually fine stock of STANDARD APPLES, consisting of all the leading

WESTERN & SOUTHWESTERN SORTS.

Wholesale and Retail Catalogues, now out, and forwarded to all applicants.

7v8-3t E. F. BABCOCK.

TRANSCENDANT CRABS.

St. Clair Nurseries, Summerfield, Ill.

I have a large stock of Transcendant, Large Red, Yellow, and Cherry Crabs, low headed and well branched, 4 to 6 feet high, $20. per 100, $180. per 1000. No charge for packing.

7v8 E. F. BABCOCK.

R. ORENDORFF,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Business Solicited in the State and Federal Courts.

4v8-6m*

VIRGIL PRICE

MANUFACTURING COMPANY,

Manufacturers of all kinds of

Masonic Materials, Swords,

BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.,

No. 144 GREENE STREET,

NEW YORK.

Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.

Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords. 1v8-1y

PRINTING.—We are prepared to do Printing of all kinds, from the largest Poster to the smallest Circulars, Cards, and Hand-ills.

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, NOVEMBER 15, 1869. NO. 11.

Religion of Masonry.

BY WM. ROUNSEVILLE.

I have often thought, when reflecting upon the beauties and principles of the Masonic ritual, that our writers have been too prone to confess that Masonry had no religion; or that it was not a system of religion, and have frequently been astonished at the flippancy with which this admission is made. I take the ground that Masonry, to a certain extent, is a religious institution. In saying this, I mean no disrespect to any sect or denomination. I only claim for our Institution what I believe to be its due. It deals in no recondite theories—it does not descend or ascend, if the expression be better liked, to theologic details. As a universal institution, it must only deal with a universal religion. That religion it possesses and teaches, and this being conceded, I do not clearly see how we can reconcile it to our truthfulness to say that Masonry is not a religious system.

No system of religion which would prevail over all the earth, and seek its members from the good of all nations, could afford to introduce all the details of a full and perfect system, unless it was content to await the slow process of conversion. The Christian system may eventually become universal, but it is not yet arrived at that condition, after a lapse of eighteen hundred years. When it shall see that fact accomplished is yet in the unknown future. Masonry, a few centuries older, has already permeated the populations of the whole civilized, and a considerable portion of the barbarous and savage world. Scarcely a country or clime where bands of the brotherhood are not established, and the mystic sign recognized. And this universality it owes in a great degree to the simplicity of its theological code; to the fact that that code is recognized as truth by every people under Heaven.

What is the theory of religion in Masonry? Simply this; there is a great First Cause; the Ruler, Upholder, and Preserver of men, who rewards virtue and who punishes vice. From the initial step in Masonry when the neophyte, on the threshold of that Sanctum Sanctorum which he is about to enter, professes his belief and trust in God, to the ineffable degrees in which he most solemnly pledges himself to reverence and adore that Holy Name. Masonry recognizes these fundamental principles of universal theology.

What nation or people exists, or ever has existed, that did not recognize this fundamental truth that God lives and reigns? It is the foundation of every religion that has ever prevailed on the face of the earth. It is the very corner-stone of Freemasonry. The barbarous tribes of men, on whom the light of civilization has feebly shone, worship God. The enlightened Christian places his hopes of a beatific future on the faithfulness of the Supreme Father. The most debased believe in God, and the most virtuous and enlightened people on earth admit their creed thus far to be founded in truth.

Masonry, recognizing this universal sentiment, congregates the good of all ages and climes in a fraternal association; establishing laws and usages, all founded upon and in harmony with this great central fact. It need not enter the arena of theological discussion, because it holds no theological opinion that is not conceded and believed everywhere. While it holds to the universal theology, it does not seek to become embroiled in, or to indoctrinate its members into, any of the disputed theories of this or any former age. Based upon the indisputable, it seeks no aids that come from debateable ground. Few and simple are its doctrines; short and comprehensive is its creed.

Now with what shadow of consistency can it be claimed that Masonry has no religion? That it is not a religion? That it has nothing to do with religion? That it is something entirely independent of, and aside from religion? It may be admitted that it is not any one of the multitudinous forms of the Christian religion; that it is not the Mahometan form of religion; that it is not the Jewish religion. But all of these agree that its foundation is true. When the Christian prays to "Our Father who art in Heaven;" when the Mussulman declares his faith that "There is no God but God;" or when the Hebrew repeats the sublime declaration of his inspired prophet, "Hear, Oh Israel, the Lord thy God is our God," each reiterates the creed of the Masonic Institution, and each enunciates a doctrine that is the foundation of the Fraternity. That is the theology—the religion of Masonry, in a theoretic sense. And who will dare say that a better foundation can be laid?

In this doctrine all Masons, as all mankind, agree. Beyond this there is a diversity of opinion. Of the details of the various and conflicting theories of the sects, our Order takes no cognizance. If the enlightenment of a member lead him to embrace the Hebrew faith or the Christian doctrine, the lodge does not interfere. He has perfect liberty to follow the light within him, so long as he does not cut loose from the anchor of truth concerning God. Such is our theoretic or theologic religion. And we again aver that we do not see how any well informed Mason can say that it is not a religious institution. For the future let us be more consistent.

But it may be that when it is asserted that Masonry is not a religious institution, it is meant that is is not practically so, though we can hardly believe that such an egregious mistake could be made. Let us examine this side of the question. It happens that we have a brief, comprehensive and clear definition of religion. It is one that ought to be written in letters of living light over the entrance of every temple of worship. "Pure religion and undefiled, before God and the Father, is this: To visit the widow and the fatherless in affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

We claim that by this rule, delivered by a Christian apostle, the Institution of Masonry has a claim to be considered in the light of a religious organization. It is not pleasant to herald our own good deeds. Rather let the [illegible], and those who have been the subject of our benefactions, sound our praises. But it may not be amiss to state what is required of our members, by the rules of the lodge. These will show the design and tendency of the organization, better perhaps, than any statement of charities bestowed we might be able to give.

The first lesson that is taught the initiate after his confession of faith in the existence of God, is the equality of men and their rights as the creations of the same Father. "We meet upon the level." Consequently there is no room for invidious distinctions among brethren. And one step further we may go; there is no room for pride and superciliousness in a true Mason's heart. It can not crop out in his behaviour, because he is taught at every step that his fellows have rights co-equal with his own; that he is one of a vast family, a unit in the great sun of humanity, and all are dependent on God equally, and always dependent on Him for all they enjoy, and for all for which they hope in the future. Those were not Masons who exclaimed in old times: "At a distance! At a distance! oh, ye profane! Come not near, for I am holier than thou!" Such a spirit never dwelt in the bosom of a true Mason since King Solomon established the first lodge in the unfinished sanctum sanctorum.

But the lessons of the lodge are also fraternal. They teach the brotherhood of man. As God is God over all, so all men are His children. All men are brothers. Hence arises the duty to do good to all men as the opportunity may be presented. That is a requirement of Masonry. Especially is it enjoined, that the weak and defenceless, and those who have none to plead their cause, shall be assisted and cherished. "Our neighbor is the suffering man," wherever he may reside. Where there is want to relieve, the Mason has a mission, whether it be a member who has taken the vows of Masonry upon him or not. Where there are woes to assuage or the mourner to comfort, there is the good Mason's work.

It may be said, as it has often been said ere this, that Masons are taught to be kind to their brethren, but that there their obligations cease. Nothing could be more false. Masons have long since adopted the rule laid down by one of the followers of the Founder of the Christian system: "Do good unto all men as you have opportunity; but especially unto the household of faith." We hold that to be an excellent rule. The members of a family take care of the welfare of each other. Next they assist their relatives and friends. If they have means beyond this, those of more remote connections have claims upon them. So with Masons. If our bounty is expended, or our time all consumed when our more close connections are made comfortable, we cannot go further. We must do good "especially to the household of faith," and to the remainder as we have "opportunity." Does any one complain that we follow the direction contained in this noble Christian precept? They ought not!

But we must be allowed to assert our claim to general benevolence, and by this we mean that which finds for its objects those suffering ones who have never taken the Masonic vows upon them. Masons, guided by the above quoted maxim, do give generous aid to their own members when they come to want. This is conceded. Our experience of twenty years as an active member of the Order enable us to say that aside from what Masons appropriate to their own members, they give more for the benefit of those not connected with the Institution, than any equal number of men who have not become affiliated with such an institution. No subscription for benevolent purposes but has the names of Masons appended, and very frequently they constitute a large portion and very frequently a majority of the whole.

And this fact does not happen to be such. There is no chance about the matter. It is the result of a regular system of lodge training and drill. Our members are taught in every Masonic lesson, in every Masonic charge, to follow that beautiful injunction we have written above: "To do good to all men as opportunity offers," and hence they do it. They can hardly do otherwise without doing violence to their firmest convictions of right and duty. It is no wonder that others not so taught, should fail to do their duty as well.

After this hasty examination of the question whether Masonry is or is not a religious Institution, can we arrive at any other than an affirmative conclusion? Adopting the only universal sentiment that has ever existed, the being of God, as its theology, enforcing this great first fact in its lectures, its charges, and its lessons, through every degree from first to last; illustrating its importance by symbols mysterious, yet striking, and never losing the opportunity that may be presented to impress upon the minds of the initiates that this is the corner-stone upon which the whole superstructure of Masonry rests. We feel it to be a slander, as well upon religious truth as upon the association that embraces it, to say that it is not a religious society.

Or, if we seek to apply a practical test in the decision of the question, and adopt the definition of religion which the Christian apostle has given, the claim to be a religious Order is still stronger. It uses a method of judging established by the Saviour of men: "By their fruits ye shall know them." We are willing to be judged by our works, and though we have done nothing of which to boast, yet we have done something in the way of smoothing the asperities of the pathway of human life, and added somewhat to the sum of human happiness.

Permit us to say in conclusion, whatever may be said in relation to this matter, we establish our Order upon the same foundation with that adopted by all religions in the world; in our practical injunctions we adopt the sentiments of the most humane, most benevolent, most loving system that has ever beem promulgated among men. If this is not religion, theoretical and practical, what is it?

The Science of Freemasonry.

BY LEON HYNEMAN.

The world is moving, planets and universes in infinite space traversing their orbits in obedience to and harmony with divine laws, laws immutable, unchangeable, and eternal as the Supreme Architect and Unfolder of universal being. All things move and unfold according to established laws of infinite wisdom. In the order of divine unfoldment the cosmos human was the aim and end of all preceding efforts. In him exist all the elements and characteristic manifestations of nature's infinite varied phenomena. Infinite wisdom illustrates day after day the mode and manner of divine unfoldment, how worlds were and are formed. There is a unity in the unfoldment of all life and being, and the intelligent observer, by patient, logical investigation, can arrive at a clear comprehension of the modus operandi of original unfoldment of universal nature Worlds are formed as a grain of sand, as the mineral, vegetable, animal, and human are formed. The law of unfoldment is ever the same. Elemental principles form the basis of all materiality; they are the material of all substance, of all formations. Worlds are formed of nebulous matter and nebulous matter of elemental principles. The universe of space is God's laboratory in which all formations are outwrought through combinations of elemental principles, in obedience to uniform, universal, and eternal laws. Nature can not transcend, can not range or move out of the sphere of immutable laws which bind it in all of its unfoldments.

As all things, all elements, forces, and mundane vital powers exist in the cosmos human, being a universe within himself, he is the fulfillment of all phenomenal unfoldment, and all things, all formations are but parts of him. The cosmos human is formed in the likeness of God because he has capacities to unfold, to improve, and enduringly impress his efforts upon time's ægis. He is a co-worker with God in the unfoldment of nature's forces and laws, making them subservient to his uses, improving and beautifying and making a paradise of wild, desolate, unproductive places. He has capacities and powers of indefinite unfoldment. His powers are manifest in all of his activities, degenerating and deteriorating in his abuses, improving and elevating in his useful aims. His intelligent culture causes the earth to be more productive and its productions more perfect, the domesticated animals more useful and beautiful.

It would seem that the originators of Freemasonry had a knowledge of man's capacities and powers to improve the physical structure of animals as well as of flowers, fruits, and plants, and therefore the object of the physical qualifications was to apply that knowledge to the improvement of the physical organism of the human being. It is certain that the more perfect the human organism, the more harmonious the temperament, the more evenly-balanced the mental structure, the more readily can the intelligent conscious principle unfold. The soul has not the power to manifest through a weakly, diseased, misformed organism as through a healthy and harmoniously-proportioned body. It is evident, therefore, that the physical qualifications of Freemasonry have a higher aim than is generally known. And if we examine the so-called cardinal virtues and their bearing upon the conjugal relation, we will have a still higher conception of the aims of Freemasonry. The conjugal relation is the highest, the holiest of all relations, and involves more than science, philosophy, or creeds of religion have ever taught.

We use the term unfold, because we believe in the infinite wisdom of the Supreme Being, and that the divine government is founded upon eternal, immutable, and unchangeable laws. The term create has a significance attached to it that Divine Being as will contravenes his laws, which would prove that God did not possess infinite wisdom. Therefore the translation of the Genesis of Moses that "God created the heavens and the earth" is incorrect, or Moses may have been at fault in not comprehending truly the modus operandi of the Divine Originator in progressively unfolding the material universe. Science has conclusively established that phenomenal manifestations are in progressive order; that ages must have passed before the earth's crust and atmospheric and other conditions fitted it for the production of vegetable and animal life. It is not logical to believe in instantaneous formations, because God is a being of law and order, as all of his works demonstrate. The term create and its derivatives imply, and the unphilosophic mind believes, that God created the material universe and its phenomena perfect at the command of His word in the space of six days, which would be in contravention of laws He has established. And there is attached to such belief the absurdities that God created all things out of nothing, and created them perfect in their originals. Science and every day observation conclusively prove the error of such beliefs. Unfold and its derivatives express the mode of manifestation of Divine Being, and the universal principle of progression in harmony with eternal and immutable laws.

That God is Infinite Wisdom, is Omniscient, is Omnipresent none but the materialist will deny, yet to believe that God has or does contravene established, universal, and uniform laws, is to deny him the fore-mentioned attributes. In the government of God, as illustrated in his works, it would be impossible for Him to set aside a law eternal and universal, as all God's laws are. The laws of nature are all divine laws; hence nature is limited and bound to strict conformity to laws, and can not get outside of them. It is a law of Divine Being that all things unfold from a germ, and that the germ contains all that it unfolds. The germ is in the seed, the seed germinates, and, according to the conditions, will be the plant or tree, and that it is with the animal and human being. In order that the human shall be hale and sound and perfect as a man ought to be, the pre-natal conditions should conform to the laws of nature, the laws of God. The inebriate, the libertine, those who have vitiated and weakened the vital powers of nature, can not give birth to a hale and sound organism. Nor can the dishonest, the deceitful, the liar stamp upon his offspring the principles of truth, candor, and justice. Thus it will be perceived that the originators of Freemasonry had a higher, nay the highest object in view that children of the Good Father possibly could have, in working and living in harmony with infinite wisdom, in the improvement and elevation of the race, in establishing the qualifications of Freemasonry. And it must not be believed that they had only in view the culture of the physical man. Those whose interior perceptions were unfolded to attain a knowledge of those sublime truths, bringing man nearer and closer to God by subjecting their animal nature, and living in harmony with divine laws, must have had an intelligent conception of their relations to the Supreme Being and of a future life. Divested of all theologic dogmas and tenets, interpolated by priests and churchmen, the teachings of Freemasonry properly comprehended, demonstrate a continuous conscious existence of the soul throughout eternity. There is no such thing as death in the common understanding of the term. Life is evermore. It is the vitalizing element in all forms, the vital principle of the spirit within. Forms change, decay, and resolve into elemental principles to build up other forms. But the spirit or soul does not decay nor loses its consciousness. The teachings of Freemasonry comprehend in the area of its science the truths of divine revelation, illustrated by the Divine Being in the government of the universe.

Communication.

For the Trowel.

By Mrs. W. H. Tucker.

The dedication of a Masonic Hall together with the installation of its officers, forms a very imposing and beautiful service, and is thrillingly interesting to those who witness it for the first time.

There is a feeling of solemnity blended with admiration, rendering it alike grand and solemn. The very faith and fearlessness with which it is conducted gives it character, and lends an additional strength to the impressive and mystic rite.

Lincoln Park Lodge, having obtained a charter from the Grand Lodge at its last communication in Springfield, set apart the evening of October the 15th, for consecrating its Hall and installation of its officers under the new charter. The ceremonies, both of the dedication of the lodge and installation of officers, were conducted by Right Worshipful D. C. Cregier, D. G. M. Rev. C. G. Truesdell, F. J. Burdett, organist, and D. A. Cashman, Grand Marshal.

While the rich music from the organ pealed forth a joyful anthem, a loud knock at the outer door announces the Grand Lodge. The Grand Marshal admits them. Slowly these worthy officers wend their way towards the holy altar, bearing and wearing the royal ensignia of office, where the Worshipful Master awaits their coming. Gathering around the sacred fane, they kneel for divine benediction, and the sweet strains of music chanted Amen.

The officers of the lodge were then duly installed, each separately, with all the solemnity of the oath and ritual. H. E. Hamilton, W. M. This is deeply impressive; a Master's obligations to the lodge, are so strongly set forth, that, like the compass to the mariner, he can not fail in his true course. L. A. Beebe, S. W.; J. A. Smith, J. W.; Wm. Whitney, Treasurer; Wm. R. Walpole, Secretary; A. McNally, S. D.; Chas. McBean, J. D.; M. Buschoak, S. S.; Joseph Brooks, J. S.; John Henry, Tyler.

United in spirit and soul in this one religion; brave even to death, forgetting the world, and all therein while these duties are being celebrated, woven together by a net-work of brotherly love which the Great Grand Master, in fashioning this "superb design," gave only to the Craft.

The erection of a Temple most glorious to behold, perfect in all its proportions, complete in all its appointments, whose corner-stone is brotherly love, frescoed by artists whose symbolic designs breathes only of charity, and whose pallet and paints produce but one word, fraternal. In the erecting and adornment of these magnificent temples, the beautiful faith of the brothers is duly being recognized. A law which binds man to man, by ties which he could not break if he would, and would not if he could. His Masonic obligations come not under any other head. It is not he—the man—it is his vows. Masonry can never, never be contaminated. It is the fountain of truth, purity, and love. Upon its holy altar burns a light whose beacon fire is eternal, and which will live in hearts long after its possessor sleeps in silence. A man may be the most depraved criminal, lost to every sentiment of honor, or virtue, and yet the Masonic principles in his heart are as pure and as good as when the Craft assembled on the tesselated pavement of King Solomon's sanctum-sanctorum, and received the corn, wine, and oil from the jeweled censors of the grand lodge, gathered there to consecrate this magnificent temple to which the proudest nations of earth still do homage. There is a sublime glory, approaching only the unknown temple in Masonry. Its very mystery invests it with a reverential awe and charm. Its modesty and yet royalty impresses even its enemies with courteous respect. It lives a silent sea of goodness, its benefits come to the sick, the poor, and the suffering, like precious dew to the flower, water to the dying traveler of the desert, or light to the blind. The sacred rites of Masonry are known and acknowledged, by every nation on the globe. Who can but revere an organization having a law which no party can contaminate; no tyrant overthrow, nor sovereign amend.

We know not what they are, nor do we desire to, we do know that virtue and goodness marks their footfalls. Brotherly love guides their walks through all the vicissitudes of this life, and we worship the principles which underlie this law. In reverential awe we bow our heads to God and His works. The spirit of majesty which envelops the Masonic brothers, inspires a like emotion. Its profound and beautiful teachings, its labor of charity and love, and its divine precepts awaken only a sentiment of holiness and truth. Having the moral character to hold in secret its laws and creeds, shut out from the idle gaze of the world, it moves through the starry firmament, a brilliant meteor whose orbit, distance, and diameter, the most learned and scientific astronomer knows as little as the sleeping infant cradled on its mother's knee. And yet with all this mystery its refulgent light sheds beauty and brightness on the whole planet. I rejoice in my heart and the world's great heart that God ever gave to man the glory of Freemasonry with all its ancient rites and privileges which are to-day shining like the noonday sun refulgent in beauty, wisdom, and power. Its temples are erected on every hill-side, the spires of which are watch-towers for the weary, and its brothers are counted as legion, waving their gorgeous banners of blue and gold, surmounted with the glorious inscription, Brotherly Love, Truth, Hope, and Charity.

There is to me a deep feeling of reverence, amounting to adoration, whenever I stand in the presence-chamber, beneath the dome of a consecrated Masonic lodge. I gaze upon these mystic symbols in wonder, admiration, and delight—involuntarily I feel the tears stealing down my cheeks—tears of joy, reverence, and awe. I worship, without a desire to fathom, the impenetrable mystery. The beautiful surroundings and mystic figures on the wall speak volumes in an unknown tongue. None the less sweet is the music of the singer, because she warbles forth the notes she learned under an Italian sky. The floor we tread is consecrated, holy ground, a place where all men for a time are good, because I believe, from my soul, the workings of a Masonic lodge are but the pure and holy teachings of Christ, and not one bad precept or principle is ever taught in a lodge. The world is the recipient of its goodness and virtue, which is scattered broad-cast; like the fragrance of a flower, we feel and know its sweetness, yet can not see its perfume. Therein lies its great strength, power, and beauty.

Who would desire to know the mystery of the great Eternal? We only know the truest, the holiest, and the best men God ever placed on earth, have drank of the mystic vine, and wear the jeweled symbol; lifted from the ground a forlorn and forsaken brother. How dare we question its virtue? As well might we presume to question that Christ loved Lazarus, and yet he died.

Open the eyes of the skeptic; let him walk in this beautiful temple of faith, and love gather him in from the outside world. Let him drink of the fountain, whose crystal waters flow down the declivities of time, a joy forever.

Listening to the beautiful lessons taught him by the Craft, "his soul must become bright by being brightly shown upon." And fill his heart only with the sweet flowers which blossom in Masonic gardens.

The whole science is beautiful and impressive beyond conception. The rich strains of music from the organ, and the deep-toned voices accompanying it, filled the little temple with a flood of melody. And then they gathered together the mystic jewels, and the softened radiance from the chandelier threw its mellowed light upon the pure white symbols, while a smile of ineffable happiness rested upon the serene features of the brothers. Thus the Great Grand Master of the Mighty Temple will gather in his jewels; the souls of all true Masons.

Others may not feel as I do, but since my earliest remembrance there has been a charm, a perfect fascination, about Masonic faith. I have been the recipient of its virtues, and while reason retains her throne I shall bless God there is an organization of Freemasons. And it is to me one of Heaven's mysteries how a woman could ever speak ill of Masonry, when its proudest temple is her footstool. Its holy altar a shrine where she is devoutly worshipped. The brightest jewel in a knight's helmet is his care for woman. She has but to give the grand hailing sign of distress and an army springs to her rescue. No clime or tongue but acknowledges her call. It matters not if the was cradled in Arabia and the fates threw her in Chicago, wherever a Mason breathes, she has a protector.

While listening to the eloquent address of the eminent divine, my soul drank in the sentiments of the brother, and my heart cried Holy! Holy! Holy!

Transactions Examined.

Grand Lodge of Delaware.—The annual meeting was held at Wilmington, June 28. Edwin J. Horner, G. M. Seventeen lodges represented.

A Master suspended a member without trial; reversed by the Grand Master.

The Grand Master also decided that an E. A. was not entitled to visit any lodge but his own; that a vote on advancement must be unanimous; that the Master of a lodge has a right to refuse to entertain a petition; that any appointed officer can demit; all good law.

In 1867 the Grand Lodge adopted the following resolution:

> Resolved, That Lodges under this jurisdiction are positively prohibited from initiating, passing, or raising, or admitting to membership, or the right of visitation, any negro, mulatto, or colored person of the United States.

The same was expunged.

E. J. Horner, of Wilmington, was elected G. M.; J. H. P. Shipley, of Seaford, Deputy; J. P. Allmond, of Wilmington, Grand Secretary.

Twenty-four lodges; 930 members. Washington Lodge has 142 members; Lafayette 140; both at Wilmington.

Grand Lodge of Masssachusetts.—At the quarterly meeting, June 9, W. Bro. Charles L. Woodbury submitted a learned and exhaustive report in regard to the clandestine body calling itself the Supreme Council of Louisiana, and claiming jurisdiction over the first three degrees. By this report it is conclusively shown that neither the Southern or Northern Supreme Councils in the United States have exercised or claimed jurisdiction over those degrees, but have ever conceded and maintained the sovereignty of the several grand lodges, and have commenced only where grand lodge jurisdiction ends.

The recognition of the clandestine Louisiana body by the Grand Orient of France, after having recognized the acts of said Northern and Southern Supreme Councils is declared to be open to the reproach of discourtesy, a disregard of equity, and an attempt to precipitate distraction among Freemasons in the United States.

Some portions of the report are so distinct and important that we cannot withhold them from our readers:

> A Grand Lodge is the exclusive power, because it represents all the Freemasons of the rite in the territory, and as to foreign powers it is the resident Masonic authority with whom Masonic relations should be arranged. Hence, in our view, the recognition of a Grand Lodge admits the entire dogmatic and administrative authority of those resident Masons over the rite in their territory.
>
> The Freemasons of the United States, animated by a like spirit, will repel a dictation made in disregard of their Masonic right of self-government. Their grand lodges, the exclusive possessors of Symbolic Freemasonry in the several States, and responsible for its purity and prosperity, will protect their authority with dignity and energy. Their Masonic brethren made at home shall be of the selection of the Freemasons themselves, and their intercourse with the Masonic authorities of other nations shall be confined to those who, acting on the divine rule of doing to others as we would others shall do to us, will refrain from disturbing our internal organization and from fomenting political agitation in our calm asylums.
>
> The position of American Freemasonry in relation to political questions may not be as well known in Europe as it is here. The lodges of Freemasonry here have no connection with the party politics of the country, and claim no authority over the political views of their members. All parties and all religions known here are largely represented in our lodges without any known predominance or distinction. By our Masonic law neither politics nor creeds can be discussed in a lodge, and consequently men of all ideas meet upon a common level around our altars, suppress for the time the fanaticism of their political and religious ideas, commune in fraternity and part in peace, well pleased that we enjoy one place and one phase of our lives where and when with our judgments unclouded by political asperities, we may recognize each other's virtues and merits and cultivate a fraternity of love whose enlightened creed acknowledges the individuality of every Mason's political and religious creed and respects his free exercise thereof.
>
> Your committee have only incidentally referred to the legal authorities of the Scotch Rite;—they have looked on this matter in its relations towards the symbolic Freemasonry of the United States. This has been intruded upon, and the Grand Orient offers open encouragement to those who disregard its landmarks, tendering its fellowship in their efforts to subvert Masonic self-government in the United States. Such a violation of amity and Masonic obligation is grave. Every Masonic authority here will oppose a route on which the first step is to destroy the authority of our grand lodges, the next to ruin our harmony, and the last, like the Grand Orients, may be on the wreck of our own freedom. This Grand Lodge clings to ancient Masonry, and relying on the Supreme Architect of the Universe, will not fail to perform its duties of fraternity to those lawfully entitled thereto, and will sustain the Grand Lodge of Louisiana while she adheres to those principles of symbolic Freemasonry which were first planted in America in the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge, and have since spread their kindly influences through the Continent.

Grand Lodge of Connecticut.—Annual meeting at New Haven, May 12. William Storer, G. M. Ninety-three lodges represented. Amasa E. Cobb, of Norwich, was elected G. M.; Asa Smith, of Norwalk, Deputy; J. K. Wheeler, of Hartford, Grand Secretary.

Union Lodge at New London has 654 members, and Hiram Lodge at New Haven, 639. Six lodges, including the two last named, have 3,309 members. Average, 551. Too many, decidedly. Entire membership, 12,874.

The Grand Secretary presented the report on correspondence. The notice of Illinois was good.

Grand Chapter of Virginia—Met Dec. 17, 1868, at Richmond. Edward H. Lane, G. H. P. Twenty-six chapters represented.

A beautiful and costly mark was presented to Grand Secretary, John Dove, M. D. Edward H. Lane, Louisa Court-House, was elected G. H. P.; John Dove, M. D., Richmond, Grand Secretary.

Grand Chapter of Nebraska.—Met at Bellvue, June 23. D. H. Wheeler, Deputy, presiding. Three chapters were represented.

A charter was granted for a new chapter at Brownsville, and a petition was presented for a dispensation at Falls City, which was referred to the G. H. P.

There are chapters at Omaha, Nebraska City, Plattsmouth and Brownsville. Omaha has 92 members.

Daniel N. Wheeler, Plattsmouth, was elected G. H. P.; E. A. Allen, Omaha, Deputy; J. N. Wise, Plattsmouth, Grand Secretary.

Grand Council of Maine—Met at Portland, May 5. Josiah H. Drummond, G. M. Eleven Councils represented. The Grand Master alleged that he was unable to visit the Councils, and insisted that some one be elected Grand Master who would visit.

A name is sometimes more potent in one, than a visit from another.

By a table made up by Comp. Drummond in his report on correspondence it appears that Ohio has 47 councils, and 1,896 members; Tennessee, 42 councils, and 1,687 members; Connecticut, 20 councils, and 1,645 members; New York, 26 councils and 1,487 members; Pennsylvania, 37 councils, and 1,425 members; and Illinois, 39 councils and 1,319 members.

Gordon R Garden was elected G. M., and Ira Berry Grand Recorder, both of Portland.

The Grand Council of New Bruswick, was held at St. John, Aug. 12, 1868. Robert Marshall was elected G. M., and D. R. Monroe, of Portland, Grand Recorder.

The Grand Council of Vermont—Met at Burlington June 10. Edward S. Dana, G. M. Ten councils represented.

The following notice of T. I. Comp. Gamaliel Washburn, is a tribute well deserved:

> Gamaliel Washburn, Past Grand Master of this Grand Council was born in 1803. He removed from Plainfield to Montpelier about thirty years ago, and resided there from that time until his death, which took place on the 30th of December, 1868, from a cessation of the digestive powers. He was buried from Bethany church, on the 2d of January, 1869, with distinguished Masonic honors, by the Grand Lodge of Vermont, Brother Benjamin H. Dewey, Deputy Grand Master, presiding. Companion Washburn received the blue lodge degrees in Aurora Lodge at Montpelier, in 1826. He was initiated on the 19th July, passed to the middle chamber on the 14th of August, and raised to the third degree on the 11th day of September of that year. He was exalted to the sublime degree of the Royal Arch on the 30th of October, 1827. He received the degrees of Royal and Select Master in Burlington Council No. 5, in January 1852, and was knighted at Burlington Commandery in January, 1854. At Windsor, in August, 1856, he was anointed in the order of High Priesthood. He was elected the first Master of Aurora Lodge in 1851, under its new charter, and served seven successive years; many years he was High Priest of King Solomon's Chapter. was Junior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge one year; Senior Grand Warden six years; and was chosen Deputy Grand Master in 1860 and 1861, and after the death of our lamented and gifted Grand Master Tucker in 1861, was acting Grand Master, and presided over the Grand Lodge in January 1862. Having served as prelate in Burlington Commandery, he was successively chosen Senior Grand Warden, Grand Gen'o, Deputy Grand Commander, and Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Vermont, holding the highest position in 1861 and 1862. In 1855-6-7-8, he was chosen M. P. Grand Master of this Grand Council, and in 1863 and 1864 was elected Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter, having previously served five years as Grand Scribe, Grand King, and Deputy Grand High Priest. He was for many years Grand Lecturer in the Grand Chapter and Grand Council, and held the last-named office, and that of the first officer in Montpelier Council, No. 4, at the time of his death.
>
> Few men have been so long and continuously honored, and few have deserved it more. With a heart full of genial sunshine and sympathy for his fellows, his love for Masonry and his companions made him a zealous, faithful, and earnest workman, and his labors for the interests of the Craft will long be remembered and cherished; while the fraternal kindness which won his way to all our hearts, will endear his memory as long as the acacia shall grow green over his grave. The last of the four first grand officers who organized this Grand Council in 1854, the marble shaft which consecrates his last resting place upon the hill side, near which nestles his adopted village, shall not be more enduring than the gratitude and love of those with whom thus long he counselled and labored, and who now so deeply lament his loss and would strew his grave with flowers.

Edward S. Dana, Middlebury, was elected G. M.; John B. Hollenbeck, Burlington, Grand Recorder.

Grand Commandery of Vermont—Met at Burlington, June 8, 1869. Russell F. Taft, Grand Commander. Six commanderies represented. A large extract is taken from the address of P. Grand Commander V. L. Hurlbut.

Russell S. Taft, Burlington, was elected Grand Commander, and J. B. Hollenbeck, G. R.

Grand Bodies of Ohio.

The Grand Commandery of Ohio held its twenty-seventh annual conclave at Cleveland, October 16, ult. The following Sir Knights are the grand officers: Heman Ely, of Elyria, G. Com.; Thomas Sparrow, of Columbus, D. G. Com.; Oliver C. Davis, of Lancaster, G. Gen'o; Robert H. Lansing, of Chillicothe, G. C. Gen.; Lafayette Van Cleve, of Cincinnati, G. Prelate; Joseph M. Stuart, of Columbus, G. Sen. War.; David Atwater, of Massillon, G. J. War.; Peter Thatcher, of Cleveland, G. Treas.; John D. Caldwell, of Cincinnati, G. Recorder; Lucien

B. Curtis, of Mt. Vernon, G. Stand.-Bearer; D. K. Boyer, of Dayton, G. Sword-Bearer; Leander Burdick, of Toledo, G. Warder.

Seven commanderies were warranted.

The Grand Chapter of Ohio convoked at Cleveland, October 18, ult., it being its fifty-third convocation. The following companions were elected, and subsequently installed by M. E. Comp. John M. Parks, P. G. H. P.: C. C. Keefer, G. H. Priest; Joshua Riddle, D. G. H. Priest; F. A. Raedenstien, G. King; John A. Rettiz, G. Scribe; Flavious J. Phillips, G. Treas.; John D. Caldwell, G. Sec.

The Grand Council R. & S. M. of Ohio, met at Cleveland, October 18, last, in fortieth annual session. Officers: Joseph R Conrad, M. Puis. G. M.; Calvin Hallady, Puis. D. G. M.; H. Clay Lands, Ill. G. M.; Henry Theobald, P. C. of W.; Flavius J. Phillips, C. Treas.; John D. Caldwell, G. Recorder; Joseph L. Coleman, G. C. of G.

Grand Lodge of Kentucky.

On the 20th October ult., the Grand Lodge of Kentucky elected M. W. Bro. Charles Egerton Grand Master, and re-elected R. W. Breth. A. G. Hodges Grand Treasurer, and J. M. S. McCorkle Grand Secretary.

We have also a full copy of the address delivered at the opening of the annual communication by M. W. Bro. Elisha S. Fitch, on Monday, 18th ult. It is exceedingly lengthy, but nevertheless well written. His recommendations regarding the invasion of an American jurisdiction by the Grand Orient of France; his allusions to "anti-Masonic Conventions," and his remarks on the "Impolicy of Cheapening Masonry," we shall endeavor at an early date to transfer to our columns. Grand Chapter.—The following companions were elected officers of the Grand Chapter, October 20th ult.: M. E. E. B. Jones, of Paducah, G. H. P.; M. E. Henry Bostwick, of Covington, D. G. H. P.; M. E. J. P. Rascoe, of Princeton, G. K.; M. E. Wm. Ryan, of Louisville, G. S.; Comp. P. Swigert, of Frankfort, S. Sec.; Comp. A. G. Hodges, of Frankfort, G. Treas.; Comp. A. H. M. Henderson, of Frankfort, G. C.; Comp. —— Robb, ——, G. C. H.; Comp. J. B. Blue, of Morganfield, G. C. G.; Comp. Joseph T. Davidson, of Louisville, G. Tyler.

Grand Oriente Lusitano, Portugal.

From the Boletim Official de Grande Oriente Lusitano for August last, we transfer the names and dignities of the following brethren of that grand body:

Conde de Paraty, 33°, Grand Master elected by universal suffrage for three years, 1868-1871; Thomaz de Villa Nova Ferrari, 33°, Grand Conservator; Francois Lallement, 33°, First Grand Vigilant; Dr. Joaquim Jose Alvez, C. R. X, Second Grand Vigilant; Dr. Joaquim Jose Maria de Oliveira Valle, C. R. X, Grand Orator; Joao Caetano de Almeida, 33°, Grand Secretary; Joaquim Gemano de Souza Neves, C. R. X, First Grand Expert; Joaquim Machado dos Reis, C. R. X., Second Grand Expert; Louis Caron, C. R. X., Grand Master of Ceremonies; Pedro Angelo Calleia, 33°, Grand Treasurer; Joao Victo Pereira, C. R. X., Grand Archivist; Jose Balbino da Silva Lisboa, C. R. X., Grand Architect; Joao da Costa Leal, C. R. X., Grand Inside Guard. The decoration worn by the officers and members of the Grand Orient is a triangle, with rays, on the sides of which are the words Patria, Dues, Liberdade; and it is worn with a pendant on the breast. It is termed the Triangle Etincelant, and is consecrated to the memory of the proto-martyr of Portuguese Masonry, the Illustrious Gomes Friere d'Andrade.

Grand Consistory S. P. R. S., 32d Degree, for Iowa.

The following are names of the officers, with their titles (some of the latter of which are entirely new to us) of the Grand Consistory of the State of Iowa, under the jurisdiction of the Southern Supreme Council, as found in Ill. Bro. Parvin's annals:

Ill. Bro. William Leffingwell, 32°, Muscatine, G. Com.-in-Chief; Pitkin C. Wright, DeWitt, G. Seneschal; Joshua W. Satterthwaite, Mount Pleasant, G. Preceptor; Louis Kirsey, Des Moines, G. Constable; John Given, Keokuk, G. Admiral; Harry H. Griffiths, Des Moines, G. Min. of State; C. S. Streeter, Davenport, G. Chancellor; Wm. C. Woodward, Burlington, G. Hospitaller and Almoner; Wm. B. Langridge, Muscatine, G. Register and K. of S.; William M. Wells, Oskaloosa, G. Treasurer.

National Masonic Jurisdiction.

An invariable adherence to social order, and a spirit of fraternal union are at once the bases, and the bulwarks of the whole Masonic structure. The first induces that respect and reverence for lawfully-constituted authority which we find inculcated so forcibly in the Ancient Charges of the Craft; and the second reminds us of our paramount duty to live in peace, harmony, and brotherly love with the household of the faithful. It will thus be seen that good order and good fellowship are landmarks which no true Mason ever willfully violates; and when we see them disregarded by men who profess to be brethren of the mystic tie, we may well look with suspicion upon their claims to be considered a part of the great Masonic family. Now, one of the most widely recognized principles of Masonic government is that which assigns to the grand lodge of every country or state the exclusive and indisputable right to rule over all lodges of Freemasons within the limits of its jurisdiction. It is a wise and salutary regulation, and one which has never militated in the slightest degree against the cosmopolitan character of symbolic Freemasonry. On the contrary, its non-obsevance arouses national jealousies and creates internecine strife between the members of a society whose proudest boast should be that they are citizens of the world.

Unfortunately, attempts have been made at different periods, and in more than one nation, to overthrow this landmark of the Craft, and the frequency of such instances of late, forces upon our mind the reluctant conviction that these nefarious efforts are part and parcel of an oganized conspiracy of the enemies of social order and true freedom against true and genuine Freemasonry. We have recently had to deplore the action of the Grand Orient of France with respect to a gross infringement of the jurisdictional rights of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana; we have been compelled to allude in terms of disapprobation to the establishment of a clandestine lodge in Jersey by the French Supreme Council; and we have felt it our duty to denounce the mal-practices of a spurious body located in London itself. It is with the last-named community that we now propose to deal, inasmuch as one of its members impugns the accuracy of the statements made in our article, entitled "Spurious Freemasonry, or the Rite of Memphis," which appeared in No. 4, on the 3d April, 1869. We are indebted to this gentleman for several documents relating to the subject, including the "General Statutes" of the "Order," and a supplement issued by the Chaine d'Union, which appears to be the official organ of the body, on the 15th May, 1867.

We have carefully perused the various statements before us, and are only confirmed in the opinions to which we have previously given expression; in point of fact, the illegality of the "rite" is more clearly established by the admissions made by its defenders in reply to the strictures on their conduct; and a brief resume of the case will render this conclusion apparent to every brother who acknowledges the right of national Masonic jurisdiction. Let us quote from page 5 of a paper styled "An Appeal to the Grand Lodge of England," in which the following passage occurs:

"The Grand Lodge of Philadelphes is a transformation of the Lodge "Les Sectateurs de Menes," founded in London in 1850, one year before the Coup d'Etat of December, by Masons, foreigners to England, but belonging to various Masonic Orders acknowledged in Europe. A charter was granted to them by a regular Masonic power, the lodges of which had continuous and amicable relations with those of the Grand Orient and those of the Supreme Counseil of France, a power which was therefore acknowledged. True, after the Coup d'Etat of December, 1851, the lodges of the Rite of Memphis were closed in France. But it must not be forgotten, they were not so by an order emanating from the Masonic power, but by an order from the administration (government). This step against the order of Memphis was therefore entirely extra-Masonic, and we will not stop here to discuss its lawfulness.

"An arbitrary act of the political power having closed the lodges of our rite in France, measures were to be taken to shield the archives of the order against another coup de main. Then was it, that the Lodge des Setateurs de Menes in London was selected to be the depository of them, and was legally constituted Grand Lodge of the Rite of Memphis, under the distinct name of the Grand Lodge des Philadelphes. From that period she has continued to work without interruption, and we can prove by our minute books that she has never deviated from a truly Masonic path.

"Now, here are the facts: The Grand Lodge of England has issued an interdiction against the Grand Lodge of Philadelphes; she has forbidden, under the most severe punishment, all the lodges acknowledging her supremacy, to have any connection whatever with the Philadelphes; and her official journal has published the excommunication pronounced by the supreme power. Not content with striking at us a direct blow within the limits of her jurisdiction, the Grand Lodge of England has denounced us to all the Masonic orders she is connected with in France, Germany, &c. These are the facts we complain of."

From their own showing, it is obvious, in the first place that the members of the "Rite of Memphis" started a lodge without any authoritative sanction whatever, and although it is afterwards alleged that they obtained a charter from a "regular Masonic power," it is equally clear that they never possessed authority to work as Masons from the English Grand Lodge, which alone can exercise the right to create lodges in England.

The name of the "regular Masonic power" is, however, discreetly withheld, and we can have no difficulty in fitly interpreting their reticence on this point, for could it be proved that any recognized Masonic power had thus invaded the jurisdiction of England, such an unwarrantable violation of international Masonic law would not only justly incur the condemnation of all regular Masons throughout the globe, but entail the penalty of Masonic ostracism on the offending body.—London Freemason.

Young Freemasons.

The distinguishing characteristic of the true Freemason's heart being, as the initiated are aware, charity, it is a little curious that the three benevolent institutions possessed by the Craft, and of which it is rightly proud, should not be more generally known to the brethren. We are aware that this statement will take many of our readers by surprise, and that, according to popular belief, the members of the Masonic body are active administrators of all connected with their Order. Nay, we shall be surprised if the Freemasons themselves are not disposed to question the allegation that their benevolent institutions are inadequately known to them, and if they do not point to their noble subscription lists, their successful annual festivals, their long and increasing array of vice-presidents and life governors to prove the erroneous character of the charge. But statistics are on our side, and if a return were furnished of the members who have paid personal visits to the Boys' School, the Girls' School, or the Institution for Aged Freemasons and their Widows, in any given year, the return would be surprisingly small. Deduct the several house committees and their friends, and the number of annual visitors would be reduced to an insignificant per centage of the Craft. But there is another and simpler way of proving how little the Masonic charities are known, so far, that is, as domestic arrangements and internal economy and discipline are concerned. Let the reader, be he Mason or non-Mason, ask those of the Order whom he may happen to meet, what they know of its charities, and ninety-nine times out of a hundred he will find that their personal inspection has never extended to all three institutions, and that in a majority of cases, they have seen none. This should not be. The men who give these unsatisfactory answers will most of them brighten up wonderfully when the question of subscription comes on, for they have given liberally, and will give liberally again; but they take it for granted that their money will be well applied, and only have not visited these places, because it has not been urged upon them with authority. We believe that no greater fillip could be given to the Order of which his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has just been made a Grand Master, than inducing every one admitted to visit the charities for themselves. There need be no appeal for subscriptions, nothing to swell the cost of initiation, nothing absolutely compulsory. But if the Masters and officers of metropolitan lodges thought fit, a visit to the Girls' School might easily be made a regular preliminary to passing from one degree to another. A visit to the Boys' School might be made at a corresponding stage, while the asylum for the aged could be inspected as a matter of course at a period it would be easy to define.

The Boys' School is a fair illustration of the difference between the interest which impel men to subscribe, and the interest which leads them to inspect. It lies at the very core of modern Freemasonry. It has been made the subject of more eloquent and heart-stirring appeals than any other institution connected with the Craft; it has been "pushed" energetically and unceasingly for years, and its building funds, its festivals, its foundation-stones, its needs, and its successes have been in the mind of every Freemason who has interested himself in the charities of the Order, or has even been a regular attendant at the banquets of his lodge. You could, in either case, never get away from the Boys' School for long. It would not be laid. Its wants were always asserting themselves, the benefits it was eager to confer were ever coming to the front, and the Masonic world has thus been called upon to "give, give," with a persistency and effect highly creditable to all concerned. Everybody knew what a certain pleasant presence at their meetings meant; and that the geniality, humor, and good fellowship of one guest would be subordinated before the evening was out to the purpose of procuring subscriptions or donations, of marking a brother down as steward, or of whipping up the languid, or stimulating the benevolent among that steward's friends. It has been recorded of Colonel Sockdolliger, the American blacksmith with a mania for whipping ministers, that he with ferocious playfulness, gave his victims their choice as to their mode of taking the licking he was bound to administer. "Some takes it fightin', some talkin', some lyin' down," said he aloud, as he oiled his terrible strap, and the sentiment has perhaps occurred to Freemasons, when, by an infallible and agreeable token, they saw they would have to open their hearts and pockets to the claims of the Boys' School before they went away. So far as our observation goes, they have always taken it talking, and taken it well, but as a rule have never seen the establishment they have heard so much of.

This is at Wood Green, a few minutes' railway ride from King's-cross, and is from first to last one of the most perfect institutions in the United Kingdom. The only possible plea against it might be that it is too sumptuous; that its domestic arrangements are on a scale which its pupils never saw before they came, and can never hope to taste after they leave; but to such objectors the committee have a ready, and as it seems to us, a sufficient answer. No boy is to feel himself in the slightest degree the recipient of charity. As high a standard of honor shall be upheld here as at the great public schools; and in all matters of detail our aim shall be to give our lads as good an education as possible, using the term in its largest sense. Thus considered, the play-hours and the home-life of the school are as important as its times of study; and the building and its rules and arrangements are eminently calculated to carry out the committee's views.

An institution for providing for and educating the sons of indigent Freemasons dates from 1798, but up to the year 1857 the boys were clothed and sent to schools in the neighborhood of their several homes. In the latter year twenty-five boys were taken into a temporary house at Wood-green, in 1859 the committee were able to accommodate seventy boys, and in 1862 the present magnificent erection was commenced. Its noble frontage strikes the visitor first. Standing well back from the road and on a spacious lawn, it looks what it really is, a collegiate institution upon which no money has been spared. Old trees wave their branches before it, and lend the dignity of age to what is essentially new, and the brilliant show of flowers in the garden of the head master's house close by, is relieved by the bright verdure of the close-cropped grass of the school. The garden, you learn, was attached to the old mansion which was purchased and pulled down to make way for the stately pile before you. This consists of a central block of three storys, with a large oriel and a high roof with dormer windows. To this are added two wings, one containing the dining-hall and the other the school-rooms and library. There are also handsome towers, a deep porch lit by a stained-glass window, and within the entrance a graceful group of statuary, the last two items being gifts.

But the boys themselves are the best ornaments, and after we have traversed corridors one hundred and forty feet long, noted the exquisite cleanliness, mathematical order, and extreme airiness of the bed-rooms, visited the kitchen, sculleries, and laundries, all fitted with the best mechanical contrivances for saving labor, we asked to be introduced to the young people for whom all these preparations are made. They are at cricket in one of the fields belonging to the school, for it should be mentioned that a farm is attached to it, and that it stands on land which has been advantageously bought, and by means of which its advantages of situation can be maintained intact. Some of them are, however, staying late in school, and as we pass by their desks to the library beyond, the names of the pupils who have distinguished themselves emblazoned on the wall (one of the prizes given is for having gained the good opinion of school-fellows, and is conferred by ballot, in which all take part); pass, too, the "largest black-board in Europe," with diagrams still left on it; the intelligence that a boy who had just left "obtained the star in four subjects out of five at the Cambridge middle-class examinations"—they all seem to speak of systematic and efficient instruction. Indeed, the course includes a sound English education, with Latin, French, and German mathematics in every shape, and drawing. There are four masters in all, besides a drill instructor and a teacher in drawing, and 104 boys are clothed, educated, and provided for from the age of six years and a half (the minimum) to fifteen. The building, which is really a model of what a school ought to be, has cost £40,000, and the domestic and educational expenditure on the boys amounts to £36 12s. 2¾d. per head, or including office expenses, rates and taxes, and extras, to £46 15s. 1d.

The infirmary, the swimming-bath, the gymnasium, the library well stocked with handsome books and philosophical instruments, and the right of entry to which is a kind of reward for discreet behaviour, all speak volumes as to the thoughtful care of the school committee. The infirmary, which was empty at our visit, is completely isolated—strong doors and separate staircases shutting it off effectually from the rest of the house. The plunge-bath holds 6,500 gallons of water, and is under cover, is lined with white tiles, and has separate dressing-closets; while the gymnasium is second only to the splendid one at King's-cross belonging to the German Society. We are introduced to the boys here. Clambering up poles, hanging by the hands from ladders and over well-stuffed and protective mattresses, vaulting on dumb horses, swinging on ropes, practicing a mild kind of trapeze, performing great feats with rings and handles, and all laughing and shouting at once, they make the vast chamber ring again. Nothing is wanting for gymnastics, and nothing is left untried. There is plenty of noise, and abundance of enjoyment. The gymnasium was built for its present purpose, and when its active denizens recover breath they are hearty in its praise. They are fine, gentleman-like lads, dressed in well made suits of good broad-cloth, and with nothing to distinguish them from the pupils at any other public school. The definition of the committee, "that the object of the institution is, by eliminating from its administration all trace of charity in the cold signification of the word, to elevate the moral tone of the pupils," is felt to be truthful before you have conversed with the lads five minutes. But no written description can bring the peculiar merits of this Woodgreen establishment fairly before the reader. There are about it, over and above its material excellences and architectural splendor, a thousand delicate lights and shades, all implying that it constitutes a tenderly-watched and gently-disciplined home to those to whom it opens its charitable doors. It must be seen to be appreciated, or even understood; and often as Freemasons may have heard the claims and excellencies of "the Boys' School" urged at their lodge meetings, the day of their first visit to it will be ever after marked with a white stone, for it will prove how far short of its real merit has been every word spoken in its praise. Those who remember the caution taught at their initiation should inspect it, to see that the funds they give for benevolent purposes are properly applied; those who value the pillars of their Order should go to see how stable and sound this chief one is; the man recently admitted should go, in order that he may comprehend what his apron means—in other words, the practical fruit of the lessons impressed upon him; and the old and "rusty" Mason should go to see what the stirring doings and the new blood of the last half dozen years have brought about. In short, every Freemason who shrinks from being branded as lukewarm, ought to make himself acquainted with the establishment we have described as soon as practicable. There is no difficulty about admission, the way is easy, the time occupied insignificant, the expense to Londoners nominal, and the duty obvious—so that there can be no reason save supineness or indifference for holding back.—Daily News, London.

◆

Hash.

From the Michigan Freemason.

The Masonic Monthly for August comes to us on the 3d of September, and is usually well filled with well written articles—many of which, however, seem to reflect the spirit of captious hypercriticism and fault-finding so common to this journal. The leading article, by the editor headed "A Grand Lodge that needs Reformation," represents the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts as "long oppressed by the weight of incubi," which has caused it to descend "step by step, in the estimation of the thinking among the brethren," until "it has descended as low in its career of mismanagement, or no management, as it can go! It has touched bottom," &c. We do not pretend to know the state of affairs in the jurisdiction of the State of Massachusetts, but even if they have not gone just as the editor of the Masonic Monthly would have them, we think this style of criticism is exceeding bad taste. The spirit of the article is this: "What is not done according to the dictation of the editor of this journal is either mismanagement or no management."

But we took up our pen to notice briefly a series of articles appearing in the issues of the Masonic Monthly entitled "Hash." They purport to be written by "Bro. Jacob Norton," and the publisher of the Monthly calls them "clear, crisp, and cutting criticisms," and adds that this writer is "the dread of charlatans and quacks."

But who are these "charlatans" and "quacks" who are made to writhe under the lash of Bro. Norton's criticism? We answer, every Masonic editor or author whose opinions do not run in the same groove of the sagacious conductors of the Masonic Monthly. He who believes in the antiquity of Masonry, or who has any reverence for the "ancient landmarks," and endeavors to serve the Craft according to his ability and understanding, is sure to be set upon by this cats-paw of the Monthly, and dubbed a charlatan, quack, or some equally fraternal cognomen; for to dare to think and act contrary to this clique is—to be made into hash. And such is the cannibal appetite of these hash-gormands that they can not spare their own species—their own brethren even!

According to these critics, Dr. Mackey, who has been a life-long Mason, and devoted his gifted talents to writing the most popular and useful publications ever given to the Craft, is either a "quack" or a mischievous deceiver who writes only to dupe his brethren, and make cash out of their gullibility. C. W. Moore, who has served the Craft long and well, and whose magazine has stood the test of nearly thirty years, is rarely spared this hashing process for a single month. He is represented as having outlived his usefulness, and as being dry and savorless, but into the dreaded hash-pan he must go, nolens volens. Age does not exempt him. His bones must be broken upon the cruel rack every month to satiate the cannibal appetites of his Titanic neighbors of the Monthly.

And even at our remote distance from Boston, we find no place of security. Like the gossips who always know more about the affairs of their neighbors than they know themselves, no sooner did our first issue see the light, than it was seized, half-fledged as it was, for Bro. Jacob Norton's hash dish. He knew our correspondents much better than we did. Such and such articles were prepared for our journal—even selected ones, that had been before the public, well, we will not say how long, for the oracle knows—and they were no credit to the new journal, nor was it a credit to us. We did not make so good a start as when we commenced the Mystic Star, &c., &c. In a word, we were hashed, every inch of us, two hundred and thirty pounds avoirdupois! And the dish must have been savory as no morsel of us was left over to September.

But like Jonah, when swallowed, we can still think little thoughts, and now comes our time for laughing at the calamities of others. In the number before us, we find the dismembered bodies of some half dozen of our honored confreres. Poor Bro. H. G. Reynolds, of THE TROWEL, is terribly mangled—his unpardonable sin being, 1st, great success as editor and publisher; 2d, repeatedly elected Grand Secretary of his jurisdiction; 3d, is now chosen to the honorable office of Grand Master of Illinois. All this is proof that he is not over-burthened with the thinking functions, but, on the contrary, "is a man of vaulting ambition." Bro. Reynolds has our sympathy, even if we have our laugh to see him pelted! He must be hashed, and there is no use of squirming. Perhaps he is like the eels the woman had skinned alive for ten years—"got used to it."

The Voice of Masonry is too sectarian. The St. Louis Freemason panders to the Church of Rome. The American Freemason is Ishmaelitish. (Now, who would have thought of such a criticism from the Masonic Monthly, all of whose conductors are native born Ishmaels). And the Craftsman of Canada is political, because it takes the motto—"The Queen and the Craft." The Mystic Star alone seems to merit the courted blessing, and even that is told of its former sins.

We are not opposed to honorable criticism, nor indeed to an occasional plate of palatable hash; but we do object to that captious spirit which can live only at the expense of other people—that seems to rejoice at the failures of others, and, like the gulls along our rivers, feast on offal. There is a generous way of rebuking the faults of others, which may do them good; but to be ever carping about their faults, and blind as the eye of a mill-stone to anything and everything save their faults, is neither profitable to the critic or the one criticised.

Bating this Ishmaelitish spirit, the Masonic Monthly is one of the very best Masonic publications of the times, and we wish it success. While it is scratching its contemporaries with the spirit and zeal of a wild-cat, we will endeavor to grasp its editors with the lion's paw of a true Mason, and lead them up to the temple of our ancient and honorable Order, where we may each listen to the ennobling lessons of brotherly love. Kneeling at this altar, we shall learn to reverence and adore the one God and Father of all, and to live to make mankind better and happier. So mote it be.

Masonic Congress at Paris.

BY BRO. HYDE CLARKE.

The threatened attack of the Pope on the Freemasons at the forthcoming Œcumenical Council has deeply aroused the ire of our foreign brethren. Naturally, ourselves and the Americans care very little what the Pope and his myrmidons say for or against us, and as little for his Œcumenical Council, and what it may decree against us, as of Cardinal Cullen's denunciation of the Masonic Hall at Dublin. We meet all those things on the same footing, and thereby help to reduce them to insignificance.

Circumstances are different in France, Belgium, and some other countries, where the Pope and his partisans have for generations carried on a war against Freemasons, and where the memory of martyrs of the various tribunals of the Most Holy Inquisition has been freshly retained. Bull after bull published against Freemasonry has attested the envenomed spite of the Pontiffs, and though they have failed in any degree to obstruct the progress of Freemasonry, they have been used by bishops and priests as means of social persecution. Dissension has been sown between husband and wife, the rites of marriage have been refused to daughters, and the dying Mason has been made to recant, that his wife's body might be laid in the same grave with his. These are not things of yesterday, but of to-day, and Masons in the presence of this warfare carry on their own campaign, and carry on hostilities against their common enemies. This warefare again has damaged and exasperated the Pope, particularly in his homestead of Italy, and now his preserve of Spain is invaded.

The dastardly introduction of Freemasonry before the Council as something impious was meant to culminate the Institution, but it was perhaps little thought it would excite the members of the Masonic body to resistance. The protest of Masons coming in concert with those of many distinguished ecclesiastics will not be without weight, and will constitute one of the elements of reaction, which Papal intrigue has provoked.

At the last communication of the Grand Orient of France a requisition was presented which resulted in a resolution calling on the Grand Master and Council of the Order to convoke on the 8th of December next an extraordinary convent of delegates to the lodges of the jurisdiction, of those of other rites, and of foreign lodges to draw up and vote a manifesto, which shall solemnly affirm in the face of the Œcumenical Council "the grand principles of universal human right, which are the basis and the glory" of Freemasonry.

The Grand Master has now called upon the lodges individually to vote on this measure, and it can hardly be doubted but that they will affirm it, and that the convention will be called. We may expect that, not only the lodges of the Grand Orient of France will take part in this convocation, but also those of the Supreme Council of France. Belgium we may naturally expect to take part, and the Italian lodges universally. A fair contingent may be expected from Germany and Switzerland. It is not impossible Sweden may be represented, but about Holland we are rather doubtful, though the "No Popery" feeling may be worked. It remains to be seen what our zealous brethren in Ireland may do. The new Grand Lodges of Spain, Roumania, and Greece may be expected to send their deputies. Many lodges of South America will be represented, and if there is time the authorities of the United States of North America may name delegates.

The results of this convocation are likely to have a further bearing than upon the Pope and his Œcumenical Council, and may exercise a greater Masonic influence. We shall watch the further progress of the Convention, with some interest, for many reasons.—London F. M. Mag.

◆

Some few weeks ago, Bro. John W. Shaw, of Jackson, Miss., came to New York city with his family, and put up at the St. Nicholas Hotel, where shortly after he was taken down with a very serious illness, which proved to be his last. His wife, being the daughter of one of the grand officers of Mississippi, as soon as her husband was taken sick, applied to the Grand Secretary, and he notified the Deputy Grand Master of the brother's sickness. Dr. Austin and Bro. Walker, S. W. of Independent Royal Arch Lodge No. 2, were unremitting in their attentions to the sick brother until his death, which occurred on October 4. The Fraternity then took charge of the remains, had the body prepared for removal, after which it was placed in a handsome metalic casket, prepared by W. Bro. Stephen Merritt, Jr., the intention of the family being to bury the dead brother in Mississippi. On Sunday afternoon last the funeral services were held in room 237, St. Nicholas Hotel, R. W. Breth. John H. Anthon, Dep. G. Master; Dr. Austin, Grand Secretary; Wm. Sinclair, G. Steward; Jerome Buck, D. D. G. M.; and many other prominent members of the Craft being present. The funeral services were conducted under the auspices of Independent Royal Arch, Prince of Orange, and Kane Lodges. After the ceremonies, the body was removed to the cars for transmission to Jackson, Miss., a large number of the Fraternity accompanying it to the depot, notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the weather.

Grand Lodge Jurisdiction.

MASSACHUSETTS LODGES IN OTHER STATES AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The jurisdiction of a Grand Lodge of Freemasons, in the United States, is threefold: 1. Over the State or Territory in which it is located. The jurisdiction is exclusive as against all other grand lodges or Masonic powers, over ancient craft or symbolic Masonry. 2. Co-ordinate and common jurisdiction in those States and Territories of the United States within whose limits an American grand lodge has not been lawfully and regularly established and exists.* This is also exclusive, as against any foreign Masonic powers. 3 Co-ordinate and common jurisdiction with the grand lodges of Europe, in those independent States, kingdoms, or countries wherein no native or local grand lodge of the same rite is maintained. With the further explanation that the territories or dependencies of any independent foreign State, are to be regarded as included in the Masonic jurisdiction of such State, our readers will readily understand the policy and principles by which the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts has been governed in establishing lodges beyond its own immediate and exclusive jurisdiction,—a policy which it has pursued uninterruptedly from its organization as the original grand lodge in this country, in 1733; and in the prosecution of which it has extended its authority and diffused the light entrusted to its care over, and, to a limited extent, beyond, both the American continents. And it may be new, and perhaps not wholly uninteresting, to some of our younger brethren, to learn that eleven of the thirteen colonies composing the confederation and future States of the Union were indebted to it for the first elements of their Masonic existence and subsequent prosperity. The first warrant issued by it was granted on the 30th of July, 1733—the day of its own organization—for "The First Lodge in Boston." It was the first warranted lodge in America and its records are nearly complete to the present time. It was followed by a dispensation for the "First Lodge in Pennsylvania," granted to Benjamin Franklin—then of Philadelphia, who was its first Master—dated July 24, 1734. On the same day a dispensation was also issued for the "Holy Lodge of St. John," at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, which lodge is still in existence, and is one of the most flourishing in the State. The next charter issued was for the "First Lodge in South Carolina," located at Charleston, and dated Dec. 27, 1735. On December 27, 1749, authority for "St. John's Lodge, No. 1," at Newport, Rhode Island, was granted, and this lodge is still in existence. Authority was also subsequently granted for other lodges in the State. August 12, 1750, "Maryland Lodge" was established at Annapolis, in Maryland, but we believe it is not now in existence. August 12, 1752, a warrant was granted for "Hiram Lodge," at New Haven, Connecticut, which is still in existence. Warrants were also afterwards granted for other lodges in the State. In 1756 a warrant was granted for an Army Lodge at Crown Point, in the State of New York; and in 1759, for another at Lake George; and in 1762 for still another at Crown Point; and in September, 1782, a dispensation was granted by the then Grand Master, to John Copp and others for a lodge in the State of New York. Neither the name nor the location is given in the record. In 1762, "Temple Lodge, No. 1," was authorized at Elizabethtown, New Jersey, being the first lodge in that province. In 1764, another lodge was authorized to be held at Princeton, in the same colony, by the name of "St. John's Lodge." In 1765 a dispensation was issued for "Pitts County Lodge," in North Carolina, and in 1767, another for a lodge in Virginia. In November, 1781, a warrant was issued for "Vermont Lodge," at Cornish, Vermont, being the first lodge in that State; and in 1785 another for "North Star Lodge," was authorized at Marietta, Ohio. The above comprise all the old colonies, except Delaware and Georgia; the last of which received its first Masonic authority from England, in 1785. The lodges whose names are given all derived their authority from Massachusetts, and were the first in their respective districts. And, in addition thereto, the grand lodge, between the date of its organization and the close of the eighteenth century, established lodges beyond the present jurisdiction of the United States as follows: The "First Lodge in the West Indies," at Antigua, in 1738; "Halifax Lodge," Nova Scotia, in 1740; a lodge at St. Johns, Newfoundland. 1746; "Royal Lodge," at Annapolis, Nova Scotia, 1750; and another at Louisburg, in 1758; a lodge at Quebec, Canada, in 1764; "Surrinam Lodge," at Surrinam, Dutch Guiana, in 1766; another at St. Christopher, and still another at Barbadoes, both in the West Indies, 1767; and which includes all the foreign lodges for which authority was granted before the beginning of the present century.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Editor,
IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY
H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

One copy, one year..$1 25

All communications should be addressed to H. G. Reynolds, or The Masonic Trowel, Springfield, Ill.

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for The Trowel.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

Notice.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., NOV. 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

Encyclical Letter.

From the East of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, A., F. & A. Masons.

To the Worshipful Masters, Wardens, and brethren of the subordinate Lodges under the jurisdiction of said Grand Lodge:

Dear Brethren.—Congratulating you upon the general order and prosperity of the Masonic Institution within our borders, and grateful for the blessings which our common Father has been pleased to grant us, I herewith communicate to you matters of special and general importance for your information and government.

First. The State is divided into districts, and Deputies are appointed as follows:

No. 1.—All that part of Cook county not embraced in South Chicago and Hyde Park, together with the county of Lake; R. W. John W. Clyde, D. D. G. M.

No. 2.—All that part of Cook county known as South Chicago and Hyde Park, together with the county of Du Page; R. W. Gilbert W. Barnard, D. D. G. M.

No. 3.—The counties of Kane, De Kalb, Boone, and McHenry; R. W. Alonzo Ransom, Richmond, McHenry county, D. D. G. M.

No. 4.—The counties of Winnebago, Stephenson, Jo Daviess, and Carroll; R. W. Edward H. Baker, Rockford, D. D. G. M.

No. 5.—The counties of Ogle, Lee, Whiteside, and La Salle; R. W. William A. Levanway, M. D., Dixon, D. D. G. M.

No. 6.—The counties of Kendall, Grundy, Will, Kankakee, and Iroquois; R. W. Rodney Ashley, Kankakee, D. D. G. M.

No. 7.—The counties of Livingston, Woodford, Marshall, Stark, and Putnam; R. W. Joseph Holland, Hennepin, Putnam county, D. D. G. M.

No. 8.—The counties of Bureau, Henry, Rock Island, and Mercer; R. W. Peter Bogue, D. D. G. M.

No. 9.—The counties of Peoria, Knox, and Warren; R. W. Sylvester Stevens, Knoxville, Knox county, D. D. G. M.

No. 10.—The counties of Henderson, Hancock, and McDonough; R. W. Richard D. Hammond, M. D., Macomb, D. D. G. M.

No. 11.—The counties of Adams, Pike, and Calhoun; R. W. Asa W. Blakesley, Quincy, D. D. G. M.

No. 12.—The counties of Fulton, Schuyler, Cass, and Mason; R. W. Harrison Jacob, Vermont, Fulton county, D. D. G. M.

No. 13.—The counties of Morgan, Greene, Scott, and Brown; R. W. Archibald A. Glenn, Mt. Sterling, D. D. G. M.

No. 14.—The counties of Tazewell, McLean, Menard, Logan, and De Witt; R. W. John M Stillwell, Bloomington, D. D. G. M.

No. 15.—The counties of Sangamon, Macon, Piatt, Christian, and Fayette; R. W. A. A. Murray, Decatur, D. D. G. M.

No. 16.—The counties of Champaign, Vermilion, Ford, and Douglas; R. W. James O. Cunningham, D. D. G. M.

No. 17.—The counties of Edgar, Clark, Crawford, and Jasper; R. W. Daniel G. Burr, Paris, D. D. G. M.

No. 18.—The counties of Coles, Cumberland, Shelby, Moultrie, and Effingham; R. W. Wm. H. House, Mattoon, D. D. G. M.

No. 19.—The counties of Montgomery, Bond, Madison, Jersey, and Macoupin; R. W. Eli T. Hollister, Alton, D. D. G. M.

No. 20.—The counties of St. Clair, Clinton, Marion, Jefferson, Washington, and Monroe; R. W. Hiram W. Hubbard, D. D. G. M.

No. 21.—The counties of Clay, Richland, Lawrence, Edwards, and Wayne; R. W. Henry Palmer, Noble, Richland county, D. D. G. M.

No. 22.—The counties of Wabash, White, Saline, Gallatin, and Hamilton; R. W. Thomas W. Hay, Carmi, D. D. G. M.

No. 23.—The counties of Pope, Hardin, Massac, Johnson, Williamson, and Franklin; R. W. Thomas Moore, Metropolis, D. D. G. M.

No. 24.—The counties of Alexander, Pulaski, Union, Jackson, Perry, and Randolph; R. W. George W. Staley, Kaskaskia, D. D. G. M.

These Deputies will visit lodges in their respective districts when called upon, or by my request. I enjoin that they be received and treated with the same consideration that should be accorded to the Grand Master.

Second.—The grand officers and committees for the current year, are as follows: DeWitt C. Cregier, Chicago, Deputy Grand Master; James A. Hawley, Dixon, Senior, and George E. Lounsbury, Mound City, Junior Grand Wardens; Harrison Dills, Quincy, Grand Treasurer; Orlin H. Miner, Springfield, Grand Secretary; Rev. James I. Davidson, Decatur, Grand Chaplain; H. P. H. Bromwell, Charleston, G. Orator; Wiley M. Egan, Chicago, Senior Grand Deacon; S. G. Stearns, Joliet, Jnnior Grand Deacon; John C. Reynolds, Springfield, Deputy Grand Secretary; George H. Raymond, Litchfield, Grand Pursuivant; John W. Ross, Lewistown, Grand Marshal; E. E. Myers, Springfield, Grand Standard Bearer; John Evans, Chicago, Grand Sword Bearer; O. N. Stafford, and A. R. Robinson, Springfield, Grand Stewards; John P. Ferns, Chicago, Grand Tyler.

EXAMINERS.

Grand Master; R. W. Charles Fisher, Springfield, one year; R. W. Thomas J. Prickett, Carbondale, two years; R. W. G. W. Barnard, Chicago, three years; R. W. M. D. Chamberlin, Freeport, four years; R. W. Geo. O. Ide, Princeton, Secretary. I am relieved by my associates from examinations. No lecturer can be appointed without the certificate of three of said examiners. They are lecturers by virtue of their appointment. Lecturers already appointed are R. W. Breth. Thomas J. Wade, Ottawa; P. A. Dorwin, Springfield; Daniel G. Burr, Paris; Julius L. Dewey, Galesburg; H. Frank Holcomb, Chicago.

If seven or more young brethren under thirty-five years of age, indorsed by their respective lodges for good character, fair talents, education, and memory, will make application to me for the lectures, I will cause a school of instruction to be organized, in which they may qualify themselves in every respect for lecturers and teachers.

COMMITTEES APPOINTED.

On Masonic Correspondence.—William Rounsville, Peoria; John C. Bagby, Rushville; John C. W. Bailey, Chicago.

On Masonic Jurisprudence.—J. R. Gorin, Decatur; William Lavely, Springfield; J. O. Cunningham, Urbana; William McMurtry, Henderson; John Bennett, Petersburg; John M. Pearson, Godfrey; O. H. Miner, Springfield.

On Finance.—James Lowe, Quincy; George C. Lanphere, Galesburg; William E. Ginther, Charleston.

On the Knoxville Educational Resolutions.—Anthony L. Knapp, Springfield; A. W. Martin, Knoxville; Lewis Keyon, Peoria.

On the Library.—Grand Secretary; Newton Bateman; Deputy Grand Secretary.

On the matter of a Masonic Temple.—Wiley M. Egan, Chicago; Thomas J. Turner, Freeport; Orlin H. Miner, Springfield; John M. Pearson, Godfrey; William H. Turner, Chicago. All the members of this committee are practical business men of high reputation. The Grand Master will attend.

Third.—Requirements by Grand Lodge.—It has become a practice for brethren to ask financial aid from lodges and brethren in cases of loss by the elements, by disasters, or misfortunes in business. Upon this subject the Grand Lodge has declared "that no man or body of men have the right to approach a Mason or a lodge of Masons in the holy name of Masonic charity, and ask assistance to build mills, stores, or lodge halls, even though a similar article of property may have been lost by fire, tornado, or other casualty; and that such acts ought to subject the brethren or lodge guilty of it, together with all accessories, to the most rigid discipline."

The impositions upon the pockets of our brethren and the treasuries of our lodges have become so frequent that many dispense with examinations, and contribute a small sum as the easiest way to get rid of these beggars. Many shameless applicants have become so accustomed to that sort of treatment, that they look for it, and rejoice in it, as the least laborious way of gathering funds. This is all wrong, and ought to cease at once. And in order to accomplish that end, lodges, Worshipful Masters, and brethren are instructed to observe and enforce the 8th and 15th charges to a Master elect, which are as follows:

> "You promise to respect genuine and true brethren, and to discountenance impostors and all dissenters from the ancient landmarks and Constitutions of Masonry."
>
> "You agree that no visitors shall be received into your lodge without due examination, and producing proper vouchers of their having been initiated in a regular lodge."

We advise that every brother procure a traveling certificate, yearly, and relief be granted to no able-bodied brother not well known, unless he produces a certificate under seal that he is a member of a lodge in good standing.

Cities and Towns.—Lodges in cities and towns where there are two or more lodges, are instructed to observe the following resolution:

"Resolved, That in towns and cities in this jurisdic> tion where two or more lodges exist, upon the presentation of any petition to any lodge in such town or city either for membership or for the degrees, notice shall at once be given to each lodge in such town or city of the presentation of such petition, and of the time when the same will be due."

Combinations in Elections.—During the past year considerable complaint was made from different parts of the State of unfairness in conducting elections, and of combinations to elect regular tickets. I am aware that unsuccessful parties may be prone to make unnecessary complaints, and that they are often improperly made. But I am pained to say that some complaints have been well founded. There is no objection to comparing the merits of brethren for any particular office, or their fitness for one instead of another. But each candidate should stand upon his own merit, and be judged in the same way. The Grand Lodge says:

> "That all elections in all Masonic bodies should be free and unbiased; and that all attempts at controlling the action of voters by the formation of "tickets," "slates," or "rings," should be discountenanced by this Grand Lodge as inconsistent with the spirit and teachings of Masonry; believing that true worth will assert itself without the aid of such appliances."

And in this connection it is proper for me to say, that every officer elect should have a clear majority of the votes cast.

Who are Eligible for Master.—None but incumbents, Wardens, past Wardens, or past Masters, are eligible to the station of Worshipful Master, except by dispensation. If there be any good reason why some other brother should be elected Master, an application should be made for a dispensation in good time, setting forth the reasons, which should be signed by a respectable number, and be accompanied by the fee of two dollars. I do not intend to confirm the election of any Master from the floor without a dispensation, if serious objection be made.

Lotteries and Gift Enterprises.—Nothing can be more emphatic than the following resolution:

> "Resolved, That this Grand Lodge views with abhorrence any attempt on the part of lodges or members of lodges to give the aid of Masonry, in organized or individual form, to any lottery or gift enterprise; and that it will sustain any lodge in any reasonable punishment inflicted upon its members for such an offense."

Clandestine Masons.—Much discussion has been had in regard to the status of colored men claiming to be Masons. A colored man, or any other man, made in, and belonging to a regular lodge, is entitled outside of a lodge, to all Masonic rights and benefits. No landmark is plainer. But the class of colored men claiming recognition have organized bodies of their own, and within the various jurisdictions of grand lodges in correspondence with ours. But one grand lodge can occupy the State, district, or territory where it is located in the United States, or British America. The lodges established in New York by a foreign grand lodge come under the same status. In this matter the question is not one of color, but of jurisdiction, and strikes at the very foundation of sovereignty and Masonic government, and the grand lodge has

> "Resolved, That no lodge in this jurisdiction shall recognize as a Mason any person claiming to be such, who has received his degrees or holds his membership in any lodge in any of the United States or in British America, unless said last named lodge shall be recognized as regular by the Grand Lodge of such State, Territory, or Dominion, in correspondence with this Grand Lodge."

Balloting and Objections.—A candidate rejected by ballot for initiation, is rejected for one year, and cannot petition any other lodge without the unanimous consent of the lodge which rejected him.

A candidate rejected for advancement by ballot, can renew his application at every regular meeting.

A candidate rejected for affiliation is at liberty to petition any other lodge in this jurisdiction when he pleases.

An objection made to the initiation or advancement of a candidate before or after balloting is legal and binding until the objection ceases, and it operates as rejection.

When a ballot has been taken and declared foul, or when an objection is made, no remarks or conversation should be allowed in regard to such rejection or objection in the lodge or lodge-room; the Master should suppress the same, and should be decided and calm in doing so. Time and patience may remove unfounded objections; rashness, temper, or violent remarks may close all avenues to explanation.

Past Master.—No Master elect is eligible to installation until he has received the secrets of the Chair.

Maimed Candidates.—The 40th Section Grand Lodge By-Laws, prohibits the conferring of degrees on any candidate having a maim or defect which may render him incapable of learning the art, and becoming proficient in the degrees. I hope that the painful necessity of deciding upon questions of disability may be spared me this year.

The Constitution, By-Laws and Regulations.—Much vexation, and repeated and unnecessary labor will be spared me, if the Masters and Secretaries will make themselves familiar with our own constitutions, laws, and decisons. It is not infrequent to have Mackey or Simons quoted to me, when in conflict with our own jurisprudence, which is paramount and supreme. I hope that the officers soon to be elected will take the necessary time to familiarize themselves with our laws. I shall endeavor to answer all letters, promptly, courteously and as clearly as I can, and there are very many questions that arise, upon which I had better be consulted, and all my brethren are requested to ask freely when in doubt.

I am not perfect myself; I do not expect it in others; but if we aim at perfection, we may attain excellence. Let us try.

Finally, Let this communication be read at length in open lodge, as soon as it is received.

Given under my hand and seal at Springfield, this 4th day of November, A. L. 5869.

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
[L. S.] Grand Master.

Gone to Kansas.

An old friend and most excellent, worthy citizen and brother, Col. L. W. Shepherd, has left our city with his family, to reside henceforth in Ottawa, Kansas. We, in common with all our brethren and fellow-citizens, regret his departure, but we congratulate the citizens of Ottawa, and our brethren in Kansas upon their acquisition. The Colonel has served the government as Postal Agent, and as Division Quartermaster; the city as Clerk and Comptroller, and our Masonic bodies in various offices, among which is the office of Deputy Grand Secretary, which he filled with marked ability. He is a member and Secretary of St. Paul's Lodge No. 500, which he assisted in forming; of Springfield Council, R. & S. M., Elwood Commandery No. 6, and all the bodies of the Scottish Rite in this city, and is the Master of the Chapter of Rose Croix. Also, a member of Washington Chapter, Chicago, which he has often represented.

In company with Sir B. C. McQuesten, Past Commander of Elwood Commandery, and Past Master of Springfield Lodge No. 4, who has been some time in Ottawa, our brother is to be engaged in Banking. They have established the Franklin County Bank, over which Col. Shepherd will preside, and of which Bro. McQuesten is the Cashier.

The community, Fraternity, and Christian people of Ottawa have gained largely by this addition to their numbers.

M. W. Fergus M. Blair.

The only mention made of the decease of Bro. Blair in our last issue was the notice of him in our address. We have waited until this issue to obtain more certain information. The November number of the Home Advocate comes to us in mourning. The leading article is a notice penned by Rev. W. W. Hibben, which is followed by an article by Past Grand Master Fravel, detailing the incidents attending his exit. It seems that he had exposed himself to many privations and hardships in order to establish the Advocate. He complained of failing health several weeks prior to his final illness, but no marked change occurred until a few hours before he died. After six o'clock, he left his office for tea with Bro. Fravel, and was compelled to take an omnibus in order to reach home. After tea, he laid down, conversed a little, and went to sleep. Bro. Fravel went to the hotel and returned immediately to find him "At Rest." He was married to Priscilla A. Dodds, in Dayton, O., in 1839. He leaves her and a large family of children.

While in Paris, Bro. Blair prospered, but from the time he left that place, worldly matters went hard with him, and he has labored and toiled incessantly to get another favorable start in life. The brethren of talent, and the Fraternity generally in Indiana, rallied to his help, and just as he seemed to be on the road to prosperity again, he was summoned away. Henceforth all unpleasant matters between him and us are forgotten, and all that is good we will remember and cherish.

Illinois Legal Directory.

We have received the second number of the above work, issued by the enterprising brothers, E. L. & W. L. Gross, lawyers of this city.

It contains the following information: The names of Judges and Clerks of Supreme Court; places of meeting and names of counties in each division. Circuits, names of Judges, State Attornies and time of meeting. Practicing attornies in each county.

It also contains much other matter valuable and important to all lawyers and business men, and every one should have it. Issued quarterly at fifty cents.

Bro. Bromwell's Address.

Through the politeness of R. W. Bro. Wiley M. Egan, we are in receipt of the oration delivered by Past Grand Master Bromwell, at the laying of the corner-stone of the temple now being erected by the West Chicago Benevolent Association. The oration will appear in the next number of The Trowel.

The association is composed of Cleveland Lodge No. 211, Hesperia Lodge No. 411, Washington Chapter No. 43, Chicago Commandery, and a large list of stockholders.

Magnolia Lodge No. 103.

This Lodge was chartered in October, 1851, and has kept steadily onward ever since. The lodges at Wenona, Tonica, and Lostant, on the Central Road, received large contributions from its membership, and while many are working elsewhere, its members and strength have not diminished.

In pursuance of a previous invitation, we took seats in the comfortable carriage of Judge Cowen, at Wenona, with him and his wife and daughter, on Wednesday, October 20, and what with a bright day, good roads, pleasant converse, and a spanking span of matched bays, we soon glided over eleven miles of space, and found ourself in a good old-fashioned town, and a large company of brethren.

Dinner came first; the air was bracing; exercise sharpened the appetite, and the precious work of the sisters of the Eastern Star, in the preparation of meats, vegetables, cakes, pies, etc., made us ravenously hungry, and full justice was done by all present. A Grand Lodge was then formed, in which we were assisted by R. W. Bro. Joseph Holland, D. D. G. M., as Deputy; W. Bro. Wm. R. Phillips, W. M. at Wenona, as Senior Grand Warden; W. Bro. S. C. Hyndshaw, W. M. at Henry, as Junior Grand Warden; W. Bro. E. W. Wood, M. D., P. M. at Tonica, as Grand Marshal; and a full list of other officers from the neighboring lodges. W. Bro. Fairchild, W. M. at Peru, kindly officiated at the melodeon. The Peru Brass Band, under the direction of the Grand Marshal, escorted the Grand Lodge to the new hall, where Bro. J. M. Cowen, W. M., and the officers and brethren of the lodge received us with the public grand honors. About one hundred ladies and a large number of citizens were present.

The hall was then dedicated in ample form. The ceremonies were conducted with unusual order and decorum. The music was timely and excellent. After the services, we made a few remarks, and a procession was then formed, and the brethren marched through several streets, and, returning to the hall, the exercises were closed in good order.

In the evening the young people had their time, and a magnificent supper.

A good, warm meal at the mansion of Bro. P. B. Fyffe, the first initiate of Magnolia Lodge, and we took a seat with Dr. Wood, and by the light of the moon, good roads, old reminiscences, and a splendid Morgan trotter, we were early at his dwelling at Tonica.

More hospitality at Dr. Wood's, then for the train, and at 5:45 A. M., home again.

Soldiers' Monuments.

R. W. Bro. M. D. Chamberlin, acting as Grand Master, laid the corner-stone of the Soldiers' Monument at Freeport, October 19. The attendance of Masons, Odd-Fellows, German associations, firemen, and citizens was very large. Dr. W. J. McKim acted as Marshal, Rev. W. J. Johnstone as Grand Chaplain, and Bro. R. W. Buckman as Grand Treasurer. Gen. Smith D. Atkins delivered an able address. The day was auspicious, and everything passed off harmoniously.

R. W. Bro. D. C. Cregier, Deputy Grand Master, laid the corner-stone of the Soldiers' Monument at Ottawa, October 14. The several Masonic bodies at Ottawa and in the neighborhood, together with the Supreme Court, the soldiers, and citizens, were out in force. R. W. Bro. D. A. Cashman, of Chicago, officiated as Grand Marshal, Rev. Dr. Estabrook, of Ottawa, as Grand Chaplain, and W. Bro. J. P. Ferns, Grand Tyler. Capt. L. A. Rising officiated as Marshal of the day, and Hon. B. C. Cook, as Orator. Special commendation is awarded Sirs J. F. Nash and W. B. Powell, for the admirable manner in which they handled the Templars, and contributed to the great interest of the occasion. Great credit is also given Bro. Cregier for his ability and success in conducting the ceremonies.

Constitution of Lodges.

Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago, was constituted October 11th, Moses Shield, W. M., by R. W. Bro. John W. Clyde, D. D. G. M. The ceremonies were closed by the presentation of a beautiful Past Master's jewel, of gold, elaborately and elegantly wrought and inscribed.

Lincoln Park Lodge No. 611, Chicago, H. E. Hamilton, W. M., was constituted October 15th, by R. W. Bro. D. C. Cregier, Deputy Grand Master. An elegant oration was delivered by Rev. G. C. Truesdale.

October 13, assisted by R. W. Bro. Wilson Hoag, R. W. Bro. Rodney Ashley constituted Buckley Lodge No. 634, at Buckley, Iroquois Co.

October 26, assisted by R. W. Bro. H. W. Hubbard, R. W. Bro. Rodney Ashley, constituted Norton Lodge No. 631, at Norton, Kankakee Co.

Sheldon Lodge No. 609, was constituted at Sheldon, Iroquois Co., Oct. 19, by R. W. Bro. D. L. Jewett, of Watseka.

Berwick Lodge No. 619, was constituted at Berwick, Warren Co., Oct. 26, by R. W. Bro. James Hill, of Monmouth.

Anchor Lodge No. 615, was constituted at Mason City, Mason Co., Oct. 23d by R. W. Bro. John Bennett, D. D. G. M., of Petersburg.

Milan Lodge No. 617, was constituted at Milan, McDonough Co., Oct. 19th, by R. W. Bro. R. D. Hammond, D. D. G. M., of Macomb.

Rochester Lodge No. 635, was constituted at Rochester, Sangamon Co., October 20, by R. W. John C. Reynolds, assisted by Rev. J. B. Saye, and Breth. John F. Burrill, and T. F. Dockson.

Grand Commandery.

The Grand Commandery of Illinois met in Templar's Hall, Chicago, October 26. J. R. Gorin, Grand Commander. A complete revision of the work was agreed on, and measures were taken to disseminate it. The Red Cross order was conferred on Tuesday evening, by Apollo Commandery. Sir T. T. Gurney, Commander. A sumptuous banquet followed. Among the guests was Sir Lyndon A. Smith, S. G. Warden of Indiana.

The Templar Order was conferred Wednesday evening.

The officers for the ensuing year are as follows: Grand Commander, Charles E. Munger, Joliet; Deputy, John M. Pearson, Godfrey; Grand Generallissimo, Wiley M, Egan, Chicago; Grand Captain General, Daniel Dustin, Sycamore; Grand Prelate, Rev. Charles A. Gilbert, Joliet; Grand Treasurer, Robert H. Foss, Chicago; Grand Recorder, James H. Miles, Chicago; Senior Grand Warden, James A. Hawley, Dixon; Junior Grand Warden, Hiram W. Hubbard, Centralia; Grand Standard Bearer, Theodore T. Gurney, Chicago; Grand Sword Bearer, Louis H. Jorgensen, Cairo; Grand Warder, Asa W. Blakesley, Quincy; Grand Capt. Guards, Lockwood K. Osborn, Chicago. Charles H. Brower was appointed Inspector General.

Tidings.

Items.

Colorado Grand Lodge.—At the Grand Communication of the Grand Lodge of Colorado, held at Denver on the last Tuesday in Sept. H. M. Teller was elected Grand Master; R. Sopris, Deputy; W. D. Anthony, S. G. W.; H. Sayre, J. G. W.; Wm. W. Ware, Grand Treas.; E. C. Parmalee, of Central City, Grand Secretary; and L. N. Greenleaf, Chairman Com. on F. Cor.

E. Comp. Geo. S. Blackie, will please accept our thanks for a copy of the excellent report of the Committee on Correspondence to the Grand Chapter of Tenn., and for the handsome notice of the Grand Chapter of Illinois.

The first term of the Circuit Court of McHenry County was held at McHenry, May 10, 1838. John Pearson, Judge; A. Huntington, States Attorney; H. B. Steel, Sheriff; A. A. Wynkoop, Clerk.

Gen. John A. Rawlins, late Secretary of War, was a member of Miner's Lodge, No. 237, at Galena, Ills.

The Mississippi cotton crop is valued at $40,000,000, and the Arkansas crop at $30,000,000.

The Home for aged men in Boston cost $50,000.

If you are good natured when you sit down to your meals, you will enjoy them; be good natured.

The Freemasons of Spain are now able to conduct Masonic ceremonies at funerals.

The population of Mexico is 8,567,000.

If one takes a bull by the horns, what will the bull do?

Thanks to R. W. Bro. Geo. S. Blackie of Tennessee, for an advance copy of his excellent report on foreign correspondence.

The address delivered by Bro. Geo. D. Reynolds, a member of Tyrian Lodge, No. 333, in this city, delivered at Potosi, Mo., June 24th, is published at length in the London Freemason's Magazine. Geo. is the son of an Episcopal Clergyman, and was educated in this city.

"Don't trouble yourself to stretch your mouth any wider," said a dentist to his patient, "I intend to stand outside to draw your tooth."

Fanny Fern has written fifteen years for the New York Ledger, and the day of the week assigned for the reception of her communication has never passed without the copy being received.

The monthly earnings of the Union Pacific Railroad since June 1st, have been at the rate of $8,000,000 per year.

Five hundred men are at work on the new bridge at St. Louis.

Four hundred and eighty-four brethren have received relief in the Masonic Asylum for aged and decayed Freemasons in England since 1842, to the amount of $140,000. During the same period one hundred and nine widows of Freemasons have received relief at the Widow's Home, to the amount of $55,000.

The heirs of Noah Webster are said to receive $25,000 annually from his Dictionary sales.

Mr. Richard Smith of Tiverton, Rhode Island, now 93 years old, was married at the age of 18, and both husband and wife are still living.

There are eighty paper collar manufactories in the United States.

The Shaster or Hindoo Bible forbids a woman to see dancing, hear music, wear jewels, eat dainty food, blacken her eye-brows, sit at a window, or view herself in a mirror, during the absence of her husband; and it allows him to divorce her if she has no sons, injures his property, scolds him, or quarrels with another woman. Where is Mrs. Livermore?

The buildings erected this season in Brooklyn are estimated at $10,800,000.

The Cathedral in New York will seat 19,000 persons.

What is the proof that Cowper was a Freemason? He wished for a lodge in some vast wilderness.

Our Cotemporaries.

Evergreen for October.—A leader drawing analogies from Saint John's seven churches. Its facts are noteworthy. There is one lodge at Ephesus, seven in Smyrna, one at Pergamars, one at Thyatira, one at Sardis, one at Philadelphia, and one at Laodicea. It is amusing to read the argument, and when we tell our readers, that the facts are inventions, they will naturally enough guess who is the author. Sometimes he is styled Doctor, at others Brother, never M. D. or D. D., and but seldom L. L. D. The world is big enough for him and us. "Jocularities upon the square" is good. Albert Pike has a good letter in refutation of the theories and absurdities of the St. Louis editor. The editor keeps after the clergy; it won't pay. The controversy about the location of the Grand Lodge in Iowa is being aired in the Evergreen. That won't pay either. If this don't please the editor, then we retort that when he lets Illinois alone, we will "follow suit."

For his complimentary notice of ourself—many thanks.

The Keystone for Oct. 16, has its usual quantam of stories, poetry, humor, notes, and notices. Here again our article "Mercenary and malicious rejections" is credited to the the "Token." If it will afford the latter sheet notoriety or circulation, "it is well." "Why is Freemasonry called an Art,"—by A. G. Mackey, is the leader, followed by several original and selected articles of merit.

Kentucky Freemason, for October.—The discussion is still continued between Messrs. Walsh and Williams, in regard to Masonry. The argument is lame on both sides, because one can't tell and the other won't.

Pomeroy's Democrat, with its Masonic department edited by Bro. F. G. Tisdall, is regular. We have looked over our paper to see wherein we are subject to his criticism. Well, he may include us as one of the said "Western Freemasons." What more, brother?

Mason's Home Book, October.—Two copies received.

The Craftsman and Canadian Masonic Record.—We are in receipt of No. 1, Vol. 4, Magazine form of the above publication, by H. R. White, Hamilton, Ont., Canada. Issued monthly, at $1.50 per annum. It is dedicated to "The Queen and the Craft." Its articles are all good and we wish the publishers all possible success.

The St. Louis Freemason, for October, has a large and excellent variety of original and selected articles. The editor continues his fight with the A. & A. S. Rite.

The London Freemason's Magazine for October, is unusually interesting. We have marked two articles for this issue.

The London Freemason, October 9, has an excellent article headed "National Masonic Jurisdiction," which we transfer to our columns.

The Masonic Record, of Western India, Bombay, for September, is at hand. It is filled with valuable domestic and foreign news, and excellent selections.

The Voice of Masonry for November, was on time, and is well filled. The notice of our Grand Lodge proceedings was in good taste and fair.

The Michigan Freemason for October, is at hand. Contents: Masonic address, by Rev. A. G. Hibbard; Royal Arch Masonry—the innovations of the American system; Temperance; Our Wager, concluded; True Wealth, continued; Dispensing Charity; The 33 Degrees; Within the Lodge; Masonic Items; The Widow, poetry; Table Talk, continued; Decisions of Grand Master; Editorial Correspondence; Justice, by Jacob Norton. This clown among decent men, is very anxious that the editor of the Masonic Monthly should father its hash himself. To this that editor will not object, but if he is anxious for Jacob Norton's company after such an implied repudiation of the hash, and his miserable role of a poor, persecuted, hardly treated being, why its none of our affair. But the editor of the Michigan Freemason, says he has something to say. Judging from a former article, we think Bro. Jacob Norton, will wish he had kept out of that "neck of woods."

The Mystic Star for October is at hand.

The Masonic Monthly for October is at hand, but mislaid.

Publications Received.

The Western Monthly has a fine steel engraving of Governor Palmer in military dress, and the leading article is devoted to him. The Governor is as eminent in social, private, or professional life, as he is in political or military.

The other articles are: On the Stage, or off; From thistle patch to Cincinnati; Dezzanzans; Personal Recollections of Thackery; How I got rich against my will; Down East and Out West; The use and abuse of Words; The Fashions of Pompeii; Current Notes; Reviews of Books; Chit-chat. This number is readable throughout.

The Peoples' Magazine, presented to us by Bro. John S. Bradford, is published in London, and is an elegant work. For sale by J. S. Bradford, at the old post-office, Springfield.

The Western Review for October, Indianapolis has some fine reading, and the usual editorial, original and literary matter. Its musical pieces are: "What need have I the truth to tell;" "The Bridge of Sighs;" "Enchantress Galop."

The Odd-Fellows' Companion for October, has an elegant emblematic frontispiece, and leads off with the first of a story entitled, "What is it?" It keeps up fraternal news from several States, and always has an excellent variety of reading matter.

The Mother's (October) Journal—The Old Orchard is a beautiful picture. Its articles are all good, but "Red Hair" is the best.

Good Health, for November—Contents: Our Drinks; The structure and care of the Ear; The abuse of physical exercise; Animal parasites of the human skin; Fish breeding; Sleeplessness in infants; Reading for a leisure hour.

Hitchcock's New Monthly Magazine of choice music for October is a gem. It is the handsomest musical work that comes to us. Published by Benjamin W. Hitchcock, 24 Beekman street, New York, monthly, at $3.00 per annum.

The Rural World, of October 30th, is quite up to its ordinary average.

Home Eclectic Monthly, published by Sumner Ellis, Chicago, is a readable paper of TROWEL size, at one dollar a year.

Home Circle and Temperance Oracle at hand.

Insane Fanaticism.

We cut the following precious resolution from an Eastern paper:

Resolved, That in our deliberate judgment the Pilgrim Society ought at once to take up the cornerstone of the Pilgrim Monument at Plymouth, and remove from the cavity in the same the plate on which the names of the Grand Lodges of Masons in this State, with its grand officers, appear above those of the Governor of Massachusetts and the President of the United States; and that all imprints and inscriptions of the sect of Freemasons should be erased, by law, from all our public buildings and monuments, as subversive of the idea of popular government, and tending to make Freemasonry the religion of the State.

Now, it will seem singular to our readers that no man in North Wenthan, Mass., could be induced to offer so infamous a resolution, but that the agitators had to send all the way to Illinois for President Blanchard to do their dirty work—one who alleges that the reason why Mrs. Stowe published the Byronic article is that she is a Universalist!!

Vesper Lodge, No. 584

This young lodge at Galesburg, has attained distinction in the character and attainments of its members and initiates, and in the excellence of its work.

Its officers, recently installed by Judge Lanphere, are:

O. F. Price, W. M.; J. L. Dewey, S. W.; J. H. Bell, J. W.; C. E. Baldwin, Treas.; A. W. Berggren, Sec.; H. E. Parker, S. D.; W. H. Fuson, J. D.; T. N. McQueen, Tyler.

The event of the evening, was the presentation of a silver pitcher, beautifully engraved, by Judge Lanphere on behalf of the lodge to Grand Lecturer Dewey, for gratuitous and valuable instruction.

Dedication.

R. W. Bro. Rodney Ashley, of Kankakee, assisted by R. W. Bro. H. W. Hubbard, of Centralia, dedicated the new Masonic Hall at Kankakee agreeably to ancient form and usage. We congratulate the noble brethren upon their success, and can but compliment them for their courage and recuperative energy. May their future be crowned with unfading renown.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

The year which is drawing to a close has been free from pestilence. Health has prevailed throughout the land; abundant crops reward the labor of the husbandman; commerce and manufactures have successfully prosecuted their peaceful paths; the mines and forests have yielded liberally; the nation has increased in wealth and in strength; peace has prevailed, and its blessings have advanced every interest of the people of every part of the Union; harmony and fraternal intercourse are restored, obliterating the marks of the past conflict and estrangement; burdens have been lightened, means increased, civil and religious liberty are secured to every inhabitant of the land whose soil is trod by none but freemen. It becomes a people thus favored to make acknowledgment to the Supreme Author, from whom such blessings flow, of their gratitude and dependence; to render praise and thanksgiving for the same, and devoutly to implore a continuance of God's mercies. Therefore, I, U. S. Grant, President of the United States, do recommend that Thursday, the 18th day of November next, be observed as a day of thanksgiving and of praise, of prayer to Almighty God, the Creator and Ruler of the Universe; and, second, I do further recommend to all the people of the United States to assemble in their accustomed places of public worship, and to unite in that homage and praise due to the bountiful Father of all mercy, and in fervent prayers for the continuance of the merciful blessings he has vouchsafed to us as a people. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United Stases to be affixed, this, the 5th day of October, A. D. 1869, and of the independence of the United States of America the ninety-fourth.

U. S. GRANT.

By the President,
HAMILTON FISH, Sec'y of State.

Impostor.

CORDOVA, Ill., Oct. 11 1869.

Harman G. Reynolds, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois:

DEAR BROTHER—By order of the Worshipful Master, Wardens, and Brethren of Cordova Lodge No. 543, A. F. and A. M, I am instructed to notify you that J. T. LONG, formerly a resident of this place is traveling about the country representing himself as a member of this lodge, which is false. When he came to this place he represented himself as a Mason belonging to a lodge in some other State, and tried to gain admittance to our lodge; but, on examination by a competent committee, he could not make himself known as such. He is a shrewd, sharp fellow; a school teacher by profession; and now in the employ of the Knickerbocker Life Assurance Company; is about 35 years of age, light complected, about five feet six inches high, and well calculated to deceive.

Yours fraternally,

JESSE S. DAILEY, Sec. p. t.

Good! Glad! Right!

OFFICE OF G. G. SEC. OF THE G. G. CHAPTER,
OF THE U. S. OF A.
CINCINNATI, O., October 27th, A. D. 1869.

Sixty-third year of organization, A. I. 2399.

The following official documents, filed in this office, are communicated to the Royal Craft for information and observance.

In behalf of the General Grand Chapter.

JOHN D. CALDWELL,
General Grand Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE G. G. H. P. OF THE G. G. CHAPTER,
OF THE U. S. OF A.
NEW YORK, October, 25th, 1869.

To whomsoever it may concern, and especially all regular Royal Arch Masons acknowledging the jurisdiction of the General Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons of the United States of America, GREETING:

WHEREAS, the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Florida, at a regular convocation, held in the city of Tallahassee, commencing on the 11th day of January, 1869, did adopt the following preamble and resolution—to-wit:

"WHEREAS, The General Grand Chapter of the United States of America, waiving all matters heretofore in controversy, relative to the organization of this Grand Chapter, thereby admitting the regularity of the same, has most cordially and fraternally invited this Grand Chapter to become a constitutional member thereof."

"Resolved, That this Grand Chapter accept such invitation, in a true Masonic spirit, and will hereafter bear allegiance and support to the said General Grand Chapter."

"Adopted by the Grand Chapter the 13th day of January, 1869. "Attest,

[L. S.] "EDWARD BRADFORD, JR., Grand Sec."

Now, therefore, I James M. Austin, General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, of the United States of America, do hereby order and direct, that said Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Florida be received and enrolled under the jurisdiction of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, and be hailed and recognized accordingly.

The present opportunity is embraced, to show the companions of Florida, a warm and generous welcome to the family of Grand Chapters forming the General Grand Chapter of the United States, and to congratulate the Royal Craft, upon this auspicious exhibition of fraternal love and the spirit which Masonry teaches.

The General Grand High Priest avails himself of this occasion, to offer to the Royal Craft his earnest congratulations upon the fact, that the Grand Chapter of Iowa, at its late convocation, rescinded its resolutions of withdrawal, resuming its place in the national compact.

The R. E. John D. Caldwell, General Grand Secretary, is hereby charged with the promulgation of this decree.

Given under my hand and private seal, at the city of New York, the day and year first above written.

JAMES M. AUSTIN, General Grand High Priest.

Trouble in Canada.

GRAND LODGE OF A. F. AND A. M. OF CANADA,
G. SECRETARY'S OFFICE, HAMILTON, Oct. 25 1869.

To the M. W. Grand Master, Officers, and Brethren of the Grand Lodge of Illinois:

M. W. SIR AND BRETHREN.—I have the honor by command of the M. W. the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Canada, to bring to the notice of your Grand Lodge the existence of a rebellious and seditious movement by certain mal-content brethren in the Province of Quebec, with the object and aim of establishing a second Grand Lodge within our Territorial jurisdiction, the supreme control over which has been recognized and accorded to this Grand Lodge by every Grand Lodge in the world.

These rebellious brethren, many of whom are under suspension, called a convention, which met in the city of Montreal on the 25th instant (at which the public prints report there were about twenty lodges represented, less than one-half of the lodges in that portion of our jurisdiction—and two of the lodges mentioned had been suspended for the contumacious conduct of its members)—and formed a so-called Grand Lodge, electing officers, &c., &c. In the same report it is reported that Brother J. H. Graham, of Richmond, was elected Grand Master, and Brother Edson Kemp, of Nelsonville, Grand Secretary, &c. Doubtless this pretended organization will shortly make application to your M. W. Grand Lodge for recognition, counsel and support. The Grand Lodge of Canada is preparing a circular which it is intended shall be sent to all the Grand Lodges with which it is in friendly and fraternal correspondence, containing full and complete information in regard to this most unmasonic and unconstitutional movement, and pending its reception I am to express the hope that your Grand Lodge will in no manner accord a recognition to this irregular and clandestine organization.

I have the honor to remain, your obedient servant and brother.

THOMAS B. HARPIS.
G. Sec. Grand Lodge of Canada.

The Knights Templar.

The Hon. H. L. Palmer, of Wisconsin, was in Sept. 1865, elected Grand Master of Knights Templar of the United States, and his administration of three years duration, was a highly successful one. Freemasonry, in its purity and beneficent action, has no more zealous supporter, in all of its degrees, than this eminent Sir Knight; a son of New York, and who has made himself, by the brilliancy of his talents, one of the most popular men of Masonry and the bar of the great West. In Sept. 1868 last, the triennial conclave of the Grand Encampment of these States met at St. Louis, Mo., and the acts of the Grand Master, during his three years or service, were fully and cordially endorsed by the grand body over which he had ably presided. On his retirement from his high office, the grand conclave adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Grand Encampment are heartily tendered to Most Eminent Past Grand Master Sir Henry L. Palmer, for the zeal, fidelity, and ability with which he has administered his high office, and that a committee be appointed to procure and present to him, in behalf of this Grand Encampment, an appropriate testimonial of the high esteem in which he is held by all Knights Templar.

It was made known, in September last, that the committee appointed by the Grand Encampment, as above stated, were ready to make the presentation referred to, and a conclave of the Wisconsin Commandery, No. 1, having its commandery at Milwaukee, was called, to take such action in the matter as might be deemed proper. That commandery, one of the finest in the West, met, and after quoting the above resolution of the Grand Encampment, passed the following preamble and resolutions, which speak for themselves:

WHEREAS, The committee under said resolution, consisting of Most Eminent Past Grand Master Sir B. B. French of Washington, D. C., Eminent Past Grand Commander Sir John W. Simons of New York, and R. Eminent Past Grand Commander Sir Thomas J. Corson, of New Jersey, have performed their duty by procuring the testimonial so awarded, and signified their intention of presenting the same to Most Eminent Sir H. L. Palmer, at Milwaukee, on or about the 12th day of October, proximo; therefore,

Resolved, That in token of appreciation of the justness of this commendation of one to whom this commandery and the Grand Commandery of the State of Wisconsin owe so much for their existence and prosperity; and as evidence of a just pride in the fame of a member of this organization, upon whom the highest Templar authority of this country has bestowed such a "reward of merit," Wisconsin Commandery hereby tenders to the distinguished fraters, and those accompanying them on this mission, a cordial knightly welcome, and an invitation to accept the hospitality of the commandery during their stay.

Resolved, That the Eminent Commander be, and is hereby authorized and requested to make ample preparation for the reception and entertainment of these visitors, and others whom we may invite to participate with us on that occasion, in a manner appropriate to their rank, and becoming the character and standing of Wisconsin Commandery with true chivalric and Christian Knighthood.

In consonance with these proceedings, a programme was made out for the 12th of October, and was closely followed. It was as follows:

The ceremonies of the occasion comprised a reception at the Newhall House at 8 o'clock P. M., and a banquet at 9 o'clock. All Sir Knights were courteously invited to be present with their ladies, and participate with Commandery No. 1 in honors befitting the occasion. The Sir Knights appeared in full dress, and the occasion was honored by a vast throng of ladies and Sir Knights, visitors and residents.

The following were the committees, and their duties, we are pleased to say, were scrupulously and admirably performed: Reception—Sir A. V. H. Carpenter, Sir E. H. Stone. Sir H. A. Starr, Sir G. B. Goodwin, Sir R. B. Miller, Sir E. F. White. Executive—Sir F. J. Crosby, Sir S. Sanborn, Sir C. M. Hoyt, Sir J. Hamilton, Sir J. R. Drake, Sir E. P. Mathews, Sir J. H. Tesch. Music—Sir T. Forbes, Sir D. N. Kasson, Sir S. Cadwallader. Decorations—Sir F. A. Lydston, Sir W. E. Kittredge, Sir A. B. Hewett.

The capacious dining hall and ladies' ordinary of the Newhall House were most tastefully decorated for the occasion. Overhead the national colors and emblems of knighthood were gracefully festooned, while the colors of the order—red and white—were hung tastefully around the room. Maltese crosses, with flaming stars in the centre, and bearing the names of all the States, were arranged among the decorations; and beautiful banners bearing the emblems, were hung in various parts of the room. At the head of the hall a beautiful triple cross was hung, bearing the inscription, "1869—Palmer Testimonial—H. L. Palmer, Milwaukee, M. E. P. G. M." The tables were arranged in the main dining hall in the form of a triple cross. The ornamental dishes all bore Masonic emblems, executed in a highly artistic manner. In the center a royal arch, made of confectionery, was erected. Throughout the entire length of the tables the most elegant pyramids of fruit, confectionery, and flowers were placed, producing an effect which it would be difficult to excel.

The viands and wines were all that the most fastidious and exacting tastes could desire, and would have tempted an anchorite from his cell. Even the good St. Anthony, without the blandishments of female charms which tradition tells us Satan tempted him with, and made the good old saint shaky in his virtue, might have been lured from his retirement, and his pater nosters, if he had caught sight of those groaning tables laden, as they were with every delicacy and with the choicest liquid incentives to wit and gallantry.

The Sir Knights of Wisconsin Commandery No. 1, and their wives and daughters entered the banqueting hall first and took their places, Eminent Commander J. H. Dodge in the highest position. Sir A. V. H. Carpenter then escorted the visiting Sir Knights and their ladies to the hall, and presented them to Wisconsin Commandery in a few brief and well chosen remarks, to which Eminent Commander Dodge responded, welcoming them to the hospitalities of the commandery. A blessing was asked by Sir Samuel Fallows, when all seated themselves and gaiety and hilarity reigned, while wit, stimulated by beauty, flashed and sparkled over the board.

At the conclusion of the banquet, E. Commander Sir J. H. Dodge introduced M. E. J. W. Simons, P. G. M., who in fitting words presented to Sir H. L. Palmer and wife a beautiful set of solid silver cutlery, and to Sir Knight Palmer a copy of the testimonial resolutions of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar, elegantly embossed and richly bound, and containing all the emblems of knighthood, all beautifully executed with a pen. Sir Knight Palmer responded eloquently to the remarks of Sir Knight Simons. We regret very much that we have not a report of the speeches on the occasion.

As soon as the hall could be cleared after the banquet, the guests returned and engaged in the pleasures of the dance. The courtly Sir Knights and their beautiful ladies never appeared to better advantage and never enjoyed themselves better, we venture to say, than when tripping lightly through the intricacies of the dance.

The occasion will long be remembered by those who took part in it. We have given space and a prominent position to the affair for the reason that it has interest for every Knight Templar in the land, and for the reason also that the account of the re-union will be read with pleasure by thousands of our readers who have not yet reached the commandery degrees, but who still feel a deep interest in having every link of the grand Masonic chain that binds us into a common brotherhood kept bright and strong. Such meetings as these tend to do these things, and when they take place, with happy results, and to the satisfaction and indeed delight of the better sex, they should be noted.—N. Y. Dispatch.

◆

Grand Orient of Italy.

The progress which Freemasonry has made in Italy is attracting considerable attention amongst the various Masonic bodies throughout the world.

In England, however, but little interest has been displayed by the members of our Grand Lodge, and no official recognition has as yet been vouchsafed to the governing Masonic body having its head-quarters in Florence; indeed the Grand Lodge of England is looked upon by many foreign Masonic bodies as being not only cold, and unsympathetic, but we fear often uncourteous, if not un-Masonic.

Freemasonry, however, is making sound progress throughout Italy; the Grand Orient of Italy at Florence held its meeting in nine sittings beginning on the 15th of June last, when an adjustment of the relation between the whole of the Masonic bodies working in Italy, since the time of Italy being divided into several kingdoms and principalities was effected, and the organization of the grand governing body was with the consent of all parties, finally settled; the materials for compiling the following, have been officially communicated to us by the Most Worshipful the Acting Grand Master Mason of Italy.

The Grand Orient, of Freemasonry, in Italy and for the Colonies and dependencies of the Italian Crown, was established in Florence in 1861. It was reconstructed in the year 1864, and further accessions of lodges and minor governing bodies were obtained in 1867, and by a definitive ordonance after lengthened negociations, the whole of the Masonic bodies in Italy having given in their adhesion, it became the sole Masonic governing body in the Italian Peninsula in June last, and a general assembly was held in Florence between the 15th and 20th of June, when the Illustrious Bro. General Joseph Garibaldi, 33 °, "was elected the first Mason of Italy," and Honorary Grand Master for life. The second Honorary Grand Master then appointed was the Illus. Bro. Francois De Luca, 33 °, Member of Parliament. The Acting Grand Master elected for three years from the 19th June 1869 is the Illustrious Bro. Colonel L. Frapolli, 33 °, Member of Parliament. The first Deputy Grand Master, Bro. Joseph Mazzoni is well-known as ex. Triumver of Tuscany. The second Deputy Grand Master Bro. Francois Curzio, Member of Parliament. The Grand Secretary, Bro. Pio Adducci. The Grand Treasurer, Bro. Cesar Correa. The Grand Registrar, Bro. Antoine Facci.

The following brethren were elected members of the Council of the Order:

General Frederic Pescetto, M. P.
Jean Nicotera, M. P.
Dominique Farini, M. P.
Xavier Nicolai, M. P.
Gherard Gherard.
Georges Asproni, M. P.
Americ Borgiotti.
Joachim Rasponi.
Admiral Jean Ricci, M. P.
Ignace Specchi, Senator.
Leopold Caccavale.
Antoine Oliva, M. P.
Fabius Cannella, M. P.
Anthelme Severini.
Alphonse Gabussi.
Dominique De Luca.
Conrad Tommasi-Crudeli.
Augustin De Pretis, M. P.

They are belonging to the present organization, and working in communion 133 lodges in Italy besides 19 lodges in foreign countries. There is a Supreme Council of the 33 ° of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, in Florence, under which there is a Consistory of 32 °, a Council of the 30 °, 5 conclaves, and 19 Rose Croix Chapters.

Of the 19 lodges working in foreign countries, two are in Constantinople; 4 in Smyrna and the neighborhood; 1 in Salonica; 2 in Cairo; 3 in Alexandria (Egypt); 1 in Tripoli; 1 in Tunis; 1 in Lima, (Peru); 1 in Buneos Ayres, and 3 in Montevideo.

There is an official bulletin of the Grand Orient, published twice a year in Florence, and L'Avvenire Sociale, published weekly in Palermo.

Thus it will be seen, Freemasonry has a sound footing in Italy, and we feel we are but echoing the sentiments of a great mass of our brethren in Italy, when we express a desire to see intimate official relations established between the Grand Lodge of England and the Grand Orient of Italy.—London F. M. Mag.

◆

"The True Work."

We continually hear discussed what is the "true work," the "old work," the "new work," Smith's "work," or some other man's "work," but scarcely ever hear a word about "how to work."

Uniformity is a great thing in work, as all working Masons appreciate; and so far as uniformity can ever be attained in this world it is not a difficult task for any grand lodge that goes systematically about it. Let it adopt its work, teach and enforce it, and there is the end of it.

Unfortunately, however, grand lodges can not infuse into its subordinate officers the genius how to work. That must come from the man himself.

In the first place he must possess sufficient confidence in himself to talk out plain and distinctly, and not mumble his words as though he had his mouth full of hot mush.

Second, He should not be too lazy to stand up at the proper time.

Third, When it is proper to sit down he should use his hips instead of the back of his neck.

Fourth, If he can possibly afford it, he should dress as well as he does when he goes to church, and not as though he was going to break rocks, for it is a very rare thing to see even the candidate do less than this; and if he did we should lose much confidence in his moral and mental worth. The lodge-room is a sacred place, and should be respected.

Fith, The Master should have sense to know that when steel and flint strike it brings fire, and that unless he feels and appreciates the importance of the business in which he is engaged he can not possibly electrify his candidate. Everything depends on this, viz.: That the heart, soul, and brain of the candidate must be deeply impressed with the sublime lessons intended to be inculcated by Masonic symbolism. If he is not, he has bought nothing but chaff.

Sixth, The Master must possess the same power over his officers and members, and see that they are awake and alive to their interests, and not allow them to treat him and the lodge as though they were holding a township caucus in a barn.

Now all these are plain and solid facts, and all these qualifications can just as well be centered in one man, as easy as it is for him to learn the work itself; in fact much easier.

If any of our readers happen to be Masters who have neglected these points and wondered why they went through their work with as little result and as much labor as climbing a hill for nothing, let them turn over a new leaf, awaken to a proper realization of their high office, that they are the ministers of God to teach and impress upon immortal souls truths that shall never die; then they will see their lodge-rooms full and their candidates anxious to learn and improve. You might put a dry goods clerk behind the best plow in the world and he will probably break it, or his neck, before he has gone once around the field. So in Masonry. It is one thing to know the "true work," and another to know how to truly work it. One is as important as the other. Try them both.—St. Louis Freemason.

◆

ONE hundred and ten thousand pilgrims are estimated to have assembled at Mount Ararat in the late Mecca pilgrimage, or about 25,000 more than in 1868. The public health is reported to be perfectly good, both among the pilgrims and in the neighborhood of Mecca.

Maxims of Pythagorus.

This distinguished philosopher and Mason was accustomed to instruct his pupils in sentenious maxim, concealing, under a slight mask, the most important truths of his system. Some of these pithy sayings have been preserved. Wear not a ring. Do not encircle yourself with ignorance. Turn away from thyself every edge. Be prudent and subdue your passions. Take off thy right shoe first. Be careful of the consequences of every enterprise in which you may engage. Travelling from home turn not back, for the furies go back with you. When you begin a great and important undertaking, do it with the intention of completing it, and allow nothing to deter you or turn you back. This maxim Pythagorus particularly applied to his Masonic system. Those who entered it were exhorted not to stop short of the highest attainments in it of which they were capable. Look not into a glass by candle-light. Spurn superficial knowledge. The motto of Pope is:

> "A little learning is a dangerous thing;
> Drink deep, or taste not the Pieran spring."

Shallow attainments are worse than little better than none. Aim at perfect knowledge, that you may learn of God and "know Him even as yourself are known." Pass not over the balance. An exhortation to Equality and Justice. Put not meal in an unworthy vessel. Our Saviour gave the same maxim—"cast not your pearls before swine, lest they turn again and rend you." Eat not the heart nor the brain. Do nothing that can effect the fraternal bond that makes one of the brotherhood. Sleep not at noon. Be awake and active to secure knowledge when it is in the way of being dispensed.

◆

From the New Age.

The Year's I. O. O. F. Official Record for 1869.

The following figures show the state of the Order, as per official report of Grand Secretary Ridgely, made to the G. L. U. S. at its present session:

SUBORDINATE LODGES.
Whole number of Lodges	3,446
Number of Initiations during the year	40,737
Number of Rejections	4,695
Admitted by Card	6,985
Reinstatements	3,612
Withdrawals	8,725
Suspensions	14,356
Expulsions	1,057
Deaths	2,191
Total number of Members	068,395
Brothers relieved	22,894
Amount paid for relief of Brothers	$289,144 70
Am't paid for relief of widowed families.	113,204 71
Amount paid for educating Orphans	17.420 46
Amount paid for burying the Dead	118.080 55
Total amount paid for relief	742,911 46
Annual Receipts of Lodges	2,308,993 43
ENCAMPMENTS.
Whole number of Encampments	769
Initiations	7,942
Rejections	290
Admitted by Card	932
Withdrawals	1,202
Re-instatements	429
Suspensions	1,653
Expulsions	453
Deaths	414
Whole number of Members	47,140
Members relieved	5,360
Widowed families relieved	156
Paid for relief of Members	$67,060 05
Paid for relief of Widowed families	4,708 45
Paid for educating Orphans	356 90
Paid for burying the Dead	13,039 19
Total amount paid for relief	75,041 39
Annual Receipts of Encampments	260,324 10
RECAPITULATION.
Whole number of Lodges	3,446
Increase of Lodges during the year	251
Whole number of Working Members	268,395
Increase of Members during the year	23.359
Total Annual Receipts	$2,569,317 53
Increase of Annual Receipts	206,021 33
Brothers relieved	22,894
Total amount paid for relief, etc. etc	817,952 85
Decrease of amount paid for relief	133,603 36
Surplus cash on hand from the year's Receipts after paying relief, etc	1,751,364 68
Increase of Surplus Cash from the year's Receipts	339,634 68

The above glorious record speaks for itself. May the Supreme Ruler of the Universe continue to smile upon, bless, and prosper our beloved Order in its holy mission, until the world is encircled with the golden links of Friendship, Love, and Truth, and all nations, kindred, and tongues, acknowledge but one law—the law of Universal Brotherhood.

Miscellaneous Reading.

Blood on the Calumet--A Story of Council Bluffs.

BY EDWARD MINTURN.

Places of romantic beauty, scenery wild and picturesque in its character are not very frequently found in Iowa—indeed it is rather the farmer's paradise, a land fitted for the realities more than the dreams of life. Yet in the leafy groves, high bluffs, and deep ravines about Council Bluffs—its streams and wooded knolls, there is enough of romantic beauty to satisfy any one who has seen the wild grandeur of the Yo-Semite, the fearful chasms of the Colorado, or the wilds of the snow-crowned Sierras of the far, far West.

Years gone, there was a great pow-wow of pale faces and red men near where the city of Council Bluffs now stands in its beauty and many graces. Great chiefs from the Omaha, Pawnee, and Sioux were there—the less warlike Pottawatamies were represented; indeed, almost all of the contiguous tribes, except alone the treacherous Cheyennes, were there. Of the latter, no known agent was present, though they had received presents and messengers with the others and promised to be there.

General Harney, the dread of the red men, the king of the pale faced war-chiefs, strode to and fro about the council ground, his red face flushed with excitement, his eyes flashing as he glanced from war-chief to war-chief, with a look which told that he had rather fight than talk, and these parties were not of his willing or getting up.

Camped around, glittering with beads, calicoes and ribbons, were the squaws of the chiefs and warriors, not daring to approach the circle of their lords, but among themselves keeping up that clattering which with all races seems to be a part of woman nature.

The hour of the council drew near—the government officers were seen in their most showy uniforms, gathering toward the great circle centered by the council fire—the chiefs in paint, feathers and blankets, approached, and finally to the rapid drum beat, all came together.

It was a gallant sight. Full twenty officers in their handsome uniforms, seated on camp-stools, with their interpreters close at hand, full one hundred chiefs and warriors in all their finery upon the ground, so seated in the circle that each could see the other's face, or hear another's words when he rose to speak.

The great calumet or pipe of peace was brought and filled by a white-haired prophet of the Omahas. It had a huge bowl made from the red stone of the far north; its long stem was ornamented with dove's feathers—it was never used on a less occasion than this.

Going to the sacred council-fire which, with due ceremony had been lighted, the white-haired prophet took up a bright coal and placed it on the tobacco and kinikinnick; then, with the stem to his lips, he drew a whiff of smoke and sent it circling up toward the heavens!

This was the invocative offering to the Great Spirit.

Next, drawing a whiff for each point of the compass, north, south, east, and west, he propitiated the spirits of the wind.

Then advancing to General Harney he handed him the pipe and said:

"Great War King of the Pale Faces! Son of the Great Father in Washington! let the Peace-pipe from your lips go round the circle and come back to me empty!"

The General drew a whiff from the pipe and passed it to the next in rank, and thus it went from man to man until it once more reached the white-haired prophet.

His face darkened as he looked at the pipe.

"Brothers!" he cried, "we are met here to make peace. But there is bad blood here. Some one means evil. There is blood upon the pipe!'

And holding it aloft he pointed to a dark stain, almost black, on the bright red bowl.

"Who is the traitor? Is he an Omaha? If so, let him speak! Is he a Cheyenne with a Pawnee blanket upon him?"

No one spoke. The old man paused and seemed to reflect what next to do or say, for he had been selected to lead the council.

The General, long used to Indian ways, preserved a dignified composure, spoke no word, nor did he give any sign.

"The pipe must go around again!" said the prophet.

And even as he spoke, the dark spot vanished from it. He noticed this but said not a word. The pipe was refilled and with the same ceremony lighted again.

Once more from the General's lips it passed on, this time being followed by the keen eye of the prophet of the Omahas.

It had almost swept the circle, when, with a sharp cry, the prophet sprang forward, wrenched the pipe from the hands of the warrior who held it, with one hand, and with the other tore the blanket from his stalwart form.

"Behold!" he shouted. "Here is the Black Vulture of the Cheyennes hidden in the blanket of a Pawnee. His hand is red with the blood of a hundred pale-faces. The truth would blister his false tongue. He has come as a spy to our council. Even now Cheyenne warriors may be near, thirsting for our blood, waiting but his signal to strike. He has dishonored the peace pipe! He must die! I have spoken!"

The ominous grunt of approval broke from every warrior's lip. The prophet spoke, and from beyond the circle, for no weapon was allowed within it, a keen tomahawk was thrown at his feet.

He bent to take it up, but before the handle met his hand it was seized by the Black Vulture, who, with a fiendish yell, dashed it deep among his white hairs. Then, with a bound, like that of a tiger roused from its lair, he cleared the circle, and while a hundred warriors rushed for their weapons and in pursuit, he sprung down the hillside into a dark ravine and was out of sight.

The white-haired prophet dead, still held the blood-stained calumet in his clasp, while the wonder-stricken warriors hastened to avenge his fate.

But soon up from that ravine, toward which they hurried, came a cloud of warriors and the yell of full five times their number of foes, who under the lead of the Black Vulture, now moved on to destroy them.

It was well indeed for those chiefs that Harney was there, and the noble Sumner with his mounted riflemen, else not one of them or their squaws had ever returned to the villages they had left.

The troops which had been kept out of sight now galloped forward and soon whistling lead was flying in exchange for the headed arrows. The Cheyennes, fighting desperately, fell back, but not until the Black Vulture fell did they fairly take to flight.

Then, attempting only escape, they rode madly to the banks of the deep Missouri, but the well-armed pale-faces were close behind and few of them reached the other bank.

What was the mystery, or how the blood appeared on the calumet, we may never know, but doubtless it saved a bloody massacre which would have sent mourning among many tribes, and cost the United States some of the best officers in the service.

And this is but one of many evidences which can be written about "Council Bluffs."

◆

Contrary Days.

We all have days when everything goes wrong. We get up in the morning with the best intentions in the world, and begin the work of the day hopefully, with a full stock of courage and patience; and we have to fight obstacles and row against wind and tide from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same. Little obstacles, perhaps, but quite sufficient to hinder us—light winds and tides, but a good many of them.

This bit of moralizing was suggested to me by seeing a little boy stumble on the street and drop a half-eaten apple into the mud, while his hat, which his unfortunate stumble had jerked off, sailed away into a neighboring field on the wings of the wind; said field being full of wide ditches, which he had been forbidden to approach.

As I looked at him, there came back to me the memory of a bitter cold day in winter, one of the winters of my housekeeping life, and I realized just how the little fellow felt.

On that cold day we were living in a large old house which had been a country tavern half a century before, when people believed in airy rooms and great fire-places. We made a sitting-room of what had been the bar-room, covering the floor with two ordinary-sized carpets that yet left a wide margin for improvements next to the walls. This room was on the sunny side of the house, and when old Boreas whistled and blew and made it quite impossible for us to stay on the bleak moor of the north kitchen, we just cooked and ate and studied and did fancy work in the bar-room.

You wouldn't suppose that such a bitter cold day could have been one of the contrary ones, but it was.

My husband used to wake me in the mornings as soon as the house was warm enough to stir round comfortably; but it was very late on this particular morning before he aroused me.

"Don't get up yet," he said, "I've been down stairs, and the house is all frozen up. The most unbridled imagination would not conceive the wild idea of warming the kitchen. The water-pail is frozen solid, and two tumblers, one pitcher, and the basin that your mother gave you, are cracked by the frost. A tower of ice is bulging from the top of the vinegar-bottle, and the acid separated therefrom is quietly spreading itself over the new paint on the pantry shelves. Farther than that, deponent saith not."

"Is there a fire anywhere?" I asked, sleepily, putting the end of my nose out of bed, but drawing it back quickly as soon as the frost struck it.

"Yes. In the sitting-room. There is a slight thaw in that direction. But it is too cold to get breakfast anywhere."

"Is it? We'll see about that," I answered, resolutely. "Just call me when the room is warm. I was having a beautiful dream, and I want to finish it."

When I went down into the bar-room, I thought I had never seen it look so wide and dreary before. It certainly had the convenience that Mr. Micawber sought in Australia—"space."

It was Saturday. Baking day. With all the baking apparatus frozen. With no baker or market within seven miles. With the holy Sabbath only sixteen hours ahead.

"What will you do?" asked my husband, dubiously. His face wore the puzsled expression so common to masculine visages in a dilemma. If it had only been a question to be ciphered out—a something to be mathematically demonstrated—his way would have been clear, but it was simply a question of bread and butter. My woman's genius rose at once, equal to the occasion.

"Do!" I repeated, showing as little of my sense of superiority as I could, "Do! Why, get breakfast, of course."

"But how?"

"First, we will make some tea. We won't wait to thaw out the tea-kettle; we can make it for once in the tea-pot, with cold water."

"Well, you just set it to stewing, and I will bring the rest of the things in."

We can warm up the cold roast, and fry over the potatoes," said I, cheerily, "and the coals are already bright enough to toast the bread. I like this way of living. It's real gipsey. Just set out the table, please. It's too cold for company, and we'll do as Mrs. Jones did."

"How was that?"

"As if you had forgotten!"

"I don't think I ever heard of anything in particular that Mrs. Jones did, and I haven't the slightest idea what Mrs. Jones is referred to."

"Mrs. Peter Jones. We were going past her house, you and I—no, it was your brother and I—and we heard her talking to her husband. 'Now, Pete Jones, you needn't speak a word. I shall do just what I'd ruther.' That tea will lose all its delicate aroma. Let me set it off."

It was in an earthen tea-pot, and, as I lifted it carefully, the bottom of it chose to remain on the stove. No power of cohesion could keep that tea in position after the sides of the pot were removed. Down it came, hissing and spluttering on the top of the stove, splashing in boiling cascades down its sides, and then spreading itself out as flat as possible all over the carpet.

"Whew!" said my husband, looking at me and the subsiding tea as if we were parts of a tableau; "what will come next?"

"The coffee-pot," I answered. "That is a Britania, and it can't burst. We'll make coffee next. But first, I must wipe up some of this tea. Fetch the floor-cloth, please."

"The mop, you mean. Anything else from the black settlements?"

"Yes, the kerosene-filler. It will save one journey."

They were brought, and the oil-can was deposited in a corner near by, while I reached under and around the stove in search of the wasted tea-grounds. I felt the bottom of my skirt catch on something as I changed my position, but "one thing at a time" is my motto, so I didn't look round until my husband exclaimed, suddenly, "My dear! you have tipped that filler over."

"Where? What?" My head was dizzy with bending down.

"The kerosene! It is running out of the can all over the carpet."

I snatched the can from the floor, and sprang up to ascertain the extent of the mischief. As I did so, I struck my head against the high old-fashioned mantel-piece, where my husband had just put a plate of butter to soften. It was a narrow shelf, and the butter lost its balance at once, and turning completely over, came squarely down upon the top of the stove and stuck there, melting away as prodigally as if it had not cost fifty cents a pound.

"Really," said my husband, meditatively, while I rubbed a new phrenological development on my head; "really, my dear, the fates are opposed to our having any breakfast." He righted the butter, and placed it on the table. Its pretty oak-leaf stamp was quite gone.

I did not deign to reply. I had a different subject under contemplation. Did you ever see a half-pint of kerosene spread itself in a woolen carpet?

"Just look at it," said my husband, dolefully; "how that grease-spot grows!"

"Of course it does," I answered, snappishly; "it will never stop. If you had put that into your lecture on 'Everlasting Influences,' instead of that nonesense about moving the other side of the Atlantic Ocean by throwing a pebble into Boston Bay, there would have been some sense in it."

He laughed heartily at my ill-natured fling at his lecture, but he was not to be diverted from the business of the day. "Literary critiques are out of order just now," he said. "It is not the mind but the stomach that is waiting to be fed. How is that to be accomplished?"

"Bread," I began sagely, "bread is the staff of life. I have two good loaves of it safe in a stone jar."

"And where is the jar?"

"In the cellar-way. On the upper stair. Please bring it while I watch the coffee." It is possible that ten seconds had elapsed when I heard a dull fall in the cellar way, and directly something went bounce, bounce, down the stairs. I knew, without looking, that it was the bread. I knew, too, that the cellar had a soft, muddy, floor that never froze or dried. Our way across it was on wide planks, but the bread would be likely to choose a path for itself.

I opened the door. My husband sat on the upper stair, gazing hopelessly down into the dark depths below. The empty jar was beside him. As he looked up our eyes met, and we burst simultaneously into a fit of laughter, which was only checked by my terror lest he should go rolling down the stairs after the bread.

The law of gravitation is perfectly established in this house," he said, at last. "My dear, don't you think we had better go back to bed, and omit the day altogether?"

"No, I am going to have some breakfast."

"Perseverance accomplishes wonders," is an old saying. We found it true. It seemed impossible to accomplish anything but wonders.

We had our breakfast and repaired damages, all but the grease-spot. That maintained its position, and enlarged itself in spite of my efforts to take it out, until, in disgust, I gave the carpet to a very poor woman who had not the courage to decline it.

A Plea for the Little Ones.

Physicians trace the great mortality among children to their being left so much to the care (or rather neglect) of servants.

There is enough in these words to startle and awaken every mother to look more carefully into the characters of those to whom she confides her little ones.

Cases like this are not uncommon on our streets. Last March, on a cold, windy day, as I was walking briskly down one of the avenues in New York, two servant girls were just ahead of me, each with children in charge. They were busily talking and laughing together, entirely forgetful of the children, and sauntering as leisurely as if it was the pleasantest June weather. One of them had two little girls by the hand, the other a baby in her arms. One of the little ones was holding her muff to her face, trying to keep of the cold blasts; a gentle little patient face, it was. They moved at this pace as far as I could see, on looking back. The pneumonia was prevalent then among children. Were not the little ones exposed to it by the carelessness of their nurses, I thought, and how little the mothers suspected it?

Those who see the unfaithfulness of a nurse away from the eye of the mistress, hesitate to make it known, because it is often received in an ungracious manner. The reply is, "I can't believe it; I have too much confidence in ——, to think she would do so." A coldness ensues, and the "child martyr" suffers on.

An eye-witness relates to me that she saw, two summers ago, a nurse from the city hold a little child over the side of a bridge, where the water was running swiftly beneath, to punish it; the child struggled and screamed in an agony of terror. When asked, "Did you not tell its mother?" "Oh, no," was the reply, she would not have believed me, and would only have been offended." We think we should have risked that, for the dear baby's sake.

If a nurse must be employed, let it not be a young and thoughtless girl. A precious little boy, two years old, fell from a chair and injured his spine, while his nurse (a young girl) was talking, from a window, with painters on the outside of the house. He lingered months, a lovely, patient sufferer, and then died. It was a heart-breaking lesson to that young mother, and one she heeded, to devote herself more to her children, and to leave none but an experienced nurse about them, in her absence.

In my early days there was no difficulty in obtaining worthy American women as nurses; kind, truthful, and faithful. Such a nurse is rarely found now; we are obliged to employ those who come to us from across the sea, ignorant, selfish, and immature in judgment.

Let me plead for the dear children, that mothers be themselves their nurses, as far as possible. You will be repaid for it by their loving caresses, and their improved health of mind and body. Do not banish them from you to the nursery, that you may drive, and visit, and enjoy yourself. Let them share your pleasures, and be under your constant oversight; and home will be the happiest place, because "mother" is there.

God has only lent them to you; their lives are very frail; on a little neglect, or a little care, turns their whole future; you may see them laid in the grave in infancy, or you may enjoy their dear companionship for a lifetime. Precious reward for the labors and self-denials of a true loving mother. "Her children arise up and call her blessed."—Mother at Home.

The Oldest City in the World.

Damascus may now be regarded as the oldest inhabited city in the world. Tyre and Sidon have crumbled on the shore; Baalbec is a ruin; Palmyra is buried in a desert; Nineveh and Babylon have disappeared from the Tigris and Euphrates. Damascus remains what it was before the days of Abraham—a centre of trade and travel—an island of verdure in the desert—a "presidential capital," with martial and sacred associations extending throughout thirty centuries. It was near Damascus that Saul of Tarsus saw the light above the brightness of the sun; the street which is called Straight, in which it is said "he prayed," still runs through the city. The caravan comes and goes as it did a thousand years ago; there is still the sheik, the ass, and the water-wheel; the merchants of the Euphrates and the Mediterranean still "occupy" these "with the multitude of their wares." The city which Mohammed surveyed from a neighboring hight, and was afraid to enter, "because it was given to man to have but one paradise, and for his part he was resolved not to have it in this world," is to-day what Julian called the "eye of the East," as it was in the time of Isaiah, "the head of Syria." From Damascus came the damson, our blue plums, and the delicious apricot of Portugal called damasco; damask, our beautiful fabric of cotton and silk, with vines and flowers raised upon a smooth bright ground; the damask rose, introduced into England in the time of Henry VIII.; the Damascus blade, so famous the world over for its keen edge and wonderful elasticity, the secret of whose manufacture was lost when Tamerlane carried off the artist into Persia; and the beautiful art of inlaying wood and steel with silver and gold; a kind of mosaic engraving and sculptural united, called damaskeening, with which boxes, bureaus, swords, and guns are ornamented. It is still a city of flowers and bright waters; the streams of Lebanon and the "silk of gold" still murmur and sparkle in the wilderness of the Syrian gardens.

A Polite Judge.

In the early history of this State, justice was administered without much pomp or parade, and the judges did not assume that "excellent gravity" so much commended by Lord Coke.

A certain judge presided at a court in which a man of the name of Green was convicted of murder, and it became his unpleasant duty to pronounce sentence of death on the culprit. He called the prisoner before him and said to him: "Mr. Green, the jury, in their verdict, say you are guilty of murder, and the law says you are to be hung. Now I want you and all your friends down on Indian Creek to know that it is not I who condemn you, but it is the jury and the law, Mr. Green. The law allows you time for preparation, and so the court wants to know what time you would like to be hung."

To this the prisoner replied: "May it please the court, I am ready at any time. Those who kill the body have no power to kill the soul. My preparation is made, and I am ready to suffer at any time the court may appoint."

The judge then said: "Mr. Green, you must know that it is a very serious matter to be hung; it can't happen to a man more than once in his life, and you had better take all the time you can get. The court will give you until this day four weeks. Mr. Clerk, look at the almanac and see whether this day four weeks comes on Sunday." The clerk looked at the almanac, as directed, and replied that "that day four weeks came on Thursday." The judge then said: "Mr. Green, the court then gives you until this day four weeks, at which time you are to be hung."

The case was prosecuted by James Turney, Esq., the Attorney-General of the State, who here interposed and said: "May it please the court, on solemn occasions like the present, when the life of a human being is to be sentenced away for crime by an earthly tribunal, it is usual and proper for courts to pronounce a formal sentence, in which the leading features of the crime shall be brought to the recollection of the prisoner, a sense of his guilt impressed on his conscience, and in which the prisoner should be duly exhorted to repentance, and warned against the judgment in the world to come."

To this the judge replied: "Oh, Mr. Turney, Mr. Green understands the whole matter as well as if I had preached to him a month. He knows that he has got to be hung this day four weeks. You anderstand it in this way, don't you, Mr. Green?" "Yes," said the prisoner, upon which the judge remanded him to jail, and the court adjourned.—Western Monthly for November.

Good-Natured and Ill-Natured Friends.

If you, benevolent reader, wish to do a kindness, and to elicit grateful feeling, go and tell a man who is growing bald that his hair is getting thicker; tell a man of seventy that he is every day looking younger; tell a man who can now walk but at a slow pace that he walks uncommonly fast; tell a middle-aged lady whose voice is cracking, that it is always growing finer; tell a cottager, who is proud of his garden, about the middle of October, that his garden is looking more blooming than in June; tell the poor artisan, the skilled workman, who has been driven by want of work to take to breaking stones for the road (which in the Scotch mind holds the Place which sweeping a crossing holds in the English) that you are pleased to see that he has got nice light work for these winter days, and if you be the parish clergyman, stop for a few moments and talk cheerfully to him; if you passed that poor down-hearted fellow to-day with only a slight recognition, he would certainly fancy (with the ingenious self-torment of fallen fortunes) that you did it because he has been obliged so sadly to come down. But if you want to prove yourself devoid of the instinctive benevolence of a gentleman, you will walk up to the man with a look of mingled grief and astonishment, and say, "Oh, John, I am sorry to see you have come to this." I have seen the like done. I have known people who, not from malignity, but from pure stolidity and coarseness of nature, would insist on impressing the man's mind how far he had come down. Gelimer, at Rome (or Constantinople, I forgot which) did not feel his fall more than the decent Scotch carpenter or mason busy at his heap of stones by the roadside. And who, that had either heart or head, but would rather try to keep him up than to take him further down? It is the delicate discernment of those things that marks the gentleman and the gentle-woman. Such instinctively shrink from saying or doing a thing that will pain the feelings of another: if they say or do anything of the kind, it is not because they don't know what they are about.

Vulgar people go through life, unintentionally and ignorantly sticking pins into more sensitive natures at every turn. You, my friend, accidentally met an old school companion. You think him a low-looking fellow as could well be seen. But you say to him kindly that you are happy to see him looking so well. He replies to you with a confounded candor, "I cannot say that of you; you are looking very old and care-worn." The boor did not mean to say anything disagreeable. It was pure want of discernment. It was simply that he is not a gentleman, and never can now be made one. "Your daughter, poor thing, is getting hardly any partners," said a vulgar rich woman to an old lady in a ball-room; "it is really very bad of the young men." The vulgar rich woman fancied she was making a kind and sympathetic remark. It is to be recorded that sometimes such remarks have their origin not in ignorance, but in intentional malignity. Mr. Snarling exclaims, "Bless me, how flushed you are getting! Did any of your relations die of apoplexy?" If you should cough in the unhappy wretch's presence, he will ask, with an anxious look, if there is consumption in your family. And he will receive your negative answer with an ominous shake of the head. "I am sorry to hear," says Mr. Snarling, the week after your new horse comes home, "I am sorry to hear about that animal proving such a bad bargain. I was sure the dealer would cheat you." "It was very sad, indeed," says Mr. Snarler, "that you could not get that parish which you wanted." He shakes his head, and kindly adds, "especially as you were so anxious to get it."

◆

A Centenarian.

The brethren at Haverhill, in this State, united on the 25th of October, ult., in celebrating the birth-day of their venerable brother, the Hon. Moses Wingate, who, on that day, completed the one hundredth anniversary of his birth. The occasion was one of marked interest, and in which the citizens generally manifested a deep and cordial sympathy. We should be pleased, and hope hereafter, to lay before our readers a short biographical sketch of the aged patriarch, but for the present can find room only for the following:

"About two o'clock, P. M. the Merrimac and Saggehcw Lodges of Masons, to the number of upward of two hundred, marched to Mr. Wingate's residence, accompanied by a barouche drawn by four bay horses. Into this the old gentleman was assisted, and escorted by the Masonic lodges, and followed by a procession of citizens in carriages, moved towards the Merrimac Lodge. The streets through which the procession passed were thickly lined with men, women, and children, while almost every window and balcony along the route were packed with people, eager to catch a passing glimpse of 'the observed of all observers.' The school-children, to the number of several hundred, were in line on Winter street, and the boys, with uncovered heads, respectfully bowed, and the girls waved their white handkerchiefs, as the venerable patriarch rode past, his face expressive of genuine happiness and content. There was no brass band to herald his coming, and no noisy demonstration, but the town found the highest pleasure in paying respect to this, its oldest living inhabitant.

"At the lodge-room was in waiting another scene—veiled to all but the initiated—and one which the Masonic brethren will not soon forget; a scene only to be witnessed once in a lifetime, and that but by few. Rev. Charles Wingate, an Episcopal clergyman, son of the centenarian, himself a man well advanced in life, and whose head was thickly sprinkled with tokens of advancing age, was to take his first step in Masonry.

"The venerable centenarian, on arriving at the Masonic hall, was placed in an arm-chair, and was carried into the lodge-room by two of the brethren, and seated at the right of the Worshipful Master in a large easy chair. On the left of the presiding officer were two other aged brothers—Rev. Dr. Sawyer, of Saulsbury, and Mr. Hill of Atkinson, both upwards of ninety years. There were present upward of sixteen gentlemen, whose ages exceeded sixty years, and several ranged above seventy. It was a deeply impressive and never-to-be-forgotten scene—the aged father, seated at the right of the Worshipful Master, an interesting spectator of the solemn rites by which his son, not a young man, was made a free and accepted Mason in due form.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies, the aged man was assisted to his carriage and taken to his residence, and the lodge was closed in due form. The brethren, at the conclusion of their duties at the lodge, marched in procession to City Hall and partook of a collation, which concluded the celebration."

Brother Wingate was made a Mason in 1803.—Freemasons' Magazine.

◆

FEARS of incendiarism in case of revolt are entertained in Madrid. Recent extraordinary sales of combustibles, reported to the authorities, warrant the suspicion.

◆

PROF. Tyndall has been requested by the English authorities to furnish a report on the proposal to substitute gas for oil as the illuminating power of light-houses.

Died.

At Monticello, Piatt county, Bro. JOHN DAVISON, aged twenty four years, and a member of Fraternal Lodge No. 58. He left a widow to morn his loss. The lodge passed glowing resolutions in honor of his life and memory. The church also mourns the departure of one who adorned a Christian profession.

Moneys Received for Masonic Trowel,

FROM OCT. 21ST, TO NOVEMBER 7TH, INCLUSIVE.

$1.25 each. L. Bonestell, J. W. Brewer, Joseph Dixon, J. P. Ferns, P. G. Gillette, Mrs. S. C. Hoffmaster, C. T. Hunter, G. L. Palmer, J. Robbins, L. W. Shepherd, L. Smith, A. J. Stiele.

Other sums. Mrs. J. L. Berch, 75 cts. L. L. Clayberg, $1.30. W. L. Dame, 20 cts. H. J. Flint, $10.00. J. Haggart, $6.25. C. Hoopes, $7.50. L. D. Lewis, $5. E. H. Linton, $3.00. J. McWilliams, $3.75. O. M. Rogers, $3.50. B. O. Stanley, $2.00. W. T. Vandiver, 65 cents.

MASONIC FURNISHING HOUSE,

PARSON & CO.,

816 N. Fourth St., and 819 Broadway,

ST. LOUIS, MO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Masonic Clothing of all Kinds,

Jewels, Working-Tools, Lodge Furniture, Charts, Seal Presses, Books, Blanks, Diplomas, Swords, Banners, Baker's Low-Twelve Bell, and everything wanted for

LODGE, CHAPTER, OR COMMANDERY

Being the oldest Regalia Manufacturers in the United States (having had thirty years' experience), we feel confident of giving perfect satisfaction. Regalia for all secret and benevolent societies, and FLAGS and BANNERS of all kinds made to order on short notice.

Price lists furnished on application. Gold and Silver Trimmings, wholesale and retail. 9v8-1y*

ST. CLAIR NURSERIES,

SUMMERFIELD - - ILLINOIS,

ESTABLISHED IN 1856.

I offer to Planters and Dealers a large and well grown stock of

FRUIT AND ORNAMENTAL TREES,

Hardy Native Grape Vines,

EVERGREENS, ROSES, SHRUBS, &C.

The stock offered for sale the coming fall, owing to a favorable season, has made a fine growth, and will, I think, give satisfaction to all.

The attention of Dealers is specially invited to my unusually fine stock of STANDARD APPLES, consisting of all the leading

WESTERN & SOUTHWESTERN SORTS.

Wholesale and Retail Catalogues, now out, and forwarded to all applicants.

7v8-3t E. F. BABCOCK.

TRANSCENDANT CRABS.

St. Clair Nurseries, Summerfield, Ill.

I have a large stock of Transcendant, Large Red, Yellow, and Cherry Crabs, low headed and well branched, 4 to 6 feet high, $20. per 100, $180. per 1000. No charge for packing.

7v8 E. F. BABCOCK.

R. ORENDORFF,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Business Solicited in the State and Federal Courts.

4v8-6m*

VIRGIL PRICE

IN HOC SIGNO
VINCES

MANUFACTURING COMPANY,

Manufacturers of all kinds of

Masonic Materials, Swords,

BANNERS, WORKING-TOOLS, JEWELS, &C.

No. 144 GREENE STREET,

NEW YORK.

Sir Knights—Your attention is called to PRICE'S METHOD OF HANGING SWORDS, patented Aug. 13, 1867. No costume is complete without it.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION PAID TO

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S COSTUMES.

Also, to fine Presentation, Military, and Masonic Swords. 1v8-1y

PRINTING.—We are prepared to do Printing of all kinds, from the largest Poster to the smallest Circulars, Cards, and Hand-ills.

The Masonic Trowel.

"The grand object of Masonry is, to promote the happiness of the human race."--Washington.

VOL. VIII. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, DECEMBER 15, 1869. WHOLE NO. 96.

Poetry.

Psalm CXXXIII.

How good and how beseeming well
It is that we,
Who brethren be,
As brethren should, in concord dwell!

Like that dear oil that Aaron bears,
Which fleeting down
To foot from crown,
Embalms his head and robe he wears.

Or like the tears the morn doth shed,
Which lie on ground
Empearled round,
On Sion or on Hermon's head.

For, joined therewith the Lord doth give,
Such grace, such bliss,
That where it is
Men may forever blessed live.

—Sir Philip Sidney.

◆

Masonic Hymn.

The spacious world by wisdom planned,
And spread beneath the starry skies,
Was made a temple strong and grand,
From which a Mason's prayer should rise.

Our Great Grand Master gave it birth;
He squared and laid its corner.stone;
His strength and wisdom spread this earth;
At his command the work was done.

He formed yon broad expansive skies,
And round the verge of that blue dome,
In pomp transcendant spread those skies,
Arched the broad heavens, the Mason's home.

While in our lodge, with songs divine,
By faith our prayers ascend to heaven;
Strength, Wisdom, Beauty, all combine,
And Faith, and Hope, and Love are given.

◆

Winter.

Let winter come! let polar spirits sweep
The darkening world and tempest troubled deep
Though boundless snows the withered heath deform,
And the dim sun scarce wanders thro' the storm;
Yet shall the smile of social love repay
With mental light the melancholy day!
And when its short and sullen noon is o'er,
The ice-chained waters slumbering on the shore.
How bright the fagots in his little hole
Blaze on the hearth and warm the pictured hall.

—Pleasures of Hope.

Social Influence of Masonry.

BY WM. ROUNSEVILLE.

An institution which does not have a reformatory effect on those who come within its influence; which does not make men better; which does not add something to the aggregate of human happiness, is hardly worth sustaining. This is pre-eminently a utilitarian age. We inquire, when any subject is presented to us, "What good will it do?" before we are willing to give it our time or influence, and though many are too much inclined to place that chief good for which we all seek, in money and estates, yet there are those who long for the more certain riches of generous principles and goodness of heart. The method and means by which Masonry ministers to these desirable characteristics, shall be the objects of the present paper.

The American people are proverbially an unsocial and selfish race. Whether it be that the pursuit of wealth has seized upon the better and more social feelings, and dried up the fountains of common enjoyment, the fact is patent, that no nation seek to live so independently of their neighbors; that no people are so self-reliant as ourselves. Perhaps, to a certain extent, this trait of character may be esteemed as a virtue, but we carry it to a wrongful excess. "God never made an independent man," and he who endeavors to assume that attitude among his fellows, mistakes the object of his existence, and does violence to the laws of his nature.

And yet we present the anomaly of a whole community—an entire nation, engaged in the endeavor to overthrow that law of the human constitution and achieve an actual independence from our fellows. Any institution that will counteract this attempt to establish a condition of things at variance with the "eternal fitness of things," is worthy of support. An institution as yet untried, but promising to turn back the tide of selfishness that leads to this struggle, would deserve attention; how much more, then, should we heed one which has proved itself equal to the task, and that has written the history of its victories on every age of the Christian era.

The isolated and separated manner in which we endeavor to live, creates at first, carelessness of a neighbor's welfare, to be followed on the slightest provocation by a settled dislike or permanent enmity. We want something that will bring men more closely together; that will introduce them to each other under conditions favorable to a good impression; that will make them more interested in each other's welfare. Masonry is that something which is needed. It congregates its votaries together when the world and its cares, so far as is possible, are shut out; where no man has the right to bring his prejudices, his passions, or his dislikes or hatreds. It invites them into that quiet retreat, and closes the door against outside influences.

When assembled in that sacred retreat, Masonry teaches the social affections and cultivates the social virtues by lectures, lessons, and symbols. We there "meet upon the level." We meet as brothers and friends; as human intelligences having an interest in each other's welfare, and imbued with generous and sympathetic desires for the common weal. It is impossible for a man so circumstanced, to shake off the influences that surround him, and assume the out-door selfishness with which the customs and convictions of society have well nigh encased his heart.

What business has selfishness where all interests are the same, and where independence would be but a harsh discord in the harmony of the great song of fraternal union? The circumstances surrounding all lead to this desirable harmony.

But the lessons taught are in strict accord with the circumstances. We are taught that "We have all one Father, and that one God hath created us," and with never-failing promptitude, the corollary follows that "All we are brethren!" The rules of the Fraternity require us to call each other by that loving appellation, and the utmost care is preserved to induce men to walk and act as such. This principle runs through the whole system, and there is not a degree from the lowest to the highest in which this duty is not clearly and emphatically recognized.

Now, what must naturally be the social influence of such a doctrine, enforced in every lecture, recognized in every degree, taught in every symbol, and kept fresh in the minds of the members by frequent expression? The mind that is not more or less influenced by such a combination of teachers, is hopelessly callous, and unfit for human society. Few there are who have crossed our pathway, or come under our observation, of whom we could say that they were not liberalized and improved in heart and conduct by these social surroundings.

It has been generally conceded that all that we claim for Masonry in its social influences over its members, so far as it extends to the brethren, is true. Masons are admitted to be more social, liberal, and generous towards their brethren than the world in general are to each other. And yet it is claimed that this sociability and generosity does not extend beyond the charmed circle of the Fraternity. But there is something gained if what is admitted to be true is a fact, that we have taught our members to be more observant of the social principle than others. If we had done no more than this, we ought to have credit for a good accomplished. If this be true, here in our own country, we have educated four hundred thousand men to a high social standard. We have done a great good then; but our claim does not stop here. We not only influence for good our members in their communications with each other, but the same influence extends its benign effects to the world.

After admitting that our rites and ceremonies, our principles and our doctrines, have such good influences within our own circle, it seems to be a work of supererogation that we should show that these influences extend still farther. But so it is. Would it be a reasonable proposition that a man whose social habits and qualities had been systematically cultivated, and the necessity of their use impressed upon his mind, would he be no more sociable and liberal in their use than one who had never been led to think upon the subject at all? We think not. He could not avoid the salutary influences of the lessons, if he would, and he would not desire to do so if he could.

Now, let us apply this fact to our subject, and we arrive at the truth. Masons are taught in the lodge those lessons which they are to practice out of it, and so far as intercourse between man and man is concerned, the same liberal and catholic spirit extends to all, whether a member of the Fraternity or not. The spirit of tolarance and generosity fostered by Masonic lessons, pervade the soul of the true Mason in his intercourse with non-Masons, as well as with the brethren. The theory and the practice of the Institution alike demand this at the hands of every Mason.

But suppose we inquire into the actual state of facts. What is the character of Masons for generous, unselfish conduct in the social circles, or in the common process of social life? This question can be answered by every individual for himself, and we do not fear that the answer, in a single instance, will be against us. Let each individual look over the list of his friends and see who are most willing to exhibit the best phases of the social principle in common life—those who oppose, or those who love Masonry. We do not fear the result. We care not whether the examination is made by the friends or the opponents of the Order. The social training will tell, and the results will be so apparent that they can not be overlooked.

But the social influence of Masonry is not only powerful and salutary, as inducing a more friendly feeling and action among mankind generally, but it exerts an elevating influence as well. We do not dig a trench and ask others to level their foundation by that, but we raise aloft the standard of human action, and invite them to come up to that—to raise themselves to that high level. It is a leveling up, and not a leveling down, that we promote.

Teaching the continual dependence of mankind upon each other; that each has a part of the burden of life to bear, and a portion of the labor of life to perform; that the good of each and of the whole requires a social and amiable disposition, why should not the social principle be more fully developed than among those who do not pay any attention to these subjects. We ought to be under better influences than others, and hence we ought to be more social in our dispositions than others, and we trust we are. We say this in no spirit of boasting, but because it ought to be, as we believe it is, a practical fact. We believe we have done something to curb the prevailing selfish spirit which this age fosters. We think our lessons have made men more careful to exhibit kindness and charity towards those with whom they are brought in contact. We hold that the world is more humane, kind, generous, and careful of the rights and feelings of others, for our Fraternity. Believing this, we shall continue to labor for its propagation, being fully assured that "truth is mighty and will prevail."

ADDRESS

By H. P. H. Bromwell,

At the Laying of the Corner-Stone of the West Chicago Masonic Benevolent Association.

There are three things, Most Worshipful Grand Master, which cohere, and can not be separated. They are, and have been, and must be present in the beginning, progress, and end of all things which are the works of the Grand Architect; and without them He has formed nothing. And these three are Love, Wisdom, and Use.

From these, as principles which constitute and support all things in general, proceed by derivation the trinity which constitutes and completes everything in particular, material or immaterial, which has existence in the threefold universe, physical, mental, and moral—a trinity various in particulars as the subjects in which it inheres, according to the order which is divine.

In all these three, primarily and derivatively, stand related as end, cause, and effect, and so compose, complete, and make perfect all things, that the end may be all in the cause, and the cause all in the effect, as the effect is first in the end—thus the first is last, and the last first—and to everything a basis, continent, and complement, that it may exist; or, in Masonic language, there are a ground floor, support, and covering to all the works of the hands of Jehovah.

In this order are all the Masonic trinities derived from the first, as, among others, the following:

Charity, Faith, and Work.
Brotherly Love, Truth, and Relief.
Strength, Wisdom, and Beauty.

This series is constantly and variously represented in Masonry by the use of the symbolic number, three, which is found in the beginning, progress, and completion of all Masonic work, as follows:

First. Universally, that there are three lodges in one called degrees; not degrees of one quality, as better and best, greater and least, and the like, but degrees of order, as prior and posterior, cause and effect.

Second. Particularly, that three rule a lodge; not three equals, nor as one ruler and subordinates; but three in a series, according to this order: Three dimensions to the floors of the three lodges; three dimensions to each lodge entire; three supports to all and each lodge; three lights, both great and lesser, to each lodge; three jewels, both movable and immovable, to each lodge; three particulars, which are denominated furniture, in each lodge; three ornaments; three precious jewels to each lodge; three are the wages of a Fellow Craft; three form a lodge of Masters; three is a regular alarm; three circumambulations; three is the battery; three are the grand honors; three steps on the Master's carpet; three principal rounds to the symbolic ladder; three Grand Masters; three figures in the diagram of the parallel lines; three squares in the forty-seventh problem; three emblems of death; three sections in a degree; three ornaments on the great pillars; three divisions to the winding-stairs; three overseers. Three guilty Craftsmen; three buffettings; three elements of consecration; three grand offerings; three times King Solomon circumambulated the mountain; three foundations to the temple; three steps relating thereto; three "Dieu gardes;" three artificers constructed the ark; three constructed the tabernacle; three Grand Masters constructed the temple; three apartments to the tabernacle; three also to the temple; three principle gates; three rule a chapter; three held the first Grand Council; three working tools of the Royal Arch; three descents; three discoveries; three Grand Masters of Veils; three angles to the signet; three treasures in the sacred ark.

But it would be too tedious to mention all the triplets, trines, and triads appearing throughout the work of the lodge; to say nothing of thrice as many more to be found from beginning to end of the Holy Writings.

These things, though so often mentioned before, I refer to now in order to show that the idea of a series made perfect in three is in-woven with the whole system of Ancient Craft Masonry, and that this could not be accidental, but from design.

Let us look a moment at the series I first mentioned, and several derived therefrom, thus:

1. Love, Wisdom, and Use.
2. Charity, Faith, and Works, which is use.

These proceed in order, and so with everything that Masonry regards, thus:

From Love, by Wisdom, in Use. Or thus:
From Good, by Truth, in operation. Or thus:
From Charity, by Faith, in works.

In all cases from that which is prior, by that which is posterior, in that which is postreme.

Thus, from the Holy of Holies, by the middle-chamber, in the ground-floor.

From the Holy Writings, by the compasses, in the square.

From the trestle-board, by the labor, in the work; and thus in all cases, so that all are contained in the last, which is always use.

To begin with universal, it is manifest that the universe entire is from Love, by Wisdom, and in Use. This is taught by the whole work of the lodge, which, in three degrees represents the universe in its degrees; and which teaches from beginning to end that charity should be first and last in all things. This is particularly shown by the first and last jewel being the same—that is, brotherly love. If the lodge truly represents the universe, it teaches by its landmarks that love is first and last, to say nothing of its oral and written teachings.

But this is most fully demonstrated by a survey of the visible works of the Grand Architect as displayed in the heavens above, crowned with solar and stellar glories; the earth, with its outspread and boundless magnificence; the sea and air, with their numberless marvels.

That all is from the beneficence of love is shown at once by the stupendous orb of day, in its effulgent beams, which clothe the scenes of earth with beauty to delight to the eye and mind of all intelligent creatures—which bring forth the life in all substances, in all its wonderful orders, to every species and individual of which there is assigned pleasure in the round of its mortal career. By the revolving earth with its succession of seasons, darkness and light, seed-time and harvest—its splendid garniture of leaf and blossom, and the exhaustless profusion of its ripened fruits. By the air, which gives breath and constant enjoyment to all beings; and by the sea, replete with life and benefits for all that live.

All nature in its greatest and (least) forms, in all their countless variety, testifies forever through ten thousand interpretations of its many languages, that from Divine beneficence it has its being.

Nor is this any new discovery—it has been seen and declared by all men from the beginning, among whom the Psalmist of Israel sang before the resting place of the holy ark these words:

"O, give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good; for His mercy endureth forever.

"To Him who made great lights; for His mercy endureth forever.

"To Him who stretched out the earth above the waters; for His mercy endureth forever."

That the universe in general and in particular, exists by wisdom, is taught with equal emphasis by the lodge in all its work. For the lodge, in its operation, represents the Divine work, and, from beginning to end, teaches that this is by wisdom. This is shown in this, that all the work of the Craftsmen is from design and in order, and not otherwise, and this is the manifestation of wisdom, which looks to ends and causes, and provides that the effect shall accomplish the end, and not anything else; and this without confusion, which is so abhorrent to Masonry—so that if the world does not exist according to wisdom, the lodge must be without symbolic truth.

But the demonstration of this, also, is by examination of all things visible within the scope of human perception.

Consider the heavenly bodies performing their stupendous revolutions, with such wonderful rapidity and accuracy—the ordering and balancing of forces amid countless attractions, cross and counter attractions; as planets, moons, asteroids, and comets which, in their eccentric courses, in giddy mazes about an ever-shifting centre; bringing constant order from the complications of apparent confusion; so that to every one follow seasons and times, light and darkness, labor and rest, in constant harmony.

Nor does the earth show less by its infinite productions. Myriads of each in its own form and order, each putting forth its life into new seeds, in which are contained the effigies of infinity and eternity—infinity in the countless numbers it can propagate, and eternity in the ceaseless reproduction which has continued from the creation until now, and will continue forever.

To all these belong foliage, flowers, and fruit; and to each is assigned tribes of insects, of innumerable forms, who satisfy their wants and live from the juices of each particular plant, besides beasts and fowls which nourish themselves upon their various fruits. Beyond the grasp of the naked eye, the microscope discloses animated forms in infinite multitudes, all endowed with wonderful capacities and functions, so that the domain of animal life has no assignable limits; and every hour of time adds to the discoveries of new wonders, in every field of existence.

Thus the wild mountains and plains are clothed with forests, which spread continuous tabernacles for the habitation of animated beings, whose numbers on a single leaf would rival the human beings of a nation; and the valleys and hills are carpeted with grasses and herbs; and food for all, from man to the meanest worm, is brought forth in abundance.

In the clefts of the rocks and bowels of the mountains, lie hid the precious ores and minerals for the use of man, besides a thousand substances which permeate the earth and exhale or are caught up by the rootlets of living plants, for the nourishment of both animal and vegetable life.

The air displays its wonders in the never-ceasing circulation of its currents, and the transformation of vapors, so that, although it constantly receives all the odors and malarias of the earth and decaying matters, it renews its purity at every moment, and offers breath to the countless beings of the earth, and life to every vegetable form.

The sea, filled with its myriads, and sweeping in unending currents from shore to shore, in everlasting purity, though it is the receptacle of all the impurities of earth which the air can not contain. So we see the outspread heaven with its ether, revolving globes, shedding and reflecting light, heat, and vivifying influence upon careering worlds—globes with their atmospheres composed and attempered to receive, retain, and transmit, through limitless expanses, the adorning light, the generative heat; to bear the ever-changing canopy of clouds, and treasure up together the waters of a deluge and the terrific bolts of the ærial fire.

Clouds, those ever-restless water-bearers for the thirsty plains, filling their pitchers at the flanks of mountain ranges, from the exhaustless store of vapor engendered by the heat, and furnished by the cisterns of the seas, and collected by the unwearying and rejoicing winds. Fountains, springing from the heights, whose drops are compounded from the exhalations of distant oceans and meadows; and rivers pouring along their rocky channels, and laying bare the subterranean treasures of the highlands, on their passage to the harvast-laden valleys. Zones of every temperature, circling the earth as radiant girdles, wrought with the treasures and countless ornaments of forest, field, and garden.

The numberless tribes of animated beings, each perfect in its order, each organization as to its physical machinery alone, complicated and conformed for the purposes of sight, hearing, smelling, feeling, tasting, locomotion, nutrition, reparation, and reproduction, through infinities of operations, is bewildering to contemplate in a single individual, and utterly overwhelming in the aggregate of a single species; to say nothing of the infinite adaptations of inanimate substances and forms to the use of each. While above and beyond all this, the thrice wonderful functions of animal life implanted in every sentient form, with its appetites, instincts, and perceptions; with the conjunctions, co-relations, and co-operations of the whole to infinity on every hand, complete without confusion or collision, astound the mind and sweep away every vestige of doubt, as to the wisdom by which all is ordained, produced, and perpetuated.

Well and truly spoken, therefore, are the words uttered by Wisdom, from the lips of our ancient Grand Master:

"The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was set up for everlasting, from the beginning or ever the earth was.

"When he prepared the heavens, I was there; when he set a compass on the face of the deep,

"When he gave the sea his decree, when he appointed the foundations of the earth."

Thus far we behold, surely, that the universe has its being from benevolence, and its existence by wisdom, as shown by the things therein contained; but now, Most Worshipful Grand Master, what is this in each and all things by which we know that it was good or wise that it should be created? What is there to be discovered in anything, or all things, showing that goodness or wisdom is therein, except one thing, and that is use? By this one universal rule do we judge the quality of all things; and, consequently, the goodness or wisdom, evil or folly, in which they had their origin. In use alone is the end or cause discovered.

Why do we call the light good, but because of its uses? Would any man call the heat which vivifies the earth good, but for the uses he perceives arising from it? And so with the fruits of the earth, the products of the sea, the operations of the air, the things of vegetable and animal life. Can benevolence, or wisdom, or any other quality for good or evil, be predicated of any of these, except as far as may appear in its use? If I say the light is good, what does that signify? Simply that its uses are good. If I say patience, humility, or fortitude is good, what does that signify? Only this, that such is its use. In fact, when we speak of the quality of anything we think and speak only of its use. That which has only evil use can not be called good by any one.

By their uses ye shall know them, is the universal rule which has no exception. In the Holy Writings this principle is applied to every judgment; which is there said to be according to fruits or works, which is the same as use.

This is what is meant by the words of St. James: "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works." This is exactly the rule made familiar to every Mark Master, to-wit, that nothing less than the actual production of his work shall be considered in determining whether or not he has been a faithful Craftsman.

Nor is the Fellow Craft taught a different lesson. Throughout all the work it is nowhere even suggested that anything is to be received by him except wages, and wages are for work accomplished and according to order, and not otherwise, however singular its form or beautiful its finish.

That all things are to be judged of and esteemed according to their effects or uses, is not only taught in the lodge as a fundamental principle, but also in the Holy Writings from beginning to end; and this even as to things the most divine; so that when Moses desired to see the glory of the Lord, it was answered him; "I will make my goodness to pass before thee; * * * thou shalt not see my face, but thou mayest see my hinder parts"; that is what is after me, namely, my works, in which I am present in uses. The Hindoo mythologists were not ignorant of this principle, for we read concerning the revelations of Krishna, that when Sanjay desired to see him in his divine character, Krishna stood transformed, and within him Sanjay beheld all the works of creation in operation, even to their most hidden processes, and the bringing forth of all created things, until the sight overwhelmed him with astonishment, and he prayed to be relieved of it. And when Sanjay saw the works and uses of the universe in their causes, mediate and immediate, proceeding to effect, in ultimates, in infinite series, he knew of Krishna, as Moses of Jehovah, that he was the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and end, the first and the last.

As the works of the Creator are all disposed to uses according to order, so the works of the lodge, which are in imperfect imitation of the divine, are disposed according to order; and to each is assigned its several use. When the work fulfils its appointed use, be it what it may, it is like the works of the Creator, pronounced good. That the work may be perfect in its symbolic character, its inmost is a most sublime system of philosophy; its exterior a system of art which conceals or covers the interior as the interior or the inmost, each in its degree, being a system of uses, and to be esteemed only as good and wise uses are found in it.

According to its art, which is its external, the lodge has been in all ages engaged in the building of magnificent and costly structures for various uses, such as temples of worship, halls of legislation, government palaces, colleges, universities, bridges, and the like, in some ages carrying on the work from the foundation to the cope-stone; but in modern times limiting its operations, in this respect, to the inauguration of the work of buildings of public use, by laying the corner-stone with ancient and significant observances, and leaving the remainder of the work to other hands.

Thus, to day, we assemble to lay, with ancient ceremonies, this corner-stone, hoping that the building, when completed, will subserve a good use to mankind. If no such hope of good use were entertained, who would be here to-day? The corner-stone itself is deemed the most important in the most important in the building, and this is only because it represents the most important use. But if the building stop at the corner-stone it will be nothing, for it would be of use neither for assembling of people nor for shelter, warmth, nor habitation; and so, though the face of the earth were covered with corner-stones, however well laid or excellent in quality, the whole would be esteemed as nothing, and the labor and ceremonies performed on and about them would be only the occupation of folly or insanity.

But the house must rise with corner-stones, foundations, walls, pillars, and covering, and all other necessary parts, and when the cap-stone is carried up and settled, the Master sees the fulfillment of the design on the trestle-board; and then he may announce to the Craftsmen that the work is good, by three distinct strokes of the implement of authority and judgment, signifying that end, cause, and effect are accomplished, and the Craftsmen can rejoice together.

.For this reason the sacrifices appointed in the ancient church, and those which were known to all the nations and religions of the world, consisted of fruits of the field, or the flock, for fruits are forms of uses.

What, then, is the conclusion of the whole matter but that Masonry and Masons and all Masonic enterprises are to be judged and disposed of according to their uses, whether good or bad? so that no man, high or low, will be permitted to plead his good intentions, his good wishes, or yet his faith, however well founded. All he can receive is the appointed reward of his work, such as it may be, and beyond this, nothing.

Hence, it is in vain for Masons, on any occasion such as this, to boast of the antiquity or respectability of their Institution. It matters not that it exists in all countries. and that its antiquity stretches beyond the dawn of history. It matters not that its Grand Lodges sit in a hundred capital cities, and that its officers alone outnumber the armies of any empire. It must show its uses for good and truth, and, if possessed of these, all those other considerations may be brought forth to augment its value and importance.

For what is antiquity alone? The bramble can claim by this as much as the cedar of Lebanon. Or what of numbers multiplied throughout the earth? The locust can claim, in this respect, more than the bird of paradise. Nothing on earth is older than vanity or more wide-spread than sin. But if all the energies of this ancient and numerous Craft are indeed exerted to accomplish the great objects of its foundation, then it may well bring forward its grand history, and marshal its innumerable hosts to challenge the regard and admiration of an assembled world.

Is Masonry, then, an institution so originating from benevolence, and organized by wisdom as to achieve its completion in good uses for the benefit of mankind

Because we believe that it is such, we are assembled here to-day. Not that we claim for it perfection in an absolute sense, but that comparatively among human institutions it has no equal.

This we believe, because at all times it has exhibited greater harmony among its members than any other institution, which shows that its tendency is to promote brotherly love. Because in all ages and different countries it has done the same; this shows that the elements of its Fraternity exist in its own body, and are not the result of circumstances, such as race, religion, government, &c. Because the good and true among its members always and everywhere have believed the same concerning it. Because no man has ever been known to suppose that by any means he could devise any change in the body of Masonry which could in the least make it better; for although there have been and are still some in the world who fancy they might do so, yet they have not the least knowledge of what the body of Masonry is, and so are not to be counted. Because it has principles concerning religion, government, and society which humanity can not dispense with, and these are so presented that they may be said to be graven on its landmarks and woven in its veils, so that their influence can not be entirely lost upon any.

Believing these things, we are not slow to come up to aid and assist in the great and glorious work of building the temple and house of the Lord.

We rejoice in the endless lines of illustrious names upon our catalogues, for they show the glorious company who have passed this way before us.

We hesitate not because that priest-craft and despotism utter their anathemas against us; it has been part of the occupation of hierarch and potentate to fulminate their cruel and presumptuous edicts where bigotry had power; but the temple of Masonry sits serenely while worms and rust consume the engines of its adversaries, scattered at its base. They have, even in this free land, whose flag is a Masonic banner, met in conclave and resolved death and destruction to the Craft whose Masters were kings, prophets, and apostles; but Masonry sets up her corner-stones while they bargain for tombstones.

It has been always thus; ignorance, conceit, and self-righteousness will die scratching their names on the walls of the outer court, to inform succeeding generations that they, too, once were present.

What institution is this which lays to-day its corner-stones on the soil of this great valley, from which but yesterday were dug the jewels of its own ancient Masters and Wardens, buried by men of nations extinct before the empires of Europe saw the light? Can any human institution speak of things like this? What generations have lived and moved on these western plains? what cities have looked over the broad expanse of these grassy seas? what armies marched along these mighty streams? what sails have cut the horizon on these outspread lakes, since the ancient Masters made these deposits for the benefit of the Craft, to be disinterred by the wearers of the same unperishing symbols? And who knows but that when centuries of alternate production and decay shall have given to another race the shores of this inland sea, those whose language may have no word in common with ours may dig from the rubbish of these palaces demolished, the very treasures we deposit here to-day. If such should be the case, we still place them with the expectation that among those who will disturb them will be found some still wearing the jewels of the stations, and the badge more ancient than the golden fleece, more honorable than star or garter, or any other order which a man can bestow, except he be a Mason.

Thus the chains of the Fraternity, unbroken by time or space, bind us on the one hand to the cliffs of Joppa and the meadows of the Jordan, the battlements of Tyre and the fastnesses of Lebanon, the Gates of Ammon and the Glory of Moriah; and on the other to the crumbled fortresses of the Ohio, the shores of the Gitchu Gumu and the towering Sierras of the West.

A voice in the East comes down from Gilead, from the purple hills of Engeddi; a voice in the West from the ancient places of Itasca and the Colorado, from the vales of the ancient Miami; a voice in the South from the buttresses of the Cordilleras: "Let this lodge be open from the East to the West, and between the North and the South, from the centre to the highest heaven."

When the lodge is open the universe is displayed in its operations and uses. When we say the lodge is open, that is the same as to say the universe is open; so that the love and wisdom of its formation and operation may be seen in all its parts. But the universe is opened in all degrees by the understanding being opened, and the understanding opens the senses, and not the senses the understanding; for no lodge is opened from the outside, but from the interior, as the circumference is formed from the centre, and not in any case the centre from the circumference.

Hence it is said that "Thought from the eye darkens the understanding, but thought from the understanding opens the eye."

The reason that thought from the understanding opens the eye is, because he who sees from the understanding thinks and perceives in order, and so sees in order; and sees that which he beholds in its order also, and that the surface is not the whole, but the interiors—for he knows that everything has its quality by its interiors, so that all things are what they are, not by their forms, but by that which they contain.

He who sees from the understanding opened, sees all things in their uses, so that the world is in no part void, but everywhere full, and the coming uses of every object seem portrayed upon its surface. He sees as the Master of the lodge from his pedestal in the East, who looks throughout the whole lodge and sees the design of every movement; but he who thinks from the eye alone is like an eavesdropper who peeps through a cob-webbed chink, and sees everything oqlibuely and obscurely, and knows not the order and connection of what he sees.

Some men are all their lives eavesdroppers, in knowledge, Masonry, and religion. They see nothing from the inside, but, by peeping through crannies from without; hence they are always bound up in particulars, and can learn nothing of universals; consequently they are in continual confusion, and from confusion no good use is possible. By such men are kept up controversies about things of no consequence, because of no use, and if not in controversy they are indifferent. In either case they are of no benefit to any institution, nor can they carry one on, but the lodge or church to which they belong must be carried on without them or in spite of them; when, if it is successful, they assume the credit of it, and if unsuccessful, they fume and scold.

The beehive upon the Master's carpet is the Masonic illustration of a lodge in this respect, for in the hive are bees and drones. The bees are devoted to uses, and consequently fulfill the Masonic idea of labor, and gather and store up wax and honey; but the drones, who are the rusty Masons of the hive, do nothing and produce nothing; consequently they are from time to time led out the outer gate and divested of their wings, which keeps them from imitating rusty Masons by visiting other hives when they have no business in their own. If rusty Masons were disposed of the same way, it would be a proper exercise of Masonic discipline.

Besides the bees and drones there are also found about hives moths and caterpillars, which are eavesdroppers. These destroy what others build up. Between an eavesdropper and a rusty Msson there is little or no difference, for both are equally without use.

How necessary it then is that every one in the lodge should form a part of the building of some use to the whole. Let each ascertain in what capacity he can be most useful, and apply himself to the work in order. If he can not be a pillar, let him be an ashlar; if he can not be a jewel let him be an ornament; but in any case be something that some use may be served by him.

The Masonic idea is labor, work, results, uses. Such is the only rational idea of the universe, and of the Celestial Lodge which is above.

This is the only end sought to be accomplished in the erection of a Masonic temple, the very building of which is a complex symbol of the object to be attained, for the law of the Grand Architect is not that men shall serve in His kingdom by enjoying it, but that they shall enjoy it by serving in it according to order, and so accomplish all uses.

Then let this temple rise beautiful and strong, to stand eminent among the stately structures of this outspreading city; but let it rise in the order of Moriah—a temple without and a temple within—its corner-stones the chosen stones of truth, its pillars, the supports of wisdom, strength and beauty, and all its chambers the abode of friendship, morality, and brotherly love. Then, as the memories of ancient ages settle about its moss-grown battlements, and dwell in all its cloisters, the hopes of coming years will spread their rainbow colors on its arch, and emblazom all its veils—the approbation and blessing of the Grand Architect of the universe satisfy all within its walls with the wages of a Master; and when all of us here assembled shall lie scattered in distant burying-grounds which we have never seen, or perhaps rest beneath the solemn and sobbing sea, other Masters and Wardens will here teach other Craftsmen the royal art of Moses, Solomon, and John, and succeeding generations read upon its keystone, Holiness to the Lord, and upon its two great pillars, Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace and good will among men.

Transactions Examined.

Grand Chapter of Vermont.—The annual convocation was held at Burlington June 11. Charles A. Miles, G. H. P. In his address he alludes eloquently to the decease of P. G. H. P. Gamaliel Washburn, and S. L. Butler, who was exalted more than fifty years since, and was created a Knight Templar in 1822.

Mention is also made of the decease of Comp. David Warren, P. H. P., at Brandon, who was a lineal descendant of the martyr Grand Master, Joseph Warren.

He urges a return to the General Grand Chapter in the following terms:

"I would again bring to your notice the propriety of renewing our fraternal relations with the General Grand Chapter of the United States. It would be needless for me to repeat the suggestions of last year. The reasons that I then gave for such a course have been greatly strengthened in my mind during the past six months; a closer fraternal intercourse; a drawing together of the common bond; an increase of the scope of our usefulness; all demand that such a step should be taken. I will but quote, in support of my appeal to you, the eloquent words of the Past Most Excellent Gen. Grand High Priest, Bro. John L. Lewis, in which he invites the wandering sheep back to the fold: 'Beloved companions, brethren, and friends of other days, who have gone out from us, return once more to the old roof-tree. Beloved companions, our brethren and friends in spirit, with whom we have communed often in affection, cast your lot with us in the coming time. We speak in no other spirit but that which distinguishes our Fraternity, for we have no selfish ends to accomplish. If you have judged that there were evils in our organization, assist in their correction; if good may be attained, come, and with an honest and hearty welcome we invite you to share it, now and forever more.' Surely, words like these should bring the reconcilliation that is blessed of Him that has made all things square, upright, and perfect."

The matter was referred to a committee to report at the next annual convocation.

Our proceedings are noticed fairly.

Charles A. Miles, Brattleboro, was elected G. H. P.; E. A. Jewett, Burlington, Dep.; Ira Gifford, New Haven, G. K.; R. R. Drake, Pittsford, G. S.; C. W. Woodhouse, Burlington, G. Treas.; John B. Hollenbeck, Burlington, G. Secretary.

Grand Chapter of Oregon.—Meeting held at Portland, June 18. J. R. Bayley, G. H. P. There are but five chapters in Oregon; all were represented. The Grand Chapter is represented to have been opened in due and solemn form. This is something new to us. A Masonic body is opened by a Grand Master or G. H. P. in ample form; by Deputy in due form, and by any other officer in form. The address of the G. H. P. was short. James R. Bayley, Corvallis, was elected G. H. P.; C. H. Lewis, Portland, Dep.; Jacob Consor, Jefferson, G. K.; C. M. Cartwright, Salem, G. S.; John H. Couch, Portland, G. Treas.; R. P. Earhart, Salem, G. Sec.

Grand Chapter of Kentucky.—The grand convocation was held at Louisville, Oct. 18. R. G. Hawkins, G. H. P. More than fifty chapters were represented. The Grand High Priest earnestly deprecated the want of uniformity in work, and urged that the matter be neglected no longer. The Grand Chapter has upwards of $10,000 in stocks and bonds.

A new constitution, by-laws, rules of order, and rules for the government of subordinate chapters, were adopted.

The average membership is not large; Louisville No. 5, has 166 members; King Solomon No. 18, at Louisville, has 145; and Covington No. 35, has 109.

Grand Chapter of Canada.—The twelfth annual convocation was held at Kingston, Ontario, August 10. T. Wilson, presiding, who reported that he had granted five dispensations for new chapters. Charters were granted to them all.

The Craft are congratulated that the Prince of Wales has become a Freemason. We think he will do well to mend his manners.

The entire membership, including Nova Scotia and New Brunswick is 1,433.

Thomas D. Harrington, Ottawa, was elected G. Z.; James Seymour, St. Catharines, G. H.; Henry Robertson, Collingwood, G. J.; Thomas Bird Harris, Hamilton, G. Scribe, an office which answers to our Grand Secretary.

Grand Chapter of Florida.—The annual convocation was held at Tallahassee, January 11. M. T. Hutchinson, G. H. P.

The Grand Chapter passed a resolution to affiliate with the Gen. Grand Chapter, which has been noticed fully in THE TROWEL heretofore.

Charters for new chapters were granted at Key West and Providence.

DeWitt C. Hawkins, of Jacksonville, was elected G. H. P.; M. T. Hutchinson, Lake City, Dep.; H. H. Berry, Monticello, G. K.; Michael Bowles, Jacksonville, G. Scribe; T. B. Tatum, G. Treas.; Edward Bradford, Jr., Tallahassee, Grand Secretary.

There are sixteen chapters, but the highest number of members is but sixty-nine.

Grand Council R. and S. Masters, Illinois.—The proceedings for 1869 are before us. John M. Pearson, Grand Puissant. During his year he issued dispensations for new councils at Dawson, Sangamon county, Bloomington, Petersburg, and Paxton. The council at Jacksonville was also revived. A committee was also appointed to procure and exemplify the degree of Super-Excellent Master. There are now thirty-eight councils, with a membership of 1,340; average, 35.

Grand Lodge of England.—The proceedings of the United Grand Lodge of England at a quarterly communication, held Sept. 1, at London, have been received. The Provincial Grand Master for Essex presided. At a previous meeting, the M. W. Grand Master, Earl of Zetland, gave notice of a proposition to confer upon the Prince of Wales the distinction of Past Grand Master, and the same was brought forward by the Grand Master, in the chair for consideration. The proposition was seconded by the Deputy Grand Master for China.

The Grand Lodge of Scotland, having elected the Prince Grand Patron, the Master of 905, proposed to amend the proposition of the Earl of Zetland by electing the Prince Grand Patron instead of P. G. Master. The amendment met with no favor, and the distinction of Past Grand Master was unanimously agreed to.

The Grand Master then brought forward the question of the formation of an Independent Grand Lodge for Nova Scotia, and called upon the Grand Registrar for a statement of facts. We give his remarks with those of the President of the Board of General Purposes, and of the Grand Master, as recorded.

"Bro. Æneas J. McIntyre, G. R., said he was commanded by the M. W. Grand Master to propose a resolution to recognize the new Grand Lodge of Nova Scotia, and would add another resolution, when the brethren were in possession of the circumstances of the case. They were all aware that in most of the colonies Masons were under three jurisdictions. This was the case in Nova Scotia, where the English Constitution had the largest number of lodges, and was the best supported. Sometime back, some of the Scotch lodges being dissatisfied with the way in which the government of their lodges was conducted, called meetings, determined to assert their independence, and proclaim a Grand Lodge of Nova Scotia. The lodges under the sway of the Grand Lodge of England, true to their allegiance to their mother country, true to themselves, as Masons, preferred to remain under the sway of their parent Grand Lodge, and determined to uphold the interests of English Masonry, but they found themselves placed in rather an awkward position, because in that great hemisphere stretching from north to south on the other side of the Atlantic, a notion had sprung up, that a certain number of lodges might form themselves into a grand lodge, and the district grand lodges would cease to exist. They frankly and openly stated their difficulties to the Grand Lodge of England, feeling that the time had come when, by the number and importance of the Masons in their colony, the three jurisdictions united might form a grand lodge, which would do honor to the parent grand lodges, who had sent them forth to disseminate the principles of Freemasonry. Acting upon that feeling, they joined together, held meetings, and communicated to the Grand Master, that they felt they could go alone, and do honor to the Grand Lodge of England, and showing how anxious they were to uphold the interests of the Craft.

"The Grand Master, with that consideration which always distinguishes him, listened to what these Masons said; he told them he could give them no encouragement to throw off their allegiance to the grand lodge, but, if they found themselves strong enough to maintain Masonry in its integrity throughout the colony, the Masons of England were too loyal, good, and sound in their principles to reject the prayer of any petition presented to them. They had acted upon that suggestion, and presented a memorial, the substance of which is, that they do feel themselves strong enough to uphold the honor of the Craft, their attachment to their mother lodge is unabated, and to evince that they not only respectfully ask to be recognized as an independent grand lodge, but beg that they may be permitted to retain the warrants they hold from the Grand Lodge of England, to be handed down from generation to generation to show that they sprung from the old tree of Masonry in England. In deference to the command of the M. W. Grand Master, he therefore moved.

"That the independence of the Grand Lodge of Nova Scotia be recognized, and that the lodges holding warrants under the Grand Lodge of England be permitted to retain their warrants, as memorials of their parent Grand Lodge.

"Bro. John LL. Evans, President of the Board of General Purposes, seconded the motion. He would say very little after the very able address of the Grand Registrar, but he thought when brethren were sufficiently strong to support their position and maintain the principles of Masonry, it was desirable that their independence should be recognized.

"The Grand Master in the chair, said, as an old Mason, this was to him a most interesting subject. Nothing could be more satisfactory than the manner in which the subject had been brought forward. Grand Lodge must look to the progress of Masonry throughout our colonies, when so important a question was brought forward, and he hoped the resolution would pass withou dissent."

After further discussion, the proposition of the Grand Registrar was carried unanimously.

We also learn from these proceedings, that the Grand Lodge has rebuilt its hall, and that it is now separated from the tavern with which it was formerly connected, and is now a separate and convenient building.

Reform.

We live in an age which may hereafter be distinguished in history, as the iron, the golden, and other ages have been celebrated, by the title of the "age of reform." The public mind appears to be unsettled in every direction, and more or less willing ears are lent to the plans of reformers of every kind and degree. Our better halves are daily incited to revolt against our authority, and to put themselves in competition with us on the world's stage, and especially at the ballot-box. Our political doctors are continually harassing us with propositions for reforming everything connected with government, national, state, and municipal, though we suspect their ideas of reform mainly consist in plans for ousting the ins, and getting themselves installed in their places. Every phase of society is in fact unsettled by the clamor of these reformers. Society, it must be confessed, stands the efforts of its physicians with tolerable equanimity, and scarce perceptibly mends its pace for all their spurring, and as a member and fellow-citizen we are free to admit that if the reformers are amused by their efforts we are not much hurt. But unfortunately the reform mania does not appear to be satisfied with having almost unlimited sway in society at large, and seeks to put its sacreligious hands on the venerable Institution of Masonry, in which of all places there is least need or room for the operation. The principles of the Institution are just as true to-day as they were in the beginning, and the lessons deduced from them admit of no more question now than they did ages ago. Masonry seeks to accomplish no end now that it has not always sought, and it especially boasts that its motives and its machinery have alike stood the test of time, and won the approbation of the good and true in in every country where civilization has extended. Its adepts are everywhere taught that it is not in the power of any man or body of men to make innovations, and that they are to preserve the old forms and traditions as a sacred heritage from those who have preceded us to be handed down when we shall pass from the stage of action to those who are to come after us, and preserve the trust in turn as we have kept it for them. Rich in the most ennobling sentiments and methods of inculcation which no modern wisdom can improve, it binds the past and the present together, and prepares the way for a brighter and more hopeful future. Here then, we repeat, of all places is there the least need for the operations of those dissatisfied mortals who style themselves reformers, and make it their chief delight to tear away the work of ages to replace it with the crudities engendered in feverish brains, and admired only by their propagators. Some of these gentry have mounted a pegasus with "work" on their banners, and they have ridden it till what was once compact, orderly, and within the compass of a reasonable time, has grown to lengths equal to the score of a five-act tragedy, and those who demur at taxing their brains with this lengthened verbiage long drawn out, are considered unfaithful to their vows, and not up to the modern standard of perfect ritualism. Other reformers attack the forms of grand lodge government, and would, could they have their way, tear down the fabric, and substitute what, it would be difficult to say, since each has his own specialty, and, no doubt, considers it superior to all others.

We are on record as having more than once said that grand lodges are essentially an innovation on the body of Masonry. Our reasons for this opinion we need not repeat, but we can truly say that, whatever may be our opinion of the propriety of establishing these bodies in the beginning, we now see that to pull them to pieces would simply be to reduce the Craft to a state of anarchy and confusion. There is still another class of reformers, and these last have a journal at their service, who seek to reform Masonry itself out of existence, who wish to break up not only grand but subordinate lodges, and make Masonry an addendum to social gatherings, in which all may participate without any regard to the forms and governments which have always obtained. One would suppose that these gentlemen find very little, if anything, to admire in Freemasonry as it is, and the wonder is that they will persist in clinging to it, or that they should want to use its mere name, for they wholly discard its body, to give grace and dignity to their crazy conceptions. If we might be allowed ever so humbly to tender them advice, it would be to the effect that they should at once abandon the Craft they clearly do not understand, enfranchise themselves from restricting influences not consonant with their ideas of liberty, and paddle their new-fangled tub out on the sea of public opinion, with their own colors flying at the weather handle. We venture the opinion that Masonry would survive their loss, and that something less than a million would suffice to pay for crape to enable the brethren to put on a suitable mourning for the occasion.

Notwithstanding what is here said, we do not wish to be understood as mere devotees of antiquity simply for itself, nor that we will not see any need for improvement. On the contrary, we are in favor of progress, but not of reform, seeing, as we do, that reform as now understood, is little less than a mania or disease, a desire to burn, sink, and destroy, but in no sense to improve. The natural tendency of grand lodges is to over-legislate, to extend their powers of supervision to various matters of detail that were infinitely better left to the discretion of subordinates; a tendency to add precept to precept, and decision to decision, until the unsophisticated wander therein as in a maze. We believe that our code of laws could be very much simplified, and the number of decisions greatly reduced without on that account destroying our entire organization and taking a new departure. We see clearly that much of the verbiage interpolated in the ritual within the last one hundred and fifty years could be stricken out with advantage, and a wider discretion left to Masters of lodges in the explanations and inculcations expected of them, without removing the landmarks or in any way interfering with the essential forms and ceremonies bequeathed us from the long past. Even in these matters, however, we are not specially solicitous, and would infinitely rather submit to such minor evils as we have indicated, than plunge the Fraternity into the bottomless vortex of reform.—R. D. Holmes.

◆

Etymology of the Term "Cowan."

BY MATHEW COOKE.

